DOCKET

(90)

No. 88-605-AFX
Status: GRANTED

Title: William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, et al., Appellants
v.
Reproductive Health Services, et al.

Docketed:
October 11, 1988

Court: United States Court of Appeals
for the Eighth Circuit

Counsel for appellant: Boicourt,Michael L.

Counsel for appellee: Evans,Roger K., Susman,Frank, Connell,Colleen K.

Entry	Date	Note	Proceedings and Orders
1	Oct 11 1988	G	Statement as to jurisdiction filed.
3	Oct 26 1988		Order extending time to file response to jurisdictional statement until December 12, 1988.
115	Nov 3 1988	D	Application (A88-371) to rescind the extension of time granted appellees by the Clerk to file a motion to dismiss or affirm, submitted to Justice Blackmun.
116	Nov 7 1988		Application (A88-371) denied by Justice Blackmun.
6	Nov 10 1988		Brief amicus curiae of United States filed.
7	Nov 10 1988		Lodging received. (10 copies).
9	Dec 12 1988	X	Motion of appellees Reproductive Health Services, et al. to affirm filed.
8	Dec 14 1988		DISTRIBUTED. January 6, 1989
10	Dec 29 1988	X	Supplemental brief of appellees Reproductive Health Svcs., et al. filed.
11	Jan 9 1989		PROBABLE JURISDICTION NOTED.
			**********
12	Feb 13 1989	G	Motion of James Joseph Lynch, Jr., for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae filed.
28	Feb 22 1989		Brief amici curiae of Doctors for Life, et al. filed.
29	Feb 22 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Knights of Columbus filed.
30	Feb 22 1989	G	Motion of National Legal Foundation for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae filed.
36	Feb 22 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Right to Life Advocates, Inc. filed.
13	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Birthright, Inc. filed.
14	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, et al. filed.
15	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of International Right to Life Federation filed.
16	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of United States Catholic Conference filed.
17	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Hon. Christopher H. Smith, et al. filed.
18	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Holy Orthodox Church filed.
19	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Catholic Health Association of the United Statee filed.
20	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Rutherford Institute, et al. filed.
21	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of American Life League, Inc. filed.
22	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of 127 Members of the Missouri General Assembly filed.
23	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Missouri Catholic Conference filed.

No. 88-605-AFX

Entry	Date	Note	Proceedings and Orders
24	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Collegians for Life, Inc., et al. filed.
25	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Center for Judicial Studies and Certain Members of Congress filed.
26	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Association for Public Justice and The Value of Life Comm. filed.
27	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Larry Joyce filed.
31	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of American Family Association, Inc. filed.
32	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Feminists for Life of America, et al. filed.
33	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Certain State Legislators filed.
34	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Assn. of Prolife Obstetricians, et al. filed.
35	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of United States filed.
37	Feb 23 1989		Joint appendix filed.
38	Feb 23 1989		Brief of appellants William Webster, et al. filed.
39	Feb 23 1989		Lodging received. (Box).
40	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Focus on Family, et al. filed.
41	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc.'s filed.
42	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Covenant House and Good Counsel, Inc. filed.
43	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Christian Advocates Serving Evangelism filed.
44	Feb 23 1989	D	Motion of Legal Defense for Unborn Children for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae filed.
45	Feb 23 1989	D	Motion of Alan Ernest for leave to represent children unborn and born alive filed.
46	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Louisiana, et al. filed.
47	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Certain Members of the General Assembly of PA filed.
48	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Catholics United For Life, et al. filed.
49	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Southern Center For Law & Ethics filed.
50	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Catholic Lawyers Guild of the Archdiocese of Boston, Inc. filed.
51	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Free Speech Advocates filed.
53	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of American Academy of Medical Ethics filed.
54	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of National Right To Life Committee, Inc. filed.
60	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Southwest Life and Law Center, Inc. filed.
61	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of New England Christian Action Council, Inc. filed.
62	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Human Life International filed.
63	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Edward Allen filed.
64	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Right to Life League of Southern California, Inc. filed.

No. 88-605-AFX

Entry	Date	Note	Proceedings and Orders
65	Feb 23 1989		Brief amici curiae of Austin Vaughn, et al. filed.
66	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Paul Marx filed.
75	Feb 23 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Bernard N. Nathanson, M.D. filed.
55	Feb 28 1989		Lodging received. (2 black binders).
52	Mar 1 1989		Record filed.
		*	Certified copy of C. A. proceedings received.
56	Mar 6 1989		Motion of James Joseph Lynch, Jr., for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae GRANTED.
57	Mar 6 1989		Motion of National Legal Foundation for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae GRANTED.
58	Mar 6 1989		Motion of Legal Defense for Unborn Children for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae DENIED.
59	Mar 6 1989		Motion of Alan Ernest for leave to represent children unborn and born alive DENIED.
68	Mar 6 1989		Record filed.
		*	Certified copy of original transcript of record received.
69	Mar 8 1989		SET FOR ARGUMENT, APRIL 26, 1989. (1st CASE)
71	Mar 10 1989	G	Motion of the Acting Solicitor General for leave to participate in oral argument as amicus curiae and for divided argument filed.
76	Mar 13 1989	D	Motion of Robert Packwood, et al. for leave to participate in oral argument as amici curiae, for divided argument and for additional time for oral argument filed.
117	Mar 13 1989	G	Application (A88-724) by American Medical Association, et al. to file a brief amicus curiae in excess of page limits, submitted to Justice Blackmun.
118	Mar 16 1989		Application (A88-724) granted by Justice Blackmun, allowing a maximum of 50 pages.
74	Mar 20 1989		Motion of the Acting Solicitor General for leave to participate in oral argument as amicus curiae and for divided argument GRANTED.
78	Mar 28 1989		Brief amici curiae of Natl. Council of Negro Women, Inc., et al. filed.
77	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Agudath Israel of America filed.
79	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Seventy-Seven Organizations Committed to Women's Equality filed.
80	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of National Organization for Women filed.
81	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Library Assn., et al. filed.
82	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of American Psychological Assn. filed.
83	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of National Assn. of Public Hospitals filed.
85	Mar 30 1989		Lodging received.
86	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Senator Howard Metzenbaum, et al.and *appendix filed.
87	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Committees on Civil Rights, Medicine and Law, et al. filed.
88	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of 281 American Historians filed.
89	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Medical Assn., et al. filed.

No. 88-605-AFX

Entry	Date	Note	Proceedings and Orders
90	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Americans United For Separation of Church and State filed.
91	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Assn. filed.
92	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of 167 Distinguished Scientists and Physicians filed.
93	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of National Coalition Against Domestic Violence filed.
94	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Americans for Democratic Action, et al. filed.
95	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Catholics for A Free Choice, et al. filed.
96	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Jewish Congress, et al. filed.
97	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Center for Population Options, et al. filed.
98	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Public Health Association, et al. filed.
99	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Attorneys General of California, et al. filed.
100	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Group of American Law Professors filed.
101	Mar 30 1989		Brief of appellees Reproductive Health Svcs., et al. filed.
102	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of National Association of Women Lawyers, et al. filed.
103	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Civil Liberties Union, et al. filed.
104	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Canadian Women's Organizations filed.
105	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Population-Environment Balance, et al. filed.
106	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of American Nurses' Association, et al. filed.
107	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of International Women's Health Organizations filed.
108	Mar 30 1989		Brief amicus curiae of Bioethicists For Privacy filed.
109	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of 608 State Legislators from 32 States filed.
110	Mar 30 1989		Brief amici curiae of Women Who Had Abortions and Friends filed.
112	Mar 30 1989	X	Brief amici curiae of California National Organization for Women, et al. filed.
113	Mar 30 1989	X	Brief amicus curiae of Association of Reproductive Health Professionals, et al. filed.
114	Mar 30 1989	G	Motion of Elizabeth Holtzman, District Attorney of Kings County, New York, for leave to join amici curiae brief of Massachusetts, et al. filed.
84	Apr 3 1989		Motion of Robert Packwood, et al. for leave to participate in oral argument as amici curiae, for divided argument and for additional time for oral argument DENIED.
111	Apr 3 1989		CIRCULATED.

No. 88-605-AFX

Entry	Date	Note	Proceedings and Orders
119	Apr 17 1989		Motion of Elizabeth Holtzman, District Attorney of Kings County, New York, for leave to join amici curiae brief of Massachusetts, et al. GRANTED.
120	Apr 17 1989	G	Application (A88-832) to extend the time to file a reply brief from April 19, 1989 to April 21, 1989 by Appellants, submitted to Justice Blackmun.
121	Apr 17 1989		Application (A88-832) granted by Justice Blackmun extending the time to file until April 21, 1989.
122	Apr 20 1989	X	Reply brief of appellants William Webster, et al. filed.
123	Apr 26 1989		ARGUED.

JURISDICTIONAL

STATEMENT

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 11 1988
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

88-605

No. 88-

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri

MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
(Counsel of Record)
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782

Attorneys for Appellants

October 10, 1988

E. L. MENDENHALL, INC., 926 Cherry Street, Kansas City, Mo. 64106, (816) 421-3030

132 pp

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Do physicians or other medical personnel have standing to contest the constitutionality of a state legislative preamble in an abortion statute?

2. Are legislative findings in the preamble to a state abortion bill that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being" facially unconstitutional? See RSMo 1.205.1(1), 1.205.1(2) (1986).

3. Where a statute requiring a determination of fetal viability when a physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is "of twenty or more weeks gestational age" (LMP) has been held to be constitutional, is it facially unconstitutional to require that, in making this determination, the physician shall cause to be performed such "medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child . . . ."? See RSMo 188.029 (1986).

4. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." See RSMo 188.205 (1986).

5. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother"? See RSMo 188.210 (1986).

6. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother"? See RSMo 188.215 (1986).

7. Whether the Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), trimester approach for selecting the test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed should be reconsidered and discarded in favor of a rational basis test.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDINGS

In addition to the parties named in the caption, the State of Missouri was a defendant in the district court and an appellant in the court of appeals; Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City, Howard I. Schwartz, M.D., Robert L. Blake, M.D., Carl C. Pearman, M.D., Carroll Metzger, and Mary L. Pemberton were plaintiffs in the district court and appellees in the court of appeals.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTIONS PRESENTED I
PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDINGS II
TABLE OF CONTENTS III
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES VII
OPINIONS BELOW 1
JURISDICTION 1
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED 1
STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2
THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL 8

I. The Court of Appeals Erred in Applying an Erroneous Standard of Review in This Facial Challenge to the Constitutionality of Missouri's Abortion Statutes 12

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being" Pursuant to a Public Policy of Protecting the Life and Health of Unborn Children to the Fullest Extent Possible in Tort, Criminal, Property, and Abortion Law 14

A. Legislative Findings Without Operative Effect Cannot Threaten Injury So As to Create a "Case or Controversy." 16

B. The Court of Appeals Erred in Invalidating in a Facial Challenge Such Legislative Findings Which Have No Substantive Effect on Abortion 17

III. The States May Require a Physician Who Is About to Perform an Abortion to Make a Determination Whether the Unborn Child Is Viable, and, in So Doing, to Cause to Be Performed Such Tests As Are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child 19

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life 22

A. The State Is Not Required to Subsidize With Public Funds the Exercise of a Constitutional Right 22

B. The Phrase "Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion . . ." Is Not Vague 24

V. The State of Missouri Can Forbid Public Employees From Performing or Assisting an Abortion Not Necessary to Save the Life of the Mother and Declare It Unlawful for Any Public Facility to Be Used for the Purpose of Performing or Assisting an Abortion Not Necessary to Save the Life of the Mother 27

A. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding That Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy Because This Court Has Previously Held in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) That a Public Hospital Need Not Provide Abortion Services 27

CONCLUSION 30

APPENDIX:

A. Opinion and Order Entered June 23, 1987, United States District Court, Western District of Missouri, Central Division A1

B. Judgment Entered on July 13, 1988, United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit A56

C. Notice of Appeal Filed September 29, 1988 ..... A85

D. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions Involved A87

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Rosen, ... F.2d ..... (6th Cir. 1988) 14

Alexander v. HUD, 555 F.2d 166 (7th Cir. 1977) 15

Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737 (1984) 16

Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 1977) 15

Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986) 24

Broderick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973) 26

Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. 1980) 15

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 11

City of Virginia v. Nyberg, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 10

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 4, 6, 19, 20, 21

Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal docketed, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir. 1988) 10

County Executive of Prince George County v. Doe, 300 Md. 445, 479 A.2d 352 (1984) 10

Fitz v. Dolyak, 712 F.2d 330 (8th Cir. 1983) 18

Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988) 13, 24

Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972) 25, 26

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 9, 23, 28, 29

Lyng v. International Union, UAW, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988) 23

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 9, 23, 28, 29

Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) 14

Monmouth County Correctional Institution Inmates v. Lanzaro, 643 F. Supp. 1217 (D. N.J. 1986), aff'd

in part, modified in part, 843 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 108 S.Ct. 1731 (1988) 5

National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767 (11th Cir. 1983) 15

New York v. Bowen, ... F. Supp. ..... (S.D. N.Y. 1988) 10

New York State Club Association, Inc. v. City of New York, 108 S.Ct. 2225 (1988) 13

Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 5, 7, 10, 27, 29

O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904 (Mo. banc 1983) 17

Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 11, 13

Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986) 24

Planned Parenthood v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal docketed, No. 88-..... (10th Cir. 1988) 10, 14

Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 686 F. Supp. 1089 (E.D. Pa. 1988) 14

Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 4

Planned Parenthood v. Harris, 670 F. Supp. 971 (N.D. Ga. 1987) 14

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) .....passim

Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) 17

Regan v. Taxation Without Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 23

Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641 (1984) 30

Roe v. City of Owensboro and Daviess County, No. 88-0097 (W.D. Ky. June 22, 1988) 10

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 14

Traynor v. Turnage, 108 S.Ct. 1372 (1988) 18

United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095 (1987) 12

Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 9

Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) 9

Wynn v. Scott, 449 F. Supp. 1302 (N.D. Ill. 1978) 15

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2 .....1, 16

U.S. Const., Amend. I 1, 2, 12, 13, 24

U.S. Const., Amend. XIV, § 1 .....1, 2, 5

Statutes

28 U.S.C. 1254(2) (1982) 1

28 U.S.C. 1331 (1982) 2

28 U.S.C. 1343 (1982) 2

42 U.S.C. 1983 (1982) 2

42 U.S.C. 1988 (1982) 2

53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (Feb. 2, 1988) 9, 10

RSMo. 1.140 (1986) 1, 30

RSMo. 1.205 (1986) .....passim

RSMo. 1.205.1 (1986) 2, 3, 6, 14, 18

RSMo. 1.205.2 (1986) 16

RSMo. 1.205.4 (1986) 16

RSMo. 188.010 (1986) 1

RSMo. 188.025 (1986) 2, 3

RSMo. 188.029 (1986) .....passim

RSMo. 188.039 (1986) 2, 6

RSMo. 188.200 (1986) 1, 2

RSMo. 188.205 (1986) ..... passim
RSMo. 188.210 (1986) ..... passim
RSMo. 188.215 (1986) ..... passim
RSMo. 188.220 (1986) 1, 3, 27
RSMo. 565.024.1(3) (1978) (amended by L. 1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A) 18
Cal. Penal Code § 187 (1970) 18
Conn. Gen. Stat. 53-31a (1985) 15
Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-21 (1987) 15
Fla. Stat. Ann. § 782.09 (West. Supp. 1983) 18
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 750-322 (West. Supp. 1983) 18
Neb. Rev. Stat. 28-325 (1985) 15
N.D. Stat. 14-02.3-01 (1981) 9
Pa. Act No. 1988-31, 3211(a) 11
Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, 3215 (Purdon's 1983) 9
Pa. Legis. Serv. No. 2 (Purdon's May, 1988) 11

Treatises

E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life, 16-17 (1977) 18
K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology 1, 13 (3d ed. 1982) 18
W. Prosser, Handbook on The Law of Torts, 337 § 55 (4th ed. 1971) 17

OPINIONS BELOW

The June 23, 1987, final judgment of the district court is reported at 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), superseding 655 F. Supp. 1300 (W.D. Mo. 1987), and is reproduced at Appendix A, infra. The July 13, 1988, final judgment of the court of appeals is reported at 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) and is reproduced at Appendix B, infra.

JURISDICTION

On July 13, 1988, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit entered a final judgment, holding unconstitutional on their face the Missouri statutes challenged. On September 29, 1988, appellants filed a notice of appeal from the court's final judgment of July 13, 1988 (App. B, infra). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2.
U.S. Const., Amend. I.
U.S. Const., Amend. XIV, § 1.
§ 1.140, RSMo 1986.
§ 1.205, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.010, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.029, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.200, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.205, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.210, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.215, RSMo 1986.
§ 188.220, RSMo 1986.

The pertinent text of each constitutional provision and statute is set forth in Appendix D pursuant to Rule 15(f) of the Supreme Court Rules.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 26, 1986, the Governor of the State of Missouri signed into law Missouri Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 1596. The effective date was to be August 13, 1986.

Appellees, Reproductive Health Services, et al. (hereinafter "plaintiffs"), filed this facial challenge on July 14, 1986, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1982) and 42 U.S.C. § 1988 (1982). Jurisdiction was predicated on 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 28 U.S.C. § 1343. Plaintiffs challenged §§ 1.205.1 (1), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215, RSMo, as unconstitutional on their face because they allegedly violate the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, and Fourteenth Amendments (Complaint, ¶¶ 2, 19, 30-35).

Plaintiffs alleged that plaintiff Howard Schwartz, M.D., was employed as a "public employee," as the term is defined in § 188.200(1), and was employed at Truman Medical Center, a public facility as that term is defined in § 188.200(2), that he "has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies and on occasion to perform or to assist in the performance of abortions, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions," and that "[o]n said occasions, Dr. Schwartz is paid for such services by 'public funds' as that term is defined by § 188.200(3) of the Act." (Complaint, ¶ 7). Virtually identical allegations were made by all individual plaintiffs and incorporated into the district court's opinion (A10).

On October 24, 1986, the plaintiffs requested leave to file a first amended complaint by interlineation in order to challenge the constitutionality of § 1.205.1(2). The Court addressed the constitutionality of this section in its final Order.

The trial was conducted in the District Court on December 15 to December 18, 1986. Just prior to the trial the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion in limine prohibiting the defendants from presenting any testimony or evidence regarding the constitutionality of §§ 1.205.1(1) or (2).

Medical experts for both plaintiffs and defendants concurred that it is standard medical practice to determine gestational age by ultrasound examination and fetal skull measures whenever it appears that a woman is at least twenty weeks pregnant. Witnesses agreed that no tests other than the ultrasound measurements provide information necessary to determine viability prior to thirty weeks gestational age.

The Missouri Attorney General maintained that the statutory language in §§ 188.205 through 188.215 which forbids public funds, public employees, and public facilities from being used to "encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" is designed only to forbid the funding and affirmative advocacy of conduct contrary to the State's policy of not promoting abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother. These statutes have no criminal penalties. They can be enforced by an injunctive action. See § 188.220, RSMo.

With regard to §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2), the court cited Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and concluded that "a state may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify abortion regulation" and that it was "inappropriate for this Court to conduct an inquiry into such a difficult and philosophical question." Accordingly, the court held that the legislature's pronouncement conflicts with the essence of Roe v. Wade, and that it is "invalid as a matter of law." (A15).

The district court invalidated § 188.025, which required that abortions at and after 16 weeks gestation (LMP) be performed in a hospital. The court concluded that the state did not carry its burden of proving that the requirement was reasonably related to preserving maternal health (A30-A31).

The district court upheld as constitutional the first sentence of § 188.029 which requires a physician to determine whether a fetus is viable when the physician "has reason to believe" that the woman is twenty or more weeks pregnant (LMP), relying on Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), and Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976). However, the court proceeded to invalidate on its face the second sentence of § 188.029. The Court found that "tests to determine fetal weight are not only unreliable and inaccurate, but also add $125.00 to $250.00 to the cost of abortion." (A36). The court also found that "the only method to evaluate lung maturity is by amniocentesis, an expensive procedure which all witnesses agreed would be useless and contrary to accepted medical practice until at least twenty-eight to thirty weeks gestation." (A36). Since the state failed to demonstrate that this provision was "narrowly tailored" to protect the state's interest in fetal life, the court severed the second sentence, and declared it invalid, relying on Colautti.

The district court also declared §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 unconstitutional. The court initially concluded that the "encouraging and counseling" language in each section "abut[s] upon First Amendment freedoms." (A45-A46). Applying the "appropriate rigid standard," the court held that all three sections were "sufficiently vague to render them unconstitutional," reasoning that this court "disapproved of similar terms such as 'counsel,' 'advocate' and 'advise' in the loyalty oath cases of the 1960's because the language was 'not susceptible of objective measurement' and threatened to restrict free speech" (A45-A46).

Besides holding that these three sections were void for vagueness, the court also held that sections 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 violated the right of privacy under the Fourteenth Amendment. First, the court held that the "encouraging and counseling" language in sections 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 "impose[d] a significant barrier to a woman's right to consult with her physician and exercise her freedom of choice." This would result in a situation where "[p]atients who fully pay for their services would be denied access to medical information . . . ." (A49-A50). Second, the court held that the prohibition in § 188.215 on the use of public facilities was unconstitutional under Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983), and that Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), was not controlling "where there is no indication that 'public funds' would be expended." (A50-A51).

Finally, the court held that the "performing or assisting" language, as applied to public funds or public employees, violated "the Eighth Amendment rights of Missouri inmates to receive medical care," relying on Monmouth County Correctional Institution Inmates v. Lanzaro, 643 F. Supp. 1217 (D. N.J. 1986), aff'd in part, modified in part, 843 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 108 S.Ct. 1731 (1988). However, the court rejected plaintiffs' claims that these provisions violated "academic freedom" by affecting instruction in abortion procedure at state medical schools.

On March 25, 1987, plaintiffs filed a motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That motion was granted by the court on April 30, 1987. Defendants' notice of appeal was filed May 15, 1987.

Appellants appealed from all aspects of the district court's decision, except from the injunction against § 188.039, relating to informed consent. No cross appeal was taken to the district court's approval of the first sentence of § 188.029.

The court of appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court of appeals affirmed the invalidation of § 188.025, regarding the performance of abortions in a hospital at sixteen weeks gestation. The court also affirmed the invalidation of the second sentence of § 188.029, regarding tests to determine viability, relying on this Court's statement in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), that "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor." (A59). The court rejected the State's argument that the statute did not require any particular tests but only those "necessary medical examinations so as to determine viability," concluding that the statute "plainly declares that in determining viability, doctors must perform tests to find gestational age, and fetal weight and lung maturity." (A60, n. 5).

The court also affirmed the invalidation of the preamble findings of § 1.205.1. The court held that the plaintiffs had standing because the preamble did "exactly what the Supreme Court has declared it may not do: espouse a theory of when life begins as the foundation of the state's regulation of abortion" and "[n]o persons are better situated to attack the constitutionality of this endeavor than those parties who are directly affected by the state's abortion laws—laws that allegedly are based on and reflective of an impermissible theory of life." (A63). The court invalidated the preamble as "simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." (A64).

The court also affirmed the invalidation of §§ 188.205 (in part), 188.210, and 188.215 because the "encourage or counsel" language was "void for vagueness and violative of the right to privacy." Even though these provisions carry no criminal penalties, the court held that a "strict scrutiny" standard applied in evaluating the vagueness challenge because the provisions "implicate[d] both first and fourteenth amendment rights of both physicians and their patients: the right to disseminate and receive information about abortion, and the right to knowingly and intelligently choose an abortion after consulting a physician." (A67). Rejecting the State's limiting construction that the "encouraging and counseling" language banned only "affirmative advocacy," the court concluded that the language was "much broader than the interpretation offered by the state" and was "vague because the word 'counsel' is fraught with ambiguity; its range is incapable of objective measurement." Id. Finally, the court agreed that the "encouraging and counseling" language of §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 constituted "an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." (A70).

The appellate court affirmed the district court decision that the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.215 (public facilities) was contrary to Nyberg v. City of Virginia, supra. The court also decided that the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.210 (public employees) was equally invalid. However, the court of appeals reversed the lower court's order regarding the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.205 because it was inconsistent with Poelker v. Doe, supra. The court of appeals also rejected the district court's construction of the "performing or assisting" language and stated that the Eighth Amendment was not implicated.

Overall, the court of appeals affirmed the permanent injunction against all provisions appealed, except for the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.205 which was severed and declared facially constitutional.

THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL

Beginning with Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), this Court and the states have been engaged in a very difficult and complex venture in substantive due process. In Roe, this Court held that the states have an "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life . . . ." 410 U.S. at 162. Many states have quite legitimately acted upon this explicit constitutional authority, this invitation, to protect the life and health of unborn human life.

In Roe, this Court held that restrictive abortion statutes were not justified merely because the state "adopt[ed] one theory of life." 410 U.S. at 162. But it never intimated that states may not expound a philosophy about human life in seeking to protect human life. Plainly, all homicide statutes are based on a philosophy about human life. Yet, this court of appeals broadly expanded this dictum in Roe in an extreme and unsettling fashion to hold that states may not even make a finding in a legislative preamble that "the life of each human being begins at conception." Under this holding, state legislators are not allowed to even think that human life begins at conception. Judge Arnold, concurring in part and dissenting in part, took this error to its logical extreme by suggesting "that while a governmental declaration about when human life begins insofar as it is used to justify abortion is unconstitutional . . . I do not see why [it] should not be upheld insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion." (A83). He would have held the preamble "only invalid as applied to the subject of abortion."

Likewise, in Roe v. Wade, the Court described the constitutional right to abortion as the right of the woman in concert with her attending physician to decide to have an abortion. In Maher v. Roe, the Court characterized the right as "a constitutionally protected interest 'in making certain kinds of important decisions free of governmental compulsion.'" Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473 (1977) (emphasis added), quoting Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599-600 and nn. 24, 26 (1977). From this premise, this Court held in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), that a municipal government may ban the performance of abortions at all public hospitals, whether or not physicians were willing or able to provide abortions and whether or not patients were willing to pay for those services. Subsequently, this Court upheld federal and state restrictions on the use of public funds to pay for abortion services unless the life of the mother was threatened if the pregnancy was carried to term. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980).

In reliance upon this Court's decisions in Poelker, Harris and Maher, other states, like Missouri, have determined to restrict public subsidization for abortion services. See, e.g., N.D. Cen. Code 14-02.3-02 through 14-02.3-04 (1981) ("performs, refers, or encourages abortion"); Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, sec. 3215 (Purdon's 1983). The federal government has also recently sought to restrict funding for any abortion services, including abortion counseling, while funding childbirth. 53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (Feb. 2, 1988).

Disregarding the facts, language, and principles of Poelker, Harris, and Maher, the court of appeals relied instead on a 1982 Eighth Circuit decision which held that a municipality must allow the performance of abortions in a public hospital if physicians are willing to perform such abortions and patients are willing to pay for such abortions, to hold unconstitutional on their face three Missouri provisions which prohibited the use of public funds, public facilities, or public employees to "perform or assist" or "encourage or counsel" a woman "to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, cert. denied, City of Virginia v. Nyberg, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983).

The Nyberg decision has created considerable confusion in the law since 1983. It directly conflicts with the facts and language of Poelker. See Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d at 759-60 (Heaney, J., dissenting). It contributes to a recent trend by federal courts to ignore the holding of Poelker and, to force public hospitals and public programs to support abortion services. See, e.g., Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) (permanently enjoining federal regulations at 53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (Feb. 2, 1988) that preclude federally funded projects from providing abortion counseling or referral); Planned Parenthood v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988) (same); Roe v. City of Owensboro and Daviess County, No. 88-0097 (W.D. Ky. June 22, 1988) (temporary restraining order entered against enforcement of Ky. Rev. Stat. 311.800(1), prohibiting use of public facilities to perform abortions). See, contra, New York v. Bowen, No. 88-0701 (S.D. N.Y. June 30, 1988) (upholding regulations at 53 Fed. Reg. 2922); County Executive of Prince George County v. Doe, 300 Md. 445, 479 A.2d 352 (1984) (challenge to order prohibiting abortions in public hospitals did not raise substantial federal claim).

Likewise, this Court has held that the states have a compelling interest in preserving the life of viable unborn children. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983). In Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983), this Court upheld Missouri's second physician requirement, stating that "the State's compelling interest in protecting a viable fetus justifies the second-physician requirement . . . ." Id. at 485, n. 7. The Court explained:

> Preserving the life of a viable fetus that is aborted may not often be possible, but the State legitimately may choose to provide safeguards for the comparatively few instances of live birth that occur.

462 U.S. at 485-86.

Section 188.029 provides a similar "safeguard" in protecting the life of a viable unborn child by ensuring that a physician makes a determination of viability and records his findings.

Other states, like Missouri, have sought to protect the life and health of the viable fetus to the fullest extent possible by requiring the physician to determine, according to his best medical judgment, whether the fetus is viable. See, e.g., Pa. Act No. 1988-31, sec. 3211(a), Pa. Legis. Serv. No. 2 (Purdon's May, 1988) (presumption at 19 weeks).

The decisions of the courts below provide compelling evidence that the lower federal courts do not apply normal principles of constitutional adjudication to abortion cases. The Eighth Circuit's analysis expands this Court's precedents in favor of abortion on demand, further contracts the State's compelling interest in the life of viable unborn children, and disregards this Court's holdings that abortion is a private matter which government need in no way subsidize. Consequently, if Missouri's carefully drafted statutory provisions are unconstitutional under Roe v. Wade and its progeny as the Court below maintains, appellants submit that Roe v. Wade should itself be reconsidered.

I. The Court of Appeals Erred in Applying an Erroneous Standard of Review in This Facial Challenge to the Constitutionality of Missouri's Abortion Statutes.

Because this is a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a state statute, plaintiffs were required to prove that the challenged provisions were unconstitutional in all of their applications or that the statute could not be constitutionally applied to any set of facts. The facial nature of this challenge was emphasized by the appellants in both the trial court and the court of appeals. Although the court of appeals, and Judge Arnold concurring, recognized the facial nature of the challenge, the court ignored the importance of this and completely failed to apply the proper standard of review.

> A facial challenge to a legislative Act is, of course, the most difficult challenge to mount successfully, since the challenger must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid. The fact that the . . . [Act] might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is insufficient to render it wholly invalid, since we have not recognized an "overbreadth" doctrine outside the limited context of the First Amendment. (Citations omitted.)

United States v. Salerno, ... U.S. ....., 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987). Facial challenges have rarely been upheld outside the context of the First Amendment. This past term, in the context of a facial First Amendment challenge, this Court reiterated this standard:

> Although such facial challenges are sometimes permissible and often have been entertained, especially when speech protected by the First Amendment is at stake, to prevail on a facial attack the plaintiff must demonstrate that the challenged law either "could never be applied in a valid manner" or that even though it may be validly applied to the plaintiff and others, it nevertheless is so broad that it "may inhibit the constitutionally protected speech of third parties." (Citations omitted.)

New York State Club Association, Inc. v. City of New York, ... U.S. ....., 108 S.Ct. 2225, 2233 (1988).

In the same manner, this Court rejected a facial First Amendment challenge to a municipal ban on residential picketing. Frisby v. Schultz, ... U.S. ....., 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988). In so doing, the Court rejected contentions that the law was invalid because it did not specify how it would be applied in particular hypothetical circumstances. Frisby, 108 S.Ct. at 2504.

This Court rejected such a hypothetical attack in the context of abortion statutes in Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983). In Ashcroft, the Court upheld a Missouri statute requiring that a second physician be present during post-viable abortions because it "reasonably further[ed] the State's compelling interest" in preserving life. 462 U.S. at 483. The Court upheld this requirement even for abortions performed by the dilatation and evacuation (D&E) method when there was no possibility of fetal survival and rejected the application of a "narrowly drawn" standard for such legislation. Id. at 483, n. 7. Statutes designed to further compelling state interests need not be drafted so as to "accommodate every conceivable contingency." Id.

The court of appeals' failure here to apply a proper standard of review to the facial challenge leveled by the plaintiffs is not a discrete instance of error. Rather, it is an example of a pattern that has developed in the federal courts' approach to abortion statutes.[1] Thus, the court of appeals' standard of review presents a substantial question.

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being" Pursuant to a Public Policy of Protecting the Life and Health of Unborn Children to the Fullest Extent Possible in Tort, Criminal, Property, and Abortion Law.

The court below held that subsections 1.205.1(1) and (2), RSMo 1986, were invalid because they conflicted with Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 162 (1973), wherein the United States Supreme Court declared that a state could not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify abortion regulation.

Initially, one must note that the two subsections declared invalid are preamble statements of fact and principle enacted in order to provide guidance in interpreting the operative language of § 1.205. Neither subsection does anything substantively.

---

1. See, e.g., Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Rosen, ... F.2d ..... (6th Cir., No. 86-3664, Aug. 12, 1988) (affirming permanent injunction in facial challenge to parental notice statute); Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 686 F. Supp. 1089 (E.D. Pa. 1988) (preliminary injunction entered in facial challenge to amendments to abortion statute passed in response to Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986); Planned Parenthood v. Harris, No. 88-1159 (N.D. Ga., July 11, 1988) (Harris II) (entering preliminary injunction in facial challenge to amendments to parental notice law passed in response to previous invalidation, Planned Parenthood v. Harris, 670 F. Supp. 971 (N.D. Ga. 1987)), appeal docketed, No. ..... (11th Cir. .....); Planned Parenthood v. Bowen, 687 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988) (permanent injunction in facial challenge to federal regulations on public funding for abortion counseling, superseding 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988)); Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) (same).

It is well established in other circuit courts of appeal that "preambles to statutes do not impose substantive rights, duties or obligations." National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767 (11th Cir. 1983). See Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310, 1316 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Alexander v. HUD, 555 F.2d 166, 171 (7th Cir. 1977). By declaring the Missouri General Assembly's findings to be in violation of the plaintiff class's right to privacy, the Court had to decide that the preamble did something which is directly contrary to decisions in other circuits that preambles have no operative effect. Association of American Railroads v. Costle, supra.

Other states, like Missouri, have sought to persuade citizens, through legislation, "that the unborn child is a human being from the time of conception." Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, ¶ 81.21 (1987). Cf. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. 53-31a (1985); Neb. Rev. Stat. 28-325 (1985). The court of appeals' holding also conflicts in spirit with decisions of the Seventh Circuit, which has held that such a preamble cannot be the basis for striking provisions of a bill regulating abortion. Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772, 778-79 (7th Cir. 1980); Wynn v. Scott, 449 F. Supp. 1302, 1314-15 & n. 9 (N.D. Ill. 1978) (3-judge court).

The substantive language of § 1.205, which was unchallenged, expands existing state tort, property, and criminal law protection for unborn children. Prior to the statute, Missouri law provided different degrees of protection for unborn children. This statute updates Missouri law in these areas and provides for consistent treatment of unborn children. However, § 1.205 specifically excludes abortion from its ambit by providing unborn children only those rights, privileges, and immunities permitted by "the Constitution of the United States and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court." § 1.205.2, RSMo. The statute also specifically provides that it does not create any cause of action against pregnant women with respect to the care of their unborn children. Section 1.205.4, RSMo.

A. Legislative Findings Without Operative Effect Cannot Threaten Injury So As to Create a "Case or Controversy".

The statute was not intended to affect, and does not in any way affect, any woman's constitutional right to choose abortion over childbirth. It simply defines the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of Missouri law in circumstances other than those involved in abortion. The court's decision to strike the challenged preamble provisions of the statute does not diminish the statute's impact on state law.

Since § 1.205 cannot infringe upon any judicially established right of any plaintiff class member who desires to obtain an abortion or perform an abortion, the plaintiffs in this action lack standing to challenge any provision of § 1.205, RSMo. The doctrine of standing requires that a plaintiff allege personal injury fairly traceable to a defendant's alleged unlawful conduct. Without standing, a litigant cannot meet the Article III "case and controversy" requirement of federal judicial power. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 754-758 (1984). If a person cannot be injured by the operation of a statute, that person cannot allege a case in controversy such that a federal court can exercise its jurisdiction to declare the statute invalid. So long as Roe v. Wade and its progeny remain the law, § 1.205 does not affect any right of a woman to have an abortion or the conduct of her physician. Therefore, plaintiffs cannot meet the case and controversy requirements of Article III of the United States Constitution.

B. The Court of Appeals Erred in Invalidating in a Facial Challenge Legislative Findings Which Have No Substantive Effect on Abortion.

The court's decision on the merits was also incorrect both factually and legally, because (1) the Supreme Court has never placed any limitation on state legislative authority to determine when human life begins in a non-abortion context; and (2) since the statute is abortion-neutral, it is in no way inconsistent with Roe v. Wade.

State legislatures have always determined the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of state law. For example, most states provide children a cause of action in tort for prenatal injuries inflicted by a person other than the child's mother. See W. Prosser, Handbook on The Law of Torts, 337 § 55 (4th ed. 1971) ("when actually faced with the issue for decision, almost all of the jurisdictions have allowed recovery even though injury occurred during the early weeks of pregnancy, when the child was neither viable nor quick").

Many states also provide a cause of action to the parents for the wrongful death of their unborn children. For example, the Rhode Island Supreme Court held in Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) that the word "person" as used in the Rhode Island Wrongful Death Act includes unborn children. 117 R.I. at 188, 365 A.2d at 754. As recently as 1983, the Missouri Supreme Court held that the term "person" as used in Missouri's Wrongful Death Statute "includes the human fetus en ventre sa mere" stating that its conclusion was "supported by a strong positive trend among other jurisdictions holding that a fetus is a 'person,' 'minor' or 'minor child' within the meaning of their particular wrongful death statutes." O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904, 910 (Mo. banc 1983).

Most states recognize in unborn children certain rights under property law and many states provide criminal sanctions for the intentional or criminally negligent killing of an unborn child. For example, a number of states impose criminal sanctions in the nature of manslaughter for the killing of a viable fetus or unborn quick child. See, e.g., Cal. Penal Code § 187 (1970); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 782.09 (West Supp. 1983); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 750-322 (West Supp. 1983). In fact, prior to the enactment of § 1.205, Missouri also had such a law. See Section 565.024.1(3), RSMo 1978 (amended by L. 1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A).

The foregoing examples demonstrate that the matters dealt with in Section 1.205 have long been recognized as within the proper purview of state regulation and proper subjects for legislative enactments. Moreover, it is clear that, as stated in § 1.205.1(2), "[u]nborn children have [and always have had] protectable interests in life, health and well being." In this respect, the Statute is merely a proper exercise of legislative authority which recognizes what is now and has long been a fact. Given the states' traditional role in this area, the challenged statutory provisions are entitled to a strong presumption of validity. Fitz v. Dolyak, 712 F.2d 330, 333 (8th Cir. 1983).

The General Assembly's findings have been based on what would seem to be indisputable biological and medical understanding that the life of every human being begins at conception. See, e.g., E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life 16-17 (1977); K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology 1, 13 (3d ed. 1982). The court's holding imposes on states' legislatures a philosophical nihilism that conflicts with modern medical understanding and practice. Even if medical authorities were "sharply divided," the court of appeals should have deferred to the legislature on this point of medical understanding. Traynor v. Turnage, 108 S.Ct. 1372, 1383 (1988).

The court below declared invalid provisions of Missouri law with no operative effect intended only to aid in the understanding of substantive provisions which were not challenged. If the substantive provisions of a statute fail to violate anyone's indviidual constitutional rights, the preamble of that statute cannot facially violate such rights.

Finally, if Roe v. Wade constitutes authority for the decision of the Eighth Circuit, then appellants submit that Roe should be carefully reviewed because its conclusions are inconsistent with the strong factual support for the findings and policy judgments which led to the adoption of the preamble provisions in question.

III. The States May Require a Physician Who Is About to Perform an Abortion to Make a Determination Whether the Unborn Child Is Viable, and in So Doing, to Cause to Be Performed Such Tests As Are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child.

The district court and court of appeals were correct in upholding the first sentence of section 188.029, which requires that before performing an abortion on a woman "he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age," the physician "shall first determine if the unborn child is viable . . . ." This holding was based on medical evidence by the plaintiffs' own witness, Dr. Maulik, and others, that showed that the twenty-week designation was reasonably related to viability because there may be a four-week or greater error in estimating gestational age.

Despite this conclusion, the court of appeals facially invalidated the second sentence of 188.029. The court below, relying on dictum in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1978), that legislatures could not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability," concluded that "this is precisely what the Missouri legislature has attempted to proclaim." (A59). The court of appeals also adopted the findings of the district court that the lung maturity provision required the use of amniocentesis, which was expensive and not rationally related to the determination of viability at twenty weeks (A60, n. 5).

The court of appeals' reliance on Colautti is misplaced. Colautti dealt with a state statute which subjected a physician to potential criminal liability if he failed to use a certain procedure "when the fetus 'is viable' or when there is 'sufficient reason to believe that the fetus may be viable.'" 439 U.S. at 381. There the Court stated, "[b]ecause this point may differ with each pregnancy, neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus." Id. at 389. The court struck down this provision concluding that the term "may be viable" was unconstitutionally vague when stated in conjunction with the phrase "is viable" and because a "scienter requirement with respect to the finding of viability" was absent. Id. at 390.

Despite the fact that the court of appeals relied on the Colautti dictum that the legislature could not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant," that dictum is plainly not applicable to § 188.029. First, the General Assembly has not emphasized any "single factor," but instead has specified three factors—consistent with medical science—for which a finding must be made. Second, the legislature has not prejudged what those findings must be. Finally, the legislature has not made all or any of these factors "determinant" of viability. The determination of viability is left to the medical judgment of the attending physician. Although three objective factors medically consistent with a determination of viability are identified, none of these factors is made determinant and the physician may consider any other factors. For these reasons, Colautti does not apply to strike § 188.029.

The court's invalidation of the second sentence of § 188.029 because of the fetal weight and lung maturity language is indicative of the pattern by federal courts to ignore normal principles of constitutional adjudication in a facial challenge. The court of appeals misread the plain language of 188.029 as a matter of law. The plain language provides that the physician shall cause to be performed such tests "as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child . . . ." The court read this language as saying that "doctors must perform tests to find gestational age, and fetal weight and lung maturity." (A60, n. 5). But there is a significant difference between a requirement to perform "tests to find" and one to perform "such . . . tests as are necessary to make a finding."

The court read into the plain language specific tests which are not required by the statute on its face. The statutory language allows for the distinct possibility that no finding can be made, or that a finding can be made by a single test, thereby making unnecessary the use of another test, or that a finding can be derived without an intrusive test. The statutory language provides flexibility that the court's jaundiced construction excises.

This allowance for flexibility in obtaining a finding is directly relevant to the "lung maturity" language. The district court and the court of appeals would read the plain language as specifically requiring amniocentesis, despite the fact that the plain language specifies no tests, but refers more generally to "such . . . tests as are necessary to make a finding." The evidence provided by the medical experts at trial was that amniocentesis could make "no finding" of lung maturity at twenty weeks. Within the plain language of the statute, an amniocentesis test cannot be a "necessary" test to "make a finding" if it can provide no information.

The court of appeals' analysis was erroneous as a matter of law. It was based on a misreading of the plain language and it employed an erroneously high standard of review. The court thus erred in facially invalidating the second sentence of 188.029.

Even if the court of appeals was correct in invalidating the "lung maturity" language of 188.029, it erred by failing to sever the "lung maturity" language from 188.029 and upholding the remainder of the section. Such severance of a discrete "finding" would allow the implementation of the provisions for the other required findings. This would further the State's purpose in requiring that necessary findings be made and recorded by a physician determining viability. The court of appeals' decision presents a substantial federal question deserving review. On plenary consideration by this Court, that decision should be reversed.

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life.

A. The State Is Not Required to Subsidize With Public Funds the Exercise of a Constitutional Right.

The court below reversed the district court's decision declaring § 188.205 to be unconstitutional in part on the basis of Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1988), which held that a government may refuse to provide any public assistance for any abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. Thus, the court felt bound to uphold the provision of § 188.205 which forbids the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. However, the court declared the remainder of § 188.205 to be facially invalid because the phrase "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" was unconstitutionally vague and because the ban constituted an obstacle to a woman's exercise of her right to privacy. Each rationale expressed by the court below should be reviewed because it is inconsistent with decisions rendered by this court regarding the subsidizing of constitutional rights and the standard for reviewing facial challenges to state statutes on the basis of vagueness.

As recently as March, 1988, this Court held that a government is not required to furnish funds in order for a person to maximize the exercise of a constitutional right. The court stated in Lyng v. International Union, UAW, ... U.S. ....., 108 S.Ct. 1184, 1190 (1988), that "'we have held in several contexts [including the first amendment] that a legislature's decision not to subsidize the exercise of a fundamental right does not infringe the right.' Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540, 549 (1983)." Clearly, with regard to § 188.205, the State of Missouri does not violate a woman's right to obtain an abortion by refusing to allow public funds to be used for abortion counseling services. Contrary to the court of appeals' decision, this Court's rulings in Maher v. Roe, Harris v. McRae, and Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), conclusively establish that § 188.205, which is concerned with the expenditure of public funds, does not constitute an obstacle in violation of a woman's right to privacy.

B. The Phrase "Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion . . ." Is Not Vague.

In its eagerness to declare the encouraging and counseling language used by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri to be vague, the court of appeals ignored not only the appropriate standard for review but also the "well-established principle that statutes will be interpreted to avoid constitutional difficulties" [citations omitted]. Frisby v. Schultz, ... U.S. ....., 108 S.Ct. 2495, 2501 (1988). In reaching its decision regarding the second half of § 188.205, the court below decided that the language implicated First Amendment rights, rejected a narrow reading and construction offered by the Missouri Attorney General's Office, and ignored the most accepted definitions of the words it declared vague. Finally, the court disregarded a conflicting decision rendered by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals which had concluded that the term "counseling for abortion procedures" was not so vague that a reasonable person would not understand what abortion-related activities the State of Arizona had legislatively decided not to fund. See Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 948-949 (9th Cir. 1983), appealed after remand 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd, Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, ... U.S. ....., 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986).

Initially, this Court should note that § 188.205 does not implicate the First Amendment rights of any person. Section 188.205 merely directs officials not to expend public funds under their control for the purpose of performing abortion services, including encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life. The court of appeals clearly erred in reviewing § 188.205 pursuant to a strict scrutiny standard. The statute has no criminal penalties, and does not forbid anyone from discussing the subject of abortion.

When one examines the language declared vague by the district court and the court of appeals in its proper context, it is clear that the restriction is not so vague that a person of common intelligence must guess at its meaning. As the Attorney General of Missouri has stated in both the lower courts, the language in question should be construed as much narrower and specific than suggested by either of the courts' opinions. The restriction in § 188.205 is designed to prohibit the expenditure of public funds for the sole purpose of affirmatively advocating to a particular woman that she undertake an abortion procedure not necessary to save her life. The statute does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy. Section 188.205 refers to "encouraging" and "counseling" for a particular line of conduct. The purpose of the statute is one which may not be desired by the plaintiffs. There is nothing vague about it, and it provides a reasonable person fair notice of the conduct which will not be subsidized by the state.

In Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972), despite the fact that First Amendment freedoms were "implicated" in the context of a statute imposing criminal penalties, the court stated:

Condemned to the use of words, we can never expect > mathematical certainty from our language. The words of the Rockford ordinance are marked by "flexibility and reasonable breadth, rather than meticulous specificity" [cit. omit.], but we think it is clear what the ordinance as a whole prohibits.

Id. at 110. Likewise, in Broderick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973), First Amendment freedoms were "implicated" by an Oklahoma statute which restricted the political activity of public employees. Noting that "there may be disputes over the meaning of such terms in [section] 818 as 'partisan,' or 'take part in,' or 'affairs of' political parties," id. at 608, the court rejected the claim that these statutes were constitutionally vague. The court held that the statute was "not so vague that 'men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning.'" Id. at 607 (emphasis added). In doing so, it stated:

> There are limitations in the English language with respect to being both specific and manageably brief, and it seems to us that although the prohibitions may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, they are set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with, without sacrifice of the public interest.

Id. at 608.

In declaring the latter half of § 188.205 to be unconstitutionally vague, the court below ignored and ridiculed the reasonable construction offered by the Missouri Attorney General as well as every other principle this Court has set forth regarding a facial determination of the constitutionality of a state statute. Thus, the court of appeals' decision presents a substantial federal question which this Court should review.

V. The State of Missouri Can Forbid Public Employees From Performing or Assisting an Abortion Not Necessary to Save the Life of the Mother and Declare It Unlawful for Any Public Facility to Be Used for the Purpose of Performing or Assisting an Abortion Not Necessary to Save the Life of the Mother.

A. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding That Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy Because This Court Has Previously Held in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) That a Public Hospital Need Not Provide Abortion Services.

In §§ 188.220 and 188.215, the State of Missouri provided in part that it should be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist in abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting in abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. These provisions were declared to be unconstitutional under Nyberg v. City of Virginia (Nyberg II), 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), a two-to-one decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in which the court refused to remove an injunction previously issued against a municipality entered because of an ordinance prohibiting the performance of abortion in a community hospital. The Eighth Circuit's decision to rely upon Nyberg and declare the performing or assisting language in each of these two statutes to be unconstitutional is directly contrary to the superior authority of Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), wherein this Court upheld a mayor's "directive," id. at 550, applicable to both of the two city-owned hospitals in St. Louis, id. at 519, which totally "prohibited the performance of abortions in the city hospitals except when there was a threat of grave physiological injury or death to the mother." Id. at 520. The court also upheld a staffing practice whereby one city hospital used doctors only from "a Jesuit-operated institution opposed to abortion." Id.

The court of appeals' decision is also in conflict with several decisions of this Court which have broadly held that government may refuse to provide any public assistance for any abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. In Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), this Court upheld a Connecticut administrative regulation which limited benefits for abortions "to those that are medically necessary," id. at 466, because it placed "no obstacle—absolute or otherwise—in the pregnant woman's path . . . she continues as before to be dependent on private sources for the service she desires." Id. at 474. It "imposed no restriction on access to abortions that was not already there" (i.e., the dependency on private sources). Id. The court held that the policy was constitutional, even if it made it "impossible" for a woman to have an abortion that was not "medically necessary." Id. at 466, 474.

Most recently, in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), this Court upheld "the most restrictive version of the Hyde Amendment," id. at 325, n. 27, which withheld funds for abortion "except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term." Id. at 325, n. 27. The court viewed the Hyde Amendment as representing "a refusal to subsidize abortion." Id. at 317. It upheld the Hyde Amendment not on the narrow ground that it restricted "funding," but on the broader principle that it simply created no unconstitutional burden on the right to abortion because a woman who desires an abortion suffers no disadvantage from the amendment—she continues as before to be dependent on private sources for the services she desires." Id. at 314. Citing Maher, the Court held that the most restrictive Hyde Amendment was constitutional even if it made it "impossible" for a woman to obtain an abortion in a case where "the life of the mother would [not] be endangered if the fetus were carried to term." Id. at 315-316, n. 27.

In applying these controlling precedents, the courts below erroneously limited their broad principle to mean merely that the government is not obligated to fund abortions. They found Poelker uncontrolling where no public funds would be expended. This is a clear misconstruction. The directive upheld in Poelker was not a narrow restriction on "funding" abortions but broadly prohibited "the performance of abortions in the city hospitals." 432 U.S. at 520 (emphasis added). As the dissent emphasized, the directive made no exceptions for "paid" abortions, for doctors who "would willingly perform them," or for small communities "where the public hospital is the only health care facility." Id. at 523-524 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The court did not require such exceptions, but broadly held that St. Louis could elect "as a policy choice, to provide publicly financed hospital services for childbirth without providing corresponding services for nontherapeutic abortions." Id. at 521 (emphasis added).

The district court's application of Poelker was particularly egregious because Poelker was an as-applied challenge, while plaintiffs' is merely a facial challenge. Poelker, rather than Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983), should control the result regarding the performing/assisting language in the statutes.

If the "encouraging or counseling" language of §§ 188.210 and 188.215 is unconstitutionally overbroad, this language should have been severed from the "performing or assisting" language in each statute and the "performing or assisting" language should have been independently upheld. Federal courts are obligated to separate constitutional provisions from unconstitutional provisions in a statute "and to maintain the act in so far as it is valid." Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 652 (1984). Missouri has a general severability clause in its statutes. § 1.140, RSMo 1986. The district court relied on this severability clause to sever and uphold the first sentence of § 188.029 and the court of appeals severed and upheld the first sentence of § 188.205. The court of appeals should have likewise severed and upheld the "performing or assisting" language of §§ 188.210 and 188.215.

CONCLUSION

The Court should note probable jurisdiction.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
Assistant Attorney General
JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782
Attorneys for Appellants

October 10, 1988

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,
v.
William L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5.

United States District Court,
W.D. Missouri, C.D.

March 17, 1987.
As Amended April 30, 1987.

Class action was brought seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, which challenged constitutionality of several sections of state act relating to regulation of abortion. The District Court, Scott O. Wright, Chief Judge, held that: (1) class certification of action was appropriate; (2) section of statute which stated that life of each human being began at conception and that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well being were invalid as matter of law; (3) section which required all 16-week abortions to be performed in hospital did not reasonably relate to state's interest in maternal health, and thus was invalid; (4) state could not dictate either tests or findings which enter into physician's decision as to whether or not fetus is viable; and (5) section which prohibited expenditure of public funds, actions of public employees, and use of public facilities for purpose of performing or assisting abortions and encouraging or counseling woman to have abortions, if unnecessary to save her life, was invalid.

Ordered accordingly.

Superseding 655 F.Supp. 1300.

1. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 181

Numerosity requirement for certification of class action was met in challenge to state's abortion statutes, as number of health care providers, facilities, and pregnant females in state made trying individual actions inconvenient. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 23(a), 28 U.S.C.A.; V.A.M.S. §§ 1.205, subd. 1(1, 2), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 188.205, 188.210, 188.215.

2. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 181

Claims of representative parties in challenge to state's abortion statutes were typical of those of class, sufficient for certification of class action, in that statutes would prohibit or mandate certain actions of all health professionals who were public employees dealing with pregnant women, and all women seeking abortions after specified gestational period would be confronted with other provisions of the statute. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 23(a), 28 U.S.C.A.; V.A.M.S. §§ 1.205, subd. 1(1, 2), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 188.205, 188.210, 188.215.

3. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 181

Health care providers had standing to bring class action to challenge portions of abortion statutes, despite fact that plaintiffs failed to name any pregnant females seeking abortion services or counseling in action, in that plaintiff physicians had standing to assert rights of his or her patients, including those seeking abortions. Fed. Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 23(a), 28 U.S.C.A.; V.A.M.S. §§ 1.205, subd. 1(1, 2), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 188.205, 188.210, 188.215.

4. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 181

In cases which involve sensitive and highly personal matters, such as abortion, reasons for certification of class action become more substantial; class action not only assures anonymity and prevents chilling effect associated with public exposure concerning abortions, but also provides fluid membership which guarantees case or controversy. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 23(b)(2), 28 U.S.C.A.

5. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 181

In civil rights cases, court is not required to consider necessity of class action certification; thus, class certification may be granted even though only relief sought is declaratory and injunctive in nature. Fed.Rules Civ. Proc.Rules 23(a), (b)(2, 3), 23 note, 28 U.S.C.A.

6. Federal Civil Procedure (Key) 173

While district court generally should not hold evidentiary hearing before certifying class, this is not mandatory where court has sufficient material before it to determine nature of allegations and whether requirements of class certification rule have been met. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 23(a), 28 U.S.C.A.

7. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Section of state abortion statute which stated that life of each human being began at conception and that unborn children had protectable interest in life, health, and well being was unconstitutional as a matter of law. V.A.M.S. § 1.205, subd. 1(1, 2); U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

8. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statutory requirement that physicians certify in writing that he or she has apprised pregnant woman of certain facts before abortion could be performed was invalid as matter of law, in that statute did not permit attending physician to delegate to another qualified individual responsibility to convey information needed for informed consent. V.A.M.S. § 188.039.

9. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Constitutional Law (Key) 274(5)

Statute which required, without exception, physician to inform patient of pregnancy status prior to abortion constituted impermissible intrusion into privacy of doctor-patient relationship, which deprived woman seeking abortion of right to consult with physician and rely on his discretion and professional judgment in violation of Fourteenth Amendment. V.A.M.S. § 188.039; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

10. Statutes (Key) 64(2)

Entire statute requiring physicians to impart specific information to pregnant women who sought abortions was invalid as a unit, in that provisions were inextricably woven together such that valid provisions standing alone were incomplete and did not accurately reflect legislative intent. V.A.M.S. §§ 1.140, 188.039; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

11. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

In attempt to defend constitutionality of challenged statute which required that all post 16-week abortions be performed only in hospital, state must demonstrate that regulations were legitimately related to objective state sought to accomplish, and must make reasonable effort to limit regulation to that specific time during and after second trimester when health interest would be furthered; state has burden of proving health justification. V.A.M.S. § 188.025.

12. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statute which required that all abortions performed after 16 weeks gestation be performed in hospitals was invalid in that statute significantly impacted on woman's access to abortion, and state failed to prove that hospitalization requirement was reasonably related to its interest in maternal health. V.A.M.S. § 188.025.

13. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) .50

State's interest in potentiality of human life becomes compelling only at viability, which is point at which fetus has capability of meaningful life outside woman's body; at this point, state may regulate or even proscribe abortions, except where necessary to preserve life or health of woman seeking abortion, but state may only regulate in such context if it narrowly tailors its regulations to precise state interest at stake. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

14. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

State legislature did not impermissibly usurp physician's function in determining whether particular fetus is viable by obligating physician to exercise that degree of skill and care commonly used by ordinarily skillful, careful and prudent physician engaged in similar practice in making such determination, at point in pregnancy when reasonable possibility exists that fetus might be viable. V.A.M.S. § 188.029.

15. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statute which would impose criminal liability against physician for failure to use and exercise that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by ordinary skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under same or similar circumstances in determining whether fetus was viable or woman was at least 20 weeks pregnant was neither vague nor otherwise unconstitutional, in that physician's good faith assessment would be conclusive defense and state would be required to prove culpability for each element of statute. V.A.M.S. § 188.029.

16. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statutes (Key) 64(2)

Portion of abortion statute which required physicians to perform certain tests and make certain findings regarding gestational age and fetal viability constituted impermissible legislative intrusion upon matter of medical skill and judgment and thus was invalid; however, remainder of statute which was not unconstitutional could stand after unconstitutional language was stricken. V.A.M.S. §§ 1.140, 188.029.

17. Constitutional Law (Key) 90.1(1)

First Amendment freedom of expression is clearly involved where statute places restriction on encouraging or counseling women to have abortions; consequently, strict judicial scrutiny is warranted in evaluating vagueness challenge to such statute.

18. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statutes which prohibited facilities which used public funds or employed public employees from performing, assisting, encouraging, or counseling women to have abortions were sufficiently vague so as to render them unconstitutional. V.A.M.S. §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

19. Constitutional Law (Key) 251.4

If men of common intelligence must speculate on statute's meaning and differ as to its application, then law is so vague that it violates due process. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

20. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Constitutional Law (Key) 90.1(1)

Statutes which prohibited facilities which received public funds or employed public employees from encouraging and counseling women regarding abortions constituted impermissible prohibitions on speech which imposed significant barrier to woman's right to consult with her physician and exercise her freedom of choice, and thus was unconstitutional. V.A.M.S. §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215; U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 1, 14.

21. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Statutes which made it unlawful for any public facility to be used for performing or assisting or encouraging or counseling women to have abortions was unconstitutional, where no public expenditure was involved in provision of abortion services which were provided only to paying patients. V.A.M.S. § 188.215.

22. Criminal Law (Key) 1213.10(3)

Statute which prohibited public facilities from assisting women in obtaining abortions violated prisoners' Eighth Amendment rights, where prisoners would pay for abortion procedures but statute would make it unlawful for state employees to assist with arranging for transportation of inmates from correctional facility to clinic. V.A.M.S. § 188.215; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 8.

23. Abortion and Birth Control (Key) 1.30

Constitutional Law (Key) 85

Abortion statutes which made it unlawful for public facilities and public employees to counsel or assist women to have abortions when their lives were not in danger, did not impermissibly impinge upon academic freedom, as there was conflicting evidence presented at trial as to necessity of providing clinical instruction in abortion procedures in order for medical curriculum to be complete. V.A.M.S. § 188.215; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Frank Susman, Thomas M. Blumenthal, Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker, St. Louis, Mo., Roger K. Evans, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, New York City, for plaintiffs.

Michael Boicourt, Jerry E. Short, William L. Webster, Office of Atty. Gen., Jefferson City, Mo., for defendants.

Andrew F. Puzder, St. Louis, Mo., for amicus curiae.

ORDER

SCOTT O. WRIGHT, Chief Judge.

This is a class action for declaratory and injunctive relief in which plaintiffs challenge the constitutionality of several sections of the 1986 Missouri act relating to the regulation of abortions ("the Act").[1] This Court has jurisdiction under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and § 1343(3).

The named plaintiffs include Reproductive Health Services, a not-for-profit Missouri corporation operating an outpatient clinic in St. Louis, Missouri, which offers gynecological medical services to the public, including abortion services up to 22 weeks "gestational age."[2]

1. Missouri Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 1596, 83rd General assembly, 2nd Reg.Sess. (1986).

2. The term "gestational age" as used in this opinion and defined by Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.015(4) refers to the length of pregnancy as measured from the first day of the woman's last menstrual period (LMP). This is approximately 2 weeks greater than fetal age.

The L.M.P. concept results in a 40-week gestational period. The trimester system by L.M.P. would be divided as follows:

1st trimester—0-13⅓ weeks;

2nd trimester—13⅓-26⅔ weeks;

3rd trimester—26⅔-40 weeks.

Planned Parenthood of Kansas City is a not-for-profit Missouri corporation which provides pregnancy-related counseling and services, including abortions up to 14 weeks gestational age.

Plaintiff physicians are Howard I. Schwartz, M.D., Robert L. Blake, Jr., M.D., and Carl C. Pearman, M.D. These physicians are licensed to practice medicine in the State of Missouri and are associated with the University of Missouri Schools of Medicine, public facilities as defined in § 1(2) of the Act.[3] As such, they are "public employees" as defined in § 1(1), and are paid for the services they render by "public funds" as defined by § 1(3) of the Act. In the scope of that employment, these plaintiffs are consulted by pregnant female patients and, where medically indicated, have occasion to encourage or counsel such women to terminate their pregnancies. As part of their medical practice, Drs. Schwartz and Pearman also perform or assist with abortions, although not necessary to actually save their patients' lives.

Plaintiffs Carroll Metzger, R.N.C., C.M.A., and Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W., are other health care providers, a registered nurse and social worker, respectively. Both are licensed in Missouri and employed at Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri, a "public facility." Both are "public employees" who, within the capacity of their employment, occasionally encourage or counsel certain patients to have abortions, even though the pregnancy is not life-threatening. Their services are paid for by "public funds."

These named plaintiffs bring this case on their own behalf and also as representatives of the entire class consisting of facilities, Missouri licensed physicians, or other health care professionals offering abortion counseling and services, and pregnant females.

3. § 1 of the Act is codified at Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.200.

Defendant William L. Webster is Attorney General of the State of Missouri. The State of Missouri has waived its 11th Amendment immunity from suit in federal court for this action only.

The Act was passed by the Missouri General Assembly on April 23, 1986, signed into law by Governor Ashcroft on June 26, 1986, and was to become effective on August 13, 1986. This action was filed on July 14, 1986. On July 31, 1986, this Court temporarily restrained enforcement of §§ 1.205.1(1), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2, 3, and 4 of the Act. A full trial on the merits was heard on December 15-18, 1986.

I. Class Certification

Prior to trial, the Court certified the plaintiff class pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rues of Civil Procedure, after concluding that all prerequisites set forth in Rule 23(a) had been met.[4]

[1] In evaluating whether the numerosity requirement is met, the Court considers the number of persons in a proposed class, the nature of the action and the in-

4. Rule 23(a) sets out the prerequisites to a class action:

> One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

convenience of trying individual suits. The Court finds that the number of health care providers, facilities and pregnant females in the State is sufficiently numerous. No arbitrary rules regarding the necessary size of classes have been established. Paxton v. Union Nat. Bank, 688 F.2d 552, 559 (8th Cir.1982).

The commonality requisite set forth in Rule 23(a) does not demand that every question of law or fact be common to every member of the class. Id. at 561. Rather, the issues are sufficiently common "where the question of law linking the class members is substantially related to the resolution of the litigation even though the individuals are not identically situated." Id.

[2] Similarly, the claims of the representative parties are typical of those of the class if they emanate from the same legal theory, remedial theory or offense" as those they represent. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty v. Lord, 585 F.2d 860, 870 (8th Cir.1978). Here, the necessary commonality and typicality exist where the statute would prohibit or mandate certain actions of all health professionals who are public employees dealing with pregnant women. Additionally, all women seeking abortions after a specified gestational period would be confronted with other provisions of the Act.

[3] The fourth component of Rule 23(a) focuses on whether the class representatives have common interests with the class members and would vigorously prosecute the interests of the class through qualified counsel. Paxton, 688 F.2d at 562-63. Here, there are no apparent conflicts with the interests of the named plaintiffs and the rest of the class. Plaintiffs' counsel is well-established in this genre of litigation. However, in opposing class certification, the defendant contends that the failure to name as plaintiff a pregnant female seeking abortion services or counseling renders the proposed class description broader than the named plaintiffs' interest. This argument must fail. It is clear that a plaintiff physician has standing to assert the rights of his/her patients, including those seeking abortions. Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 96 S.Ct. 2868, 2873-76, 49 L.Ed.2d 826 (1976).

[4] Further, this is the type of case appropriate for a 23(b)(2) class since the defendant has acted on grounds generally applicable to all members of the class and final injunctive and declaratory relief would be the appropriate remedy.[5] In cases which involve sensitive and highly personal matters, the reasons for certification become more substantial. A class action not only assures anonymity and prevents the chilling effect associated with public exposure concerning abortions, but also provides a fluid membership which guarantees a case or controversy. Singleton, 428 U.S. at 117, 96 S.Ct. at 2875.

[5] The Court disagrees with the defendant's argument that class certification should be denied where the only relief sought is declaratory and injunctive in nature and would automatically inure to the benefit of those similarly situated with the plaintiff. There is no language in Rule 23(b)(2), as there is in Rule 23(b)(3),

---

5. Rule 23(b)(2) provides:

An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole.

that requires the Court to consider the necessity for a class action. Rule 23(b)(2) was specifically designed to allow for the class action mechanism in civil rights cases. See Advisory Committee's Note to 1966 Amendment to Rule 23, 39 F.R.D. 98, 102 (1966). Accordingly, the requirements of the rule are given a liberal construction in civil rights suits. Coley v. Clinton, 635 F.2d 1364, 1378 (8th Cir.1980). If the requirements of Rule 23(a) are met, a district court's discretion to deny certification on the basis of Rule 23(b)(2) is limited.

[6] While a district court generally should hold an evidentiary hearing before certifying a class, this is not mandatory where the Court has sufficient material before it to determine the nature of the allegations and whether the requirements of Rule 23(a) have been met. See Walker v. World Tire Corp., Inc., 563 F.2d 918, 921 (8th Cir.1977). Here, in the interest of judicial economy and considering the nature of the case, the Court determined that the class certification was proper on the basis of pleadings, affidavits and the law.

II. § 1.205 When Human Life Begins

Section 1.205.1 provides in part:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being.

[7] Prior to trial, the Court granted plaintiff's motion in limine to exclude any evidence relating to this provision. In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 162, 93 S.Ct. 705, 731, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973), the United States Supreme Court declared that a state may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify abortion regulation. The general principles laid down in Roe, reaffirmed in City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L.Ed.2d 687 (1983), and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ..... U.S. ....., 106 S.Ct. 2169, 90 L.Ed.2d 779 (1986), remain true today. It is inappropriate for this Court to conduct an inquiry into such a difficult and philosophical question:

> "When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus [when life begins] the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer."

Roe, 410 U.S. at 158, 93 S.Ct. at 729.

Similarly, "the word 'person', as used in the Fourteenth Amendment does not include the unborn." Id.

This legislative pronouncement by the Missouri General Assembly clearly conflicts with the essence of Roe v. Wade. Consequently, §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) are invalid as a matter of law.

III. Summary Judgment

Prior to trial, the plaintiffs moved for summary judgment, urging that Mo.Rev.Stat. §§ 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2, 3, and 4 be declared unconstitutional as a matter of law. The standard for determining the propriety of summary judgment under Rule 56(a) is well-settled. Summary judgment should be entered only when it is clear that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court has recently acknowledged the power of district courts to enter summary judgments sua sponte. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, ... U.S. ....., 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2554, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986).

In making this determination, the evidence submitted to the Court "must be viewed in the light most favorable to the opposing party." Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 1608, 26 L.Ed.2d 142 (1970); Buford v. Tremayne, 747 F.2d 445, 447 (8th Cir.1984). Moreover, the moving party must demonstrate its right to a judgment with such clarity as to leave no room for controversy and that the other party is not entitled to recover under any discernible circumstances. Keys v. Lutheran Family and Children's Services of Missouri, 668 F.2d 356 (8th Cir.1981). "[E]ven if the district court 'is convinced that the moving party is entitled to [summary] judgment, the exercise of sound judicial discretion may dictate that the motion should be denied, and the case fully developed.'" Franklin v. Lockhart, 769 F.2d 509, 510 (8th Cir.1985), quoting McLain v. Meier, 612 F.2d 349, 356 (8th Cir.1979).

Employing the above standard, the Court indicated at the pretrial conference that Section 188.039.1 was facially unconstitutional as a matter of law, and that plaintiff's motion for summary judgment would be sustained on this section. However, the Court determined that a factual inquiry was necessary, thus precluding summary judgment on the constitutionality of §§ 188.025, 188.029, 2, 3, and 4.

IV. § 188.039—"Informed Consent"

Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.039[6] requires that "the attending physician" certify in writing that he or she has apprised the pregnant woman of certain facts before an abortion can be performed. The required information includes a statement "whether she is or is not pregnant" according to the best medical judgment of that physician.

The constitutionality of the requirement that "the attending physician" impart the information was settled in City of Akron, 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. at 2501-2502.

---

6. Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.039 provides:

188.039. Consent, form, content—coercion prohibited—woman to be informed of certain facts, when

1. No physician shall perform an abortion unless, prior to such abortion, the physician certifies in writing that the woman gave her informed consent, freely and without coercion, after the attending physician had informed her of the information contained in subsection 2 of this section and shall further certify in writing the pregnant woman's age based upon proof of age offered by her.

2. In order to insure that the consent for an abortion is truly informed consent, no abortion shall be performed or induced upon a pregnant woman unless she has signed a consent form that shall be supplied by the state department of health acknowledging that she has been informed by the attending physician of the following facts:

(1) That according to the best medical judgment of her attending physician whether she is or is not pregnant;

(2) The particular risks associated with the abortion technique to be used;

(3) Alternatives to abortion shall be given by the attending physician.

3. The physician may inform the women of any other material facts or opinions, or provide any explanation of the above information which, in the exercise of his best medical judgment, is reasonably necessary to allow the woman to give her informed consent to the proposed abortion, with full knowledge of its nature and consequences.

In City of Akron, the Supreme Court invalidated a similar provision, holding that there was no state interest in requiring that "the physician performing the abortion, or for that matter any physician, personally counsel the patient in the absence of a request." Id., 462 U.S. at 448, 103 S.Ct. at 2502.

[8] This Court is unaware of any limiting construction of this statute by Missouri courts. Hence, the Court cannot assume, as defendant suggests, that the Missouri General Assembly possesses a familiarity with hospital practices that renders the clear language of § 188.039 capable of a much broader interpretation.[7] The statute simply does not permit the attending physician to delegate to another qualified individual the responsibility to convey the information needed for informed consent. Thus, this provision is invalid as a matter of law.

Plaintiffs' remaining objection to Section 188.039 concerns the requirement that, prior to having an abortion performed, the woman must be informed "according to the best medical judgment of her attending physician whether she is or is not pregnant."

This regulation also must be considered in light of City of Akron, in which the Supreme Court stated that

> "[T]he validity of an informed consent requirement rests on the State's interest in protecting the health of the pregnant woman. . . . (citation omitted)
>
> [T]hus the state legitimately may seek to ensure that it has been made 'in the light of all attendant circumstances—psychological and emotional as well as physical—that might be relevant to the well-being of the patient.'" (quoting Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 394, 99 S.Ct. 675, 685 [58 L.Ed.2d 596] (1979).) This does not mean, however, that a State has unreviewable authority to decide what information a woman must be given before she chooses to have an abortion. It remains primarily the responsibility of the physician to ensure that appropriate information is conveyed to his patient, depending on her particular circumstances." (Emphasis added). City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 443, 103 S.Ct. at 2499.

7. The Court also notes that there is no procedure to certify questions for prompt resolution to the Missouri Supreme Court. See MO. CONSTITUTION, art. v. (Missouri Supreme Court may exercise appellate jurisdiction only).

In Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (8th Cir.1981), the Eighth Circuit held that the predecessor to § 188.039 was unconstitutional. This former provision required as part of informed consent that a pregnant woman be told "[t]hat according to the best medical judgment of her attending physician she is pregnant." The Ashcroft court found that the statutory language mandating an affirmation of pregnancy effectively proscribed menstrual extractions, an early and safe abortion procedure normally performed prior to a positive pregnancy test,[8] because it would be impossible to be certain that the woman is pregnant. Such prohibition was unconstitutional.

Defendants claim that the amended version cures the constitutional defect because it does not forbid menstrual

8. The District Court in Ashcroft noted that there was no record of existing reliable tests at the very "early stage" of pregnancy. Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 483 F.Supp. 679, 698, n. 37 (W.D.Mo.1980). Although the exact parameters of the "early stage" are unclear, the court implied the time to be approximately up to ten days after the menstrual period was due. Id., at 697, n. 36.

extractions so long as the woman is informed of the physician's evaluation of whether she is or is not pregnant. In addition, the record reveals that pregnancy tests are now available which can accurately detect pregnancy as early as six days after implantation, or three days before the first missed menstrual period.[9] Hence, defendants also assert that advances in medical technology render the factual basis for the Ashcroft decision obsolete. The Court accepts this narrow interpretation of the Ashcroft holding and rejects plaintiff's counterargument that § 188.039 is essentially identical to the former statute and, thus, unconstitutional under principles of res judicata.

It is also clear that there are situations where the physician cannot, with certainty, determine whether or not a woman is pregnant.[10] The statute necessitates disclosure of the physicians "best medical judgment" of her pregnancy status. It is broad enough to encompass a diagnosis that the physician does not know whether a woman is pregnant.

However, this provision is constitutionally flawed in other respects. The statute mandates what the physician must present to each and every patient, regardless of the medical advisability of presenting such information in any particular case. While plaintiffs do not object as a general matter to telling a woman whether she is pregnant or not,

---

9. Testimony of Dr. Daniel J. Martin; Robert A. Hatcher, M.D., et al., CONTRACEPTIVE TECHNOLOGY 1986-1987 2547 (1986).

10. A woman in the process of spontaneous abortion (miscarriage) may have a positive pregnancy test but the physician cannot determine whether or not the embryo has been expelled. Testimony of Dr. Robert Crist. Further, even the most current of the readily available pregnancy tests are not accurate until 6 days after implantation. Testimony of Dr. Daniel Martin; Hatcher, CONTRACEPTIVE TECHNOLOGY 1986-87 at 257.

it is clear that some physicians believe that it is in the best health interest of many patients seeking abortions not to be told definite results of pregnancy tests.[11] These are women who suspect they are pregnant and choose to abort, but cannot emotionally deal with the specific issue of being pregnant. Some physicians, in the exercise of their best medical judgment, would choose to respect the woman's evaluation of her emotional status and not foist on her specific information which she does not wish to hear.

[9] Physicians disagree on how to approach patients seeking abortions. The physician's or other health professional's personal philosophy on abortions will certainly influence that approach.[12] It is not the province of this Court to approve one view or another. This Court must uphold the principles enunciated in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973) and its progeny: that the right to privacy, the conception of personal liberty, encompasses a woman's right to terminate her pregnancy. From the testimony at trial, the Court concludes that the rule which, without exception, requires a physician to inform a patient of her pregnancy status constitutes an impermissible intrusion into the privacy of the doctor-patient relationship. The requirement deprives the woman seeking an abortion of the right to consult with her physician

---

11. Testimony of Dr. Robert Crist. Dr. Daniel Martin testified to the contrary.

12. Plaintiffs' witnesses, Dr. Crist, Dr. Warren Hern, and Ms. Judith Widdicombe, R.N., are members of the National Abortion Federation, which seeks to "improve access to safe abortion services for women." Testimony of Dr. Hern.

Defendants' witnesses, Dr. Daniel Martin and Dr. William Keenan, are members of Missouri Citizens for Life, an anti-abortion organization. Dr. Keenan also admitted that for the past two years he has been a signatory to an annual newspaper ad which laments the Roe v. Wade decision.

and rely on his discretion and professional judgment. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 165, 93 S.Ct. at 733.

[10] The Court finds that the portions of § 188.039 so declared as unconstitutional are not severable from the remainder of the statute. Because the term "attending physician" is repeated in every subsection, the entire statute must fall as a unit. The provisions are inextricably woven together such that the valid provisions standing alone are incomplete and do not accurately reflect the legislative intent. See Mo.Rev.Stat. § 1.140 (1978). Hence, the requirement to impart specific information is invalid on this ground, as well.

V. § 188.025—Post-Sixteen-Week Abortions to be Performed Only in a Hospital

Section 188.025 provides that every abortion performed at or subsequent to the first sixteen weeks gestational age shall be performed in a hospital.[13] The standard for evaluating the constitutionality of laws which regulate the performance of abortions after the first trimester is well-settled. In City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 430-31, 103 S.Ct. at 2493, the Supreme Court held that a state regulation which significantly impacts on a woman's access to abortion prior to viability of the fetus,[14] will be upheld only "to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation 13. See supra note 2. The 16-week L.M.P. stage would correspond with approximately 14 weeks fetal age. As previously noted, by the L.M.P. method, the 2nd trimester includes the time from 13⅓ through 26⅔ weeks after the last menstrual period.

4. "Viability is reached when, in the judgment of the attending physician on the particular facts of the case before him, there is a reasonable likelihood of the fetus' sustained survival outside the womb, with or without artificial support." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388, 99 S.Ct. 675, 682 (1979). Accord Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.015(7) (Supp.1986).

and protection of maternal health." Id., quoting Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 163, 93 S.Ct. at 731.

[11] Thus, this Court's first inquest focuses on whether or not § 188.025 "significantly impacts" on abortion rights. If so, then the "reasonableness" of the regulation must be resolved. However, the State may not "adopt abortion regulations that depart from accepted medical practice." Id. at 431, 103 S.Ct. at 2493. The health regulations imposed by the State must be "legitimately related to the objective the state seeks to accomplish." Id. Further, the State must make a reasonable effort to limit the regulation to that specific time during and after the second trimester when the health interest will be furthered. Id. at 434, 103 S.Ct. at 2495. The State has the burden of proving a health-justification. Id. at 430, 103 S.Ct. 2492-93; Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 664 F.2d 687, 689 (8th Cir.1981).

In City of Akron, 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, and Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 103 S.Ct. 2517, the Supreme Court held that a hospitalization requirement for all second-trimester abortions was unconstitutional because such a requirement "unreasonably infringes upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 439, 103 S.Ct. at 2497; Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 482, 103 S.Ct. at 2520. However, the Court did not draw a bright line to indicate at what point in the second trimester a state may require that abortions be performed in a hospital setting. This determination will depend on the impact of the regulation and its reasonableness, that is, whether it departs from accepted medical practice.

A hospitalization requirement clearly "places a significant obstacle in the path of women seeking an abortion." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 434, 103 S.Ct. at 2495.

The Akron court determined that the increased cost[15] of hospitalization and the fact that second-trimester abortions were rarely performed in area hospitals combined to significantly limit a woman's ability to obtain an abortion. If forced to travel to find available facilities, a woman incurs not only financial expense, but also additional health risks. Id.

It is evident that hospitalization significantly increases the cost of an abortion.[16] Moreover, the availability of hospital services for abortions is limited in Missouri. In 1985, only 22% of all abortions at 16 weeks or greater were performed in hospital facilities.[17] Of these relatively few hospital-performed abortions, 97% took place at Truman Medical Center, a public hospital in Kansas City.[18] Thus, the Court finds that, as in City of Akron, the scarcity of 15. In City of Akron, in-hospital abortion cost was cited as $850-900, compared to $350-400 for a dilation and evacuation (D & E) abortion performed in a clinic. Id. 462 U.S. at 435, 103 at 2495.

---

16. Dr. Crist testified that the cost of an abortion in a Missouri hospital, other than Truman Medical Center which maintains a specialized outpatient abortion service, is in excess of $2500 for a sixteen-week or greater abortion. This compares with $350-650 in an outpatient facility. The Court notes, however, that 97% of the hospital-based abortions were performed at Truman Medical Center in 1985.

On the national level, Dr. Stanley K. Henshaw provided statistics from 1981 and 1982 comparing the cost of a sixteen-week or greater D & E procedure. In 1981, the average clinic cost for a D & E was $358-364. In 1982, the average hospital charge for the same procedure was $740.00.

Dr. Warren Hern also related that hospitalization "invariably" costs more. He estimated that, in the Boulder, Colorado area, the cost is $1000 greater for an abortion in the hospital than in an outpatient facility.

17. In 1984, 28% of such abortions were performed in the hospital setting.

18. In 1984, 98% of the hospital-based 16-week abortions were performed at Truman Medical Center.

hospital-based abortion facilities restricts access to abortion services, and would necessitate travel by many across the state, which may result in delay and increased health risks to the patient seeking abortion services.[19] There is no evidence that hospitals in other parts of the state would offer abortion services if the hospitalization requirement were implemented.[20]

Accordingly, the Court concludes that the increased financial burden and restricted availability of hospital-based[21] abortion services creates a substantial interference with and imposes a direct burden on a woman's decision to have an abortion.

Having concluded that § 188.025 significantly impacts on abortion rights, the State must show that the sixteen-

---

19. Testimony of Dr. Crist; stipulation of facts.

20. On the contrary, Dr. Stanley Henshaw testified that a 1982 survey (prior to the City of Akron ruling) showed that 27% of hospitals performed abortions in those states with a hospitalization requirement for second-trimester abortions. In the states without mandatory hospitalization rule, 39% of hospitals provided second-trimester services.

Similarly, in Missouri, the number of second-trimester abortions increased from 540 in 1979 to 700 in 1980 after the prohibition on non-hospital second-trimester abortions was lifted. Significant also is the increase in the total number of second-trimester abortions performed in Missouri in 1980. The number rose from 540 in 1979 to 1390 in 1980. This indicates that the hospitalization requirement resulted in the performance of fewer procedures than if the requirement was not in effect. See Planned Parenthood of Kansas City, Missouri, Inc. v. Ashcroft, slip op. on remand, No. 79-4142-CV-C-H, slip op. at 8-10 and n. 12 (W.D.Mo. October 2, 1981), 664 F.2d 687, 689 n. 5 (8th Cir.1981).

21. Truman Medical Center, as a public facility, would be barred from providing any abortions not necessary to save the woman's life if Section 4 of the Act (§ 188.215) were to become effective. See supra note 18. If upheld, the effect of this hospitalization requirement in conjunction with the "public facility" rule would effectively eliminate access to abortions in Missouri past 16 weeks gestation.

week hospitalization requirement reasonably relates to the State's interest in maternal health. In order to meet this burden, the State must show that non-hospitalized abortions of 16 weeks or greater gestational age can reasonably be considered more dangerous than hospitalized abortion procedures at an identical stage of pregnancy.

In City of Akron, the Supreme Court was impressed by current standards of the medical profession which indicated that abortions could be "performed safely 'in a hospital-based or in a free-standing ambulatory surgical facility, or in an out-patient clinic meeting the criteria required for a free-standing surgical facility' until 18 weeks of pregnancy." Id. 462 U.S. at 437, 103 S.Ct. at 2496, citing American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services 54 (5th ed. 1982). This data remains current.[22]

Plaintiff Reproductive Health Services (RHS), which currently provides abortion services up to 22 weeks gestational age, would rely on ACOG guidelines as a "free-standing ambulatory surgical facility." The Court rejects the State's contention that RHS must be classified as a doctor's office or outpatient clinic because it is not licensed under Missouri's "Ambulatory Surgical Center Licensing Law."[23] The ACOG standards are convincing evidence that as a general rule, D & E[24] abortions may be safely performed 22. ACOG, Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services (6th ed. 1985).

23. Mo.Rev.Stat. § 197.200, et seq. the Missouri Ambulatory Surgical Center Licensing Law, was only recently amended to cover abortion facilities. Regulations to implement these amendments have not yet been promulgated. Up to this time, Missouri has never licensed an abortion facility.

24. D & E is the only type of abortion sought to be performed at 16 weeks or greater in the non-hospital setting. The in free-standing surgical facilities, such as RHS, through 18 weeks of gestation.

(Continued on following page)

[12] Additional evidence further demonstrates that the performance of abortions at qualified free-standing outpatient facilities does not necessarily render the procedure more dangerous than if performed in the hospital setting. It is undisputed that the primary factor in determining the safety of a D & E procedure at 16 weeks or greater is the skill and experience of the physician-operator.[25] There was also testimony that the most experienced physicians are more likely to be found practicing in high volume abortion facilities than in hospitals.[26]

Defendants failed to establish that the potential for uterine bleeding necessitates that abortions be performed in a hospital. This complication evidently is best controlled by contraction of the uterine musculature with procedure involves dilatation of the cervix and then evacuation of the contents from the uterus. Dilatation may be achieved atraumatically by insertion of laminaria, synthetic water-absorbent dilators, placed in the cervix 1-2 days prior to the abortion procedure. Testimony of Dr. Warren Hern. The evidence of the safety of the D & E method over other procedures at this stage has been well-established. City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 435, 103 S.Ct. at 2495-96; Testimony of Drs. Robert Crist, Warren Hern, Carl Pearman, and Judith Widdicombe, R.N. Peterson, Berry, Grace and Gulbranson, "Second-Trimester Abortion by Dilatation and Evacuation: An Analysis of 11,747 Cases," 62 Obstetrics & Gynecology 185, 190 (1983).

Footnote continued—

25. Testimony of Dr. Robert Crist; Testimony of Judith Widdicombe, R.N.; see also G. Schaefer, M.D. and E. Graber, M.D.; Complications in Obstetric and Gynecologic Surgery 86 (1981): R. Hatcher, M.D., Contraceptive Technology, supra note 7 at 274.

26. Dr. Crist testified that most hospitals have very restrictive policies regarding abortions. Consequently, physicians functioning primarily through hospitals are relatively inexperienced in abortion procedures.

drugs and vigorous uterine massage.[27] The data presented at trial suggests that it rarely becomes necessary to transfer the patient to a hospital for treatment.[28]

Nor was there proof that the incidence of infection is diminished when post-sixteen-week abortions are performed in the hospital rather than in a free-standing clinic. Infection, if it occurs, does not usually manifest itself until at least a few days after the procedure, by which time the patient will have been discharged from either a hospital or an outpatient facility.[29] Moreover, there was evidence that nosocomial infections, those acquired in a hospital setting, tend to be more resistant to antibiotic therapy.[30]

Plaintiffs have also cited the lack of specialized equipment, administrative delays, unsympathetic attitudes or inexperience of hospital personnel and the loss of patient confidentiality as factors which disfavor abortions in hospitals.[31] Plaintiffs emphasize that non-hospital D & Es constitute the prevailing practice of post-sixteen-week abor-

---

27. Testimony of Dr. Crist; R. Hatcher, Contraceptive Technology 1986-1987, supra note 7 at 275.

28. Testimony of Dr. Warren Hern. However, Dr. Hern recommends that outpatient D & Es in gestations of 17 weeks or greater L.M.P. should occur within 20 minutes of a full-service hospital. Hern, "Serial Multiple Laminaria and Adjunctive Urea in Late Outpatient Dilation and Evacuation Abortion," 63 Obstetrics and Gynecology 548 (1984).

In Dr. Hern's review of D & E abortions performed between 17 and 25 weeks gestation, only 3 patients out of 1000 were hospitalized for bleeding. Only two required transfusions. Also, one of these hemorrhages did not occur until 4 weeks after the procedure. Id.

29. Testimony of Dr. Crist; Testimony of Dr. Hern.

30. Testimony of Dr. Crist; Testimony of Dr. Hern.

31. Testimony of Dr. Hern.

tions in Missouri and other states.[32] Yet, plaintiffs do concede that abortions on certain high-risk patients should be performed in the hospital setting. They insist, however, that the decision should be made at the physician's discretion, rather than by an arbitrary state law.

Defendants provided evidence that the mortality rate for D & E abortions increases significantly after 16 weeks gestation.[33] However, there is no indication that hospitalization would result in a lower morbidity or mortality rate. More specifically, the State has relied on cross-examination testimony of Judith Widdicombe, R.N., who cited a complication rate for post-16-week abortions, reflected in RHS' data, which appears to be twice as high at RHS than for such procedures performed elsewhere in the state. Ms. Widdicombe explained that the statistics are misleading because the state data, in contrast to the RHS data, reflects primarily only those complications

---

32. Dr. Stanley Henshaw testified that data from 6 other states including Missouri in 1983 revealed that 77.9% of D & Es at 16 weeks or later were non-hospital procedures. The parties stipulated as to the statistics in Missouri.

33. Annual Summary for 1981, Centers for Disease Control, Abortion Surveillance 43, Dept. of Health & Human Services (issued 1985). The table upon which defendants rely refers to abortions for the years 1977-1981. The death rate for D & Es at 16-20 weeks gestation is 7.6 per 100,000 abortions. However, it is not clear whether the gestation time is L.M.P. or actual time since conception.

Defendants' witness, Dr. D. Martin, cited a study by Dr. William Peterson in August, 1983, as revealing a "total percent" complication rate of 5.5% ("one in twenty") for second trimester abortions. However, this testimony is grossly misleading and inaccurate because Dr. Martin added all complications together, apparently assuming that the individual complications or symptoms do not accompany each other. See Peterson, supra note 24, 62 Obstetrics & Gynecology, at 189-90.

which occur within the first three days.[34] Finally, defendants point to a lack of agreement within the medical community regarding hospitalization for abortions as evidence of the reasonableness of § 188.025.[35]

The Court has carefully considered the wealth of expert evidence presented by the parties in light of the appropriate standard of review, which places the burden of justifying the hospitalization requirement on the State. The Court concludes that the requirements of § 188.025 are overbroad. The State did not prove that a D & E abortion at 16-18 weeks gestation can reasonably be considered

34. Defendants refute this and note that State law, § 188.052, requires only that abortion complications be reported within 45 days from the date of post-abortion care. Ms. Widdicombe's testimony also revealed that State prisoners have received abortions at more than 16 weeks gestation at RHS, having been transported and escorted by prison employees. The Court assumes that the State's interest in maternal health applies to these women as well.

35. A 1983 article, cited by defendants, suggests that D & E is appropriate in free-standing clinics "through fifteen and perhaps seventeen weeks if strict standards are carefully established and monitored on an ongoing basis." Peterson, et al., "Second Trimester Abortion by Dilation and Evacuation: An Analysis of 11,747 Cases," 62 Obstetrics and Gynecology 189 (1983).

In 1981, Willard Cates, M.D., and David A. Grimes, M.D., published that 16 weeks gestation would be the outer limit for non-hospital abortions "at the present time." Cates and Grimes, "Deaths from Second Trimester Abortion by Dilation and Evacuation: Causes, Prevention, Facilities," 58 Obstetrics and Gynecology 401, 407 (1981). However, in response to a letter to the editor by Dr. Hern criticizing this 16-week threshold, the authors stated that they had not included all data and had intended only a general guideline in order to challenge regulations requiring hospitalization for all second trimester procedures. They concluded: "Proposed changes should be based on scientific evidence gathered through ongoing surveillance, . . . rather than on unsubstantiated opinions. Dr. Hern's experience is testimony to this principle." 60 Obstetrics & Gynecology at 667-68 (1982). Accordingly, the Court cannot accept Cates' and Grimes' 1981 16-week criteria as convincing evidence to support this regulation.

more dangerous when performed in a qualified free-standing outpatient facility rather than in a hospital. In fact, the evidence suggests that the prevailing medical practice is for such procedures to be performed outside the hospital setting. Because § 188.025 significantly impacts on a woman's access to abortion, and the State has failed to prove that the 16-week hospitalization requirement reasonably relates to the State's interest in maternal health, this provision is invalid.

VI. § 188.029—Required Tests to Determine Gestational Age and Viability

Section 188.029[36] prescribes that a physician must determine whether the fetus is viable before performing an abortion on a woman who the physician has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant. The statute further dictates that the physician accomplish "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight and lung maturity" of the fetus. The findings must be recorded in the woman's medical record.

36. 188.029 reads:

Physician, determination of viability, duties

Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions. In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother. (L.1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A.)

[13] Obviously, the purpose of this law is to protect the potential life of the fetus, rather than to safeguard maternal health. A state's interest in the potentiality of human life becomes compelling only at viability, the point at which the fetus "has the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 428, 103 S.Ct. at 2491, quoting Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 163, 93 S.Ct. at 731. At this point, the state may regulate or even proscribe abortions, except where necessary to preserve the life or health of the woman seeking the abortion. City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 428, 103 S.Ct. at 2491; Roe, 410 U.S. at 164, 93 S.Ct. at 732. However, the State may only regulate in such context if it narrowly tailors its regulations to the precise State interest at stake. Roe, 410 U.S. at 165, 93 S.Ct. at 732.

Plaintiffs assert that the section is unconstitutional because it burdens abortion in the interest of fetal life prior to viability, suffers from vague language which does not protect a physician's good faith medical judgment, requires unnecessary tests which may put the woman's health in jeopardy, and does not provide a medical-emergency exception where the woman's life or health is in danger.

The statute's requirement that the physician make a specific viability determination whenever "he has reason to believe" that a woman is carrying a fetus of 20 weeks or more gestational age is said to be constitutionally overbroad because the medical evidence is uncontradicted that a 20-week fetus is not viable. Testimony by medical experts for both plaintiffs and defendants, in addition to recent medical literature, provides clear evidence that 23½ to 24 weeks gestation is the earliest point in pregnancy where a reasonable possibility of viability exists.[37]

Defendants, in opposition, assert that the 20-week requirement is reasonable because it does not restrict abortions prior to viability, but merely states a point when the physician is required to determine viability. The State insists that if a physician initially has reason to believe a woman is 20 weeks pregnant, further examination may well reveal that she is actually 24 weeks pregnant, and thus carrying a potentially viable fetus. In support of this argument, defendants cite to the fact that a woman's related history of the time of her last menstrual period, which is often the first indicator to the physician of gestational age, is also the least reliable. The evidence revealed that inaccuracies of up to four weeks are not uncommon.[38]

[14] The law is well-settled that a decision on fetal viability is properly within the discretion of a physician's professional judgment. Colautti, 439 U.S. at 388-89, 99 S.Ct. at 462; Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 2839, 49 L.Ed.2d 788 (1976). The Court is satisfied that the legislature has not attempted to usurp this function by obligating a physician to exercise that judgment at a point in pregnancy when a reasonable possibility exists that the fetus may be

---

37. Testimony of Drs. Debabrata Maulik, William J. Keenan, and Carl C. Pearman; Gerdes, Abbasi, Bhutani and Bowen, Improved Survival and Short-term Outcome of Inborn "Micropremies", 25 Clinical Pediatrics 391, 393 (1986); Pleasure, Dhand and Kaur, What is the Lower Limit of Viability?, 138 American Journal of Diseases of Children 783 (1984); Buckwald, Zorn and Egan, Mortality and Follow-up Data for Neonates Weighing 500-800 g at Birth; 38 American Journal of Diseases of Children 779 (1984).

38. Testimony of Drs. Debabrata Maulik, Robert Crist and William J. Keenan.

viable. If the menstrual history or other signs and symptoms do not initially indicate a gestation of at least 20 weeks, then obviously the fetus is not viable. Further tests to determine viability are unnecessary and not required by law.

In assessing viability, Section 188.029 mandates that the physician "us[e] and exercis[e] that degree of care, skill and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions." The Act's penalty section provides that > "[A]ny person who contrary to the provisions of sections 188.010 to 188.085 knowingly performs . . . any abortion or knowingly fails to perform any action required [these] sections . . . shall be guilty of a class A misdemeanor." Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.075 (1983)

Plaintiffs argue that the objective standard of care set forth in Section 188.029, in conjunction with the imposition of criminal liability, is unconstitutional because a physician's erroneous, but good faith assessment of viability is not a defense. Consequently, without a subjective culpability requirement incorporated in Section 188.029, it is claimed that the fear of criminal penalties would exert a chilling effect. Plaintiffs contend that physicians will be unwilling to perform abortions close but prior to that critical time of viability, even if the physician's medical judgment is that the fetus could not sustain life outside the womb. This result, plaintiffs insist, would constitute an impermissible obstacle to a woman's access to abortion services.

Furthermore, plaintiffs contend that the phrase "reason to believe" renders the statute unconstitutionally vague because it does not describe the standard to govern the physician's assessment whether the fetus is 20 weeks gestation age. The State counters that Section 188.075 sets forth a scienter requirement which must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before criminal liability can be imposed.

The culpability provision in Section 188.075 was previously interpreted in Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (1981), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds 462 U.S. 476, 103 S.Ct. 2517, 76 L.Ed.2d 733 (1983). In Ashcroft, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that Section 188.075 requires knowledge as a mental state in order to violate one of the sections to which that statute refers. "A good faith determination of nonviability would be a defense." Id., 103 S.Ct. at 862. The Appellate Court further elaborated on the definition of "knowledge" as contemplated by the legislature:

> "In this case, Section 188.075 prescribes 'knowingly' as the mental state; and Missouri statutes further define 'knowingly':
>
> A person 'acts knowingly' or with knowledge,
>
> (1) with respect to his conduct or to attendant circumstances when he is aware of the nature of his conduct or that those circumstances exist; or
>
> (2) with respect to a result of his conduct when he is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result."
>
> Mo.Rev.Stat. § 562.016.3, quoted in Ashcroft, 655 F.2d at 862.

[15] Accordingly, the Court concludes that the Missouri statutes would require the State to prove culpability for each element of Section 188.029. Hence, a physician's good faith assessment of viability or whether the woman is at least 20 weeks pregnant would be conclusive. The statute is neither vague nor otherwise unconstitutional in this respect.

Plaintiffs' next attack on Section 188.029 centers on the obligation that, in determining viability, "the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight and lung maturity" of the fetus.

Dr. Robert Crist testified that tests to determine fetal weight are not only unreliable and inaccurate, but also add $125 to $250 to the cost of abortion. He stated that this type of test would be appropriate only at a point "much later" in pregnancy. No evidence is cited which rebuts this. It was also clearly established that the only method to evaluate lung maturity is by amniocentesis,[39] an expensive procedure which all witnesses agreed would be useless and contrary to accepted medical practice until at least twenty-eight to thirty weeks of gestation.[40]

The State has failed to demonstrate that either of these requisites are narrowly tailored to further the State's interest in either maternal health or the life of the fetus when imposed at a point when the woman is only 20-24 weeks

---

39. The amniocentesis procedure involves the withdrawal of amniotic fluid from the uterus via needle puncture through the woman's abdomen. The fluid is then analyzed to measure the level of certain chemicals which indicate lung maturity. The procedure must be performed in conjunction with sonography. Testimony of Dr. Debabrata Maulik.

40. Testimony of Drs. D. Maulik, Carl Pearman, Robert Crist, and William Keenan. Dr. Maulik also estimated that the cost of the procedure at Truman Medical Center was $200-250.

pregnant. Moreover, amniocentesis imposes additional significant health risks for both the pregnant woman and the fetus.[41] Even where the state exercises its compelling interest in a viable fetus, it may not require action that imposes an increased risk to the woman's health. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ..... U.S. ....., 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2184, 90 L.Ed.2d 779 (1986).

Medical experts for both plaintiffs and defendants concurred that it is standard medical practice to determine "gestational age" by ultrasound examination[42] and fetal skull measurements whenever it appears that a woman is at least twenty weeks pregnant.[43] Defendants have further acknowledged that no tests other than the ultrasound measurements provide information necessary to determine viability prior to at least 30 weeks gestational age.[44] Despite such concessions, the State defends this statutory language and maintains that the section demands only those exami-

---

41. The risk of infection to the woman was specifically cited. There is also the possibility of "fetal-waste" or actual loss of the fetus from amniocentesis. Testimony of Drs. Debabrata Maulik, Robert Crist and Carl Pearman. Further, there is normally a delay of approximately two weeks in scheduling a nonemergency amniocentesis. Testimony of Dr. D. Maulik. The parties have stipulated that delay increases the risk of an abortion.

42. The "ultrasound' or "sonogram" examination is a noninvasive procedure which utilizes high frequency sound waves to visualize the fetus. Measurements can then be taken of the fetal skull or biparietal diameter (BPD). The BPD measurement is considered the most accurate method of determining gestational age. Testimony of Dr. Debabrata Maulik.

43. Testimony of Drs. Debabrata Maulik, Robert Crist, Carl Pearman, Warren Hern and William Keenan. Judith Widdicombe, R.N., further testified that this examination to determine gestational age is performed on every woman seeking a second trimester abortion at RHS.

44. Defendants' post-trial brief citing the testimony of Drs. William Keenan, Debabrata Maulik and Robert Crist.

nations which are "necessary" to make the required findings. Thus, defendants insist that there is no duty to perform an amniocentesis for lung maturity or even a fetal weight determination if these tests would be futile. However, the ultrasound exam would be mandatory.

This evidence must be evaluated in light of the Supreme Court's declaration that the point of viability, which may differ with each pregnancy, is a matter of medical judgment, and that "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 388, 99 S.Ct. at 682.

[16] Given this deference to a physician's clinical judgment, first expressed in Roe, 410 U.S. at 163, 93 S.Ct. at 731, the Court concludes that the final sentence of Section 188.029 is an impermissible legislative intrusion upon a matter of medical skill and judgment. Even though the standard medical practice is to establish gestational age, a correspondent to viability,[45] whenever it appears that the last menstrual period was at least 20 weeks before,[46] the State may not dictate that a physician make a "finding" of gestational age in order to determine viability. Consequently, the Court also rejects defendants' interpretation that only those tests which are "necessary" to do so must be performed. The State may not dictate either the tests or the findings which enter into a decision whether or not a fetus is viable.

---

45. Testimony of Dr. Debabrata Maulik.

46. Testimony of Drs. Debabrata Maulik, Robert Crist, Warren Hern, Carl Pearman, William Keenan, and Judith Widdicombe, R.N.

Finally, plaintiffs allege that Section 188.029 must be declared unconstitutional because it does not provide an exception for the situation where the health of the mother is endangered. In support, plaintiffs rely on Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 106 S.Ct. at 2184. In Thornburgh, the Supreme Court invalidated a Pennsylvania statute which set forth a second-physician requirement without a medical emergency clause, concluding that the omission was intentional.

However, this Court is convinced that the Missouri legislature did not intend to impose liability on the physician who fails to make a determination of viability prior to performing an emergency abortion where the woman's life or health is endangered. Such an interpretation would conflict with a previously enacted section which provides, in accordance with Supreme Court mandate, that a post-viability abortion is not proscribed where necessary to preserve the life or health of a woman. Mo.Rev. Stat. § 188.030 (Supp.1984); Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 103 S.Ct. at 2521.

It is an established rule of statutory construction in Missouri that an interpreting court should seek to ascertain and give effect to the legislative intent if possible. State v. Kraus, 530 S.W.2d 684 (Mo.1975) (en banc). Statutes which relate to the same subject matter should be harmonized if possible so that all provisions are meaningful. State ex rel. Lebeau v. Kelly, 697 S.W.2d 312, 315 (Mo.Ct.App.1985). Accordingly, the initial sentence of § 188.029 which directs when a physician must make a judgment on viability must be harmonized with Section 188.030, which includes a medical emergency exception.

The Court finds that the final sentence of Section 188.029 is not "essentially and inseparably connected with, and . . . dependent upon" the valid requirements initially set forth. See Mo.Rev.Stat. § 1.140. Thus, it is presumed that the legislature would have enacted the portion declared constitutional independently from the latter void provisions. Id. Accordingly, the last sentence of the section will be severed and stricken, allowing the remainder of the statute to stand. Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 2801, 86 L.Ed. 2d 394 (1985).

VII. § 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 (Sections 2, 3, 4 of "the Act"): Use of Public Funds, Public Employees and Public Facilities to Perform/Assist or Encourage/Counsel to have an Abortion

Plaintiffs' final challenges to the 1986 Missouri Act are directed at the provisions which prohibit the expenditure of public funds, actions of public employees and use of public facilities "for the purpose of 'performing or assisting an abortion' and 'encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion' if it is not necessary to save her life." Mo.Rev.Stat. §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215.[47]

47. Sections 2, 3, and 4 of "the Act" have been codified at Mo.Rev.Stat. §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215, respectively. Hereinafter, these sections will be identified by the statutory section number as codified. The text is as follows:

§ 188.205. Use of public funds prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother, or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. 1596, § A (§2).)

(Continued on following page)

Plaintiffs assert that all three of these sections are constitutionally flawed.

First, it is claimed that the phrase "encouraging or counseling" is impermissibly vague. Plaintiffs further contend that even if not vague, the restrictions on "encouraging and counseling" infringe on the woman's First

Footnote continued—

188.210. Public employees, activities prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A (§ 3).)

188.215. Use of public facilities prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A (§ 4).)

Definitional language is set forth in Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.200 (previously Section 1 of "the Act"), which provides:

§ 188.200. Definitions

As used in sections 188.200 to 188.220, the following terms mean:

(1) "Public employee," any person employed by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(2) "Public facility," any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(3) "Public funds," any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

and Fourteenth Amendment rights, and on the physician's freedom of speech. Next, plaintiffs claim that the limitations on the use of "public facilities" imposed by Section 188.215 unconstitutionally restrict access to abortions. Moreover, the proscriptions on the use of public funds and activities of public employees allegedly results in the denial of medical care to prisoners seeking abortions, an Eighth Amendment violation. Finally, the plaintiffs insist that the three sections together intrude on academic freedom by effectively removing clinical instruction of abortion procedures from the state medical school curriculum.

On cross-motions for summary judgment, both parties originally requested that the validity of these sections be determined as a matter of law. However, the Court determined in the interest of justice that both motions should be denied in order that the case and record be fully developed. See McLain v. Meier, 612 F.2d 349, 356 (8th Cir.1979).

A. Vagueness

Plaintiffs maintain that Sections 188.205, 188.210 and 188.215 are unconstitutional because the statutory language, "encouraging or counseling," only vaguely describes the proscribed conduct. Hence, it it argued that these laws impermissibly threaten to inhibit the exercise of free speech.

The Supreme Court enunciated the dangers of vague laws in Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108-09, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 2298-99, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972):

> "Vague laws offend several important values. First, because we assume that man is free to steer between > lawful and unlawful conduct, we insist that laws give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly. Vague laws may trap the innocent by not providing fair warning. Second, if arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement is to be prevented, laws must provide explicit standards for those who apply them. A vague law impermissibly delegates basic policy matters to policemen, judges and juries for resolution on an ad hoc and subjective basis, with the attendant dangers of arbitrary and discriminatory application. Third, but related, where a vague statute abuts upon sensitive areas of basic First Amendment freedoms, it operates to inhibit the exercise of [those] freedoms. Uncertain meanings inevitably lead citizens to steer far wider of the unlawful zone . . . than if the boundaries of the forbidden areas were clearly marked." (footnotes omitted)

The standard for evaluating the degree of clarity that the Constitution demands depends on the type of legislative Act. Here, defendants focus on the civil nature of these sections,[48] noting that the Supreme Court has expressed greater tolerance of imprecision in such laws. Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Est., 455 U.S. 489, 498-99, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 1193, 71 L.Ed.2d 362 (1982). However, the Flipside court concluded that "perhaps the most important factor" in determining the re-

---

48. Although it is clear that these sections do not impose criminal penalties, it is uncertain what punishment attaches to the "unlawful" acts. Section 188.220 sets forth taxpayer standing to bring suit:

> "Any taxpayer of this state or its political subdivisions shall have standing to bring suit in a circuit court of proper venue to enforce the provisions of sections 188.200 to 188.215."

quired precision is whether the law "threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights." Id. A more stringent vagueness test applies if the challenged law may exert a chilling effect on free speech. Id.

[17] The right to disseminate even commercial abortion information was recognized in Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600 (1975). First Amendment freedoms of expression are clearly involved where the statute places restrictions on "encouraging or counseling" women to have abortions. See Young Women's Christian Ass'n of Princeton, New Jersey v. Kugler, 342 F.Supp. 1048, 1063 (D.N.J.1972). Consequently, strict judicial scrutiny is warranted in evaluating this vagueness challenge.

Noting the subjective nature of the words "encourage or counsel," plaintiffs insist that physicians and other health professionals will "steer far wider [than] the unlawful zone" and avoid any discussion of abortion with their patients in order to avoid violating the law. See Grayned, 408 U.S. at 109, 92 S.Ct. at 2299. There was evidence that all staff and resident physicians at Truman Medical Center were instructed by the Executive Director not to make "any . . . comment relative to abortion" which is "not necessary to save the life of the mother."[49] A

49. Memo from James J. Mongan, M.D., Executive Director of Truman Medical Center, dated July 11, 1986. (Plaintiffs' Exhibit 12). The memo sets forth the provisions of § 188.215 and concludes that:

> [A]ll personnel . . . MUST [emphasis in original] discontinue all abortion related activity not necessary to save the life of the mother. Since this, of course, includes counseling about abortions and referring patients for abortions to other facilities, there is no alternative but to respond to inquiries about abortion to the effect that Missouri Law prohibits TMC from performing abortions and further prohibits coun-memorandum by Department of Health Director, R. Harmon, M.D., revealed his belief that "[p]ublic facilities and employees under this bill will probably cease to mention abortion out of fear of prosecution."[50] Dr. Debabrata Maulik also testified that the prohibition on "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion" would leave a physician uncertain in distinguishing between lawful and unlawful discussions with patients.[51] The Court considers these interpretations only as evidence that health professionals may steer their conduct far wider than the lawful zone.

(Continued on following page)

The State's counterargument is that the statutory language "encouraging or counseling" is designed to forbid only "affirmative advocacy" of abortions not necessary to save a woman's life. Defendants assert that the prohibition does not prevent a physician from informing a woman of "all options" or the "pros and cons" of an abortion. Further, defendants insist that even if Sections 188.210 and 188.215 must fail, Section 188.205 is not directed at any plaintiff, either as a physician or other health care provider, but only at "state and local officials or legislative bodies responsible for expending public funds."

[18, 19] Having applied the appropriate rigid standard here where the challenged statutes abut upon First

Footnote continued—

> seling, referring or any other activity whatsoever relating to abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. Any other comment relative to abortion is prohibited.

50. Memo review of House Bill No. 1596 by R. Harmon, M.D., Director of Department of Health, Review dated April 28, 1986, at page 4. (Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13).

51. Dr. Maulik stated that the resulting impact on the medical practice would be "devastating."

Amendment freedoms, the Court concludes that Sections 188.205, 188.210 and 188.215 are sufficiently vague to render them unconstitutional. If men of common intelligence must speculate on a statute's meaning and differ as to its application, then a law is so vague that it violates due process. Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 367, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 1320, 12 L.Ed.2d 377 (1964). Even though a penal statute is not involved here, it is clear that the phrase "encouraging or counseling" elicits vastly different interpretations of the scope of the forbidden activity. The Supreme Court disapproved of similar terms such as "counsel," "advocate" and "advise" in the loyalty oath cases of 1960s because the language was "not susceptible of objective measurement" and threatened to restrict free speech. Id.; Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction, 368 U.S. 278, 286, 82 S.Ct. 275, 7 L.Ed.2d 285 (1961).

Moreover, the Court is unpersuaded by the defendants' contention that Section 188.205, which relates to "public funds," could not apply to inhibit the free speech of any health care provider. The definition of "public funds" set forth in Section 188.200 certainly is broad enough to make "encouraging or counseling" unlawful for anyone who is paid from "funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers." § 188.200.

Having determined that these sections are void for vagueness, it is not essential to the outcome to address the additional grounds of unconstitutionality advanced by plaintiffs. However, the Court shall enter its findings and conclusions on each of plaintiffs' claims for purposes of appellate review.

B. "Encouraging or Counseling"—First and Fourteenth Amendment Claims

Even if the phrase "encouraging or counseling" was deemed to be sufficiently precise, plaintiffs contend that these sections interfere with a physician's ability to competently and professionally counsel patients, and the patient's opportunity to receive such information. As the Court has noted above, this activity is certainly within the realm of First Amendment protection. See Kugler, 342 F.Supp. at 1063.

Further, the United States Supreme Court has recognized that the right of privacy, founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty, requires that a physician be given "the room he needs to make his best medical judgment." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192, 93 S.Ct. 739, 747, 35 L.Ed.2d 201 (1973). Assisting a woman in deciding whether or not to have an abortion is included in the exercise of this medical judgment. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387, 99 S.Ct. 675, 681, 58 L.Ed.2d 596 (1979); City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427-430, 103 S.Ct. at 2490-93. Until the State has a compelling interest in either maternal health (approximately at the end of the first trimester) or fetal life (at viability), "a pregnant woman must be permitted, in consultation with her physician to decide to have an abortion and to effectuate that decision "free of interference by the State." Akron, 462 U.S. at 429, 103 S.Ct. at 2492, quoting Roe, 410 U.S. at 163, 93 S.Ct. at 731. Even where the State has an interest in preserving the fetus, a state may "not impose an increased risk to the life or health of the woman." Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. at 2184 (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs insist that by prohibiting certain physicians and health care professionals from advocating an abortion that is "not necessary to save the woman's life," the statute intrudes on the physician-client relationship when the mother's health may be adversely affected, even if it is not an immediately life-threatening condition.[52] There was unchallenged testimony presented at trial that in such situations a physician has a professional duty to at least suggest or even urge the pregnant woman to have an abortion.[53]

---

52. Dr. Maulik testified that an abortion is medically preferable where there are gross fetal anomalies, such as Down's Syndrome, Trisomy 18, and renal agenesis (the two latter conditions being lethal to the infant shortly after birth), or where maternal health may be compromised by cardiac disease, recurrent cerebral vascular accidents (CVAs or strokes), diabetic retinopathy (which threatens blindness) and renal disorders.

As a referral center, Dr. Maulik testified that TMC routinely serves patients with these problems.

Dr. Carl Pearman testified that almost all second trimester abortions performed at the University of Missouri Medical Center in Columbia (UMMC) are performed for the mother's health, though not necessarily to preserve her life, as with breast cancer or early amniotic sac rupture. Accord, Testimony of Dr. Warren Hern. See also McRae v. Califano, 491 F.Supp. 630, 669-76 (E.D.N.Y.1980), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 100 S.Ct. 2671, 65 L.Ed.2d 784 (1980).

53. Dr. Maulik testified that the fear of civil liability and an ethical obligation would compel him to "strongly recommend," though never "force a decision" to have an abortion because of a woman's non-life-threatening health interests. A prohibition on this would be "devastating" to a medical practice. He further testified that it would be "dishonest" to merely discuss abortion as an option without a recommendation of "what in [his] judgment is the best possible course in terms of [the woman's] health and survival."

Dr. Carl Pearman also stated that he feels an ethical and professional obligation to give advice whether to choose abortion when requested by the patient to do so. If this were prohibited by law, Dr. Pearman stated that he would be forced to either violate the law or quit caring for patients who present with such health complications during pregnancy.

Defendants argue that the statutes prohibit only the "advoca[cy] of an unnecessary abortion [which] goes beyond the realm of the physician-client relationship discussed in Akron." The State also submits that > "these sections do not have any impact whatsoever upon a private physician's ability to recommend any course of action he desires to a patient. He simply cannot be compensated by public funds [§ 188.205] or perform the abortion or persuade the woman to obtain the abortion while working in a public facility. [§§ 188.-210 and 188.215.]"[54]

Defendants rely on those Supreme Court cases which held that the government is not obligated to fund abortions, whether or not medically necessary, as authority for the constitutionality of these restrictions on public funds, public employees and public facilities. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 100 S.Ct. 2671, 65 L.Ed.2d 784 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 97 S.Ct. 2376, 53 L.Ed.2d 484 (1977).

The Maher court held that a state may make a policy choice favoring childbirth over abortions, and thus need not remove obstacles such as indigency in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice. Maher, 432 U.S. at 480, 97 S.Ct. at 2386. However, the state may not place obstacles in the path of free choice. Harris, 448 U.S. at 316, 100 S.Ct. at 2688.

[20] This Court concludes that the prohibitions on speech set forth in these sections impose a significant barrier to a woman's right to consult with her physician and exercise her freedom of choice. See Akron, 462 U.S. at 427, 103 S.Ct. at 2491. Patients who fully pay for their services would be denied access to medical information which may affect their decision whether to continue the pregnancy, perhaps enduring health risks. Here, the State is not asked to subsidize abortions or the exercise of First Amendment rights.[55] The Court further rejects defendants' narrow construction that the sections would only affect a woman "being affirmatively counseled to have an abortion and to obtain that abortion in a public facility."[56] (emphasis added.) The statutory language is obviously broader than this interpretation.

---

54. Defendants' brief in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, at 29.

C. § 188.215—Restrictions on Use of Public Facilities

Plaintiffs challenge the provisions in Section 188.215 which make it unlawful for any public facility to be used for "performing or assisting" or "encouraging or counseling" a woman to have an abortion if it is not necessary to save her life.

Defendants submit that such restrictions are justified by the Supreme Court's holding in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519, 520, 97 S.Ct. 2391, 2392, 53 L.Ed.2d 528 (1977), which denied an indigent woman the right to obtain a nontherapeutic abortion at a St. Louis public hospital where the City's policy was to deny funds for such abortions. The Court, however, finds Poelker uncontrolling here where there is no indication that "public funds" would be expended. Plaintiffs claim that these prohibitions are impermissible as applied to patients who seek to obtain and pay for such services at a public facility. The Eighth Circuit's holding in Nyberg v. City of Virginia (Nyberg II), 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir.1982) supports this position.

55. Mr. Richard Chern, Associate Administrator of Finance at Truman Medical Center, testified that the full cost of abortions at TMC are recovered from the patient, without any sliding scale for indigency.

Similarly, Dr. Carl Pearman testified that his private practice patients who are occasionally seen at the University of Missouri Medical Center are charged a full fee.

56. Defendants' brief in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, at 32.

[21] In Nyberg II, the Court of Appeals noted the "fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital." The Eighth Circuit observed that Poelker did not hold that a state may prevent physicians from performing paid abortions in the hospital. Id. at 758 n. 1. While it is true, as defendants argue, that in Nyberg II, the public facility was the only hospital in the community,[57] the gravamen of the holding was that there was no direct public expenditure and that abortion services would be provided only to paying patients.[58] Accordingly, the Court is convinced that § 188.215 is also unconstitutional for the reasons set forth in Nyberg II.

D. "Assisting" an Abortion with Public Funds or by Public Employees—Eighth Amendment Claim

Plaintiffs' fourth alternative challenge to the provisions which restrict public fund expenditures and assis-

57. Moreover, TMC is a public facility which performed 97% of all hospital-based abortions at 16-week or greater gestation in 1985 (stipulation of facts). All patients must pay in full (Testimony of Mr. Richard Chern). The Court has declared § 188.025 to be unconstitutional. However, if all 16-week or greater abortions were required to be performed in a hospital, TMC essentially would be the only available facility.

58. See supra note 55.

tance by public employees focuses on the Eighth Amendment rights of Missouri inmates to receive medical care. Although this argument was not raised previously and defendants have not responded, the Court considers this claim to be meritorious.

Plaintiffs contend that these provisions will effectively deny women inmates access to outside medical facilities for medically necessary, yet non-life-threatening abortions. Testimony at trial revealed that plaintiff RHS has performed abortions on prisoners from State institutions. The patients are transported in State vehicles and accompanied by two State employees. It is also evident that abortion facilities are not available at all the penal institutions in Missouri.[59]

The essence of plaintiffs' claim here is that the required escorted assistance and transportation by prison employees will be precluded by Sections 188.205 and 188.210. Consequently, women prisoners will be unable to terminate pregnancies which seriously threaten their health, even though their lives are not in immediate danger.[60]

In Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S.Ct. 285, 291, 50 L.Ed.2d 251 (1976), the Supreme Court held that "deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners constitutes the 'unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain' proscribed by the Eighth Amendment." (citing

59. Testimony of Judith Widdicombe, R.N. The inmate patients, usually shackled and/or handcuffed, have been accompanied by a matron and driver. Two trips are required if the gestation is 16 weeks or greater because laminaria must be inserted at least one day before the abortion procedure. See supra note 24.

60. See supra note 52 for medical testimony of such conditions.

Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 182-83, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L.Ed.2d 859 (1976)). Although there is no controlling authority that the prisoners' lack of access to a non-life-threatening abortion falls within the Estelle rule, the facts and law certainly indicate that a "serious medical need" may exist and the absolute statutory roadblock may constitute "deliberate indifference" to such needs. A New Jersey district court recently addressed a similar claim against a county jail policy in Monmouth County Correctional Institution Inmates v. Lanzaro, 643 F.Supp. 1217 (D.N.J.1986), finding an Eighth Amendment violation. The Lanzaro court further held that the desired abortions were "serious medical needs" which must be provided at government expense because the prisoners' incarceration resulted in financial dependency.[61]

[22] The Court does not determine here that public funds must actually be expended to pay for a prisoner's therapeutic abortion.[62] However, it is clear that an obstacle to the pregnant prisoner's serious medical needs exists even if she is capable of paying because Section 188.215 appears to make it unlawful for State employees

61. In Lanzaro, the district court considered it "extremely significant" that federal prisons are obligated to provide abortion counseling and assistance. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23 (1986) provides:

Abortion

(a) The inmate has the responsibility for deciding to have an abortion or bear the child.

(b) The Warden shall provide medical, religious and social counseling to aid the inmate in making the decision to have an abortion or bear the child.

(c) An inmate shall sign a statement of responsibility for the decision to have an abortion or bear the child.

(d) At the inmate's request, medical staff shall arrange for the abortion to take place at a hospital or clinic outside the institution.

62. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 100 S.Ct. 2671.

to assist with arranging for the procedure. Moreover, "public funds" would necessarily be involved for salaries and transportation expenses. Hence, these sections violate the Eighth Amendment.

E. Academic Freedom

[23] Finally, it is claimed that these sections interfere with academic freedom by removing clinical instruction in abortion procedures at state medical schools (public facilities) and by university faculty at any institution (public employees). In support of their legal argument, plaintiffs have relied on First Amendment cases which hold that a state may not forbid the teaching of a certain subject or theory simply because it offends the dominant belief of a community. See Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629 (1966); Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266, 21 L.Ed.2d 228 (1968); Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853, 102 S.Ct. 2799, 73 L.Ed.2d 435 (1982).

Although the defendants have offered no counter-arguments, the Court is not persuaded that these sections rise (or fall) to the level of a state-imposed orthodoxy in the educational process. While not directly applicable here, there was conflicting evidence presented at trial as to the necessity of providing clinical instruction in abortion procedures in order for the medical curriculum to be complete.[63] However, the Court is unable to conclude that

63. Stipulated statement of Harry S. Jonas, M.D., Dean of the University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Medicine (clinical teaching of abortions required for complete medical school curriculum); Accord, Testimony of Dr. Carl Pearman.

Contra, Testimony of Dr. Daniel Martin (medical schools such as St. Louis University Medical School can competently teach Obstetrics and Gynecology without performing non-life-threatening abortions as part of the curriculum.)

these sections unconstitutionally interfere with academic freedom.

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, it is hereby ORDERED that the following provisions of the 1986 Missouri Act relating to the regulation of abortions are declared to be unconstitutional:

1. § 1.205.1(1) and (2)
2. § 188.039
3. § 188.025
4. The following portion of § 188.029:

   The second and final sentence which states:

   "In making this determination of viability the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother."

5. § 188.205
6. § 188.210
7. § 188.215

It is further

ORDERED that defendants shall be permanently enjoined from enforcing the provisions declared to be unconstitutional.

APPENDIX B

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

Nos. 87-1641 and 87-2157

Reproductive Health Service; Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W.; Appellees,

v.

William L. Webster; State of Missouri,
Appellants.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri.

Submitted: January 12, 1988
Filed: July 13, 1988

Before LAY, Chief Judge, McMILLIAN and ARNOLD, Circuit Judges.

LAY, Chief Judge.

Five publicly-employed health care providers and two nonprofit corporations brought this class action against the State of Missouri and its Attorney General (the state), challenging the constitutionality of several sections of Missouri's 1986 abortion-regulation statute.[1] Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 1.205; 188.010-.220 (Vernon 1983 and 1988 Supp.) (Unless otherwise noted, all subsequent section references shall be to Missouri's statutes.) The district court declared several portions of the act unconstitutional and permanently enjoined their enforcement. Reproductive Health Servs. v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987). The state appeals.[2] With one exception, we affirm.

A. Hospitalization Requirement

Section 188.025 of Missouri's abortion statute states: "Every abortion performed at sixteen weeks gestational age[3] or later shall be performed in a hospital." Applying the test laid out in City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983), the district court held this requirement unconstitutional because (1) it significantly impacts on the exercise of the right to abortion by causing delay, increasing costs and health risks, and decreasing accessibility; and (2) the state failed to satisfy its burden of proving that the hospitalization requirement is reasonably related to the state's interest in maternal health.

1. The district court, the Honorable Scott O. Wright, United States District Judge for the Western District of Missouri, certified a plaintiff class consisting of (1) facilities, Missouri-licensed physicians, or other health care professionals offering abortion counseling and services; and (2) pregnant women seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling within Missouri.

2. The state appeals from all aspects of the district court's ruling except those relating to the abortion statute's "informed consent" provisions. The court declared unconstitutional the statutory provisions requiring that: (1) the attending physician personally advise the pregnant woman of certain information; and (2) the physician inform the woman "whether she is or is not pregnant." See § 188.039. Because the state does not appeal these rulings, the constitutionality of these requirements is not at issue here.

3. Gestational age is measured from the first day of a woman's last menstrual period and is generally two weeks greater than fetal age. The distinction between gestational and fetal age measurement can be legally significant when applying the trimester approach of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Using the gestational age method, the second trimester encompasses the time from 13 1/3 through 26 1/3 weeks after the last menstrual period, and thus is the time period at issue here.

Although the state asserts that the district court improperly applied Akron's legal standard, its challenge to this ruling is nothing more than an attack on the factual finding that was critical to the court's decision: non-hospitalized abortions at sixteen to eighteen weeks gestational age cannot reasonably be considered more dangerous for pregnant women than hospitalized abortions.[4] Because this finding is not clearly erroneous and because the district court committed no error of law, we affirm on the basis of the district court's opinion. See also Akron, 462 U.S. at 430-31 (regulations that significantly impact access to abortion pre-viability are constitutional only to the extent they reasonably relate to protection

---

4. The district court stated:

> The Court has carefully considered the wealth of expert evidence presented by the parties in light of the appropriate standard of review, which places the burden of justifying the hospitalization requirement on the State. The Court concludes that the requirements of § 188.025 are overbroad. The State did not prove that a D & E [dilatation and evacuation] abortion at 16-18 weeks gestation can reasonably be considered more dangerous when performed in a qualified free-standing outpatient facility rather than in a hospital. In fact, the evidence suggests that the prevailing medical practice is for such procedures to be performed outside the hospital setting.

662 F. Supp. at 419-20. See also Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 664 F.2d 687 (8th Cir. 1981), aff'd in relevant part, 462 U.S. 476, 482 (1983) (invalidating Missouri's second-trimester (twelve week) hospitalization requirement) .

of maternal health; state has burden of proving the reasonable relationship); Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 482 (1983) (invalidating, as in Akron, statute requiring hospitalization for all second trimester abortions).

B. Tests to Determine Viability

The next challenged portion of Missouri's statute requires doctors to determine whether a fetus is viable before performing an abortion on any women whom the doctor has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant. In making the viability assessment, the doctor must determine and record the fetus's gestational age, weight, and lung maturity. § 188.029.

The district court held unconstitutional the requirements that doctors determine gestational age and fetal weight and lung maturity. 662 F. Supp. at 423. The court held that the testing requirements constituted "an impermissible legislative intrusion upon a matter of medical skill and judgment [because] * * * [t]he State may not dictate either the tests or the findings which enter into a decision whether or not a fetus is viable." Id. (emphasis in original).

As indicated by the district court, the Supreme Court has squarely addressed this point and declared that "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-89 (1979). Nevertheless, this is precisely what the Missouri legislature has attempted to proclaim by requiring doctors to determine the fetus's gestational age, weight, and lung maturity. We therefore affirm the lower court's judgment that this portion of section 188.029 is unconstitutional.[5]

C. When Human Life Begins

The first section of the bill that revised Missouri's abortion statute provides, in relevant part:

> 1. The general assembly of this state finds that:
>
> (1) The life of each human being begins at conception;
>
> (2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being;
>
> (3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health, and well-being of their unborn child.

5. The state attempts to defend the statute by arguing that it "only requires that a physician perform necessary medical examinations so as to determine viability[;] * * * in other words those tests which are always performed by any prudent physician * * *." (emphasis added). The state's argument appears premised on an entirely different statute, however; the Missouri statute does not require doctors to make those tests necessary to determine viability. Rather, the statute plainly declares that in determining viability, doctors must perform tests to find gestational age, and fetal weight and lung maturity. The district court found that this requirement, imposed at a point when the woman was believed to be 20 weeks pregnant, was not narrowly tailored to further either the state's interest in maternal health or its interest in the potential life of the fetus. 662 F. Supp. at 422. Tests to determine fetal weight, for instance, besides being unreliable and inaccurate, add $125 to $250 to the cost of abortions and generally are not medically appropriate until a point much later in pregnancy than required by section 188.029. Id. Similarly, performing amniocentesis, the only method available to determine lung maturity, is contrary to accepted medical practice until 28-30 weeks of gestation, expensive, and imposes significant health risks for both the pregnant woman and the fetus. Id. Given these findings, the district court correctly determined that the statute's requirements are unconstitutional.

> 2. Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.
>
> 3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every stage of biological development.

§ 1.205.

The district court held that the declarations that human life begins at conception and that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being are unconstitutional, because, as the Supreme Court has stated "a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." Akron, 462 U.S. at 444 (citing Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 159-62 (1973)).

1. Standing

The state challenges the plaintiffs' standing to attack sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) on two grounds. The state first maintains that section 1.205 merely expands state tort, property, and criminal law protections for unborn children, while specifically excluding abortion from its coverage by providing in section 1.205.2 that section 1.205.1 should be interpreted consistently with the U.S. Constitution and Supreme Court decisions. Thus, the state argues, because section 1.205 does not involve abortion, no one in the plaintiff class has standing to challenge it. The state's second argument is that 1.205.1(1) and (2) have no substantive effect—they are merely statements of existing fact that cannot give rise to a cause of action in anyone. We disagree.

We first note that "the Supreme Court has visibly relaxed its traditional standing principles in deciding abortion cases." Margaret v. Edwards, 794 F.2d 994, 997 (5th Cir. 1986) (citing Roe, 410 U.S. at 123-29; Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 187-89 (1973)); see also Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 113 (1976). Moreover, we are unpersuaded by the state's arguments against standing. Its first argument—that the statute at issue has nothing to do with abortion—is somewhat circuitous, requiring us fully to decide the merits before we can pass upon standing. Its second argument—that the statute at issue has no substantive effect—is belied by the state's vehement assertions to the contrary that the statute substantively affects tort, criminal, and property law.

> The plaintiff class alleged that
>
> Section 1.205.1(1) of the Act impermissibly attempts to establish that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and §1.205.1(2) of the Act impermissibly attempts to establish that ["u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being" as the underpinnings of the entire Act, contrary to [City of Akron] and contrary to the First, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

> Complaint ¶ 20. The plaintiffs thus alleged that Missouri was attempting to do exactly what the Supreme Court has declared it may not do: espouse a theory of when life begins as the foundation of the state's regulation of abortion. No persons are better situated to attack the constitutionality of this endeavor than those parties who are directly affected by the state's abortion laws—laws that allegedly are based on and reflective of an impermissible theory of life. The plaintiffs are such parties.[6] We therefore reject the state's standing challenge.

2. Validity of Declaration

The state's arguments on the merits of sections 1.205.1 (1) and (2) are similar to its standing arguments: (1) because the statute is "abortion-neutral," it is not inconsistent with Roe; and (2) the statute merely determines when life begins in a non-abortion context, a traditional state prerogative.[7]

We reject the assertion that Missouri's emphatic declaration of a state-sanctioned theory of life is "abortion-neutral." Sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) were contained in

---

6. As stated previously, the plaintiff class consists of health care professionals and facilities offering abortion counseling and services, and pregnant women seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling. The status of the plaintiffs here is similar to the status of the plaintiffs in one of the Supreme Court's most recent abortion decisions. See Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 752 (1986) (plaintiffs included American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, certain Pennsylvania-licensed physicians, and Pennsylvania abortion counselors and providers).

7. The state also argues "that it is established biological fact that the life of an individual human being * * * begins at conception. * * * The United States Supreme Court misspoke when it declared that the question of when life begins could not be resolved." (emphasis omitted). We see no point in addressing this contention.

a bill that relates almost exclusively to abortion. As a "prefatory" statement, as so insistently urged by the state, the declaration of when life begins can only have been intended as an introductory and foundational comment. To adopt the state's contention that the statute is "abortion-neutral" is to overlook that every remaining section of the bill save one regulates the performance of abortions. The only plausible inference is that the state intended its abortion regulations to be understood against the backdrop of its theory of life. Rather than being abortion-neutral, the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations.

The state contends that sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) are saved by the pronouncement in section 1.205.2 that Missouri's laws are subject to the United States Constitution and to United States Supreme Court decisions. Hence, the state reasons, even though it has declared in an abortion bill that human life begins at conception, because that bill is subject to Supreme Court decisions holding that states may not declare when life begins in the abortion context, section 1.205.1 must not have anything to do with abortion. The state concludes that its declaration is abortion-neutral and constitutional.

We reject this reasoning. A recitation that state laws must be compatible with the United States Constitution is simply a restatement of the postulate contained in article VI of the Constitution. Such a statement cannot, however, validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the constitution. To accept the state's position would be to hold that every state law is valid as long as it contains a clause subjecting the law to the supremacy clause. We decline to so hold. We affirm the district court's judgment that sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) are invalid.[8]

D. Public Funds, Employees, and Facilities

The final portions of the statute that the lower court declared unconstitutional prohibit the use of public funds, employees, and facilities for the purpose of "performing or assisting" an abortion or for "encouraging or counseling" a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.[9] We address separately the constitutionality

---

8. We need not address the argument advanced by the plaintiffs that if in fact section 1.205.1(1) and (2) have nothing to do with abortion they must be invalidated because they violate the Missouri Constitution's requirement that "[n]o bill shall contain more than one subject * * *." Mo. Const. art. 3, § 23.

9. Specifically, the three sections provide:

188.205. Use of public funds prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother, or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

188.210. Public employees, activities prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

188.215. Use of public facilities prohibited, when

It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(Continued on following page)

of the "encourage or counsel" prohibitions and the "perform or assist" prohibitions.

1. "Encouraging or Counseling" Women to Have Abortions

The district court concluded that the ban on using public funds, facilities, or employees to "encourage or counsel" a woman to have an abortion is void for vagueness and violative of the right to privacy. We agree with these conclusions.

a. Vagueness

In assessing a vagueness challenge, the court first determines whether the challenged enactment implicates constitutionally protected conduct. Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494-95 (1982). If not, then the statute must be upheld unless it is impermissibly vague in all its applications. Id. at 497. If the statute does implicate constitutionally protected activity, the court must determine

---

Footnote continued—

The statute employs the following definitions:

188.200. Definitions

* * *

(1) "Public employee", any person employed by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(2) "Public facility", any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivisions thereof;

(3) "Public funds", any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

whether the statute is sufficiently precise to serve the goals of fair notice and fair enforcement. Id. at 498. "[P]erhaps the most important factor affecting the clarity that the Constitution demands of a law is whether it threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights. If, for example, the law interferes with the right of free speech or of association, a more stringent vagueness test should apply." Id. at 499 (footnote omitted).

As a threshold matter, the state argues that the statutes at issue should not be strictly scrutinized because their penalties are civil, rather than criminal, and because the statutes do not implicate first amendment freedoms. We disagree. To the extent that a lesser standard of scrutiny is appropriate because of the civil nature of the penalty, a proportionately greater increase in scrutiny is warranted because of the threat that the statutes will inhibit the exercise of constitutional rights. The prohibition on "encouraging or counseling" implicates both first and fourteenth amendment rights of both physicians and their patients: the right to disseminate and receive information about abortion, and the right to knowingly and intelligently choose an abortion after consulting a physician. We therefore conclude that the "encouraging or counseling" ban must be scrutinized with particular care.

The statute prohibits two distinct activities: "encouraging" and "counseling." The state's proffered interpretation of these words, however, equates the two activities as encompassing and banning only "affirmative advocacy." Although such a construction may be desirable, "it is not within our power to construe and narrow state laws[,]" Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 110 (1972), and the scope of the encouraging or counseling ban appears literally to be much broader than the interpretation offered by the state. We believe the interpretation offered by the state violates basic principles of statutory construction. See Colautti, 439 U.S. at 392 (striking down a statute for vagueness, stating that the state's "argument that 'may be viable' is synonymous with 'viable' would make either the first or the second condition redundant or largely superfluous, in violation of the elementary canon of construction that a statute should be interpreted so as not to render one part inoperative.").

More importantly, the statute is vague because the word "counsel" is fraught with ambiguity;[10] its range is incapable of objective measurement. See Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 367 (1964). In such circumstances, the threat to the exercise of constitutionally protected rights is tangible; possible targets of the statute are chilled into avoiding even speech that is normally afforded the utmost protection under the Constitution.[11]

---

10. The state cites to Black's Law Dictionary to support its argument that "counseling" has a clearly delimited definition; the state refers, however, to one of only several alternative definitions. See, e.g., Webster's Third New International Dictionary 518 (1981):

> 1a: instruction or recommendation esp. when given as a result of consultation: opinion, advice, direction * * * b: a policy or plan of action or behavior * * * 2: interchange of opinion esp. on possible procedure: discussion, deliberation, consultation * * * 3 obs: faculty or exercise of deliberate judgment: prudence, thoughtfulness 4 archaic: a plan arrived at through deliberation * * * 5a archaic: secret purpose or opinion: private confidence: secret * * * b: reflection, thought, intent, or plan discreetly and carefully guarded from being known * * * [.]

11. Indeed, the district court cited evidence that the statute had already had this pernicious effect:

(Continued on following page)

The state relies upon a Ninth Circuit case holding that Arizona's ban on state support for "counseling for abortion procedures" was not unconstitutionally vague. Planned Parenthood v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 948-49 (9th Cir. 1983). We find this case to be inapposite, however, because the Arizona Attorney General had previously given a narrowing construction to the phrase "abortion procedures" such that the ban on counseling for abortion procedures was significantly more precise than the ban at issue here. Id. Moreover, the wording of the Missouri statute is sufficiently different from that of the Arizona statute as to render them incapable of identical interpretations; "[b]ecause of the nature of the vagueness doctrine, any holding that a statute is unconstitutionally vague must necessarily be highly case-specific." Margaret v. Edwards, 794 F.2d 994, 999 n.13 (5th Cir. 1986).

We conclude that the district court was correct to hold that the "encouraging or counseling" portions of sections 188.205, .210, and .215 are unconstitutionally vague.

Footnote continued—

> There was evidence that all staff and resident physicians at Truman Medical Center were instructed by the Executive Director not to make "any . . . comment relative to abortion" which is "not necessary to save the life of the mother." A memorandum by Department of Health Director, R. Harmon, M.D., revealed his belief that "[p]ublic facilities and employees under this bill will probably cease to mention abortion out of fear of prosecution." Dr. Debabrata Maulik also testified that the prohibition on "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion" would leave a physician uncertain in distinguishing between lawful and unlawful discussions with patients.

662 F. Supp. at 425-26 (footnotes omitted).

b. Right to Privacy

Alternatively, we agree with the district court—and other federal courts that have recently considered similar issues—that the ban on using public funds, employees, and facilities to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion is an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently. Cf. Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137, 148 (D. Mass. 1988) (permanently enjoining enforcement of regulations promulgated by Secretary of Health and Human Services that preclude federally funded projects from providing counseling or referrals for abortion); Planned Parenthood Fed'n of Am. v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465, 1473 (D. Colo. 1988) (preliminarily enjoining same regulations on the ground that they violate, inter alia, a woman's fifth amendment liberty interest in choosing whether to have an abortion).

The Supreme Court has consistently held that meaningful exercise of the right to choose abortion requires the state not to erect obstacles to patients' receipt of their physicians' medical judgment and assistance:

> The Court also has recognized, because abortion is a medical procedure, that the full vindication of the woman's fundamental right necessarily requires that her physician be given "the room he needs to make his best medical judgment." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973). See Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 604-605, n.33 (1977). The physician's exercise of this medical judgment encompasses both assisting the woman in the decision-making process and implementing her decision should she choose abortion. See Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387 (1979). * * *
>
> * * * Until [the state's interest in maternal health becomes compelling] a pregnant woman must be permitted, in consultation with her physician, to decide to have an abortion and to effectuate that decision "free of interference by the State."

City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427, 429-30 (quoting Roe, 410 U.S. at 163) (footnotes omitted).

Missouri's statute, however, places the state between physicians and their patients by forbidding the physicians from relaying certain information, opinions, and advice. The statute contains no exception, for instance, to allow a doctor to advise a patient to have an abortion in those situations where the doctor deems abortion medically necessary although not necessary to save the patient's life.[12]

---

12. The district court pointed out that uncontradicted testimony demonstrated that "in such situations a physician has a professional duty to at least suggest or even urge the pregnant woman to have an abortion." 662 F. Supp. at 427. The court noted:

> Dr. Maulik testified that the fear of civil liability and an ethical obligation would compel him to "strongly recommend," though never "force a decision" to have an abortion because of a woman's non-life-threatening health interests. A prohibition on this would be "devastating" to a medical practice. He further testified that it would be "dishonest" to merely discuss abortion as an option without a recommendation of "what in [his] judgment is the best possible course in terms of [the woman's] health and survival."
>
> Dr. Carl Pearman also stated that he feels an ethical and professional obligation to give advice whether to choose abortion when requested by the patient to do so. If this were prohibited by law, Dr. Pearman stated that he would be forced to either violate the law or quit caring for patients who present with such health complications during pregnancy.

Id. at 427 n. 53.

Such an attempt to officially structure the dialogue between a woman and her doctor would require no discussion were it imposed on all doctors, because such attempts repeatedly have been held unconstitutional. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 759-65 (1986). The state maintains that Missouri's statute is different, however, because it intrudes into the protected doctor-patient relationship only when the doctor is a public employee, is paid with public funds, or uses a public facility. Relying upon cases holding that states may refuse to subsidize abortions, the state contends that its ban on "encouraging or counseling" women to have abortions is simply a refusal to subsidize abortions, reflecting the state's policy preference for childbirth over abortion. See, e.g., Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) (Congress need not provide funds for indigent women to have medically necessary abortions despite its provision of funds for other medically necessary services); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) (states participating in Medicaid need not pay for nontherapeutic abortions for indigents simply because states pay childbirth expenses).

We think that the state's analogy of its ban on "encouraging or counseling" to bans on public abortion funding is completely inapt. Missouri is not simply declining to fund abortions when it forbids its doctors to encourage or counsel women to have abortions. Instead, it is erecting an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth. The state's limitation on doctor-patient discussions reflects the state's choice for childbirth over abortion in a way that prevents the patient from making a fully informed and intelligent choice.

This state-created obstacle to exercise of the right to choose an abortion thus is far-removed from a state's refusal to remove obstacles not of its own creation. The Supreme Court has unequivocally stated that states cannot constitutionally impose such burdensome obstacles to what is at bottom a right to decide whether to terminate a pregnancy. See Maher, 432 U.S. at 473-74 (the right protected by Roe v. Wade is the right to make certain kinds of important decisions); Harris, 448 U.S. at 316 ("government may not place obstacles in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice") (emphasis added). We can perceive of few obstacles more burdensome to the right to decide than a state-imposed blackout on the information necessary to make a decision. We therefore affirm the district court's judgment that the state's ban on "encouraging or counseling" is an unconstitutional infringement of the right to choose an abortion protected by the fourteenth amendment.

2. "Performing or Assisting" Abortions

The district court declared unconstitutional those portions of the statute prohibiting use of public employees, facilities, and funds, to "perform or assist" abortions. See §§ 188.205, .210, .215. With respect to the ban on using public facilities, the court based its holding on this court's decisions in Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982) (Nyberg II), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) and Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 495 F.2d 1342 (8th Cir.) (Nyberg I), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 891 (1974). The district court also declared all three sections violative of the eighth amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment.

a. Public Facilities

Section 188.215 makes it "unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother * * *." The statute defines "public facility" to mean "any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof." § 188.200(2).

The constitutional validity of this statute depends on whether this court's Nyberg cases control, or, rather, whether the Supreme Court's decision in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), is more apposite. We agree with the district court and the plaintiffs that the Nyberg cases are controlling.

In Nyberg II, the city of Virginia adopted a resolution prohibiting doctors from using the facilities of the municipal hospital to perform any abortions other than those required to save the life of the mother. This court affirmed the district court's refusal to vacate an injunction barring implementation of the resolution. Nyberg II, 667 F.2d at 759. Nyberg I and II hold that states may not refuse to allow doctors to perform privately-paid abortions in public facilities. Id. at 758; see also Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848, 854-55 n.9 (8th Cir. 1981) (interpreting holding in Nyberg I).

As we explained in Nyberg II, the abortion-funding cases the Supreme Court decided after Nyberg I did not require vacation of the injunction issued in Nyberg I. The Supreme Court cases, quite simply, held that the government need not provide public financing for elective abortions. See Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) (upholding statute prohibiting use of state funds for abortions);

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) (upholding constitutionality of the Hyde Amendment, which prohibited use of federal funds to reimburse women for the cost of abortions); Poelker, 432 U.S. at 521 (city not required to provide publicly financed hospital services for nontherapeutic abortions); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) (state not required to provide funding for nontherapeutic abortions). The issue in those cases thus was different from the issue presented both here and in Nyberg. See Nyberg II, 667 F.2d at 758 ("There is a fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital.").

The suggestion by the state that Nyberg II misinterpreted Poelker is refuted by Poelker itself. The Poelker Court stated that Poelker and Maher turned on the same issue and that the analysis in Maher controlled the issue in Poelker. Poelker, 432 U.S. at 521. ("the constitutional question presented here is identical in principle with * * * the issue before us in Maher v. Roe"). The issue in Maher was whether a state constitutionally could refuse to provide Medicaid benefits for abortion while providing them for childbirth. Similarly, in Poelker the plaintiff was an indigent who sought a free abortion at the expense of the city.

The due process challenge that was made in Nyberg and that is made here raises a totally different issue: whether the state creates an undue burden or obstacle to the free exercise of the right to choose abortion when it bans access to public facilities. To prevent access to a public facility does more than demonstrate a political choice in favor of childbirth; it clearly narrows and in some cases forecloses the availability of abortion to women. As we explained in Nyberg, such a prohibition could prevent a woman's chosen doctor from performing an abortion because of his unprivileged status at other hospitals or because a private hospital adopted a similar anti-abortion stance. Such a rule could increase the cost of obtaining an abortion and delay the timing of it as well.

If Poelker will be extended to permit states to constitutionally prohibit all abortions at public facilities, it is far better that the Supreme Court, rather than this court, declare such a rule. Under the present status of the law we think it patently wrong to say that denial of the use of public facilities for abortion procedures does not violate the principles of Roe v. Wade.

Missouri's statute is indistinguishable from the resolution at issue in Nyberg:[13] it bars women seeking to obtain and pay for abortions access to public facilities when the evidence demonstrates that no public funds are expended by allowing the abortions.[14] As Judge Stephenson so concisely wrote in Nyberg I:

---

13. The state suggests that Nyberg is distinguishable because the public facility was the only hospital in the city of Virginia. The city's resolution therefore precluded any abortions from being performed in the city. This fact, however, was not particularly relevant—much less essential—to the holding in Nyberg. Nyberg's holding was based on the finding that the city was infringing the right to choose abortions that do not requires expenditure of public funds, in a way that was not narrowly tailored to achieve any compelling state interest.

14. As the district court noted: "Mr. Richard Chern, Associate Administrator of Finance at Truman Medical Center [a public facility], testified that the full cost of abortions at TMC are recovered from the patient, without any sliding scale for indigency." 662 F. Supp. at 428 n.55. Portions of Mr. Chern's testimony in response to questioning by plaintiffs' counsel were as follows:

> Overall we go through a process to determine or to approximate what the cost of the various services are and there are various methods that are used and it's primarily

(Continued on following page)

> The sweeping hospital resolution in question here cannot withstand the constitutional parameters framed by Doe and Roe. It would be a nonsequitur to say that the abortion decision and its effectuation is an election to be made by the physician and his patient without interference by the state and then allow the state, through its public hospitals, to effectively bar the physician from using state facilities to perform the operation.

Nyberg I, 495 F.2d at 1346. We affirm the ruling that section 188.215 violates the fourteenth amendment.

Footnote continued—

> based off of medicare regulations which set down the various costs of the hospital or the entire facility and step it down into the various department and they give their allocation basis such as square footage, they're allocated to various areas for example as far as labor, fringe benefit costs based on the salaries and the hours of people, so there are various methods that are used to spread all the various costs back into the cost centers or the revenue producing areas. From there we obtain a general costs to charge ratio and in general that gives us an approximation of what the costs are for the various services. From there there are other factors which are taken into consideration such as market conditions, what other similar hospitals in the area charge for a particular type of services and also as far as comparisons of charges per patient day overall, and per case, so that there are other comparisons made. From there there are determinations made as far as what the ultimate price will be.
>
> * * *
>
> Q. Is there more attention paid to the pricing of abortion procedures than other procedures?
>
> A. There is a specific policy of the institution or the corporation in which it is to be insured that the cost is recovered from the people that are receiving those services so as a result there is more attention paid to those—the pricing of that particular service.
>
> Q. This policy which you have just described, am I correct that you're saying it's a policy directed solely toward abortion patients?

(Continued on following page)

b. Public Employees

The state also challenges the trial court's ruling that section 188.210 is constitutionally infirm. Section 188.210 provides: "It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother."

Although we agree with the trial court that the statute is unconstitutional, our reasoning is different. The trial court held that the statute violates the eighth amendment. We do not reach the eighth amendment issue because we hold that this prohibition violates the due process clause as interpreted in Roe and its progeny.[15]

Footnote continued—

A. Yes, toward the abortion services.

Q. And that is to insure that the cost to the abortion patient makes it self-supporting, the procedure, is that the concept?

A. Yes.

* * *

Q. This policy of making the abortion patient pay the full cost of the service received, is there any distinction in that policy as applied to clinic patients of the hospital itself as opposed to private practice patients or physicians who bring their patients to Truman to do the procedure?

A. There's no distinction made as far as the type of patient.

Q. It's the same across the board?

A. Yes.

Transcript at 3-4 - 3-6.

15. We also need not decide the issue whether section 188.215 violates the eighth amendment, as the trial court held. Although plaintiffs did not challenge this specific provision under the due process clause, our ruling as to the provision concerning public facilities requires a similar holding as to the provision concerning public employees. It would be totally incongruous to hold that the state cannot deny use of public facilities for paid abortions but may forbid public employees from assisting in those surgical procedures.

Roe and its progeny established that the due process clause protects women from unduly burdensome state interference with their right to decide whether to terminate pregnancies. See, e.g., Roe, 410 U.S. at 154-55; Maher, 432 U.S. at 473-74. Although the due process clause "does not confer an entitlement to * * * funds [to pay for abortions]," Harris, 448 U.S. at 318 (emphasis added), it does preclude the states from "plac[ing] obstacles in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice * * *." Id. at 316. Just as a statutory prohibition on access to public facilities for privately-paid abortions constitutes such a government-created obstacle, so too does Missouri's ban on public employees performing or assisting abortions.

The evidence here showed that all of the public facility's costs in providing abortion services are recouped when the patient pays. Those costs must necessarily include the cost of employees' services. Hence, by refusing to permit public employees to perform or assist abortions, Missouri is not expressing its preference for childbirth over abortions by refusing to fund the latter. Rather, the state is declaring that even women who can afford abortions cannot obtain them through the assistance of public employees, for no other expressed reason than the state's desire to discourage abortions. This obstacle to exercise of the right to choose abortion cannot stand absent a compelling state interest; Missouri's desire to discourage abortions is not sufficient justification. We therefore affirm the judgment that Missouri's ban on performance or assistance of abortions by public employees is unconstitutional.

c. Public Funds

The final provision at issue is section 188.205, which makes it "unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother * * *." The trial court held that the prohibition on use of public funds to assist abortions constitutes cruel and unusual punishment under the eighth amendment because it precludes pregnant prison inmates from obtaining abortions. 662 F. Supp. at 429. Prison inmates seeking abortions receive assistance from state employees in the form of escorts and, often, transportation to outside facilities. Because the accompanying expenditure of public funds is barred by the statute, inmates are effectively prevented from obtaining abortions. The district court held that this violates the eighth amendment because it constitutes deliberate indifference to prisoners' medical needs. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104 (1976).

The state raises a number of challenges to this ruling,[16] but primarily maintains that "assistance" within the meaning of the statute does not encompass the type of assistance given by state employees to inmates when they obtain abortions. Thus, the state contends, the statute does not preclude state employees from transporting and escorting inmates to obtain abortions. The state further argues that it was erroneous for the district court to declare the "assist" portion facially unconstitutional simply because the court "could hypothesize an offbeat interpretation of the statute which under certain very unique circumstances could be applied to a person, a female inmate, so as to violate her rights." Because we agree with the state that the district court erroneously construed the term "assist," we need not address its second contention.

16. The state argues that no plaintiff has standing to raise this claim because none of the named plaintiffs is an inmate and third-party standing is not warranted. The state does not claim, however, that it was error to allow the named plaintiffs to represent a class of pregnant females seeking abortion services or counseling. That class includes pregnant female prison inmates. In addition, the evidence showed that plaintiff Reproductive Health Services has performed abortions on prisoners from state institutions. 662 F. Supp. at 428. In circumstances such as those present here, clinics and physicians have standing to raise the rights of their patients. See Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 118 (1976) (plurality opinion) and id. at 128 (concurring and dissenting opinion of Powell, J., joined by three Justices) (agreeing that in the event of direct state interference with the physician-patient relationship, "one party to the relationship should be permitted to assert the constitutional rights of the other").

The state further suggests that the eighth amendment issue was not properly raised below because not pled in the complaint. Nevertheless, evidence was presented without objection at trial about the fact and the manner of inmates' receipt of abortion services at Reproductive Health Services. We deem the issue tried by implied consent of the parties. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(b).

We cannot accept the conclusion that "assisting" an abortion encompasses driving or escorting the patient to the location where the procedure is to take place. The abortion itself does not take place in the vehicle or as the patient is being escorted. We think a more reasonable interpretation of the phrase "assisting an abortion" is the one suggested by the state: direct participation in the surgical procedure itself. Because we thus hold that the statute does not prevent state employees from arranging for abortion procedures for inmates or from transporting and escorting inmates to abortion facilities, we must reverse the district court's judgment that section 188.205 violates the eighth amendment.[17] Moreover, because the

17. Because we resolve this issue on statutory grounds, we need not and do not decide the constitutional question resolved by the district court. We note, moreover, that this case does not present the question recently decided in the affirmative by the Third Circuit: whether the eighth amendment requires the government to assume the cost of providing inmates with elective abortions in the absence of alternative methods of financing. See Monmouth County Correctional Institutional Inmates v.

(Continued on following page)

Supreme Court has made clear that neither the due process clause nor the equal protection clause requires public funding for abortions, we conclude that Missouri's ban on the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting abortions is constitutional.[18]

E. Attorneys' Fees

The state also appeals from the district court's award of attorneys' fees to the plaintiffs, arguing that: (1) the rates awarded to most of the attorneys were unreasonable; and (2) the district court should have reduced the number of hours on which it based the award due to duplication of effort and an unreasonably high number of hours devoted to this action. The district court carefully considered both the rate and the number of hours expended and correctly applied the relevant legal criteria. Finding no abuse of discretion, we affirm the award of attorneys' fees and award plaintiffs full costs on appeal.

ARNOLD, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I join Parts A and B of the Court's opinion, holding invalid Mo. Ann. Stat. §§188.025 (hospitalization requirement) and 188.029 (tests to determine viability). I also join Part D(2)(c), upholding §188.205, the ban on expenditure of public funds for abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother.

As to Part D(1), invalidating those portions of §§188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 forbidding the use of public facilities, employees, or funds to encourage or counsel certain abortions, I concur in the result. These statutes sharply discriminate between kinds of speech on the basis of their viewpoint: a physician, for example, could discourage an abortion, or counsel against it, while in a public facility, but he or she could not encourage or counsel in favor of it. That kind of distinction is flatly inconsistent with the First Amendment, as incorporated against the states by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

As to Parts D(2)(a) and (b), I also concur in the result. I am unable to distinguish this case from Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983). This panel is bound by Nyberg.

As to Part C, I respectfully dissent in part. Of course a governmental declaration about when human life begins, insofar as it is used to justify regulation of abortion, is unconstitutional. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). But I do not see why Mo. Ann. Stat. §1.205 should not be upheld insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion. The statute, for example, may mean that the negligent killing of a fetus gives rise to a state-law tort action for wrongful death. Neither the District Court nor this Court suggests that such a change in the common law, if limited to non-abortion situations, would

---

Footnote continued—

Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 56 U.S.L.W. 3789 (U.S. May 16, 1988); see generally Note, Inmate Abortions—The Right to Government Funding Behind the Prison Gates, 48 Fordham L. Rev. 550 (1980).

18. The plaintiffs argue here, as they did below, that sections 188.205, .210, and .215 violate "academic freedom" because they would remove clinical instruction in abortion procedures from the curricula of state medical schools. None of the named or class plaintiffs is alleged to be a medical student, however, and we hold that plaintiffs do not have standing to raise this claim.

violate the federal Constitution. Just such a purpose was apparently part of what the State Legislature had in mind when it passed this law. Section 1.205.4, which the Court does not quote, reads as follows:

> Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

The implication is that the section may properly be interpreted as creating causes of action against persons other than the mother. The statute also, the State argues, relates to the property rights of the unborn, and to the protection extended to them by the criminal law. Again, legislation on these subjects, wise or unwise, is within the purview of state legislatures, absent some constitutional obstacle, and none is suggested.

In short, I would not hold §§1.205.1(1) and (2) facially invalid, but only invalid as applied to the subject of abortion.

As to Part E of the Court's opinion (relating to attorneys' fees), I concur.

A true copy.

Attest:

CLERK, U.S. COURT OF APPEALS,
EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

APPENDIX C

(Filed September 29, 1988)

IN THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

No. 87-1641WM and 87-2157WM

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES et al.,
Appellees,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants.

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Come now William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, and the State of Missouri, appellants herein, by and through their attorneys, and give notice that they hereby appeal to the United States Supreme Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2) from the final judgment entered on July 13, 1988, by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirming an order of the United States District Court, Western District of Missouri, declaring the following provisions of the Revised Statutes of Missouri to be unconstitutional:

Sections 1.205.1(1) and (2);
Section 188.025;
A portion of Section 188.029;
Section 188.205;

Section 188.210; and
Section 188.215.

Respectfully submitted,

William L. Webster
Attorney General
/s/ Michael L. Boicourt
Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General
Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorney General
6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8785
Attorneys for Defendants William L. Webster and the State of Missouri

Certificate of Service

I hereby certify that a true and correct copy of the foregoing was mailed, postage prepaid, this 28th day of September, 1988, to:

Frank Susman, Thomas M. Blumenthal
10th Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105

Roger K. Evans, Dara Klassel, Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, N. Y. 10019

/s/ Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General

APPENDIX D

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

U. S. Const., Art. III § 2:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more states; between a state and citizens of another state; between citizens of different states; between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, and between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or subjects.

U. S. Const., Amend. I:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

U. S. Const., Amend. XIV § 1:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

RSMo. 1.140 (1986):

The provisions of every statute are severable. If any provision of a statute is found by a court of competent jurisdiction to be unconstitutional, the remaining provisions of the statute are valid unless the court finds the valid provisions of the statute are so essentially and inseparably connected with, and so dependent upon, the void provision that it cannot be presumed the legislature would have enacted the valid provisions without the void one; or unless the court finds that the valid provisions, standing alone, are incomplete and are incapable of being executed in accordance with the legislative intent.

RSMo. 1.205.1 (1986):

1. The general assembly of this state finds that:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being.

(3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health and well-being of their unborn child.

2. Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every stage of biological development.

4. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

RSMo. 188.010 (1986):

It is the intention of the general assembly of the state of Missouri to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes.

RSMo. 188.029 (1986):

Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions. In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

RSMo. 188.200 (1986):

As used in sections 188.200 to 188.220, the following terms mean:

(1) "Public employee", any person employed by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(2) "Public facility", any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivisions thereof;

(3) "Public funds", any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

RSMo. 188.205 (1986):

It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

RSMo. 188.210 (1986):

It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

RSMo. 188.215 (1986):

It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

RSMo. 188.220 (1986):

Any taxpayer of this state or its political subdivisions shall have standing to bring suit in a circuit court of proper venue to enforce the provisions of sections 188.200 to 188.215.

MOTION

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 12 1988
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

—vs.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

MOTION TO AFFIRM

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BARBARA E. OTTEN
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

FRANK SUSMAN, P.C.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Shifrin
7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern Missouri
(314) 725-7300

Attorneys for Appellees

*Counsel of Record

December 12, 1988

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
ADDITIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION	vi
STATEMENT	1
ARGUMENT
I. THE COURT OF APPEALS EMPLOYED THE CORRECT STANDARD OF REVIEW	3
II. THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF APPEALS STRIKING DOWN MO. REV. STAT. §§ 1.205.1 (1) AND (2) SHOULD BE AFFIRMED OR REMANDED FOR CONSIDERATION OF ALTERNATIVE STATE LAW GROUNDS TO SUPPORT THE JUDGMENT	6
III. THE COURT OF APPEALS' INVALIDATION OF MO. REV. STAT. § 188.029, WHICH REQUIRES PHYSICIANS TO MAKE FINDINGS AS TO GESTATIONAL AGE AND FETAL WEIGHT AND LUNG MATURITY IN DETERMINING VIABILITY, IS CORRECT UNDER PRINCIPLES ANNOUNCED BY THIS COURT, AND THE STATE'S OBJECTIONS TO THE HOLDING BELOW DO NOT MERIT PLENARY REVIEW	7

PAGE

IV. THE COURT OF APPEALS CORRECTLY HELD THAT WHILE THE STATE HAS THE RIGHT TO CHOOSE NOT TO PAY FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF ABORTIONS, THE STATE CANNOT BAR ABSOLUTELY ACCESS TO PUBLIC FACILITIES BY WOMEN AND THEIR PERSONAL PHYSICIANS FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF ABORTIONS..... 9

V. NO CASE OR CONTROVERSY REMAINS BETWEEN THE PLAINTIFFS AND THE STATE WITH RESPECT TO MO. REV. STAT. § 188.205, WHICH MAKES IT UNLAWFUL FOR PUBLIC FUNDS TO BE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION; IF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY DOES EXIST, THEN THE COURT OF APPEALS' JUDGMENT SHOULD BE SUMMARILY AFFIRMED 12

VI. ROE V. WADE SHOULD NOT BE RECONSIDERED..... 16

CONCLUSION 19

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: PAGE

Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964) 14

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 17

Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976) 17

Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 17

Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, 472 U.S. 491 (1985)..... 9

Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955) 17

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983).....3, 4, 5, 11, 15, 16, 17

City Council of the City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984).....14, 15

City of Mesquite v. Aladdin's Castle, Inc., 455 U.S. 283 (1982) 7

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979).....7, 15, 17

Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975) 17

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 11

FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364 (1984). 15

Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S. Ct. 2495 (1988) 4, 5, 9

Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S 104 (1972) 13

H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981)..... 17

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 9, 10, 11, 17

Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352 (1983)..... 13

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977).....9, 10, 11, 17

Morgentaler v. Her Majesty The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R.4th 385 (Canada S. Ct. 1988) 18

PAGE

Nyberg v. City of Virginia, Minnesota, 495 F.2d 1342 (8th Cir.), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 891 (1974), motion to vacate injunction denied, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 11

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 1, 4, 17

Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Missouri v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 4, 5

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 9, 10, 11

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987) ..... passim

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) ..... passim

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 1, 3, 4, 16, 17, 18

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 4, 16, 17

United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095 (1987) 4, 5

Virginia v. American Booksellers Association, Inc., 108 S. Ct. 636 (1988) 9

Constitutions, Statutes, and Rules:

U.S. Const. amend. I. 12, 13, 14, 15

U.S. Const. amend. XIV ..... passim

Mo. Const. art. III, § 23 ..... vi, 6

PAGE

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1 (1986) 2, 6, 19
§ 1.205.2 6
§ 188.025 ..... 2, 3, 19
§ 188.029 ..... 2, 4, 7, 8, 19
§ 188.210 10
§ 188.205 ..... 2, 12, 19
§ 188.210 ..... 3, 12, 19
§ 188.215 ..... 1, 3, 12, 19

Sup. Ct. R. 16.1(c) 1

Other Authorities:

Spitz et al., Third-Trimester Induced Abortions in Georgia, 1979 and 1980, 73 Am. J. Public Health 594 (1983) 8

ADDITIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION

Missouri Constitution, Article III, § 23 (1987):

No bill shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title, except bills enacted under the third exception in section 37 of this article and general appropriation bills, which may embrace the various subjects and accounts for which moneys are appropriated.

STATEMENT

Appellees ("plaintiffs") move to affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit on the basis that it is clearly correct and that the issues raised by appellants ("the State") are "so unsubstantial as not to need further argument." Sup. Ct. R. 16.1(c). Moreover, plaintiffs believe that a case or controversy no longer exists as to one of the issues the State raises in this appeal. Accordingly, that issue should be remanded for further proceedings. See Section V, infra p. 12.[1]

A review of the issues presented on this appeal will show that none of them requires reconsideration of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Moreover, for the reasons set forth in Section VI, infra p. 16, Roe v. Wade should not be reconsidered.

This case involves a challenge to 1986 amendments to Missouri's abortion law ("the Act"). Four provisions of the Act have been brought to this Court for review of the holdings, first of the District Court and then of the Court of Appeals, that the provisions are unconstitutional. One provision bans the performance of abortions in public facilities, thereby eliminating what is effectively the only source of late in-hospital abortions in the state,[2] a crucial medical service for high risk patients. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 (1986); Jurisdictional Statement ("J.S.") at A 91. A second provision imposes "straitjacket" restrictions[3] on the ability of some doctors to communicate with their patients about abortion, and these restrictions are written in classically vague and viewpoint discriminatory language. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205[4]; J.S. at A90-91. A third provision dictates 1 Plaintiffs also suggest that this Court remand one of the Court of Appeals holdings for consideration of alternative state law grounds to support the judgment. See Section II, infra p. 6.

---

2 Jurisdictional Statement ("J.S.") at A51 n.57; Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407, 428 n.57 (W.D. Mo. 1987).

3 Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 67 n.8 (1976).

4 The State appeals only the restriction on use of public funds for this purpose, not the restriction on the use of public facilities or employees. See Section V, infra p. 12.

to physicians that certain costly, medically dangerous tests be performed on women seeking abortions past the nineteenth week of pregnancy, even though the State does not dispute that these tests, in most instances, would be contrary to standard medical procedure. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029; J.S. at A89-90. All of these restrictions are preceded by a fourth provision that declares that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and that "[u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being." Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 1.205.1 (1) and (2); J.S. at A88.

The State makes some rather remarkable and inflammatory assertions about the opinion of the Court of Appeals and the issues presented to this Court for review. The State claims the Court of Appeals departed from "normal principles of constitutional adjudication . . . expand[ed] this Court's precedents in favor of abortion on demand . . . contract[ed] the State's compelling interest in the life of viable unborn children, and disregard[ed] this Court's holdings that abortion is a private matter which government need in no way subsidize." J.S. at 11.

However, a more objective review of the holdings below reveals that the State's assertions are unfounded rhetoric. The Court of Appeals and the District Court strictly applied this Court's precedents to sustain some provisions of the challenged statute[5] and to declare others unconstitutional. Further, the State has appealed to this Court only some of the Court of 5 The District Court sustained the requirement that physicians make a determination of viability at 20 weeks of gestation. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029. J.S. at A36; 662 F. Supp. at 422. The Court of Appeals upheld the provision of the Act making unlawful the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205. J.S. at A79-82; Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1084-85 (8th Cir. 1988). Plaintiffs did not appeal either of these holdings.

Appeals' rulings of unconstitutionality.[6] This confirms that, contrary to the image the State seeks to portray in its Jurisdictional Statement, the court below hardly ran amok over the State's "legitimate interest in protecting . . . . the life and health of unborn human life." J.S. at 8.

As to those holdings appealed, a fair review reveals not only that the Court of Appeals was entirely correct, but that the issues raised by the State are without legal foundation or are minor contentions not rising to the level of substantial federal questions. With regard to the speech restrictions of the Act, the State has structured its appeal and framed this issue in a way that eliminates any case or controversy between it and the plaintiffs.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT OF APPEALS EMPLOYED THE CORRECT STANDARD OF REVIEW

The State's argument that the Court of Appeals applied an incorrect standard of review is frivolous. The standard of review for state regulations that impinge upon fundamental rights is long settled: the regulation "may be justified only by a 'compelling state interest,' " and "must be narrowly drawn to express only the legitimate state interests at stake." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 155. It is not only the appropriate standard for state regulations impinging upon the exercise of the right to elect abortion, id.; City of Akron v. Akron Center for Repro-

6 The State has not appealed the Court of Appeals' invalidation of § 188.025, which would have required all post-15 week abortions to be performed in hospitals. J.S. at A57-58; 851 F.2d at 1073-74. Nor has the State appealed the Court of Appeals' holding of unconstitutionality as to those portions of §§ 188.210 and 215 which ban speech by public employees or in public facilities which encourages or counsels women to have abortions. J.S. at A65-73; 851 F.2d at 1077-81. Additionally, the State did not appeal the District Court's invalidation of the Act's requirement that a physician personally provide certain information to a pregnant woman considering an abortion. J.S. at A17-22; 662 F. Supp. at 413-16.

ductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 420, 426-31 (1983);[7] Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 759 (1986), it is the standard applied to any regulation that impinges upon "fundamental rights." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 155.

The Court of Appeals faithfully applied the correct standard. It determined whether each provision of the Missouri Act directly interfered with access to abortion and, if so, whether the restriction was narrowly tailored to express the relevant state interests at stake. See, e.g., J.S. at A59-60 and n.5; 851 F.2d at 1075 and n.5 (affirming the District Court's holding that Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 was not narrowly tailored to further the State's interest in fetal life or maternal health).

Neither United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095 (1987); Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S. Ct. 2495 (1988); nor Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Missouri v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) requires, as the State claims, a different standard. J.S. at 12-13.

In Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095, this Court inquired into whether the Bail Reform Act's pre-trial detention provisions were narrowly tailored to advance compelling state interests. Id. at 2103. Although this Court said that a facial challenge requires the plaintiff to establish that "no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid," id. at 2100, that statement must

---

7 In City of Akron, this Court answered the same argument made by the State here:

> It is true that a state abortion regulation is not unconstitutional simply because it does not correspond perfectly in all cases to the asserted state interest. But the lines drawn in a state regulation must be reasonable, and this cannot be said of § 1870.03. By preventing the performance of D&E abortions in an appropriate nonhospital setting, Akron has imposed a heavy, and unnecessary, burden on women's access to a relatively inexpensive, otherwise accessible, and safe abortion procedure. Section 1870.03 has 'the effect of inhibiting . . . the vast majority of abortions after the first 12 weeks,' Danforth, 428 U.S. at 79, and therefore unreasonably infringes upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion (citations omitted).

462 U.S. at 438-39.

be understood in the context of that case: the plaintiff in Salerno made no allegations that the challenged law was unconstitutional as applied to him. Id. at 2100 n.3. In such abstract circumstances, a law which appears on its face to be narrowly tailored to meet compelling state interests will not be held facially invalid because it "might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances." Id. at 2100.

In Frisby, 108 S. Ct. 2495, this Court upheld a ban on residential picketing because it was "narrowly tailored" to meet the state's significant interest in protecting unwilling listeners. Id. at 2501-502. The standard of review expressed was exactly that relied upon by the Court of Appeals here: "A statute is narrowly tailored if it targets and eliminates no more than the exact source of the 'evil' it seeks to remedy." Id. at 2502.

In Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, which was decided the same day as City of Akron, 462 U.S. 416, this Court upheld Missouri's "second doctor" requirement for post-viability abortions on the ground that it furthered the state's compelling interest in viable fetal life. In a lengthy footnote, this Court dealt with the Ashcroft plaintiffs' contention that in some cases the method of abortion precluded fetal survival and therefore rendered the second doctor useless. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 483 n.7. This Court concluded, after a careful review of the evidence on the record, that such circumstances were "rare" and held the statute valid, concluding that "[l]egislation need not accommodate every conceivable contingency." Id.

Ashcroft did not, as the State contends, reject "the application of a 'narrowly drawn' standard" for abortion legislation. J.S. at 13. This Court did not uphold the Missouri law because it searched and found some valid application for it. Rather, it upheld the law because, in all but rare circumstances, it was justified by a compelling state interest: protection of viable fetal life.

The State implies that there was something "hypothetical" about the claims made by plaintiffs. J.S. at 13. Yet, it never identifies the basis for that contention. A review of the Court of Appeals' decision negates any such suggestion, and reveals that it stringently followed the consistent mode of analysis dictated by this Court and applied uniformly by it and lower courts since 1973.

II. THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF APPEALS STRIKING DOWN MO. REV. STAT. §§ 1.205.1 (1) AND (2) SHOULD BE AFFIRMED OR REMANDED FOR CONSIDERATION OF ALTERNATIVE STATE LAW GROUNDS TO SUPPORT THE JUDGMENT

The State's objection to the Court of Appeals' invalidation of Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 1.205.1 (1) and (2) amounts to no more than a quibble. The State does not dispute the Court of Appeals' holding that these provisions are unconstitutional in so far as they adopt a theory of when life begins as a basis for regulating abortion. The State's sole contention is that it should be able to assert its theory of when life begins as a basis for legislating in certain other areas, such as inheritance rights. J.S. at 17-18. There is nothing in the Court of Appeals' opinion which forecloses the State from doing so, however, in a separate statute.[8] The State's argument with the Court of Appeals, therefore, boils down to one of statutory location, hardly an issue meriting plenary review.

Additionally, separate and independent state grounds exist which may render these sections invalid. Plaintiffs advanced the argument in the Court of Appeals that if, as the State maintains, §§ 1.205.1 (1) and (2) pertain to subjects unrelated to abortion, they violate the Missouri Constitution's requirement that "[n]o bill should contain more than one subject. . ." Mo. Const. art. III, § 23. The Court of Appeals, however, found it unnecessary to reach that issue. J.S. at A65 n.8; 851 F.2d at 1077 n.8.

Nevertheless, this Court has announced a strong policy of "avoiding the unnecessary adjudication of federal constitutional questions" where state law might provide "independent support" for the judgment below. City of Mesquite v. Aladdin's Castle, Inc., 455 U.S. 283, 294-95 (1982). Moreover, this Court has recognized that the federal courts of appeal are in a better position than it to resolve questions of local law. Id. at 293.

8 Indeed, the provisions of the Act requiring Missouri's laws to be construed to protect the unborn remain in place and in effect. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2.

Plaintiffs, therefore, urge this Court to affirm the judgment below or to remand this issue for consideration of alternative state grounds to support that judgment.

III. THE COURT OF APPEALS' INVALIDATION OF MO. REV. STAT. § 188.029, WHICH REQUIRES PHYSICIANS TO MAKE FINDINGS AS TO GESTATIONAL AGE AND FETAL WEIGHT AND LUNG MATURITY IN DETERMINING VIABILITY, IS CORRECT UNDER PRINCIPLES ANNOUNCED BY THIS COURT, AND THE STATE'S OBJECTIONS TO THE HOLDING BELOW DO NOT MERIT PLENARY REVIEW

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 requires a physician who has "reason to believe" a patient requesting an abortion is twenty or more weeks pregnant to conduct such "tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity" of the fetus and enter those findings in the patient's medical record.[9] The Court of Appeals found the constitutionality of this requirement foreclosed by this Court's pronouncement that " 'neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor.' " J.S. at A59; 851 F.2d at 1074 (quoting Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-89 (1979)).

The factual findings of the District Court which the Court of Appeals affirmed illustrate why the imposition of inflexible requirements in this medical context is unconstitutional: they serve neither the best interests of the patient nor the State's interests, compelling or otherwise. Extensive evidence at trial showed that forcing physicians to make these findings could lead to added expense and health risks to the woman that were justified neither by state interests in maternal health nor protection of potential life. J.S. at A60 n.5; 851 F.2d at 1075 n.5. The evidence showed that: (1) tests for fetal weight are expensive and inaccurate and yield little useful information until much later than twenty weeks of pregnancy, and (2) amniocentesis, the only known test for lung maturity, is an invasive procedure which raises the costs and risks to both the woman and the fetus, including risks resulting from the delay required to schedule the procedure, without yielding information useful to the determination of viability until at least the twenty-eighth to thirtieth week of pregnancy. Id.; J.S. at A36-38 and nn.39-46; 662 F. Supp. at 422-23 and nn.39-46.[10]

9 The District Court upheld the requirement that physicians determine viability at this stage of gestation. J.S. at A34; 662 F. Supp. at 421.

The State does not dispute these factual findings or conclusions. It argues rather that the courts below misread the language of the statute and that the language does not require any particular medical test. J.S. at 21-22.[11]

10 Abortions past the twenty-eighth week of pregnancy are virtually non-existent. See, e.g., Spitz et al., Third-Trimester Induced Abortions in Georgia, 1979 and 1980, 73 Am. J. Public Health 594 (1983).

11 The State argues that amniocentesis will produce "no finding" on lung maturity at twenty weeks of pregnancy and it is therefore not a test " 'necessary to make a finding' " of lung maturity. J.S. at 21-22. The fact is, however, that the statute unequivocally requires physicians to make "findings" and record those findings in the patient's record; it contains no exception for circumstances where the "findings" invariably will be negative. If the only way to make those findings is through an invasive test such as amniocentesis, or an expensive one such as fetal weight determination, then the statute requires those tests. Moreover, even if the State is right that the statute requires only tests that will yield a positive "finding," it has failed to suggest what relevance findings of fetal weight or lung maturity have to viability or dispute the evidence at trial that, until thirty weeks of pregnancy, no test is relevant other then ultrasonography to determine gestational age. J.S. at A37; 662 F. Supp. at 422-23. The utter lack of evidence to establish a relationship between the findings required by § 188.029 and the State's interest in preserving fetal life indicates this statute is unconstitutional, whether judged under a "strict scrutiny" or a "rational basis" test.

This argument does not provide a basis for plenary review. This Court "defer[s] to the construction of a state statute given it by the lower federal courts . . . to reflect our belief that district courts and courts of appeal are better schooled in and more able to interpret the laws of their respective States." Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S. Ct. at 2500 (quoting Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 499-500 (1985) (citations omitted)). See also Virginia v. American Booksellers Association, Inc., 108 S. Ct. 636, 643 (1988) ("[T]his Court rarely reviews a construction of state law agreed upon by the two lower federal courts").

The judgment of the Court of Appeals, therefore, should be affirmed.

IV. THE COURT OF APPEALS CORRECTLY HELD THAT WHILE THE STATE HAS THE RIGHT TO CHOOSE NOT TO PAY FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF ABORTIONS, THE STATE CANNOT BAR ABSOLUTELY ACCESS TO PUBLIC FACILITIES BY WOMEN AND THEIR PERSONAL PHYSICIANS FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF ABORTIONS

The Court of Appeals adjudicated the restrictions on the use of public funds, public facilities, and public employees to perform or assist an abortion in precise harmony with this Court's holdings in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). Those cases held that the Constitution does not require the government to expend public funds to pay for abortions. Thus, in Poelker, where an indigent woman challenged a city policy of not allowing abortions to be performed in city-owned hospitals, this Court said:

> For the reasons set forth in our opinion in . . . [Maher], we find no constitutional violation by the city of St. Louis in electing, as a policy choice, to provide publicly financed hospital services for childbirth without providing corresponding services for nontherapeutic abortions.

432 U.S. at 521 (emphasis added).[12] Accordingly, the Court of Appeals upheld the Act's ban on the use of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion. J.S. at A82; 851 F.2d at 1084.

Neither Maher, Poelker, nor Harris, however, authorizes the Act's ban on the use of public facilities or employees for the performance of abortions. These aspects of the Act bar access by women and their doctors to all facilities and employees that meet a broad definition of "public,"[13] even when, as here, no public funds are involved in the actual performance of, or assistance in, the procedures. J.S. at A76 n.14; 851 F.2d at 1082 n.14.

In Maher, this Court reasoned that a decision on allocation of funds was constitutional, because it "places no obstacles . . . in the pregnant woman's path to an abortion." 432 U.S. at 474. As the Court of Appeals recognized, the facilities and employees bar here is just such an obstacle:

> To prevent access to a public facility does more than demonstrate a political choice in favor of childbirth; it clearly narrows and in some cases forecloses the availability of abortion to women.
>
> . . . .
>
> [S]uch a prohibition could prevent a woman's chosen doctor from performing an abortion because of his unprivileged status at other hospitals or because a private hospital

12 Although the city policy barred paying as well as non-paying abortion patients, Poelker dealt with the policy as it applied to the plaintiff, an indigent woman seeking a publicly-funded abortion. This Court confirmed this point when it said the issue was "identical in principle" to that decided the same day in the companion case of Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), which dealt with a state's refusal to provide Medicaid benefits for abortions. Poelker, 432 U.S. at 521.

13 Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 188.200 (1) and (2); J.S. at A90. This definition includes Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri, a hospital performing 97% of all post-fifteen week in-hospital abortions in Missouri. J.S. at A51 n.57; 662 F. Supp at 428 n.57.

> adopted a similar anti-abortion stance. Such a rule could increase the cost of obtaining an abortion and delay the timing of it as well.[14]

J.S. at A75-76; 851 F.2d at 1081 (emphasis added). Cf. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 193-95 (1973); City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. at 433-39 (prohibiting abortions from being performed in non-hospital facilities limits their availability).

There is a clear line between the right of a state, as recognized in Maher, Poelker, and McRae, to restrict funds from being used to finance abortions, and the right of a woman to be free of state-imposed obstacles on access to an abortion in a facility falling within the Act's broad definition of "public." By upholding the Act's public funds restriction while striking down the Act's public facilities and public employees restrictions, the Court of Appeals adhered firmly to that line.

This Court has already twice denied review of this issue in a series of cases arising out of the Eighth Circuit. Nyberg v. City of Virginia, Minnesota, 495 F.2d 1342 (8th Cir.), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 891 (1974); motion to vacate injunction denied, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983). The second series of Nyberg decisions arose out of an attempt by the Nyberg defendant to vacate, in light of Poelker, an injunction against its policy of barring abortions in a city hospital. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to lift that injunction on the same basis that it had invalidated the Missouri Act. Nyberg, 667 F.2d 754. This Court considered that issue unworthy of review then, 462 U.S. 1125, and nothing has changed to render it worthy of review now. The judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

14 The State does not dispute this conclusion.

V. NO CASE OR CONTROVERSY REMAINS BETWEEN THE PLAINTIFFS AND THE STATE WITH RESPECT TO MO. REV. STAT. § 188.205, WHICH MAKES IT UNLAWFUL FOR PUBLIC FUNDS TO BE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION; IF A CASE OR CONTROVERSY DOES EXIST, THEN THE COURT OF APPEALS' JUDGMENT SHOULD BE SUMMARILY AFFIRMED.

The Act contains restrictions on counseling or encouraging a woman to have an abortion that apply to public funds (§ 188.205), public employees (§ 188.210), and public facilities (§ 188.215). Plaintiffs, who include three physicians who fit the Act's definition of "public employees" and who practice also as private physicians in "public facilities," challenged all three restrictions as violating their rights as well as their patients' rights. All three restrictions were considered and invalidated together by the lower courts. See, e.g., J.S. at A66-73; 851 F.2d at 1077-80.

The State has not appealed the Court of Appeals' judgment that the public employees and public facilities restrictions are unconstitutional. It has appealed only the public funds restriction, and argues that "§ 188.205 does not implicate the First Amendment rights of any person. Section 188.205 merely directs officials not to expend public funds under their control . . . . The statute . . . does not forbid anyone from discussing the subject of abortion." J.S. at 24-25.

Therefore, the public employees and public facilities rulings of the Court of Appeals—rulings the State has not appealed—protect the plaintiffs and their patients. While plaintiffs are not prepared to agree that the public funds restriction "does not implicate the First Amendment rights of any person," id., plaintiffs are not aware of any circumstance where the restriction will raise either First or Fourteenth Amendment concerns which are not already settled by the Court of Appeals' public employees and public facilities rulings. Therefore, on the record in this case, there is no longer a case or controversy between plaintiffs and the State.[15] Accordingly, plaintiffs suggest that this Court vacate the judgment of the Court of Appeals as to the unconstitutionality of the public funds restriction on counseling or encouraging, and remand that issue for further proceedings in light of the State's decision not to defend further the public employees and public facilities restrictions on counseling and encouraging, and in light of plaintiffs' suggestion that a case or controversy no longer exists.

Should this Court believe that a case or controversy nonetheless exists, then the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be summarily affirmed because a restriction on counseling or encouraging is a classically vague and viewpoint discriminatory restriction on speech in violation of the First Amendment, and also violates the repeatedly recognized Fourteenth Amendment right of a woman to choose abortion in consultation with her physician.

Vagueness. The State does not dispute the Court of Appeals' finding that the "encouraging or counseling" ban, read literally, fails to give fair notice of what speech relating to abortion will or will not fall within the zone of proscribed conduct.[16] As 15 The Solicitor General urges plenary review of this appeal because of what he believes are its implications for two federal programs where there are restrictions on counseling for or performance of abortions. His concerns are unfounded. There is no longer a case or controversy about counseling restrictions tied to public funds; and the Court of Appeals upheld the public funds restriction on performance of abortions. See supra note 5. See also Section IV, supra p. 9.

---

16 The State argues that the Court of Appeals should have accepted its interpretation of the Act as reaching only "affirmative advocacy." This suggestion, however, ignores the basic principle that it is not the function of the federal courts to adopt narrowing constructions of state laws unless they are reasonable and readily apparent from the language itself, see Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 110 (1972), or, are "authoritative" narrowing constructions rendered by state courts or enforcement agencies. See Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 355 (1983). The Court of Appeals found that the State's narrowing construction was not readily apparent, see J.S. at A68-69 and the Court of Appeals said about the word "counsel," it is "fraught with ambiguity; its range is incapable of objective measurement."

> In such circumstances, the threat to the exercise of constitutionally protected rights is tangible; possible targets of the statute are chilled into avoiding even speech that is normally afforded the utmost protection under the Constitution.

J.S. at A68; 851 F.2d at 1078.[17] See also Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 366-67 (1964).

Viewpoint Discrimination. Judge Arnold, concurring in the result reached by the other two members of the Court of Appeals panel, said that the Act, in banning speech which encourages or counsels a woman to have an abortion, while providing no bar to speech which discourages abortion or counsels against it, "sharply discriminate[s] between kinds of speech on the basis of their viewpoint," and is therefore "flatly inconsistent with the First Amendment." J.S. at A83; 851 F.2d at 1085.

As this Court said in City Council of the City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984), the prohibition on viewpoint discrimination is absolute:

---

n.10; 851 F.2d at 1078-79 and n.10, and the Attorney General's self-serving statement made in the context of this litigation is not an "authoritative" construction: it does not bind a state court or an agency which hears actions to enforce the statute.

17 The Court of Appeals cited evidence on the record that the Director of a facility whose activities would be immediately affected has already directed his staff not to make " 'any. . . comment relative to abortion.' " J.S. at A69 n.11; 851 F.2d at 1078 n.11. In addition, it cited testimony the District Court heard from a physician who is the director of the perinatology service at Truman Medical Center, and specializes in counseling women with high risk pregnancies, that the statutory language would leave him uncertain how to distinguish between lawful and unlawful discussions with women about abortions necessary to preserve their health. J.S. at A71 n.12; 851 F.2d at 1079-80 n.12, citing 662 F. Supp. at 425-26.

> It has been clear since this Court's earliest decisions concerning the freedom of speech that the state may sometimes curtail speech when necessary to advance a significant and legitimate state interest . . . . [T]here are some purported interests—such as a desire to suppress support for a minority party or an unpopular cause, or to exclude the expression of certain points of view from the marketplace of ideas—that are so plainly illegitimate that they would immediately invalidate the rule. The general principle that has emerged from this line of cases is that the First Amendment forbids the government to regulate speech in ways that favor some viewpoints or ideas at the expense of others.

Id. at 804 (citations omitted).

The fact that the viewpoint discrimination involves only the use of public funds creates no exception to this absolute ban. Thus, in FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364, 383-84 (1984), when this Court struck down a ban on editorializing by publicly-funded radio stations on the basis that it was a "regulation of speech . . . motivated by nothing more than a desire to curtail expression of a particular point of view," even the dissent noted:

> This is not to say that the Government may attach any condition to its largess; it is only to say that when the Government is simply exercising its power to allocate its own public funds, we need only find that the condition imposed has a rational relationship to Congress' purpose in providing the subsidy and that it is not primarily 'aimed at the suppression of dangerous ideas.'

Id. at 407 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

Fourteenth Amendment Violation. This Court has " 'stressed repeatedly the central role of the physician . . . in consulting with the woman about whether or not to have an abortion.' " City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 447 (quoting Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 387). As the Court of Appeals recognized, the restriction on counseling or encouraging is "an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth." J.S. at A72; 851 F.2d at 1080. It is a textbook example of the "state medicine" condemned in Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 763, and thus violates the Fourteenth Amendment.

VI. ROE V. WADE SHOULD NOT BE RECONSIDERED

The State asserts that this appeal presents the question of whether Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), should be reconsidered. J.S. at 11. The State offers little support for requesting this extraordinary relief other than its subsequent assertion that if the provisions of the Act involved in this appeal "are unconstitutional under Roe v. Wade and its progeny as the Court below maintains, . . . Roe v. Wade should itself be reconsidered." J.S. at 11. The Solicitor General's brief amicus curiae also wistfully opines that, "if the Court is prepared to reconsider Roe v. Wade, this case presents an appropriate opportunity for doing so." Brief For The United States As Amicus Curiae at 12.[18]

In City of Akron, this Court was also presented with arguments that Roe "erred in interpreting the Constitution." 462 U.S. at 419. This Court rejected those arguments, and "reaffirm[ed] Roe v. Wade." Akron, 462 U.S. at 420. In doing so, the Court enumerated the "especially compelling reasons for adhering to stare decisis in applying the principles of Roe v. Wade," as follows:

> That case was considered with special care. It was first argued during the 1971 Term, and reargued—with extensive briefing—the following Term. The decision was joined by the Chief Justice and six other Justices. Since Roe was decided in January 1973, the Court repeatedly and consistently has accepted and applied the basic principle that a woman has a fundamental right to make the highly personal choice whether or not to terminate her pregnancy. See Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975); Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976); Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S 438 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981).

462 U.S. at 420 n.1.

Again, in Thornburgh, the Solicitor General, among others, urged this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade. But the Thornburgh Court held: "[a]gain today, we reaffirm the general principles laid down in Roe and in Akron." 476 U.S. at 759. In doing do, this Court noted that "[t]he constitutional principles that led this Court to its decisions in 1973 still provide the compelling reason for recognizing the constitutional dimensions of a woman's right to decide whether to end her pregnancy." Id.

Neither the State nor the Solicitor General has offered anything new or different to justify reconsidering what this Court "considered with special care" in 1973, and has explicitly reaffirmed many times since then. Moreover, as outlined above, the issues raised by the State on this appeal hardly call into question the settled constitutional underpinnings of the decision below. " '[I]t should go without saying that the vitality of these constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them.' " Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 759 (quoting Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S 294, 300 (1955) (citations omitted)).

The larger implications of the State's and amicus curiae's suggestions should not be overlooked. Turning back the clock fifteen years to a time when the States were free to criminalize abortion would reinstitute the untold misery and deaths of thousands of women from illegal operations and reverse startling improvements which the legalization of abortion has made in both maternal and infant mortality and morbidity. Legal, safe abortion is a choice now exercised by one of every four pregnant women in the United States, including half a million teenagers, women seeking to break the cycle of poverty through control of their own reproduction and family size, victims of rape, incest, AIDS, and drug abuse, and women whose fetuses are afflicted with serious genetic and congenital disorders. These benefits to human health and welfare have generated support for the principles of Roe v. Wade from national medical and public health organizations. Courts in other countries have cited Roe v. Wade when lifting restrictive laws within their own jurisdictions. See, e.g., Morgentaler v. Her Majesty The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R.4th 385 (Canada S. Ct. 1988). The State and the Solicitor General have offered no excuse or justification for such an upheaval of settled legal principles. Their suggestion should be rejected.

---

18 With his brief amicus curiae, the Solicitor General submitted a copy of his previous amicus brief, filed in Thornburgh, 476 U.S. 747, setting forth his views on this issue. Plaintiffs call to the Court's attention that these views were directly answered in a brief amici curiae filed in Thornburgh by eighty-one members of Congress. The views of the Solicitor General, expressed in his Thornburgh brief, should only be considered here if, at the same time, the answering views are also considered.

More significant, of course, is the fact, as pointed out above, that this Court has rejected the Solicitor General's views. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 759.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed with respect to Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 1.205.1 (1) and (2), 188.029 and those portions of §§ 188.210 and 188.215 which forbid the performance of abortion by public employees in public facilities. Alternatively, this case should be remanded as to §§ 1.205.1 (1) and (2) for consideration of state law grounds to support the judgment. The judgment with respect to § 188.205, in so far as it relates to the expenditure of public funds to encourage or counsel abortion, should be remanded for further proceedings in light of plaintiffs' suggestion of the absence of a case or controversy, or alternatively, affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BARBARA E. OTTEN
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

FRANK SUSMAN, P.C.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Shifrin
7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th fl.
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern Missouri
(314) 725-7300

Attorneys for Appellees

December 12, 1988 *Counsel of Record

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

(3)

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
NOV 10 1988
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

CHARLES FRIED
Solicitor General
DONALD B. AYER
Deputy Solicitor General
MICHAEL K. KELLOGG
Assistant to the Solicitor General
Department of Justice
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 633-2217

15 pp

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Interest of the United States	1
Statement	2
Discussion	5
Conclusion	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Bowen v. Kendrick, No. 87-253 (June 29, 1988)	11
Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973)	6-7
CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973)	7
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	4
Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489 (1982)	6
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	4, 7, 8, 9
Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 139 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.)	10
Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983)	4
Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), after remand, 789 F.2d 1348, aff'd, 479 U.S. 925 (1986)	8
Planned Parenthood Federation v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.)	10
Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977)	9
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	3, 11, 12
New York v. Bowen, No. 88-701 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-6204 (2d Cir.)	10

Constitution, statutes and regulation:

U.S. Const. Amend. 1 (Establishment Clause)	11
Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981, Tit. XX, 42 U.S.C. 300z et seq.	10
42 U.S.C. 300z-10(a)	1, 11

Statutes and regulation:	Page
Public Health Services Act of 1970, Tit. X, 42 U.S.C. 300z et seq.	10
§ 1008, 42 U.S.C. 300a-6	1, 10
Pub. L. No. 100-352, § 2(a), 102 Stat. 662	6
§ 7, 102 Stat. 664	6
28 U.S.C. 1254(2)	6
Mo. Stat. Ann. § 1.205.1-2 (Vernon 1969 & Supp. 1988)	2
Mo. Stat. Ann. (Vernon 1983 & Supp. 1988):
§ 188.029	2
§ 188.205	1, 2, 3, 5, 7
§ 188.210	1, 2, 4, 6
§ 188.215	1, 2, 3, 4, 6
§ 188.220	3, 6
53 Fed. Reg. 2945 (1988) (to be codified in 42 C.F.R. 59.8(a)(1))	1, 10
Miscellaneous:
53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (1988)	10

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The court of appeals in this case struck down provisions of a Missouri statute that forbid, inter alia, the expenditure of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" (Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.205) and the use of public employees and public facilities "for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother" (§§ 188.210, 188.215). The United States has placed similar restrictions on the use of public funds and certain publicly-funded programs. See, e.g., The Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. 300z-10(a); Title X of the Public Health Services Act of 1970, 42 U.S.C. 300a-6; 53 Fed. Reg. 2945 (1988) (to be codified in 42 C.F.R. 59.8(a)(1)). The United States therefore has a direct and substantial interest in the disposition of this case.

STATEMENT

In 1986, the State of Missouri passed a statute regulating abortions. The first section of the statute contains a general "finding" by the state legislature that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and a requirement that all state laws be interpreted to provide unborn children with all the rights of other persons "subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court" (Mo. Stat. Ann. § 1.205.1-2). Among its various other provisions, the statute requires that, prior to performing an abortion on any woman whom a doctor has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant, the doctor must determine whether the fetus is viable by performing "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child" (§ 188.029). The statute also provides that no public funds, employees or facilities are to be used for the purpose of "performing or assisting" an abortion or for "encouraging or counseling" a woman to have an abortion (§§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215).

Five publicly-employed doctors and nurses and two nonprofit corporations brought a class action challenging the constitutionality of these and other provisions of the Missouri statute. The district court struck down the provisions (J.S. App. A1-A55) and the court of appeals affirmed (id. at A56-A84). The court of appeals concluded (id. at A59-A60) that the requirement that doctors perform viability tests is an unconstitutional legislative intrusion on a matter of medical skill and judgment. The court also struck down (id. at A64) Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception on the grounds that "the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." The court of appeals rejected (ibid.) Missouri's reliance on the declaration's caveat requiring compatibility with the Constitution and Supreme Court precedent on the grounds that a mere recitation of the Supremacy Clause "cannot * * * validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the constitution." [1]

The court of appeals struck down Missouri's ban on the use of public funds for "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" (Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.205) as both void for vagueness and as violating the right to abortion guaranteed by Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).[2] "[T]he statute is vague," the court stated (J.S. App. A68), "because the word 'counsel' is fraught with ambiguity; its range is incapable of objective measurement." Furthermore, the court held (id. at A70), the prohibition "is an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." The court rejected as "completely inapt" (id. at A72) the analogy drawn by the State of Missouri between its ban on the use of public funds to encourage or counsel abortions and the bans on the use of public funds to perform or assist abortions upheld in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), and Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). "Missouri," the court contended (J.S. App. A72), "is not simply declining to fund abortions when it forbids its doctors to encourage or counsel women to have abortions. Instead, it is erecting an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth."

---

[1] Judge Arnold dissented (J.A. App. A83-A84) from this aspect of the decision below, contending that Missouri's declaration of when life begins should be upheld "insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion," such as "creating causes of action against persons other than the mother" for wrongful death or bringing fetuses within the protection of the criminal law.

[2] The court of appeals also struck down the related provisions forbidding any public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life and forbidding the use of any public facilities for that purpose. See Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 188.215, 188.220. The State of Missouri has not appealed from those aspects of the judgment below.

The court of appeals also struck down Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees acting within the scope of their employment "to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother." Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 188.210, 188.215. The court distinguished this Court's cases holding that the government need not provide funding for elective abortions on the grounds that " '[t]here is a fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital.' " J.S. App. A75 (quoting Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754, 758 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983)). The court noted (J.S. App. A79) that all of the public facilities' costs in providing abortion services, including the costs of employees' services, are recouped when the patient pays. Hence, the court stated (id. at A75), the question at issue is not whether the state is required to fund abortions but whether "the state creates an undue burden or obstacle to the free exercise of the right to choose an abortion" when it prohibits the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist abortions.

With respect to the ban on the use of public facilities, the court stated (J.S. App. A76) that "such a prohibition could prevent a woman's chosen doctor from performing an abortion because of his unprivileged status at other hospitals or because a private hospital adopted a similar anti-abortion stance. Such a rule could increase the cost of obtaining an abortion and delay the timing of it as well." With respect to the ban on using public employees to perform or assist abortions within the scope of their employment, the court stated (id. at A79) that "the state is declaring that even women who can afford abortions cannot obtain them through the assistance of public employees, for no other expressed reason than the state's desire to discourage abortions. This obstacle to exercise of the right to choose abortion cannot stand absent a compelling state interest; Missouri's desire to discourage abortions is not sufficient justification." Accordingly, the court struck down both prohibitions.

DISCUSSION

The State of Missouri appeals from a final judgment of the court of appeals striking down several sections of a Missouri statute, including provisions that forbid the expenditure of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" (Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.205) and the use of public employees and public facilities "for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother" (§§ 188.210, 188.215).[3] Since the court of appeals issued a final judgment holding these portions of the Missouri statute "to be invalid as repugnant to the Constitution * * * of the United States" (28 U.S.C. 1254(2)), this case properly falls within the Court's appellate jurisdiction.[4] The federal questions presented by this case are substantial and should not be resolved by the Court without plenary consideration. Accordingly, probable jurisdiction should be noted.

1. Missouri's prohibition on the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life is not unconstitutionally vague. This Court has stressed that civil statutes are not to be held to the same standards of precision as criminal statutes, Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 498-499 (1982), and Missouri's prohibition on the use of public funds does not impose any criminal penalties and can only be enforced by injunctive action. See J.S. 3; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 188.220. Furthermore, the statute is "not so vague that 'men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning.' " Broadrick v.

---

[3] The United States does not have statutes or regulations implicated by the issues raised in Questions One, Two, or Three of the Questions Presented by the State of Missouri in its Jurisdictional Statement. We do not address those issues at this time.

[4] Although Section 1254(2) was repealed by Pub. L. No. 100-352, § 2(a), 102 Stat. 662, which was signed by the President on June 27, 1988, the repeal did not take effect until September 25, 1988 (§ 7, 102 Stat. 664), and does "not * * * affect the right to review or the manner of reviewing the judgment or decree of a court which was entered before such effective date" (ibid.). The judgment of the court of appeals in this case was entered on July 13, 1988 (see J.S. App. A56).

Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 607 (1973) (citation omitted). As the State of Missouri explains (J.S. 25), the statute "does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy." Rather, the statute only forbids the use of public funds for "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion" (Mo. Stat. Ann. § 188.205 (emphasis added)). In other words, the statute prohibits the use of public funds for advising a particular woman that she should have an abortion not necessary to save her life. "[A]lthough [that prohibition] may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, [it is] set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with." CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 579 (1973).

The court of appeals was also mistaken in holding that the Missouri statute violates the right of pregnant women to have an abortion. Missouri has merely declined to encourage abortions in any respect, and this Court has already held that the states are not precluded from making "a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and * * * implement[ing] that judgment by the allocation of public funds." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474. The court of appeals stated (J.S. App. A72) that Missouri is impermissibly "erecting an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth." The State, however, has simply chosen itself not to advise women to have abortions not necessary to save their lives. Women are still free to make a contrary choice and to seek out medical advice consonant with their decision. But the State will not, and need not, pay for that advice. "There is a basic difference," this Court has noted (Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 475), "between direct state interference with a protected activity and state encouragement of an alternative activity consonant with legislative policy."

The decision below conflicts in these respects with the decision of the Ninth Circuit in Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348, aff'd, 479 U.S. 925 (1986). At issue in that case was an Arizona statute providing that "[n]o state money may be spent * * * by contract, grant or otherwise, on abortions, abortion procedures, counseling for abortion procedures or abortion referrals" (718 F.2d at 941 n.1).[5] The Ninth Circuit held (id. at 946-949) that the prohibition on the use of state funds for "counseling for abortion procedures" was not unconstitutionally vague. The court further held (id. at 944) that, although "the State of Arizona may not unreasonably interfere with the right of Planned Parenthood to engage in abortion or abortion-related speech activities, * * * the State need not support, monetarily or otherwise, those activities." In light of this conflict and the considerations noted above, Question Four of the State of Missouri's Jurisdictional Statement presents a substantial federal question.

[5] Another provision in the same statute had the effect of precluding an entire organization from receiving state funds if even one of its programs provided abortion-related services through the use of non-governmental funds (718 F.2d at 941 n.1). Following a remand for further factfinding, the Ninth Circuit struck down this provision as an unconstitutional penalty on protected activity. 789 F.2d 1348 (1983). This Court summarily affirmed, although three Justices would have noted probable jurisdiction and set the case for oral argument. 479 U.S. 925 (1986). No provision similar to the second provision in the Arizona statute is at issue in this case.

2. The court of appeals' conclusion (J.S. App. A79) that Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist abortions must be supported by a "compelling state interest" runs directly counter to this Court's statement that it is "abundantly clear that a State is not required to show a compelling interest for its policy choice to favor normal childbirth" (Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 477). In essence, the court of appeals has held that the Constitution compels Missouri to go into the abortion business provided only that Missouri can break even or turn a profit in doing so. This Court has stressed (id. at 474), however, that a woman's "freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy * * * implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds." The same principle applies when the State chooses to implement its value judgment by the allocation of public facilities and the services of public employees. Thus, in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519, 521 (1977) (per curiam), the Court upheld a city's prohibition on the performance of abortions in city hospitals noting that "the constitutional question presented here is identical in principle with that presented by a State's refusal to provide Medicaid benefits for abortions while providing them for childbirth." [6] In light of this conflict with Poelker v. Doe, Questions Five and Six of the State of Missouri's Jurisdictional Statement also present substantial federal questions.

[6] The suit in Poelker v. Doe was filed by an indigent who could not afford to pay for her abortion. The prohibition at issue in that case, however, applied whether or not the pregnant women was able to pay. 432 U.S. at 520; id. at 524 (Brennan, J., dissenting).

3. Title X of the Public Health Services Act of 1970, 42 U.S.C. 300 et seq., authorizes the federal government to make grants to public and private nonprofit entities to establish and operate family planning projects. Section 1008 of the Act expressly states that "[n]one of the funds appropriated under this [title] shall be used in programs where abortion is a method of family planning" (42 U.S.C. 300a-6). In 1988, the Department of Health and Human Services passed regulations setting standards for compliance by family planning programs with Section 1008. See 53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (1988). Under these regulations, both "counseling concerning the use of abortion as a method of family planning" and "referral for abortion as a method of family planning" are forbidden. 53 Fed. Reg. 2945 (1988) (to be codified in 42 C.F.R. 59.8(a)(1)).[7]

The Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981 (AFLA), 42 U.S.C. 300z et seq., authorizes federal funds to support demonstration projects designed to discourage adolescent pregnancy and to provide care for pregnant adolescents. The AFLA restricts the awarding of grants to "programs or projects which do not provide abortions or abortion counseling or referral" (42 U.S.C. 300z-10(a)).[8] Both programs, thus, forbid any award of funds to programs that perform or counsel abortions. Title X and AFLA programs accepting federal funds may not perform or counsel abortions even if those services are fully paid for by the client or by nonfederal funds obtained from other sources.[9] A summary affirmance of this case, or a dismissal of the State's appeal for want of a substantial federal question, would thus cast doubt on the constitutionality of both the Adolescent Family Life Act and Title X and its implementing regulations. These federal programs should not be so impaired without full consideration by this Court of the underlying constitutional issues.

[7] The constitutionality of the Title X regulations is currently before three courts of appeals. The regulations have been permanently enjoined by two district courts. Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.); Planned Parenthood Federation v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.). They have been upheld by one district court. New York v. Bowen, No. 88-701 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-6204 (2d Cir.).

4. Question Seven of the State of Missouri's Jurisdictional Statement asks this Court to reconsider, and upon reconsideration to overrule, its decision in Roe v. Wade, supra. The United States has stated its views on this issue in our brief as Amicus Curiae in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Nos. 84-495 and 84-1379.[10] We note that this case is free of procedural defects and implicates a number of the legislative choices

[8] The constitutionality of the funding provisions of the Adolescent Family Life Act was recently upheld against a facial attack under the Establishment Clause in Bowen v. Kendrick, No. 87-253 (June 29, 1988).

[9] These restrictions, however, apply only within the Title X or AFLA program itself. They do not apply to separate programs that may be related to the Title X and AFLA programs through a parent organization. Compare n.5, supra.

[10] We attach a copy of our brief in Thornburgh for the convenience of the Court and the parties.

foreclosed by Roe v. Wade. Accordingly, if the Court is prepared to reconsider Roe v. Wade, this case presents an appropriate opportunity for doing so.

CONCLUSION

Probable jurisdiction should be noted.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES FRIED
Solicitor General
DONALD B. AYER
Deputy Solicitor General
MICHAEL K. KELLOGG
Assistant to the Solicitor General

NOVEMBER 1988

☆ U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1988—241-699/60750

SUPPLEMENTAL

BRIEF

(4)

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 29 1988
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

—vs.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

SUPPLEMENT TO MOTION TO AFFIRM

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BARBARA E. OTTEN
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

FRANK SUSMAN, P.C.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Shifrin
7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern Missouri
(314) 725-7300

Attorneys for Appellees

*Counsel of Record

3pp

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT

In order for this Court to be fully informed in its conferencing of this appeal, appellees note an appeal to this Court from a final judgment of the Sixth Circuit striking down another state statute which burdened access to abortion services. State of Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, et al. (No. 88-805) appeals a holding that an Ohio statute requiring notification to parents of minors' abortions is unconstitutional. The Jurisdictional Statement was filed on or about November 14, 1988, and a responding motion is due January 13, 1989. Some of the attorneys in the instant case are counsel for appellees in Akron Center.

Additionally, appellees note that in Hodgson v. Minnesota, 853 F.2d 1452 (8th Cir. 1988), a case in which the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld in part and invalidated in part a Minnesota statute also requiring parental notification, the parties have been granted until January 5, 1989 to petition for certiorari or appeal. Although another case involving restrictions on access to abortion, Turnock v. Ragsdale (No. 88-790), is also on appeal to this Court (responding motion due January 14, 1989), it involves only a preliminary injunction by the Circuit Court and would appear to be inappropriate for review at this time.

Respectfully submitted,

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BARBARA E. OTTEN
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

FRANK SUSMAN, P.C.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel
& Shifrin
7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th fl.
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern Missouri
(314) 725-7300
Attorneys for Appellees

December 29, 1988 *Counsel of Record

JOINT

APPENDIX

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

JOINT APPENDIX

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BETH OTTEN
Planned Parenthood
Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, N. Y. 10019
(212) 541-7800
Attorneys for Appellees

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT*
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-3321
Attorneys for Appellants

*Counsel of Record

Jurisdictional Statement filed October 11, 1988.
Probable Jurisdiction noted January 9, 1989.

E. L. MENDENHALL, INC., 926 Cherry Street, Kansas City, Mo. 64106, (816) 421-3030

85 pp

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Relevant District Court Docket Entries A1

Relevant Court of Appeals Docket Entries A6

Note on Prior Opinions A7

District Court Filings:

Class Action Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Injunctive Relief A8

Answer A35

Motion for Leave to File First Amended Complaint by Interlineation A42

Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment A48

Stipulation of Facts A51

Motion in Limine A57

Defendants' List of Exhibits A60

Plaintiffs' List of Exhibits A74

Plaintiffs' Motion to Amend Judgment, Pursuant to F.R.C.P. No. 59(e) A80

Notice of Appeal A83

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

JOINT APPENDIX

RELEVANT DISTRICT COURT DOCKET ENTRIES

Date		Proceedings
7/14/86	1	COMPLAINT - with JS-44C Cover sheet filed.
7/14/86	4	MOTION - for class certification with suggestions by plts.
7/14/86	5	MOTION - for preliminary injunction with suggestions by plts.
7/31/86	8	TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER - dfts, their agents, employees, appointees & succesors are enjoined and restrained from applying, implementing, relying upon or enforcing or threatening same of 1.205.1(1), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2,3,&4 of MO Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No 1596.

Date		Proceedings
		TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER - all parties shall appear for trial on plts' request for declaratory judgment & for preliminary & permanent injunctions, on 11/5,6,7/86 at 9:a.m. at the U.S. Courthouse, K.C., MO.
		TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER - all pretrial briefs & proposed findings of fact & conclusions of law shall be filed with this court on or before 10/28/86 & the parties shall cooperate fully in providing each other with all requested discovery before that date.
		TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER - no bond shall be required of the plts.
		TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER - this order, by consent of the parties, shall remain in full force & effect until further order by this court.
8/4/86	9	ANSWER - to plt's complaint by dfts.
10/24/86	15	MOTION - for leave to file 1st amended complaint by interlineation by plts.
10/24/86	16	RENEWAL MOTION - for class certification with suggestions in support by plt.
11/7/86	18	MOTION - for summary judgment by plts with memorandum in support.

Date		Proceedings
11/26/86	22	RESPONSE - to plt's request for class certification by dfts.
11/26/86	23	RESPONSE - to plts' motion for summary judgment by dfts.
12/15/86	29	STIPULATION - of facts submitted by parties.
12/15/86	30	MOTION IN LIMINE - submitted by plts. GRANTED on last page by SOW.
12/15/86	33	NON-JURY TRIAL - non jury trial begins. Minute sheet filed.
12/16/86	34	NON-JURY TRIAL - held. Parties join for trial & plts continue to present evidence before the court.
12/17/86	35	NON-JURY TRIAL - held. parties join for trial & plts continue to present evidence before the court. Plts rest 11:04a.m. Dft will present its evidence starting 12/18/86. Court in recess until 9:30a.m. 12/18/86.
12/18/86	36	NON-JURY TRIAL - held. 4th day of trial. Findings of fact and conclusions of law to be filed jointly by parties by 1/19/87. Reply is due by 1/26/87.
12/18/86	37	LIST OF EXHIBITS - offered at trial by dfts.
12/18/86	38	LIST OF EXHIBTIS - offered at trial by plts.
3/17/87	48	ORDER - 'that the specific provisions of the 1986 Missouri Act relating to the regulation of abortions are declared to be unconstitutional.

Date		Proceedings
		ORDER - that dfts shall be permanently enjoined from enforcing the provisions declared to be unconstitutional. (Copies mailed).
3/25/87	49	MOTION - to amend judgment, pursuant to FRCP #59(e) by plts.
3/26/87	50	CLERK'S JUDGMENT - of the court entered & mailed.
4/13/87	51	MOTION - for attorneys' fees and costs with affidavits and suggestion in support by plts.
4/24/87	53	ORDER - that dfts are granted until 5/11/87 to file their resp to plt's mt for attys' fees and costs.
4/30/87	54	ORDER - the court amends its prior "Order" of 3/17/87, by the deletion in its entirety of foot note 32 on page 22.
5/15/87	56	NOTICE - of appeal of orders from 3/17/87, 3/26/87 & 4/30/87 by dfts.
6/1/87	62	REPLY - to dfts' suggs in resp and oppo to plts' mt for fees and cost by plts.
7/24/87	64	ORDER - that plts' attys shall be awarded fees and exp in the following amounts: Mr. Susman $40,022.50 for legal work and $1,262.50 for fee preparation - Total $41,-285.00; Mr. Blumentahl - $13,225.00; Mr. Evans - $19,500.00 for legal work, $125.00 for fee preparation and $2,662.50 for travel time - Total 22,287.50; Ms. Klassel - $32,-562.50 for legal work, $200.00 for fee preparation and $1,687.50 for travel time - Total $34,450.00; Ms. Otten - $9,202.50 for legal work.

Date		Proceedings
		ORDER - Expenses for Mr. Susman and Mr. Blumenthal - $5,956.17 No expenses shall be awarded to Mr. Evans, Ms. Klassel Ms. Otten until itemized documentation is provided to the court.
8/18/87	65	RESPONSE - to ord of 7/24/87 by Roger Evans.
8/20/87	66	NOTICE - of appeal of ord of 7/24/87 by dfts.

RELEVANT COURT OF APPEALS DOCKET ENTRIES

Date	Proceedings
1987
May 20	DOCKETED appeal
May 20	CERTIFIED copies of notice of appeal, docket entries and orders dated 3/17/87; 3/26/87; 4/30/87.
May 27	APPEARANCE for appellee.
June 1	APPEARANCE for appellant.
July 13	OPINION BY LAY PUBLISHED. DISSENT BY ARNOLD
July 13	JUDGMENT: The judgment of the dist ct is affirmed except for that portion of the judgment which held that section 188.205 of Missouri Annotated Statutes violates the eighth amendment. It is adjudged and decreed that Missouri's ban on the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting abortions is constitutional. The award of attorneys' fee is also affirmed and plaintiffs are awarded full costs on appeal.
Jul. 26	APPELLEES' MOTION for Attorneys fees and costs
Aug. 3	MANDATE ISSUED
Aug. 6	APPELLANTS' RESPONSE to appellees' motion for fees and costs. w/service
Aug. 17	ORDER: THE Court has considered appellees' motion for attorney fees and costs, and the response thereto. It is ordered that the total attorney fees for all attorneys of the appellees shall be awarded in the sum of $20,000.00. The expenses of counsel Evans, Kassel and Otten in the amount of $787.50 are also allowed, as are the expenses of counsel Susman and Blumenthal in the sum of $383.80. The Clerk of the District Court is requested to insert these amounts in the previously issued mandate.
Sept. 29	Notice of Appeal to Sup.Ct. of the U.S.by MO Atty.Gen.Webster and State of MO
Oct. 19	NOTICE OF FILING of pet. for writ of cert. to the Sup. Ct.of the U.S. as case No. 88-605, dated 10-11-88.
1989
Jan. 12	ORDER OF SUP. CT. OF US. NOTING probable jurisdiction.

NOTE ON PRIOR OPINIONS

The June 23, 1987, final judgment and opinion of the district court is reported at 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), superseding 655 F. Supp. 1300 (W.D. Mo. 1987), and is reproduced in the Jurisdictional Statement (No. 88-605) at A1 through A55.

The final judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit on July 13, 1988, is reported at 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) and is reproduced in the Jurisdictional Statement (No. 88-605) at A56 through A84.

(Filed July 14, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT
OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

Cause No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF GREATER KANSAS CITY, HOWARD I. SCHWARTZ, M.D., ROBERT L. BLAKE, JR., M.D., CARL C. PEARMAN, M.D., CARROLL METZGER, R.N.C., C.M.A., and MARY L. PEMBERTON, B.S.W., on behalf of themselves, other medical care providers similarly situated and their patients and clients, Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, Attorney General of the State of Missouri, and THE STATE OF MISSOURI,
Defendants.

CLASS ACTION COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

1. This is a civil action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983 for judgment declaring Missouri Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 1596 (hereafter the "Act"), which regulates the performance of abortion, assisting abortion and abortion counseling, both in the public and private sector, to be unconstitutional and for appropriate injunctive relief. The Act was enacted by the Missouri General Assembly on April 23, 1986, was signed by Governor Ashcroft on June 26, 1986, and is effective on August 13, 1986. A true copy of the Act is attached hereto and marked as "Exhibit A."

II JURISDICTION

2. Plaintiffs invoke the jurisdiction of this Court under the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution; under United States Code, Title 28, Chapter 85, Sections 1331 and 1343; under United States Code, Title 28, Chapter 151 (Declaratory Judgments), Sections 2201 and 2202; and under United States Code, Title 42, Chapter 21, Sections 1983 and 1988.

Plaintiffs challenge as unconstitutional and seek to enjoin the operation of §§1.205.1(1), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2, 3 and 4 of the Act.

4. Both Defendants are residents of and the claims herein arise within this federal judicial district and division.

II PARTIES

Plaintiffs

5. Plaintiff Reproductive Health Services (hereafter "RHS") is a Missouri not-for-profit, federal tax-exempt corporation with its principal office in St. Louis, Missouri. RHS offers to its patients a broad range of counseling, gynecological and family planning services, including the provision of contraceptive and abortion services. RHS provides abortion services up to 22 weeks

"gestational age" and is the largest abortion provider within the State of Missouri.

6. Plaintiff Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City (hereafter "PPKC") is a Missouri not-for-profit, federal tax-exempt corporation with its principal office in Kansas City, Missouri. PPKC offers to its patients a broad range of counseling, gynecological and family planning services, including the provision of contraceptive and abortion services. PPKC provides abortion services up to 14 weeks gestational age.

7. Howard I. Schwartz, M.D., is a resident of Jackson County, Missouri and a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri. Dr. Schwartz is a board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist and is primarily engaged in the practice of medicine within his county of residence. Dr. Schwartz is Clinical Assistant Professor, Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Missouri School of Medicine at Kansas City and is Medical Director of PPKC. As part of his medical practice, he performs abortions up to 12 weeks gestational age. Dr. Schwartz is employed part time as a "public employee" as that term is defined by §1(1) of the Act by Truman Medical Center, a teaching hospital of the University of Missouri Medical School at Kansas City, a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act. In said capacity, he is consulted by pregnant female patients whom he counsels about their options, including abortion. During said consultations and when medically indicated, he has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies and on occasion to perform or to assist in the performance of abortions, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions.

On said occasions, Dr. Schwartz is paid for such services by "public funds" as that term is defined by §1(3) of the Act. On occasion, Dr. Schwartz counsels about and performs abortions on private practice patients and public health patients within Truman Medical Center.

8. Robert L. Blake, Jr., M.D., is a resident of Boone County, Missouri and a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri. Dr. Blake is a Diplomate of the American Board of Family Practice, Associate Professor in the Departments of Family and Community Medicine at the University of Missouri Medical School and Graduate School at Columbia, and is an attending physician at the University of Missouri Hospital at Columbia. Dr. Blake is the author of numerous articles in the field of medicine. Dr. Blake is employed as a "public employee" as that term is defined by §1(1) of the Act by the University of Missouri Medical School a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act. In said capacity, he is consulted by pregnant female patients whom he counsels about their options, including abortion. During said consultations, he has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions. On said occasions, Dr. Blake is paid for such services by "public funds" as that term is defined by §1(3) of the Act.

9. Carl C. Pearman, M.D., is a resident of Boone County, Missouri and a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri. Dr. Pearman is a board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist and is Assistant Professor in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Missouri Medical School at Columbia. As part of his medical practice, he performs abortions up to 22 weeks gestational age. Dr. Pearman is affiliated with the University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia. Dr. Pearman is employed as a "public employee" as that term is defined by §1(1) of the Act by the University of Missouri Medical School, a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act. In said capacity, he is consulted by pregnant female patients whom he counsels about their options, including abortion. During said consultations, he has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies and on occasion to perform or to assist in the performance of abortions, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions. On said occasions, Dr. Pearman is paid for such services by "public funds" as that term is defined by §1(3) of the Act. On occasion, Dr. Pearman performs abortions on both private practice patients and public health patients within the University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia, a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act.

10. Carroll Metzger, R.N.C., C.M.A., is a resident of Jackson County, Missouri and a certified registered nurse and certified medical assistant licensed by and within the State of Missouri. Ms. Metzger is the Administrator of the outpatient clinic of Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri. Ms. Metzger is employed as a "public employee" as that term is defined by §1(1) of the Act by Truman Medical Center a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act. In said capacity, she is consulted by pregnant female patients whom she counsels about their options, including abortion. During said consultations, she has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions. On said occasions, Ms. Metzger is paid for such services by "public funds" as that term is defined by §1(3) of the Act.

11. Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W., is a resident of Johnson County, Kansas and a social worker. Ms. Pemberton is a health education/social worker in the teenage obstetrics program at Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri. Ms. Pemberton is the author of articles in the field of counseling/social work. Ms. Pemberton is employed as a "public employee" as that term is defined by §1(1) of the Act by Truman Medical Center a "public facility" as that term is defined by §1(2) of the Act. In said capacity, she is consulted by pregnant female patients whom she counsels about their options, including abortion. During said consultations, she has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions. On said occasions, Ms. Pemberton is paid for such services by "public funds" as that term is defined by §1(3) of the Act.

12. Plaintiffs RHS, PPKC, Dr. Schwartz, Dr. Blake, Dr. Pearman, Carroll Metzger and Mary L. Pemberton bring this cause of action on their own behalf and on behalf of the entire class consisting of facilities and Missouri licensed physicians or other health care professionals offering abortion services or pregnancy counseling and on behalf of the entire class of pregnant females seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling within the State of Missouri. Said classes of facilities, physicians, medical care providers and pregnant females are so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical. There exist substantial questions of law and fact common to the classes, and the claims of Plaintiffs are typical of the claims of the classes. Plaintiffs shall fairly and adequately represent the interests of the classes.

Defendants

13. Defendant William L. Webster is the Attorney General of the State of Missouri and as such is charged with the defense, implementation and administration of said Act throughout the State of Missouri.

14. The State of Missouri is one of the United States of America, and the Act is a statutory enactment of said Defendant.

15. Defendants' responsibilities, duties, acts and obligations in the enactment, defense, implementation and application of the Act are pursued and undertaken under color of state law.

III CAUSES OF ACTION

16. Named Plaintiffs and the medical provider class members are severely inhibited, restrained, deterred and precluded from offering medical and counseling services in their finest, wisest and most healthful manner by the present, actual and threatened enforcement, effect, application and impact of the Act.

17. The traditional and vital privacy of the doctor-patient relationship and the practice of medicine and surgery are gravely curtailed by and adversely impacted by the Act.

18. The Act severely inhibits, restrains, deters and precludes pregnant patient class members from the full exercise of their constitutional rights within the child-bearing realms of privacy and decision-making and deprives them of the benefit of the professional judgment of medical care providers, in light of the then attendant circumstances of an individual member of the pregnant patient class.

19. The Act on its face expressly violates the prior decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) and in Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) and their progeny, through Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, ... U.S. ..... (No. 84-495, June 11, 1986), 54 L.W. 4618.

20. Section 1.205.1(1) of the Act impermissibly attempts to establish that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," as the underpinning of the entire Act, contrary to City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 supra, 416, 444 (1983) and contrary to the First, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

21. Section 188.025 of the Act impermissibly requires abortions at "sixteen weeks of gestational age or later" to be performed in a hospital. This section is directly contrary to the holdings in City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 431-39 (1983) and Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Missouri, Inc. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 481-82 (1983). Defendants are bound by the principle of res judicata that "a non-hospitalized second trimester D&E procedure is just as safe as those second trimester D&E procedures conducted in hospitals." Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Missouri, Inc. v. Ashcroft, 664 F.2d 687, 690 (8th Cir. 1981), affirmed, 462 U.S. 476, 481-82 (1983).

22. Plaintiff RHS's present practice of offering and performing abortion services at and beyond 16 weeks gestational age for its patients outside the hospital setting is in the best health interests of its patients. Requiring such procedures to be performed in a hospital setting would significantly and adversely impact the availability of abortions by reason of increased anxiety through greater loss of anonymity and of privacy, increased cost burdens, increased risks of infection and exposure to more serious strains of infections, increased uses and risks of general anesthesia, and delays by reason of scheduling and extended time in the delivery of services. All of these factors raise the patient's anxiety, directly increasing the risks of morbidity and mortality to her. The vast majority of in-hospital second trimester abortions in Missouri are performed at Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri, and at the University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia, Missouri, both being "public facilities" as that term is defined in §1(2) of the Act. The combination of this section (§188.025) with the definition of §1(2) and the prohibition of §4 bars any further abortions at these institutions after 16 weeks gestational age.

23. Section 188.029 requiring medical tests to determine viability of fetuses "twenty or more weeks gestational age" is unconstitutional by reason of its increased cost burdens upon abortion, its increased health risks to the patient, its interference with the physician's choice of treatment, and its failure to promote maternal health or to preserve fetal life. This section violates the mandates of Coulatti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) and Thornburgh, supra.

24. Section 188.039 of the Act unconstitutionally intrudes into the doctor-patient relationship and substantially burdens a woman's right to an abortion by requiring that the patient offer proof to the doctor of her age and the doctor's certification of the same; that the patient execute a consent form supplied by the State Department of Health; and that the physician certify that according to his or her best medical judgment, the patient is or is not pregnant. The section does not permit the physician to use his or her best medical judgment to inform the patient that he or she is unable to form a medical judgment as to pregnancy. This type of requirement was previously declared unconstitutional in Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Missouri, Inc. v. Ashcroft, 483 F.Supp. 679, 697-98 (W.D.Mo. 1981), affirmed, 655 F.2d 848, 868-69 (8th Cir. 1981), and the principle of res judcata requires a finding of unconstitutionality as to §188.039.2(1) of the Act. The entire §188.039 is also unconstitutional by reason of its requirement that all consent provisions and information be conveyed by the physician to the patient, directly contrary to the holding in City of Akron, supra, 462 U.S. at 448-49, and Thornburgh, supra, 54 L.W. at 4621-23.

25. Sections 2, 3 and 4 of the Act are unconstitutional as creating situations of gross professional malpractice for "public employees" forbidden to advise properly their patients and clients. By eliminating abortion (which is a recognized medical alternative to an unwanted or medically undesirable pregnancy) from the full range of options available for discussion, encouragement, counseling, performance and assistance between a health care professional and his or her patient or client is to regulate unconstitutionally the practice of medicine and the rights of free speech and association and to interfere unconstitutionally with the privacy rights of pregnant women seeking abortions or seeking professional advice and assistance as to their pregnancies.

26. Section 4 of the Act is unconstitutional and substantially burdens a woman's right to abortion by interfering with her choice of physician and by interfering with her and her physician's choice of medical facility for treatment, while serving no compelling state interest. This section is expressly inconsistent with the decision in Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), and with the First, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

27. Sections 2, 3 and 4 of the Act prohibiting the use of public facilities, funds and employees in educational endeavors involving the teaching and/or discussion of abortion, have chilled and have resulted in violations of one or more Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights.

28. The Act denies to named Plaintiffs and members of the Plaintiff classes due process of law by depriving named Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff class members of life, liberty and property without the guarantees afforded under the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

29. The Act is unconstitutionally vague and uncertain on its face and is in violation of the specificity requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

30. The Act on its face deprives named Plaintiffs and Plaintiff class members of their rights to privacy in the physician-patient relationship, as protected by the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

31. The Act on its face deprives named Plaintiffs and medical provider class members of their rights to practice medicine according to the highest standards of medical practice, as guaranteed by the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

32. The Act on its face impacts upon and deprives pregnant patient class members of their fundamental right to determine whether to bear children, as protected by the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

33. The Act on its face infringes upon pregnant patient class members' right to life due to inherent risks involved in childbirth or alternative medical procedures, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

34. The Act on its face infringes upon named Plaintiffs' and medical provider class members' rights to give and pregnant patient class members' rights to receive safe, competent, complete and adequate medical advice and treatment pertaining to the decision of whether to carry a given pregnancy to term and the methods of pregnancy termination, in violation of the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

35. The Act on its face deprives named Plaintiffs, medical provider class members and pregnant patient class members, each in their own classification, of the equal protection of the laws, by treating similarly situated classes differently and discriminatorily, with no compelling justification for such classifications, all in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

36. The implementation of and obedience to the Act places named Plaintiffs and medical provider class members in the position of decision making beset with such inherent possibilities of bias and conflict of interest, as to deprive named Plaintiffs and all class members of due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

37. The failure of this Court to act will cause named Plaintiffs and all class members irreparable harm.

38. The named Plaintiffs and all class members have no adequate remedy at law.

IV RELIEF PRAYED

WHEREFORE, named Plaintiffs, for themselves and for all other members of the above described Plaintiff classes, pray this Court to:

39. Certify the Plaintiff classes set forth in above paragraph 12, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure No. 23.

40. Issue a preliminary injunction restraining Defendants, their agents, employees, appointees and successors from enforcing, implementing, applying, relying upon or threatening to enforce, to implement, to apply or to rely upon said Act.

41. Issue a declaratory judgment holding said Act to be in violation of the rights of named Plaintiffs, of medical provider class members and of pregnant patient class members, as protected by the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

42. Issue a permanent injunction restraining Defendants, their agents, employees, appointees and successors from enforcing, implementing, applying, relying upon or threatening to enforce, to implement, to apply or to rely upon said Act.

43. Grant such other and further relief as the Court may deem meet and proper under the circumstances, to award to Plaintiffs reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1988, and to tax all costs herein against Defendants.

Respectfully submitted,

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

/s/ (Illegible)
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300
ACLU/EM & WM

EXHIBIT A

SECOND REGULAR SESSION
[TRULY AGREED TO AND FINALLY PASSED] SENATE COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 1596
83RD GENERAL ASSEMBLY

AN ACT

To repeal sections 188.010, 188.040, 188.045, and 188.080, RSMo 1978, and sections 188.015, 188.025, 188.028, 188.039, 188.063, and 565.024, RSMo Supp. 1984, relating to unborn children and abortion, and to enact in lieu thereof twenty new sections relating to the same subject, with penalty provisions.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, as follows:

Section A. Sections 188.010, 188.040, 188.045, and and 188.080, RSMo 1978, and sections 188.015, 188.025, 188.028, 188.039, 188.063, and 565.024, RSMo Supp. 1984, are repealed and twenty new sections enacted in lieu thereof, to be known as sections 1.205, 188.010, 188.015, 188.025, 188.028, 188.029, 188.039, 188.080, 188.100, 188.105, 188.110, 188.115, 188.120, 188.130, 565.024, 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, to read as follows:

1.205. 1. The general assembly of this state finds that:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being;

(3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health, and well-being of their unborn child.

2. Effective January 1, 1988 the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every stage of biological development.

4. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

188.010. It is the intention of the general assembly of the state of Missouri to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes.

188.015. Unless the language or context clearly indicates a different meaning is intended, the following words or phrases for the purposes of sections

188.010 to 188.130 shall be given the meaning ascribed to them:

(1) "Abortion", the intentional destruction of the life of an embryo or fetus in his or her mother's womb or the intentional termination of the pregnancy of a mother with an intention other than to increase the probability of a live birth or to remove a dead or dying unborn child;

(2) "Abortion facility", a clinic, physician's office, or any other place or facility in which abortions are performed other than a hospital;

(3) "Conception", the fertilization of the ovum of a female by a sperm of a male;

(4) "Gestational age", length of pregnancy as measured from the first day of the woman's last menstrual period;

(5) "Physician", any person licensed to practice medicine in this state by the state board of registration of the healing arts;

(6) "Unborn child", the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth and at every stage of its biological development, including the human conceptus, zygote, morula, blastocyst, embryo, and fetus;

(7) "Viability", that stage of fetal development when the life of the unborn child may be continued indefinitely outside the womb by natural or artificial life-supportive systems.

188.025. Every abortion performed at sixteen weeks gestational age or later shall be performed in a hospital.

188.028. 1. No person shall knowingly perform an abortion upon a pregnant woman under the age of eighteen years unless:

(1) The attending physician has secured the informed written consent of the minor and one parent or guardian; or

(2) The minor is emancipated and the attending physician has received the informed written consent of the minor; or

(3) The minor has been granted the right to self-consent to the abortion by court order pursuant to subsection 2 of this section, and the attending physician has received the informed written consent of the minor; or

(4) The minor has been granted consent to the abortion by court order, and the court has given its informed written consent in accordance with subsection 2 of this section, and the minor is having the abortion willingly, in compliance with subsection 3 of this section.

2. The right of a minor to self-consent to an abortion under subdivision (3) of subsection 1 of this section or court consent under subdivision (4) of subsection 1 of this section may be granted by a court pursuant to the following procedures:

(1) The minor or next friend shall make an application to the juvenile court which shall assist the minor or next friend in preparing the petition and notices required pursuant to this section. The minor or the next friend of the minor shall thereafter file a petition setting forth the initials of the minor; the age of the minor; the names and addresses of each parent, guardian, or, if the minor's parents are deceased and no guardian has been appointed, any other person standing in loco parentis of the minor; that the minor has been fully informed of the risks and consequences of the abortion; that the minor is of sound mind and has sufficient intellectual capacity to consent to the abortion; that, if the court does not grant the minor majority rights for the purpose of consent to the abortion, the court should find that the abortion is in the best interest of the minor and give judicial consent to the abortion; that the court should appoint a guardian ad litem of the child; and if the minor does not have private counsel, that the court should appoint counsel. The petition shall be signed by the minor or the next friend;

(2) A hearing on the merits of the petition, to be held on the record, shall be held as soon as possible within five days of the filing of the petition. If any party is unable to afford counsel, the court shall appoint counsel at least twenty-four hours before the time of the hearing. At the hearing, the court shall hear evidence relating to the emotional development, maturity, intellect and understanding of the minor; the nature, possible consequences, and alternatives to the abortion; and any other evidence that the court may find useful in determining whether the minor should be granted majority rights for the purpose of consenting to the abortion or whether the the abortion is in the best interests of the minor;

(3) In the decree, the court shall for good cause:

(a) Grant the petition for majority rights for the purpose of consenting to the abortion; or

(b) Find the abortion to be in the best interests of the minor and give judicial consent to the abortion, setting forth the grounds for so finding; or

(c) Deny the petition, setting forth the grounds on which the petition is denied;

(4) If the petition is allowed, the informed consent of the minor, pursuant to a court grant of majority rights, or the judicial consent, shall bar an action by the parents or guardian of the minor on the grounds of battery of the minor by those performing the abortion. The immunity granted shall only extend to the performance of the abortion in accordance herewith and any necessary accompanying services which are performed in a competent manner. The costs of the action shall be borne by the parties;

(5) An appeal from an order issued under the provisions of this section may be taken to the court of appeals of this state by the minor or by a parent or guardian of the minor. The notice of intent to appeal shall be given within twenty-four hours from the date of issuance of the order. The record on appeal shall be completed and the appeal shall be perfected within five days from the filing of notice to appeal. Because time may be of the essence regarding the performance of the abortion, the supreme court of this state shall, by court rule, provide for expedited appellate review of cases appealed under this section.

3. If a minor desires an abortion, then she shall be orally informed of and, if possible, sign the written consent required by section 188.039 in the same manner as an adult person. No abortion shall be performed on any minor against her will, except that an abortion may be performed against the will of a minor pursuant to a court order described in subdivision (4) of subsection 1 of this section that the abortion is necessary to preserve the life of the minor.

188.029. Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions. In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

188.039. 1. No physician shall perform an abortion unless, prior to such abortion, the physician certifies in writing that the woman gave her informed consent, freely and without coercion, after the attending physician had informed her of the information contained in subsection 2 of this section and shall further certify in writing the pregnant woman's age, based upon proof of age offered by her.

2. In order to insure that the consent for an abortion is truly informed consent, no abortion shall be performed or induced upon a pregnant woman unless she has signed a consent form that shall be supplied by the state department of health, acknowledging that she has been informed by the attending physician of the following facts:

(1) That according to the best medical judgment of her attending physician whether she is or is not pregnant;

(2) The particular risks associated with the abortion technique to be used;

(3) Alternatives to abortion shall be given by the attending physician.

3. The physician may inform the women of any other material facts or opinions, or provide any explanation of the above information which, in the exercise of his best medical judgment, is reasonably necessary to allow the woman to give her informed consent to the proposed abortion, with full knowledge of its nature and consequences.

188.080. Notwithstanding any other penalty provision in this chapter, any person who is not a licensed physician as defined in section 188.015 who performs or attempts to perform an abortion on another as defined in subdivision (1) of section 188.015, is guilty of a class B felony, and, upon conviction, shall be punished as provided by law. Any physician performing an abortion who does not have surgical privileges at a hospital which offers obstetrical or gynecological care shall be guilty of a class B felony, and, upon conviction shall be punished as provided by law.

188.100. Unless the language or context clearly indicates a different meaning is intended, the following words or phrases for the purposes of sections 188.100 to 188.120 shall mean:

(1) "Employer", the state, or any political or civil subdivision thereof, or any person employing two or more persons within the state, and any person acting as an agent of the employer;

(2) "Participate in abortion", to perform, assist in, refer for, promote, procure, or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother; or to undergo an abortion;

(3) "Person" includes one or more individuals, partnerships, associations, organizations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, receivers, or other organized groups of persons.

188.105. 1. It shall be unlawful:

(1) For an employer:

(a) To fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his or her compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's refusal to participate in abortion;

(b) To limit, segregate, or classify his, her, or its employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his or her status as an employee, because of such individual's refusal to participate in abortion;

(c) To discharge, expel, or otherwise discriminate against any person because he or she has opposed any practices forbidden under sections 188.100 to 188.120 or because he or she has filed a complaint, testified, or assisted in any legal proceeding under sections 188.100 to 188.120;

(2) For any person, whether an employer or employee, or not, to aid, abet, incite, compel, or coerce the doing of any of the acts forbidden under sections 188.100 to 188.120, or to attempt to do so.

2. Notwithstanding any other provisions of sections 188.100 to 188.120, the acts proscribed in subsection 1 of this section shall not be unlawful if there can be demonstrated an inability to reasonably accommodate an individual's refusal to participate in abortion without undue hardship on the conduct of that particular business or enterprise, or in those certain instances where participation in abortion is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of that particular business or enterprise.

3. Nothing contained in sections 188.100 to 188.-120 shall be interpreted to require any employer to grant preferential treatment to any individual because of such individual's refusal to participate in abortion.

188.110. 1. No public or private college, university or hospital shall discriminate against any person for refusal to participate in abortion.

2. No applicant, student, teacher, or employee of any school shall be required to pay any fees that would in whole or in part fund an abortion for any other applicant, student, teacher, or employee of that school, if the individual required to pay the fee gives written notice to the proper school authorities that it would be in violation of his or her conscience or beliefs to pay for or fund abortions. The school may require the individual to pay that part of the fees not funding abortions, if the school makes reasonable precautions and gives reasonable assurance that the fees that are paid are segregated from any fund for the payment of abortions.

188.115. If any provision of sections 188.100 to 188.120 is found by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid or unconstitutional as applied to a specific person or class of persons, the provisions of sections 188.100 to 188.120 shall remain in full force and effect as to every other person or class of persons who is otherwise covered under these sections.

188.120. Any individual injured by any person, association, corporation, or entity by reason of any action prohibited by sections 188.100 to 188.120, as now or hereafter amended, may commence a civil cause of action against the person, association, corporation, or entity who caused the injury, and shall recover treble damages, including pain and suffering, sustained by such individual, the costs of the suit and reasonable attorney's fees.

188.130. 1. No person shall maintain a cause of action or receive an award of damages on behalf of himself or herself based on the claim that but for the negligent conduct of another, he or she would have been aborted.

2. No person shall maintain a cause of action or receive an award of damages based on the claim that but for the negligent conduct of another, a child would have been aborted.

565.024. 1. A person commits the crime of involuntary manslaughter if he:

(1) Recklessly causes the death of another person; or

(2) While in an intoxicated condition operates a motor vehicle in this state and, when so operating, acts with criminal negligence to cause the death of any person.

2. Involuntary manslaughter is a class C felony.

Section 1. As used in sections 1 to 5 of this act, the following terms mean:

(1) "Public employee", any person employed by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(2) "Public facility", any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivisions thereof;

(3) "Public funds", any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother, or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Section 3. It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Section 4. It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Section 5. Any taxpayer of this state or its political subdivisions shall have standing to bring suit in a circuit court of proper venue to enforce the provisions of sections 1 to 4 of this act.

(Filed August 4, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

v.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

ANSWER

Come now the defendants, by and through counsel, and for their answer to plaintiffs' class action complaint for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief state as follows:

First Defense

Plaintiffs fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted against defendant William L. Webster, Attorney General of the State of Missouri, because plaintiffs can allege no case or controversy against Attorney General William L. Webster.

Second Defense

Plaintiffs' action against the State of Missouri is barred by the Eleventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Third Defense

Plaintiffs fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Fourth Defense

1. Defendants admit that House Bill No. 1596 was enacted by the Missouri General Assembly on April 23, 1986, was signed by Governor Ashcroft on June 26, 1986, and becomes effective on August 13, 1986. Defendants further admit that Exhibit A is a true copy of the act. Defendants specifically deny that plaintiffs state a cause of action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983 and all other allegations contained in paragraph 1 of plaintiffs' complaint.

2. Defendants deny the allegations contained in paragraph 2 of plaintiffs' complaint.

3. Defendants acknowledge that plaintiffs are challenging the constitutionality of Sections 1.205.1(1), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2, 3, and 4 of the Act. Defendants specifically deny that said sections are unconstitutional.

4. Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 4 of plaintiffs' complaint.

5. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 5 of plaintiffs' complaint.

6. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 6 of plaintiffs' complaint.

7. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 7 of plaintiffs' complaint.

8. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 8 of plaintiffs' complaint.

9. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 9 of plaintiffs' complaint.

10. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 10 of plaintiffs' complaint.

11. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 11 of plaintiffs' complaint.

12. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the averment in paragraph 12 of plaintiffs' complaint.

13. Defendants deny the allegation contained in paragraph 13 of plaintiffs' complaint.

14. Defendants admit the allegation contained in paragraph 14 of plaintiffs' complaint.

15. Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 15 of plaintiffs' complaint.

16. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 16 of plaintiffs' complaint.

17. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 17 of plaintiffs' complaint.

18. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 18 of plaintiffs' complaint.

19. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 19 of plaintiffs' complaint.

20. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 20 of plaintiffs' complaint.

21. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 21 of plaintiffs' complaint.

22. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 22 of plaintiffs' complaint.

23. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 23 of plaintiffs' complaint.

24. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 24 of plaintiffs' complaint.

25. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 25 of plaintiffs' complaint.

26. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 26 of plaintiffs' complaint.

27. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 27 of plaintiffs' complaint.

28. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 28 of plaintiffs' complaint.

29. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 29 of plaintiffs' complaint.

30. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 30 of plaintiffs' complaint.

31. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 31 of plaintiffs' complaint.

32. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 32 of plaintiffs' complaint.

33. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 33 of plaintiffs' complaint.

34. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 34 of plaintiffs' complaint.

35. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 35 of plaintiffs' complaint.

36. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 36 of plaintiffs' complaint.

37. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 37 of plaintiffs' complaint.

38. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph 38 of plaintiffs' complaint.

39. Defendants deny each and every allegation of plaintiffs' complaint not specifically admitted herein.

Relief Requested

Wherefore, defendants respectfully request:

1. That the Court deny each and every portion of the relief prayed for in plaintiffs' complaint as contained in paragraphs 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43.

2. That the Court dissolve the restraining order and preliminary injunction entered herein and refuse to grant a permanent injunction against the enforcement and application of the challenged statutory provisions.

3. That the Court refuse to certify the class as requested by the plaintiffs.

4. That the defendants be discharged and that all costs in this matter be taxed against the plaintiffs.

Respectfully submitted,

William L. Webster
Attorney General
/s/ Michael L. Boicourt
Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General
/s/ Jerry L. Short
Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorney General
8th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782
Attorneys for Defendants

Certificate of Service

I hereby certify that a true and correct copy of the foregoing was mailed, postage prepaid, this 4th day of August, 1986, to:

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, N. Y. 10019

Frank Susman, P.C.
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel
& Parker
10th Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105

/s/ Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General

(Filed October 24, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT
OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT BY INTERLINEATION

Come now Plaintiffs and move this Honorable Court for leave to amend their Complaint by interlineation pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a). For this motion, Plaintiffs state:

1. The Plaintiffs filed their original Complaint on July 14, 1986, and Defendants filed their responsive pleading on August 5, 1986.

2. Plaintiffs wish to amend their Complaint by interlineation to correct typographical omissions in Paragraphs 3 and 20.

3. Plaintiffs' proposed amendments do not substantively change their cause of action nor materially prejudice the Defendants.

4. A copy of Plaintiffs' proposed First Amended Complaint by Interlineation is attached hereto and incorporated herein by reference.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray that this Honorable Court enter an Order granting Plaintiffs leave to file their First Amended Complaint by Interlineation and that the attached First Amended Complaint by Interlineation be accepted by the Court as the filing of that Amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ (Illegible)
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300
ACLU EM & WM

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America. Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that a copy of this instrument was on this 22nd day of October, 1986, personally delivered or mailed first class, postage prepaid, to all parties or counsel of record, as below reflected.

/s/ FS/fo

Mr. Michael L. Boicourt
Mr. Jerry L. Short

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

PLAINTIFFS' FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT BY INTERLINEATION

Come now Plaintiffs and amend their "Class Action Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Injunctive Relief," heretofore filed, amending the same as follows:

1. The second full paragraph on page 2 is deleted in its entirety, and the following is substituted in lieu thereof:

> 3. Plaintiffs challenge as unconstitutional and seek to enjoin the operation of §§1.205.1(1), 1.205.1(2), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, 2, 3, and 4 of the Act.

2. The deletion of paragraph 20 as the same presently appears on page 9 and substitution of the following in lieu thereof:

> 20. Section 1.205.1(1) of the Act impermissibly attempts to establish that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and §1.205.1(2) of the Act impermissibly attempts to establish that [u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being" as the underpinnings of the entire Act, contrary to City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 supra, 416, 444 (1983) and contrary to the First, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ (Illegible)
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300
ACLU/EM & WM

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that a copy of this instrument was on this 22nd day of October, 1986, personally delivered or mailed first class, postage prepaid, to all parties or counsel of record, as below reflected.

/s/ FS/fo

Mr. Michael L. Boicourt
Mr. Jerry L. Short

(Filed November 7, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT
OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

Cause No. C86-4478-CV-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF GREATER KANSAS CITY, HOWARD SCHWARTZ, M.D., ROBERT L. BLAKE, JR., M.D., CARL C. PEARMAN, M.D., CARROLL METZGER, R.N.C., C.M.A., and MARY L. PEMBERTON, B.S.W., on behalf of themselves, their patients, and all similarly situated individuals or entities, Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, Attorney General of the State of Missouri, and THE STATE OF MISSOURI,
Defendants.

PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiffs, pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, move this court to enter summary judgment on their behalf declaring House Bill No. 1596, sections 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, and sections 1 through 5, to be in violation of the First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution for the reasons set forth in the attached Memorandum of Law in support of this motion.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ (Illegible)
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300
ACLU of Eastern and
Western Missouri

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

October 31, 1986

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that a copy of this instrument was on this 5th day of November, 1986, personally delivered or mailed first class, postage prepaid, to all parties or counsel of record, as below reflected.

/s/ FS/fo

Michael L. Boicourt
Jerry L. Short

(Filed December 15, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

v.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

STIPULATION OF FACTS

The parties, in order to eliminate uncontested issues of fact from dispute at trial, hereby stipulate to the following facts:

1. Exhibit A, as attached to plaintiffs' original complaint, is a true and accurate copy of Missouri Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 1596, which was enacted by the Missouri General Assembly on April 23, 1986, and was signed into law by Missouri Governor Ashcroft on June 26, 1986. (The enactment will hereafter be referred to as "the Act.")

2. The Act (except as otherwise indicated below) by its terms became effective on August 13, 1986. By agreement of the parties, the Court, on July 31, 1986, entered a temporary restraining order enjoining enforcement and application of the provisions challenged in plaintiffs' complaint. Sections 1.205.1(1) (effective January

1, 1988), 188.025, 188.029, 188.039, and Sections 2, 3, and 4 of the Act. Plaintiffs amended their complaint on October 24, 1986, to include a challenge to § 1.205.1(2) (effective January 1, 1988).

3. Defendant William L. Webster is the Attorney General of the State of Missouri and in that capacity is undertaking the defense of the Act.

4. The State of Missouri is one of the United States of America and the Act is a statutory enactment of said State. For the sole purpose of defending the constitutionality of this Act, the State of Missouri agrees to waive its Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit in federal court in this declaratory action. Eleventh Amendment immunity is not waived for any other legal action or proceeding.

5. The defendants' responsibilities, duties, acts, and obligations in the enactment, defense, implementation and application of the Act are pursued and undertaken under color of state law.

6. Both defendants are residents of the district encompassed by the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division.

7. The claims herein arise, in part, within the area encompassed by the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division.

8. Plaintiff Reproductive Health Services (hereafter "RHS") is a Missouri not-for-profit, federal tax-exempt corporation with its principal offices in St. Louis, Missouri.

9. RHS offers to its patients a broad range of counseling, gynecological and family planning services, including the provision of contraceptive and abortion services.

10. The term "gestational age" as used in these stipulations of fact and in the Act refers to the weeks of gestation or weeks of pregnancy counted from the onset of the pregnant woman's last menstrual period. This is the definition adopted by the Act in § 188.015(4).

11. RHS provides abortion services up to 22 weeks gestational age.

12. RHS is the largest abortion provider within the State of Missouri.

13. Plaintiff Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City (hereafter "PPKC") is a Missouri not-for-profit, federal tax-exempt corporation with its principal offices in Kansas City, Missouri.

14. PPKC offers to its patients a broad range of counseling, gynecological and family planning services, including the provision of contraceptive and abortion services.

15. PPKC provides abortion services up to 14 weeks gestational age.

16. RHS and PPKC are not licensed under Missouri Ambulatory Surgical Center Licensing Law, Section 197.200, RSMo, et seq. To date, there is no legal requirement that they be licensed.

17. Plaintiff Howard I. Schwartz, M.D., is a resident of Jackson County, Missouri, and is a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri.

18. Plaintiff Schwartz is a Board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist and is primarily engaged in the practice of medicine within the greater Kansas City area.

19. Plaintiff Schwartz is Clinical Assistant Professor, Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Missouri School of Medicine at Kansas City and is Medical Director of Plaintiff PPKC.

20. Plaintiff Schwartz, as part of his medical practice, performs abortions up to 14 weeks gestational age.

21. Plaintiff Schwartz is employed part-time as a "public employee" as that term is defined by § 1(1) of the Act by Truman Medical Center, a teaching hospital of the University of Missouri Medical School at Kansas City.

22. The Truman Medical Center and the University of Missouri Medical School at Kansas City are both a "public facility" as that term is defined by § 1(2) of the Act.

23. In his capacity as a public employee of a public facility, plaintiff Schwartz is paid for any services rendered by "public funds" as that term is defined by § 1(3) of the Act.

24. Plaintiff Robert L. Blake, Jr., M.D., is a resident of Boone County, Missouri, and is a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri.

25. Plaintiff Blake is a Diplomate of the American Board of Family Practice, Associate Professor in the Departments of Family and Community Medicine at the University of Missouri Medical School and Graduate School at Columbia, and is an attending physician at the University of Missouri Hospital at Columbia.

26. Plaintiff Blake is employed as a "public employee" as that term is defined by § 1(1) of the Act by the University of Missouri Medical School.

27. The University of Missouri Medical School at Columbia and the University of Missouri Hospital at Columbia are both a "public facility" as that term is defined by § 1(2) of the Act.

28. In his capacity as a public employee of a public facility, plaintiff Blake is paid for the services he renders by "public funds" as that term is defined by § 1(3) of the Act.

29. Plaintiff Carl C. Pearman, M.D., is a resident of Boone County, Missouri, and is a physician and surgeon licensed by and within the State of Missouri.

30. Plaintiff Pearman is a Board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist and is Assistant Professor in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Missouri Medical School at Columbia.

31. As part of his medical practice, plaintiff Pearman performs abortions up to 22 weeks gestational age.

32. Plaintiff Pearman is affiliated with the University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia.

33. In his affiliation with the University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia, and with the University of Missouri Medical School at Columbia, plaintiff Pearman is a "public employee" as that term is defined by § 1(1) of the Act.

34. In his capacity as a public employee of a public facility, plaintiff Pearman is paid for the services which he renders by "public funds" as that term is defined by § 1(3) of the Act.

35. A public hospital located in the greater metropolitan Kansas City area performed 97 percent of all 16-week or greater hospital-performed abortions in 1985 within Missouri, and 98 percent of all 16-week or greater hospital-performed abortions in 1984 within Missouri.

36. Outpatients facilities, i.e. nonhospital facilities, performed 78 percent of all abortions performed in 16 weeks or greater in Missouri in 1985 and over 72 percent of such abortions in 1984.

37. Delay in the delivery of abortion services increases the risks of morbidity and mortality to the patient.

Respectfully submitted,

Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
/s/ (Illegible)
Frank Susman, P.C.
10th Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300

Roger K. Evans, Dara Klassel, and Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
719 Seventh Avenue
New York, N. Y. 10019
(212) 541-7800

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

William L. Webster
Attorney General
/s/ Michael L. Boicourt
Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General
/s/ Jerry L. Short
Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorney General
8th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782

Attorneys for Defendants

Dated this ..... day of December, 1986.

(Filed December 15, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT
OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

Cause No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.,
Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL.,
Defendants.

MOTION IN LIMINE

Comes now the Plaintiffs and move this Honorable Court for an Order limiting the testimony in the trial of this action by precluding any evidence or testimony on the question raised by Plaintiffs' challenge to §1.205.1(1) and §1.205.1(2) of Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill 1596. In support of their Motion, the Plaintiffs state:

1. Plaintiffs have challenged the constitutionality of the above referenced sections which state, in part, as follows:

> 1.205.1(1) The life of each human being begins at conception.
>
> 1.205.1(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well being . . . .

2. The statements made in these statutes are not a proper subject of expert testimony or opinion. The U.S. Supreme Court has dealt with this question and held:

> We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 159 (1973). The development of man's knowledge has not progressed significantly since that decision.

3. The propositions found in the questioned statutes are inconsistent with the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Roe. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 444 (1983).

4. "The States are not free, under the guise of protecting maternal health or potential life, to intimidate women into continuing pregnancies." Thornburgh v. A.C.O.G., ..... U.S. ....., 90 L.Ed.2d 779, 793 (1986).

5. Defendants have indicated in pretrial discovery that they plan to introduce evidence on these subjects.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully pray for an Order of this Court precluding the introduction of testimony concerning the issue of "when life begins," or at what point a fetus has a protectable interest, and for such other relief as this Court deems just and proper.

Respectfully submitted,

Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York City, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

(Filed December 18, 1986)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Defendants.

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

A60

Defendants'

EXHIBITS

✓ = Offered and admitted without objection.
X = Offered and admitted over objection.
Ex = Offered but objected to and excluded.
N.O. = Marked but not offered.
D.B. = Admitted, de bene.
W.D. = Offered, then withdrawn.
Ltd. = Admitted for limited purposes.

Exhibit	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
A	X	12/18/86	9:43	The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology, 2nd Ed., Keith L. Moore, 1977 (excerpts)
B	X	"	"	Human Embryology, 3rd Ed., Bradley M. Patten, 1968 (excerpts)
C	X	"	"	Developmental Anatomy, Rev. 7th Ed., Leslie Brainerd Arey, 1974 (excerpt)
D	X	"	"	Human Embryology, 4th Ed., W. J. Hamilton and H. W. Mossman, 1972 (excerpts)
E	X	12/18/86	9:43	Human Reproduction: Conception and Contraception, 2nd Ed., E. S. E. Hafez, 1980 (excerpt)

The Court retained all exhibits 12/18/86

A61

Exhibit	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
F	X	12/18/86	9:43	Biological Principles and Modern Practice of Obstetrics, J. P. Greenhill and Emanuel A. Friedman, 1974 (excerpts)
G	X	"	"	Principles and Management of Human Reproduction, Duncan E. Reid, Kenneth J. Ryan, Kurt Benirschke, 1972 (excerpt)
H	X	"	"	Molecular Biology of the Gene, 3rd Ed., James D. Watson, 1976 (excerpt)
I	X	12/18/86	9:43	36 Lectures in Biology, S. E. Luria, 1975 (excerpt)
J				Modern Biology, James H. Otto, Albert Towle, 1969 (excerpts)
K				Time: Atlas of the Body, "Reproduction," Rand McNally and Co., Pub., 1980 (excerpt)
L				Encyclopaedia Britannica, 14th Ed., Macropaedia, Vol. 14, "Pregnancy," 1974 (excerpt)

A62

M	✓	12/18/86	9:44	Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services, 6th Ed., American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 1985
N	X	12/18/86	9:45	Abortion Surveillance, U. S. Department of Health and Human Services, Centers for Disease Control, 1985
O				Gynecology Principles and Practice, 4th Ed., Robert W. Kistner, 1986
P	X	12/18/86	9:49	Fertility Control, Stephen L. Corson, Richard J. Derman, Louise B. Tyrer, Eds., 1985
Q	X	12/18/86	9:49	Strategies in Gynecologic Surgery, Herbert J. Buchsbaum, Leslie A. Walton, Eds., 1986

A63

Exhibit	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
R	W.D.	12/18/86	9:45	Patten's Human Embryology: Elements of Clinical Development, Clark Edward Corliss, 1976
S	W.D.	12/18/86	9:45	The Developing Human, Clinically Oriented Embryology, 2nd Ed., Keith L. Moore, 1977
T	W.D	12/18/86	9:45	Developmental Stages in Human Embryos, Part A: Embryos of the First Three Weeks (Stages 1 to 9), Ronan O'Rahilly, 1973
U	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Analysis of Gestational Interval," American Journal of Obstetrics & Gynecology, Alan E. Treloar, Borghild G. Behn, Donald W. Cowan, 1967
V	X	"	"	Complications in Obstetric and Gynecologic Surgery, George Schaefer, Edward A. Graber, Eds., 1981
W	X	"	"	Contraceptive Technology 1986-1987, 13th Revised Ed., Robert A. Hatcher, Felicia Guest, Felicia Stewart, Gary K. Stewart, James Trussell, Sylvia Cerel, Willard Cates, 1986
X	X	"	"	Operative Obstetrics, 4th Ed., Edward J. Quilligan, Frederick Zuspan, 1982
Y	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Deaths from Second Trimester Abortion by Dilatation and Evacuation: Causes, Prevention, Facilities," Willard Cates, Jr., David A. Grimes, Obstetrics and Gynecology, October 1981

Exhibit	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
Z	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Second-Trimester Abortion by Dilatation and Evacuation: An Analysis of 11,747 Cases," William F. Peterson, F. Norman Berry, Mamdouh R. Grace, Christie L. Gulbranson, Obstetrics and Gynecology, August 1983
AA	X	12/18/86	9:50	Reid's Controversy in Obstetrics and Gynecology-III, Frederick P. Zuspan, C. D. Christian, 1983
BB	X	"	"	"Improved Survival and Short-Term Outcome of Inborn 'Micropremies,'" Jeffrey S. Gerdes, Soraya Abbasi, Vinod K. Bhutani, Frank W. Bowen, Jr., Clinical Pediatrics, August 1986
CC	X	"	"	"What Is the Lower Limit of Viability?," Jeanette R. Pleasure, Mary Dhand, Manjeet Kaur, American Journal of Diseases of Children, August 1984
DD	X	"	"	"Mortality and Follow-up Data for Neonates Weighing 500 to 800 g at Birth," Sharon Buckwald, William A. Zorn, Edmund A. Egan, American Journal of Diseases of Children, August 1984
EE	X	"	"	"A Reassessment of Menstrual Regulation," Jane E. Hodgson, Studies in Family Planning, October 1977
FF	X	"	"	Ultrasonography in Obstetrics and Gynecology, Peter W. Callen, 1983
GG	X	12/18/86	9:50	"The Need for Routine Sonography Prior to Late Abortion," Frank A. Chervenak, et al., New York State Journal of Medicine, January 1985

Exhibit	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
HH				Te Linde's Operative Gynecology, 6th Ed., Richard F. Mattingly, John D. Thompson, 1985

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General

JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General

6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782

ATTORNEYS FOR DEFENDANTS

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI Central DIVISION

Reproductive Health Services, et al vs. William L. Webster, et al.

ACTION NUMBER: 86-4478-CVC-5

CONTINUATION EXHIBIT LIST - Page # 7

Exhibit Number	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
II				Curriculum vitae of William Keenan M.D.
JJ	✓	12/18/86	11:40	Curriculum vitae of Daniel J. Martin M.D.
KK				Curriculum vitae of Leslie Iffy M.D.
LL				Curriculum vitae of Micheline Mathers -Ruth M.
MM				Curriculum vitae of Mohammed Waheed-Uz-Zaman R M
NN				Curriculum vitae of Raymond Gasser PhD
OO	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Induced Abortions in re first Trimester" Laszlo Lampe M.D. and Leslie Iffy M.D." Operative Perinatology, Invasive Obstetric Technique 1982
PP	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Biparietal diameter as a Prediction of Fetal Lung Maturity" Edward R. Newton M.D., Curtis L. Cantralo M.D., Douglas J. Kosa M.D. The Journal of Reproductive Medicine July 1983.
QQ	X	12/18/86	9:50	"The Use of Ultrasound in the Prediction of Fetal Pulmonary Maturity" Ruth A. Petrucha M.D., Steven H. Golde M.D., Lawrence D. Platt. M.D. American Journal of Obstetric & Gynecolog

I CERTIFY THAT I HAVE THIS DATE _____ received from th Clerk,U.S.District Court,Western District Of Missouri,the following numbere exhibits, listed hereon,for which I will hold myself responsible:

Printed Name

Signature

CONT BLK EX LIST D-1

December, 198

A70

A71

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI Central DIVISION

Reproductive Health Services et als. William L. Webster, et al.

ACTION NUMBER: 86-4478-CV-C-5

CONTINUATION EXHIBIT LIST - Page # 8

Exhibit Number	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
RR	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Real-time ultrasound of the placenta in Assessment of Fetal Pulmonic Maturity" Ruth
				A. Petruela, M.D., Steven H. Golde, M.D., Lawrence D. Platt M.D. American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology February 1982.
SS	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Perinatal Implication of Therapeutic Abortion'
				Leslie Iffy, M.D. Autal Jakobovits M.D.,
				PhD. Principles and Practices of Obstetrics and Perinatology 1982
TT	X	12/18/86	9:50	"Perinatal Statistics: The Effect
				Internationally of Liberalized Abortion" Leslie Iffy, M.D. et al New Perspectives on Human Abortion 198[illegible]

I CERTIFY THAT I HAVE THIS DATE _____ received from the Clerk,U.S.District Court,Western District Of Missouri,the following numbered exhibits, listed hereon,for which I will hold myself responsible:

_____
Printed Name

_____
Signature

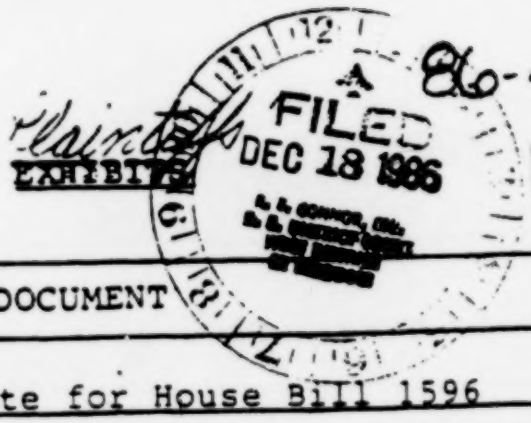
CONT BLK EX LIST D-1

A72

A73

(Filed December 18, 1986)

Reproductive Health
William Webster



86-4478-CV-C-5

Plaintiffs EXHIBITS

M

NO.	DOCUMENT	ACTION OFFER	ACTION ADMIT	DATE
1	Copy of Senate Substitute for House Bill 1596
2	Curriculum Vitae of Judith Widdicombe, R.N.	✓	12/16/86	11:4
3	Curriculum Vitae of Howard Irl Schwartz, M.D.
4	Curriculum Vitae of Robert L. Blake, Jr., M.D.
5	Curriculum Vitae of Carl C. Pearman, M.D.	✓	12/15/86	3:3
6	Curriculum Vitae of Harry S. Jonas, M.D.	✓	12/17/86	11:(
7	Curriculum Vitae of David Harris, M.D.
8	Curriculum Vitae of Stanley K. Henshaw, Ph.D.	✓	12/17/86	10:(
9	Curriculum Vitae of Warren E. Hern, M.D., M.P.H.	✓	12/16/86	10:(
10	Curriculum Vitae of Robert Dale Crist, M.D., Ph.D	✓	12/15/86	3:1

A74

11	Curriculum Vitae of James J. Mongan, M.D.
12	Memorandum from James J. Mongan to Staff of Truman Medical Center dated July 11, 1986 (2 pages)	X	12/17/86	10:1
13	Analysis of H.B. 1596 by R. Harmon, M.D., Director, Missouri Department of Health, April 28, 1986 (7 pages)	X	12/16/86	10:(
14	Curriculum Vitae of Dev Maulik, M.D., Ph.D.	✓	12/15/86	10:(
15	Missouri Vital Statistics, 1985, Missouri Department of Health, State Center for Health Statistics (116 pages)	✓	12/16/86	11:(
16	Computer printout from State Center for Health Statistics - 1984 and 1985 procedures greater and less than 16 weeks performed, broken down by clinics and hospitals - determined gestation by last normal menses
17	Computer printout from State Center for Health Statistics - 1984 and 1985 procedures greater and less than 16 weeks performed, broken down by clinics and hospitals - determined by physician statements	✓	12/16/86	11:(

A75

The court retained all exhibits
12/18/86

EXHIBITS

NO.	DOCUMENT	ACTION ~~OFFER~~ / ~~ADMIT~~	DATE	TIME
18	Computer printout from State Center for Health Statistics - 1984 and 1985 procedures greater and less than 16 weeks performed, broken down by clinics and hospitals - hospital only broken down by individual hospital	✓	12/16/86	11:4
19	Computer printout from State Center for Health Statistics - 1984 and 1985 procedures greater and less than 16 weeks performed, broken down by clinics and hospitals - hospital only broken down by individual hospital	✓	12/16/86	11:4
20	ACOG Standards 6th Ed. pgs 62-72	✓	12/17/86	10:
21	APHA Standards pgs 652-656	✓	12/17/86	10:0
22	Williams on Obstetrics

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

R.H.S., et al., Plaintiff [s]

VS.

WILLIAM WEBSTER, et al., Defendant [s]

CIVIL / CRIMINAL

ACTION NUMBER 86-4478-CV-C-5

PLAINTIFFS'

EXHIBITS - CONTINUED

Exhibit Number	Action Taken	Date	Time	Description
23	✓	12/16/86	10:20	"Serial Multiple Laminaria...," article by Warren M. Hern
24	✓	12/17/86	11:03	"Deaths from Second Trimester Abortion," Cates + Grimes, ObGyn Vol. 58, No. 4, pp. 401-4
25	✓	12/17/86	11:03	"2nd Trimester Abortions in the U.S.," Grimes, Fam. Plann. Persp., Vol. 16, No. 6, pp. 26
26	✓	12/17/86	11:03	"Midtrimester Abortion," Kafrissen, et al., JAMA, Vol. 251, No. 7, 2-17-84
27	✓	12/18/86	12:18	"The Relationship of Placental Grade, Fetal Lung Maturity, and Neonatal Outcome in Normal and Complicated Pregnancies," Fazzi, et al., Vol. 148, No. 1, Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 1/1/84.
28	✓	12/18/86	12:18	"The Use of Ultrasound in the Diagnosis of Fetal Lung Maturity," Golde + Platt, Clinical Obstetrics and Gynecology, Vol. 27, No. 2, June,
29	✓	12/18/86	12:18	"Ultrasound Prediction of Fetal Lung Maturity," Hadlock, et al Radiology, 1985, Vol. 155, No. 2, May 1985.

PAGE NUMBER _____

A78

A79

(Filed March 26, 1987)

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

vs.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO AMEND JUDGMENT, PURSUANT TO F.R.C.P. NO. 59(e)

Come now Plaintiffs and pursuant to F.R.C.P. No. 59(e) move this Court to amend its March 17, 1987, "Order" in the following manners and respects:

1. Footnote 32 on page 22 of said Order presently provides:

> 32. Dr. Stanley Henshaw testified that data from 6 other states in 1983 revealed that 17.1% of post-16-week D&Es were outpatient procedures. The parties stipulated as to the statistics in Missouri.

2. The Court inadvertently misinterpreted the testimony in these regards. Dr. Henshaw testified that "[i]n 1983 the proportion was 77.9% of abortions at 16 weeks or later by D&E performed outside of hospitals" (Tr. 3-17, lines 21-23) and that the "six states . . . did include Missouri" (Tr. 3-20, lines 10-12).

3. Plaintiffs and Dr. Henshaw desire to correct the percentage figure reference ("17.1%" to "77.9%"), the gestational age reference ("post-16-week" to "16 weeks or later"), the situs of procedure reference ("outpatient" to "outside of hospitals"), and the states' reference ("6 other states" to "six states includ[ing] Missouri").

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray the Court amend its prior "Order" of March 17, 1987, as above prayed and consistent with the attached proposed order.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ (Illegible)
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Parker
Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Tenth Floor, Aragon Place
7711 Carondelet Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
(314) 725-7300

ACLU of Eastern and
Western Missouri

Roger K. Evans
Dara Klassel
Beth Otten

Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

The undersigned certifies that a copy of the foregoing instrument was delivered or mailed first class, postage prepaid, to all parties or counsel of record, as below reflected, this 24th day of March, 1987.

/s/ Frank Susman/fo

Michael Boicourt
Jerry L. Short
Andrew F. Puzder

(Filed May 15, 1987)

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 86-4478-CV-C-5

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

v.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Defendants.

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Come now William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, and the State of Missouri, defendants herein, by and through their attorneys, and give notice that they hereby appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, from the District Court's Order and Memorandum of March 17, 1987, Order of March 26, 1987, and Order of April 30, 1987, ordering that the following provisions of the Revised Statutes of Missouri are declared to be unconstitutional: Sections 1.205.1(1) and (2), Section 188.025, a portion of Section 188.029, Section 188.205, Section 188.210, and Section 188.215; and further ordering that the defendants shall be permanently enjoined from enforcing the provisions declared to be unconstitutional.

APPELLANT'S

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR APPELLANTS

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT*
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782
Attorneys for Appellants

*Counsel of Record
February 23, 1989

E. L. MENDENHALL, INC., 926 Cherry Street, Kansas City, Mo. 64106, (816) 421-3030

63P

QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Do physicians or other medical personnel have standing to contest the constitutionality of a state legislative preamble in an abortion statute?

2. Are legislative findings in the preamble to a state abortion bill that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being" facially unconstitutional? See RSMo 1.205.1(1), 1.205.1(2) (1986).

3. Where a statute requiring a determination of fetal viability when a physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is "of twenty or more weeks gestational age" (LMP) has been held to be constitutional, is it facially unconstitutional to require that, in making this determination, the physician shall cause to be performed such "medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child . . . ."? See RSMo 188.029 (1986).

4. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life"? See RSMo 188.205 (1986).

5. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother"? See RSMo 188.210 (1986).

6. Is a state civil statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother"? See RSMo 188.215 (1986).

7. Should the Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), trimester approach for selecting the test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed be reconsidered and discarded in favor of a rational basis test?

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDINGS

In addition to the parties named in the caption, the State of Missouri was a defendant in the district court and an appellant in the court of appeals; Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City, Howard I. Schwartz, M.D., Robert L. Blake, M.D., Carl C. Pearman, M.D., Carroll Metzger, and Mary L. Pemberton were plaintiffs in the district court and appellees in the court of appeals.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW I
PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDINGS III
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES VII
OPINIONS BELOW 1
JURISDICTION 1
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED 1
STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT 9
ARGUMENT 12

I. The Standards to Be Applied in the Review of Abortion-Related State Legislation Should Be Reconsidered and Modified 12

A. A Determination of the Appropriate Standard of Review Is a Threshold Issue in This Appeal 12

B. Missouri's Compelling Interest in Life Cannot Be Confined by a Shifting Point of Viability 12

C. Roe v. Wade Should Be Reconsidered Because Its Textual, Historical, and Doctrinal Basis Is Illegitimate 14

D. The Appropriate Standard of Review Is the Rational Basis Test 16

E. Alternatively, If the Court Continues to Deem the Abortion Decision to Be a Fundamental Right, State Regulations Should Be Upheld Unless They Unduly Burden the Abortion Choice At Any Stage of Pregnancy 19

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being" Pursuant to a Public Policy of Protecting the Life and Health of Unborn Children to the Fullest Extent Possible in Tort, Criminal, Property, and Abortion Law 21

A. Legislative Findings Without Operative Effect Cannot Threaten Injury So As to Create a "Case or Controversy." 22

B. Roe v. Wade Does Not Prohibit a State From Making a Declaration That Life Begins at Conception and That the State Has Interests in All Human Life 24

III. The State of Missouri Has a Compelling Interest in Requiring a Physician Who Is About to Perform an Abortion to Make a Determination Whether the Unborn Child Is Viable, and in So Doing to Cause to Be Performed Such Examinations and Tests As Are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child 30

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life 35

A. The State Is Not Required to Subsidize With Public Funds the Exercise of a Constitutional Right 36

B. First Amendment Rights Are Not Infringed by a Restriction on the Use of Public Funds 38

C. The Phrase "for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion . . ." Is Not Vague 40

V. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding That Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy Because This Court Previously Held in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), That a Public Hospital Need Not Provide Abortion Services 44

CONCLUSION 50

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 12, 14, 17, 18

Alexander v. HUD, 555 F.2d 166 (7th Cir. 1977) 21-22

Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737 (1984) 23, 24

Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 1977) 21, 22

Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 479 U.S. 926 (1986) 42, 43

Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964) 44

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 19, 20, 29

Belotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 12, 20

Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809 (1975) 39

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 9, 16, 17, 18

Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973) 39, 41, 44

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 4, 5, 7, 12, 31, 32

Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal docketed, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir. 1988) 45

Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983) 38

County Executive of Prince George County v. Doe, 300 Md. 445, 479 A.2d 352 (1984) 45

Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction, 368 U.S. 278 (1961) 44

Cruzan by Cruzan v. Harmon, 760 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. en banc 1988) 27

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 12, 15, 19

Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 16

Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988) 40

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 18
Glidden Company v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) 18
Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972) 41, 44
Greco v. Orange Memorial Hospital Corporation, 513 F.2d 873 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1000 (1975) 48
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 16
H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 12
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) .....passim
Kelly v. Gregory, 282 App. Div. 542, 125 N.Y.S.2d 696 (1953) 27
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) 16
Lyng v. International Union, UAW, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988) 36, 38
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) .....passim
Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) 39
Maynard v. Cartwright, 108 S.Ct. 1853 (1988) 41
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 16
Monmouth County Correctional Institution Inmates v. Lanzaro, 643 F. Supp. 1217 (D. N.J. 1986), aff'd in part, modified in part, 834 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 108 S.Ct. 1731 (1988) 6
National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767 (11th Cir. 1983) 21
New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261 (S.D. N.Y. 1988) 39, 45
Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455 (1973) 37
Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 6, 8, 11, 45, 46

O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904 (Mo. banc 1983) 28
Penner v. King, 695 S.W.2d 887 (Mo. banc 1985) 27
Pennhurst State School and Hospital v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1 (1981) 22
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 16
Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986) 37, 42
Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 35
Planned Parenthood v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo.), appeal docketed, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir. 1988) 39, 45
Planned Parenthood Association-Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 531 F. Supp. 320 (N.D. Ill. 1981), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 700 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983) 37
Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 4-5, 12
Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) .....passim
Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) 28
Prince v. Mass., 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 16
Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. 2891 (1987) 38
Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 36, 38
Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641 (1984) 49
Roe v. City of Owensboro and Daviess County, No. 88-0097 (W.D. Ky. June 22, 1988) 45
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim
Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 16
State v. Green, 470 S.W.2d 571 (Mo. banc 1971) 27

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) .....passim
United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095 (1987) 33, 49
United States Civil Service Commission v. National Association of Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973) 38-39
Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464 (1982) 23, 24
Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, 455 U.S. 489 (1982) 40, 41
Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) 47

Statutes and Miscellaneous Citations

28 U.S.C. 1254(2) (1982) 1
28 U.S.C. 1331 (1982) 2
28 U.S.C. 1343 (1982) 2
42 U.S.C. 300, et seq. 39
42 U.S.C. 1983 (1982) 2
42 U.S.C. 1988 (1982) 2
53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (Feb. 2, 1988) 45
RSMo 1.140 (1986) 1
RSMo 1.205 (1986) .....passim
RSMo 1.205.1 (1986) 2, 3, 4, 7, 9, 21
RSMo 1.205.2 (1986) 22
RSMo 21.260 (1986) 43
RSMo 33.170 (1986) 43
RSMo 188.010 (1986) 1, 27
RSMo 188.025 (1986) 2, 4, 6
RSMo 188.029 (1986) .....passim
RSMo 188.039 (1986) 2, 6

RSMo 188.039.1 (1986) 3
RSMo 188.200 (1986) 1, 3
RSMo 188.205 (1986) .....passim
RSMo 188.210 (1986) .....passim
RSMo 188.215 (1986) .....passim
RSMo 188.220 (1986) 1
RSMo 565,024.1(3) (1978) 29
Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-2553 (1947) 28
Cal. Penal Code § 187 (West 1970) 28
Fla. Stat. Ann. § 782.09 (West Supp. 1983) 28
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 750-322 (West Supp. 1983) .. 28
Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 200.210, 200.220 (Supp. 1983) 28
Okla. Stat. Ann. title 21 § 713 (West Supp. 1983) 28
U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2 1
U.S. Const., Amend. I .....passim
U.S. Const., Amend. XIV, § 1 .....1, 5, 19
Mo. Const., Art. III, § 1 27
Uniform Probate Code, § 2-108 28
Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) 6
Black's Law Dictionary, 620 (4th ed. 1957) 42
A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 14
E. Blackschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life (1977) 26
Burt, The Constitution of the Family, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 329 14
Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973) 17
Coleman, Roe v. Wade: A Retrospective Look at a Judicial Oxymoron, 29 St. Louis U.L.J. 7 (1984) 14
A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 13

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L.Rev. 359 (1979) 17
J. H. Ely, Democracy and Distrust (1980) 14
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 14
Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 14
Gunther, Some Reflections on the Judicial Role: Distinctions, Roots, and Prospects, 1979 Wash. U.L.Q. 817 14
K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology (3d ed. 1982) 26
W. Prosser, Handbook on The Law of Torts, 337 § 55 (4th ed. 1971) 27
Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudications, 83 Yale L.J. 221 (1973) 14

OPINIONS BELOW

The June 23, 1987, final judgment of the district court is reported at 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), superseding 655 F. Supp. 1300 (W.D. Mo. 1987), and is reproduced in the Jurisdictional Statement Appendix (hereinafter "J.S. App.") at A1-A55. The July 13, 1988, final judgment of the court of appeals is reported at 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) and is reproduced at J.S. App. at A56-A84.

JURISDICTION

On July 13, 1988, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit entered a final judgment, holding unconstitutional on their face the Missouri statutes challenged. On September 29, 1988, appellants filed a notice of appeal from the court's final judgment of July 13, 1988 (J.S. App. A85). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2). The Jurisdictional Statement was filed on October 11, 1988. Probable jurisdiction was noted on January 9, 1989.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2;
U.S. Const., Amend. I;
U.S. Const., Amend. XIV, § 1;
§ 1.140, RSMo 1986;
§ 1.205, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.010, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.029, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.200, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.205, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.210, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.215, RSMo 1986;
§ 188.220, RSMo 1986.

The pertinent text of each constitutional provision and statute is set forth in the Jurisdictional Statement Appendix at A87-A91, pursuant to Rule 15(f) and Rule 34(f) of the Supreme Court Rules.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 26, 1986, the Governor of the State of Missouri signed into law Missouri Senate Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 1596. The effective date was to be August 13, 1986.

Five publicly employed doctors and nurses and two non-profit corporations filed this facial class action challenge on July 14, 1986, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1982) and 42 U.S.C. § 1988 (1982). Jurisdiction was predicated on 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 28 U.S.C. § 1343. Plaintiffs challenged § 1.205.1(1), a portion of the preamble to a section defining the rights of unborn children; § 188.025, which provides that abortions after sixteen weeks gestational age be performed in a hospital; § 188.029, which requires a physician to determine whether a fetus is viable before performing an abortion on a woman who the physician has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant and requires the doctor to perform and record "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child"; § 188.039, an informed consent requirement; and §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215, which forbid the expenditure of public funds or the use of public employees or public facilities for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Plaintiffs claimed that each statutory section was unconstitutional on its face because it violates the First,

Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. (Complaint, ¶¶ 2, 19, 30-35, Joint Appendix (hereinafter "J.A.") at A9, A15, A18, A19).

Plaintiffs alleged that plaintiff Howard Schwartz, M.D., was a "public employee," as the term is defined in § 188.200(1), at Truman Medical Center, a "public facility" as that term is defined in § 188.200(2); that he "has occasion to encourage or to counsel said women to terminate pregnancies and on occasion to perform or to assist in the performance of abortions, although the same are not necessary to save the patients' lives on said occasions," and that "[o]n said occasions, Dr. Schwartz is paid for such services by 'public funds' as that term is defined by § 188.200(3) of the Act." (Complaint, ¶ 7, J.A. A10.) Virtually identical allegations were made by all individual plaintiffs and incorporated into the district court's opinion (J.S. App. A10).

On October 24, 1986, the plaintiffs requested leave to file a first amended complaint by interlineation in order to challenge the constitutionality of § 1.205.1(2), which states that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being. The court addressed the constitutionality of this section in its final order.

The trial was conducted in the district court December 15 through December 18, 1986. Initially, the district court granted summary judgment declaring that § 188.039.1 was facially unconstitutional as a matter of law because it required a physician to personally provide information to the patient. The district court also granted plaintiffs' motion in limine prohibiting the defendants from presenting any testimony or evidence regarding the constitutionality of §§ 1.205.1(1) or 1.205.1

(2). Defendants later submitted as exhibits numerous medical articles regarding the subject matter of §§ 1.205.1 (1) and 1.205.1(2), which were admitted as offers of proof. See defendants' Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, R, S, and T (Tr. 4-2 - Tr. 4-4). (J.A. A60-A65.)

Numerous expert witnesses testified in support of or in opposition to those sections of the Act regarding which the court allowed testimony. Where appropriate in the argument portion of this brief, defendants set forth references to the factual record which relate to the specific statutes presently before this Court for review.

With regard to §§ 1.205.1(1) and 1.205.1(2), the district court cited Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and concluded that "a state may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify abortion regulation" and that it was "inappropriate for this Court to conduct an inquiry into such a difficult and philosophical question." Accordingly, the trial court held that the legislature's pronouncement conflicts with the essence of Roe v. Wade, and that it is "invalid as a matter of law." (J.S. App. A15.)

The district court invalidated § 188.025, which required that abortions at and after sixteen weeks gestation (LMP) be performed in a hospital. The court concluded that the state did not carry its burden of proving that the requirement was reasonably related to preserving maternal health (J.S. App. A30-A31).

The district court upheld as constitutional the first sentence of § 188.029, which requires a physician to determine whether a fetus is viable when the physician "has reason to believe" that the woman is twenty or more weeks pregnant (LMP), relying on Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), and Planned Parenthood

v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976). However, the court proceeded to invalidate on its face the second sentence of § 188.029. The Court found that "tests to determine fetal weight are not only unreliable and inaccurate, but also add "$125.00 to $250.00 to the cost of abortion." (J.S. App. A36.) The court also found that "the only method to evaluate lung maturity is by amniocentesis, an expensive procedure which all witnesses agreed would be useless and contrary to accepted medical practice until at least twenty-eight to thirty weeks gestation." (J.S. App. A36.) Since the state failed to demonstrate that this provision was "narrowly tailored" to protect the state's interest in fetal life, the court severed the second sentence, and declared it invalid, relying on Colautti.

The district court also declared §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 unconstitutional. The court held that the "encouraging and counseling" language in each section "abut[s] upon First Amendment freedoms." (J.S. App. A45-A46.) Applying the "appropriate rigid standard," the court held that all three sections were "sufficiently vague to render them unconstitutional." The district court reasoned that this Court "disapproved of similar terms such as 'counsel,' 'advocate' and 'advise' in the loyalty oath cases of the 1960's because the language was 'not susceptible of objective measurement' and threatened to restrict free speech." (J.S. App. A45-A46.)

Besides holding that these three sections were void for vagueness, the court also held that §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 violated the First Amendment and the right of privacy under the Fourteenth Amendment. First, the court held that the "encouraging and counseling" language in §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 "impose[d] a significant barrier to a woman's right to consult with her physician and exercise her freedom of choice." This would result in a situation where "[p]atients who fully pay for their services would be denied access to medical information . . . ." (J.S. App. A49-A50.) Second, the court held that the prohibition in § 188.215 on the use of public facilities was unconstitutional under Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983), and that Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), was not controlling "where there is no indication that 'public funds' would be expended." (J.S. App. A50-A51.)

Finally, the court held that the "performing or assisting" language, as applied to public funds or public employees, violated "the Eighth Amendment rights of Missouri inmates to receive medical care," relying on Monmouth County Correctional Institution Inmates v. Lanzaro, 643 F. Supp. 1217 (D. N.J. 1986), aff'd in part, modified in part, 834 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 108 S.Ct. 1731 (1988). However, the court rejected plaintiffs' claims that these provisions violated "academic freedom" by affecting instruction in abortion procedure at state medical schools (J.S. App. A51-A54).

On March 25, 1987, plaintiffs filed a motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That motion was granted by the court on April 30, 1987. Defendants' notice of appeal was filed May 15, 1987.

Appellants appealed from all aspects of the district court's decision, except from the injunction against § 188.039, which related to informed consent. No cross appeal was taken from the district court's approval of the first sentence of § 188.029.

The court of appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court of appeals affirmed the invalidation of § 188.025, regarding the performance of abortions in a hospital at sixteen weeks gestation. The court also affirmed the invalidation of the second sentence of § 188.029, regarding tests to determine viability, relying on this Court's statement in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), that "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor." (J.S. App. A59.) The court rejected the State's argument that the statute did not require any particular tests but only those "necessary medical examinations so as to determine viability," concluding that the statute "plainly declares that in determining viability, doctors must perform tests to find gestational age, and fetal weight and lung maturity." (J.S. App. A60, n. 5.)

The court also affirmed the invalidation of the preamble findings of § 1.205.1. The court held that the plaintiffs had standing because the preamble did "exactly what the Supreme Court has declared it may not do: espouse a theory of when life begins as the foundation of the state's regulation of abortion" and "[n]o persons are better situated to attack the constitutionality of this endeavor than those parties who are directly affected by the state's abortion laws—laws that allegedly are based on and reflective of an impermissible theory of life." (J.S. App. A63.) The court invalidated the preamble as "simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." (J.S. App. A64.)

The court also affirmed the invalidation of §§ 188.205 (in part), 188.210, and 188.215 because the "encourage or counsel" language was "void for vagueness and violative of the right to privacy." Even though these provisions carry no criminal penalties, the court held that a "strict scrutiny" standard applied in evaluating the vagueness challenge because the provisions "implicate[d] both first and fourteenth amendment rights of both physicians and their patients . . . ." (J.S. App. A67.) Rejecting the State's limiting construction that the "encouraging and counseling" language banned only "affirmative advocacy," the court concluded that the language was "much broader than the interpretation offered by the state" and was "vague because the word 'counsel' is fraught with ambiguity; its range is incapable of objective measurement." Id. Finally, the court agreed that the "encouraging and counseling" language of §§ 188.205, 188.210, and 188.215 constituted "an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." (J.S. App. A70.)

The appellate court affirmed the district court decision that the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.215 (public facilities) was contrary to Nyberg v. City of Virginia, supra. The court also decided that the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.210 (public employees) was equally invalid. However, the court of appeals reversed the lower court's order regarding the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.205 because it was inconsistent with Poelker v. Doe, supra. The court of appeals also rejected the district court's construction of the "performing or assisting" language and stated that the Eighth Amendment was not implicated.

Overall, the court of appeals affirmed the permanent injunction against all provisions appealed, except for the "performing or assisting" language of § 188.205 which was severed and declared facially constitutional.

In this appeal, the State of Missouri is contending that the court of appeals grievously erred in its review of the state statutes in question and that the court should be reversed insofar as it declared unconstitutional §§ 1.205.1(1) and 1.205.1(2), the second half of § 188.029, the second half of § 188.205, and the first half of §§ 188.210 and 188.215. The remainder of the court of appeals' decision will not be challenged.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

I.

Initially, this Court must consider the standard of review to be utilized in reviewing the Missouri Statutes struck by the courts below in accordance with Roe v. Wade. The State of Missouri maintains that the trimester approach established in Roe v. Wade is inherently flawed because the point of viability is arbitrary and the State has a compelling interest in protecting life through all stages of pregnancy. The textual, doctrinal, and historical basis for Roe v. Wade is flawed and is a source of such instability in the law that this Court should reconsider the decision, and on reconsideration abandon it and adopt the rational basis test for reviewing abortion regulation in accordance with Bowers v. Hardwick. Alternatively, if this Court continues to deem the abortion decision to be a fundamental right, state regulations should be upheld unless they unduly burden the abortion choice at any stage of pregnancy in accordance with Maher v. Roe and Harris v. McRae.

II.

The State of Missouri maintains that the courts below erred in declaring §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) unconstitutional as a matter of law because the stricken provisions are prefatory statements with no substantive effect. The plaintiffs lack standing to challenge the preamble provisions because the statute does not unduly burden the abortion decision or restrict or regulate the performance of abortions. The stricken provisions are valid statements of fact and policy which justify the operative sections of the statute, wherein the State bestows rights on unborn children under Missouri law in non-abortion situations.

III.

Missouri maintains that the second provision of § 188.029 should have been upheld by the courts below because the statute does not require unnecessary or inappropriate tests to determine viability and because the State's requirement that a physician record his findings regarding the viability of an unborn child which he has reason to believe is twenty weeks gestational age furthers the State's compelling interest in preserving the life of a viable unborn child.

IV.

The courts below erred in declaring a provision of § 188.205 forbidding the expenditure of public funds for "the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" to be in violation of a woman's right to privacy or void for vagueness. The State of Missouri does not violate a woman's right to obtain an abortion by refusing to allow public funds to be used for abortion counseling and services. Contrary to the court of appeals' decision, this Court's rulings in Maher v. Roe, Harris v. McRae, and Poelker v. Doe conclusively establish that a limitation on the expenditure of public funds does not constitute an obstacle in violation of a woman's right to obtain an abortion.

Section 188.205 does not implicate the First Amendment rights of any person. The court of appeals clearly erred in reviewing § 188.205 pursuant to a strict scrutiny standard. The statute has no criminal penalties and does not forbid speech. An examination of the language declared vague by the courts below in its proper context indicates that the restriction is not so vague that a person of common intelligence must guess at its meaning. The provision provides a reasonable person fair notice of conduct which will not be subsidized by the State.

V.

In §§ 188.210 and 188.215 the State of Missouri declared it unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. These provisions were declared to be unconstitutional under Nyberg v. City of Virginia (Nyberg II). The appellants submit that the Eighth Circuit's decision to rely upon Nyberg II and declare the performing or assisting language in each of these two statutes to be unconstitutional is directly contrary to the reasoning of Poelker v. Doe. The court below erred in limiting the principles expressed in Poelker v. Doe, Maher v. Roe, and Harris v. McRae to mean merely that the government is not obligated to fund abortions. The State of Missouri submits that a refusal by the State to allow the use of public facilities or public employees for the performance of abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother does not constitute an undue burden or create an unlawful obstacle preventing a woman from effectuating her decision to obtain an abortion. A woman who desires an abortion continues as before to be dependent on private sources for the services she desires. Consequently, the courts below should have severed and upheld the performing or assisting language of §§ 188.210 and 188.215.

ARGUMENT

I. The Standards to Be Applied in the Review of Abortion-Related State Legislation Should Be Reconsidered and Modified.

A. A Determination of the Appropriate Standard of Review Is a Threshold Issue in This Appeal.

The first step in the judicial review of the Missouri statutes at issue is to determine the appropriate standard of review: strict scrutiny, rational basis, or some intermediate standard. In cases involving state regulation of abortion, this Court has consistently set forth the standard of review before considering the particular statutes at issue. In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the majority labored at great length over the appropriate constitutional analysis before striking down the Texas abortion statute. Subsequently, in every major abortion case reaching this Court, the standard of review has been a threshold issue.[1] The State of Missouri submits that this initial issue must again be addressed before directly confronting the specific statutes facially challenged by the plaintiffs and ordered enjoined by the courts below.

B. Missouri's Compelling Interest in Life Cannot Be Confined by a Shifting Point of Viability.

Six years ago, Justice O'Connor observed in her dissent in Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 458 (1983), that:

1. See Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 189, 195 (1973); Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 60-61 (1976); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 470 (1977); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 386-387 (1979); Belotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S. 622, 633-642 (1979); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 311-318, 319-320, 322-323, 324 (1980); H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 408-410 (1981); Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 419-420, 426-431 (1983); Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986).

> [t]he Roe framework . . . is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the state may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception. Moreover, it is clear that the trimester approach violates the fundamental aspiration of judicial decision-making through the application of neutral principles 'sufficiently absolute to give them roots throughout the community and continuity over significant periods of time . . . .' A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government, 114 (1976).

The evidence presented by the parties in this action dramatically demonstrates the accuracy of Justice O'Connor's prediction. The testimony of medical experts for both parties and the documentary evidence overwhelmingly established that a woman who appears to be carrying an unborn child of twenty weeks gestational age (LMP) may have a viable unborn child under 1986 medical technology (J.S. App. A33; n. 37, 38). The evidence regarding this was so persuasive that the plaintiffs did not challenge the district court's findings or conclusions regarding this question even though the court was focusing on a point during pregnancy two months prior to the third trimester line drawn in Roe v. Wade.

The facts established in this case make it very evident that the concept of viability is entirely arbitrary. It is simply a discretionary point which may shift because of the opinion of a physician requested to perform an abortion or due to the availability of medical facilities to preserve the life of a premature baby. Clearly, "[t]he choice of viability as the point at which the state interest in potential life becomes compelling is no less arbitrary than choosing any point before viability or any point afterward." Akron, 462 U.S. at 461 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The State of Missouri therefore submits that its compelling interest in protecting human life exists throughout pregnancy. The trimester approach of Roe v. Wade has been rendered impotent by advances in prenatal medicine and the arbitrariness of the lines drawn by the majority. See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828 (O'Connor, J., dissenting); Akron, 462 U.S. at 461 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

C. Roe v. Wade Should Be Reconsidered Because Its Textual, Historical, and Doctrinal Basis Is Illegitimate.

The second reason for urging reconsideration of Roe v. Wade is the State of Missouri's belief that the textual, historical, and doctrinal basis for the abortion right created by Roe v. Wade is inherently flawed.

It has now been sixteen years since the Supreme Court decided Roe v. Wade. Criticism regarding the legitimacy of the right declared to be fundamental in Roe v. Wade continues unabated since the date of the decision.[2] An exhaustive and persuasive examination of

2. A broad spectrum of constitutional scholars have repeatedly exposed the flaws which undermine the legitimacy of the decision. See, e.g., J. H. Ely, Democracy and Distrust 2-3, 248, n. 52 (1980); Gunther, Some Reflections on the Judicial Role: Distinctions, Roots, and Prospects, 1979 Wash. U.L.Q. 817, 819; Burt, The Constitution of the Family, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 329, 371-373; A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent 27-19 (1975); Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159; Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudications, 83 Yale L.J. 221, 297-311 (1973); Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); Coleman, Roe v. Wade: A Retrospective Look at a Judicial Oxymoron, 29 St. Louis U.L.J. 7 (1984).

the flaws of Roe v. Wade was presented by the Solicitor General in the United States' brief as amicus curiae in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, supra, Nos. 84-495 and 84-1379. Consequently, appellants do not feel compelled to reiterate arguments quite familiar to this Court. However, the circumstances presented by this case, the fifteenth abortion case since Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton to be considered by the Court, warrant a careful look at the path the Court has followed. Upon reconsideration, the appellants will urge this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade and return the law to the condition in which it was before the case was decided. As Justice White has observed, the liberty interest in abortion, unlike the Court's precedents involving childbearing, has no basis in liberty interests that are either "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty," Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 792, or otherwise "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition." Id. Only by reference to these two sources of fundamental rights is the Court able:

> . . . to identify some source of constitutional value that reflects not the philosophical predilections of individual judges, but basic choices made by the people themselves in constituting their system of government . . .

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 791 (White, J., dissenting).

It is Missouri's position that the values implicit in the Constitution do not compel recognition of abortion liberty as fundamental. As Justice White concluded in his Thornburgh dissent:

> The Court's opinion in Roe itself convincingly refutes the notion that the abortion liberty is deeply rooted in the history or tradition of our people, as does the continuing and deep division of the people themselves over the question of abortion. As for the notion that choice in the matter of abortion is implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, it seems apparent to me that a free, egalitarian, and democratic society does not presuppose any particular rule or set of rules with respect to abortion. And again, the fact that many men and women of good will and high commitment to constitutional government place themselves on both sides of the abortion controversy strengthens my own conviction that the values animating the Constitution do not compel recognition of the abortion liberty as fundamental. In so denominating that liberty, the Court engages not in constitutional interpretation, but in the unrestrained imposition of its own, extraconstitutional value preferences. (Footnotes omitted.)

Id. at 793-794.

D. The Appropriate Standard of Review Is the Rational Basis Test.

In Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), the respondents sought to decriminalize homosexual conduct by arguing that the right to privacy encompassed sodomy as part of a fundamental right to decide to beget or bear a child. In support of this position, the respondents cited the Court's substantive due process cases dealing with child rearing and education, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923); family relationships, Prince v. Mass., 321 U.S. 158 (1944); procreation, Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942); marriage, Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967); contraception, Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); and abortion, Roe v. Wade.

After considering the two basic tests used by the Court in identifying fundamental liberties, the Bowers Court completely rejects respondents' argument:

> It is obvious to us that neither of these formulations would extend a fundamental right to homosexuals to engage in acts of consensual sodomy. Proscriptions against that conduct have ancient roots. . . . Against this background, to claim that a right to engage in such conduct is "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" is, at best, facetious. (Citations and footnotes omitted.)

Id. at 192-194.

The Court's reasoning in Bowers constitutes a forceful basis for rejecting the philosophical underpinning of Roe. It cannot be seriously argued that a right to engage in abortion is "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." As the Court acknowledged in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 138-139, and as Justice Rehnquist emphasized in dissent (id. at 174-176, n. 1), state laws restricting abortion were widely in force throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.[3]

In both Akron and Thornburgh, this Court reaffirmed Roe on grounds of stare decisis. Akron, 462 U.S. at 419-420, n. 1; Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 747. Although the principle of stare decisis weighs against reconsidering precedents in order to promote the continuity and consistency of adjudication, the principle does not demand total obedience in constitutional litigation. See

---

3. See Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973); Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L.Rev. 359 (1979).

Akron, 462 U.S. at 420; Glidden Company v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 543 (1962). As Justice White has indicated in his Thornburgh dissent:

> But decisions that find in the Constitution principles or values that cannot fairly be read into that document usurp the people's authority, for such decisions represent choices that the people have never made and that they cannot disavow through corrective legislation. For this reason, it is essential that this Court maintain the power to restore authority to its proper possessors by correcting constitutional decisions that, on reconsideration, are found to be mistaken.

476 U.S. at 787.

Where a judicial scheme affecting the allocation of constitutional powers has proven "unsound in principle and unworkable in practice," or where it "leads to inconsistent results at the same time that it disserves principles of democratic self-governance," this Court has not hesitated to reconsider a prior decision. Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, 546-547 (1985). Consequently, the appellants submit that the doctrine of stare decisis should not deter this Court from altering a constitutional doctrine "when it has become apparent that a prior decision has departed from a proper understanding" of the Constitution. Garcia, 469 U.S. at 557.

In the event this Court decides to reconsider Roe v. Wade in light of the test set forth in Bowers to determine fundamental rights, it is evident that state legislation regulating abortion should be upheld so long as it has a rational basis and seeks to further a legitimate state interest, that is, the state's interest in protecting life. Bowers, 478 U.S. at 196.

E. Alternatively, if the Court Continues to Deem the Abortion Decision to Be a Fundamental Right, State Regulations Should Be Upheld Unless They Unduly Burden the Abortion Choice at Any Stage of Pregnancy.

In Roe v. Wade, the Court concluded that the "right of privacy" emanating from the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause "is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." However, the Court rejected the contention that "the woman's right is absolute and that she is entitled to terminate her pregnancy at whatever time, in whatever way, and for whatever reason she alone chooses." 410 U.S. at 153. The privacy right involved in an abortion decision, the Court concluded, "cannot be said to be absolute." Id. at 154. See, e.g., Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 208 (1973) (Burger, C.J., concurring) ("Plainly, the Court today rejects any claim that the Constitution requires abortions on demand").

Prior to Thornburgh,[4] this Court has repeatedly adopted an "unduly burdensome" analysis in the context of reviewing legislative enactments impacting upon the abortion decision. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 314 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473-474 (1977); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1977). As the Court stated in Maher,

> The right in Roe v. Wade can be understood only by considering both the woman's interest and the nature of the state's interference with it. Roe did not declare an unqualified "constitutional right to an abor> tion," as the district court seemed to think. Rather, the right protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy.

4. The majority's decision in Thornburgh has been characterized as an "attempt to discredit and preempt state abortion regulation regardless of the interests its serves and the impact it has." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 829 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

432 U.S. at 473-474. See also Belotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 640 (1979) (Belotti II) (Opinion of Powell, J.) ("The question before the Court is whether a Massachusetts statute provides for parental notice and consent in a manner that does not unduly burden the right to seek an abortion"). Clearly, before Thornburgh, abortion regulations invalidated by the Court were not found objectionable merely because they impacted upon some unusually discrete zone of privacy, but rather because they resulted in an unduly burdensome interference with the abortion choice. See, e.g., Harris v. McRae, supra, 448 U.S. at 328 (White, J., concurring).

As Justice O'Connor has explained in her Thornburgh dissent:

> Under this Court's fundamental-rights jurisprudence, judicial scrutiny of state regulation of abortion should be limited to whether the state law bears a rational relationship to legitimate purposes such as the advancment of these compelling interests, with heightened scrutiny reserved for instances in which the State has imposed an "undue burden" on the abortion decision. Akron at 461-463 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting). An undue burden will generally be found "in situations involving absolute obstacles or severe limitations on the abortion decision," not wherever a state regulation "may 'inhibit' abortions to some degree." Id. at 464 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting).

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

In the remaining sections of this Argument, Missouri will consider the specific statutes in question pursuant to the "undue burden" standard which was consistently followed by this Court prior to Thornburgh. Appellants will maintain that the statutory language should be declared constitutional, in accordance with that standard, and the decision of the court of appeals should be reversed.

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being" Pursuant to a Public Policy of Protecting the Life and Health of Unborn Children to the Fullest Extent Possible in Tort, Criminal, Property, and Abortion Law.

The court below held that §§ 1.205.1(1) and 1.205.1(2), RSMo 1986, were invalid because they conflicted with Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 162 (1973), wherein the United States Supreme Court declared that a state could not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify abortion regulation. Prior to trial, the district court granted plaintiffs' motion in limine to exclude any evidence related to the provisions of § 1.205. Presumably, the subsections in question were struck solely because the content of the finding violates the privacy right to an abortion established in Roe.

Initially, one must note that the two subsections declared invalid are preamble or prefatory statements of fact and principle enacted in order to provide guidance in interpreting the operative language of § 1.205. Neither subsection does anything substantively.

It is well established that "preambles to statutes do not impose substantive rights, duties or obligations." National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767 (11th Cir. 1983). See Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310, 1316 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Alexander

v. HUD, 555 F.2d 166, 171 (7th Cir. 1977).[5] By declaring the Missouri General Assembly's findings to be in violation of the plaintiff class's right to privacy, the court of appeals had to decide that the preamble did something which is directly contrary to decisions in other circuits that preambles have no operative effect. Association of American Railroads v. Costle, supra.

The substantive language of § 1.205 expands existing state tort, property, and criminal law protection for unborn children. However, § 1.205 excludes legal abortion from its ambit by providing unborn children only those rights, privileges and immunities permitted by "the Constitution of the United States and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and [not contrary to] specific provisions . . . in the statutes and constitution of this state." Section 1.205.2, RSMo. The statute also specifically provides that it does not create any cause of action against a pregnant woman with respect to the prenatal care of an unborn child. Section 1.205.4, RSMo.

A. Legislative Findings Without Operative Effect Cannot Threaten Injury So As to Create a "Case or Controversy."

The statute in question does not regulate any woman's constitutional right to choose abortion over childbirth. A different chapter of the Revised Statutes of Missouri regulates abortion. See Chapter 188, RSMo 1986. Section 1.205 defines the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of Missouri law in circumstances other than those involved in abortion. The court's decision to strike the challenged preamble provisions of the statute does not diminish the statute's substantive impact on state law.

5. Congress frequently makes findings to justify new federal spending programs. Such findings have no substantive effect unless Congress intends for the language to have such effect. See, for example, the Bill of Rights provisions of the Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights (Act), 42 U.S.C. § 6010 (1976 ed. and Supp. III), as interpreted in Pennhurst State School and Hospital v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1 (1981).

Since § 1.205 cannot infringe upon any judicially established right of any plaintiff class member who desires to obtain an abortion or perform an abortion, the plaintiffs in this action lack standing to challenge any provision of § 1.205, RSMo. The doctrine of standing requires that a plaintiff allege personal injury fairly traceable to a defendant's alleged unlawful conduct. Without standing, a litigant cannot meet the Article III "case and controversy" requirement of federal judicial power. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 754-758 (1984).

As the Court explained in Allen:

> The requirement of standing . . . has a core concept derived directly from the Constitution. A plaintiff must allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Id. at 751 (citation omitted). The plaintiffs in the present case cannot demonstrate any injury traceable to sections 1.205.1(1)-(2), and thus have no standing to challenge these provisions. See also Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 473 (1982).

It is unclear on what basis the courts below could even speculate that a merely declaratory enactment could give rise to an injury in fact. Such a law has, by definition, no legal effect. At most, the Missouri preamble creates an ideological tension between the plaintiffs' philosophy of abortion and the declared policy of Missouri. This is, however, a plainly insufficient ground for standing. The conscientious beliefs of plaintiffs in Valley Forge and Allen were all insufficient to give standing in those cases. Moreover, if the mere psychological effect of the substantive regulations at issue in those cases was too remote or speculative to create a case or controversy, then the psychic impact of the purely declaratory sections of the Missouri law must also be insufficient.

In the present case, plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge the declaratory sections of the Missouri law: they suffered no "injury in fact" from the mere existence of these provisions. Hence, the courts below lacked jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of these sections. The order of the court of appeals should therefore be reversed.

B. Roe v. Wade Does Not Prohibit a State From Making a Declaration That Life Begins at Conception and That the State Has Interests in All Human Life.

The court below overturned the prefatory subsections of the Missouri law on the basis of a supposed conflict with Roe v. Wade. Neither Roe nor its progeny, however, forbid a state declaration that life begins at conception and has protectable interests from that moment.

Ignoring the unduly burdensome standard for judging legislation alleged to affect the right to privacy, the courts below based their decisions instead on specific language, taken out of context, from Roe v. Wade:

> When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus [when life begins] the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159. The district court concluded that "the legislative pronouncement by the Missouri General Assembly clearly conflicts with the essence of Roe v. Wade. Consequently, §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) are invalid as a matter of law." (J.S. App. A15.)

The court of appeals saw no point in addressing the factual validity of the State's findings and held the following:

> As a "prefatory" statement, as so insistently urged by the state, the declaration of when life begins can only have been intended as an introductory and foundational comment. To adopt the state's contention that the statute is "abortion-neutral" is to overlook that every remaining section of the bill save one regulates the performance of abortions. The only plausible inference is that the state intended its abortion regulations to be understood against the backdrop of its theory of life. Rather than being abortion-neutral, the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations.

(J.S. App. A64.)

If Roe v. Wade actually stands for the principle espoused by the court of appeals, then Roe is even more flawed than previously recognized. Roe did not impose a judicial fiat against any law assuming or declaring a certain view of life. Such a sweeping declaration would forbid the numerous laws—regarding wrongful death, homicide, inheritance, and child custody—recognizing the existence of children prior to birth. Rather, this Court held that a state may not, "by adopting one theory of life . . . override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake." 410 U.S. at 162 (emphasis added). In other words, while a state may assert a given theory of life, such assertion cannot, according to the Supreme Court, justify restrictions on abortion.

The prefatory Missouri sections make mere assertions, not restrictions, and thus cannot conflict with Roe. Indeed, Roe itself acknowledges that states have an "important and legitimate interest in protecting" children prior to birth, id. at 162, and Maher recognizes the authority of a state to "make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion," 432 U.S. at 474. Sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) do no more.

The courts below essentially imposed upon all state officials a duty to submit, not only in act but also in word, to an ideology favoring abortion. That holding must be reversed.

The first subsection struck by the courts below is a statement of fact. Although one can quibble over terminology, one cannot dispute the established biological fact that the life of an individual human being (or any mammal) begins at conception.[6] Of course, it is of no consequence whether a legislature or court pronounces as true or false a fact of nature. The Earth still moves around the sun, whether a government or a court recognizes that fact.

Nonetheless, it is not improper for a government or a court to recite findings in making or interpreting law. Although the members of a legislature cannot create a fact by pronouncement, they can recognize truth and acknowledge the existence of certain facts as a basis for action. Subsection (1) constitutes an effort by the General Assembly of Missouri to recognize a truth justifying the substantive legislation which follows.

6. See, e.g., Defendant Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, R, S, and T (Tr. 4-2 - 4-4); see J.A. A60-A65 for titles; see also E. Blackschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life, 16-17 (1977); K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology, 1, 13 (3d ed. 1982).

The second subsection in the preamble is a statement of value and policy, not fact.

In Missouri, "the legislative power . . . is vested in the General Assembly . . . ." State v. Green, 470 S.W.2d 571, 573 (Mo. banc 1971). See Mo. Const., Art. III, § 1. This "legislative power is plenary and residual, subject only to the limits of the federal and state constitutions." Penner v. King, 695 S.W.2d 887, 889 (Mo. banc 1985). The Missouri General Assembly is therefore the proper governmental body to make legislative policy decisions for the State of Missouri. The declaration of policy set forth in subsection (2) is entirely consistent with Missouri's policy recognizing the sanctity of life.[7]

Traditionally, states have determined the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of state law . For example, most states provide children a cause of action in tort for prenatal injuries inflicted by a person other than the child's mother. See W. Prosser, Handbook on The Law of Torts, 337 § 55 (4th Ed. 1971) ("when actually faced with the issue for decision, almost all of the jurisdictions have allowed recovery even though injury occurred during the early weeks of pregnancy, when the child was neither viable nor quick"). Kelly v. Gregory, 282 App. Div. 542, 543-544, 125 N.Y.S.2d 696, 697 (1953) (child may recover for previability injuries in part because "what we now know makes it possible to demonstrate clearly that separability begins at conception.")

7. See § 188.010, RSMo 1986, which states:
It is the intention of the general assembly of the state of Missouri to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes.
See also Cruzan by Cruzan v. Harmon, 760 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. en banc 1988).

Many states also provide a cause of action to the parents for the wrongful death of their unborn children. For example, the Rhode Island Supreme Court held in Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) that the word "person" as used in the Rhode Island Wrongful Death Act includes unborn children. 117 R.I. at 188, 365 A.2d at 754. As recently as 1983, the Missouri Supreme Court held that the term "person" as used in Missouri's Wrongful Death Statute "includes the human fetus en ventre sa mere" stating that its conclusion was "supported by a strong positive trend among other jurisdictions holding that a fetus is a 'person,' 'minor' or 'minor child' within the meaning of their particular wrongful death statutes." O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904, 910 (Mo. banc 1983).

Most states recognize in unborn children certain rights under property law. For example, the Uniform Probate Code provides that unborn children are to be treated as though born within the lifetime of the decedent. Uniform Probate Code, § 2-108; Uniform Probate Code Practice Manual, p. 11, § 1.11.

Finally, many states provide criminal sanctions for the intentional or criminally negligent killing of an unborn child. For example, a number of states impose criminal sanctions in the nature of manslaughter for the killing of a viable fetus or unborn quick child. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-2553 (1947); Cal. Penal Code § 187 (West 1970); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 782.09 (West Supp. 1983); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 750-322 (West Supp. 1983); Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 200.210, 200.220 (Supp. 1983); Okla. Stat. Ann. titl. 21 §§ 713, 714 (West Supp. 1983). In fact, until Missouri's General Assembly enacted § 1.205, Missouri also had such a law. See § 565.024.1(3), RSMo 1978 (amended by L. 1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A).

The foregoing examples amply demonstrate that the matters dealt with in § 1.205 have long been recognized as within the proper purview of state regulation and proper subjects for legislative enactments. In Roe v. Wade, this Court decided that women have a constitutionally protected right to choose abortion. However, the Court placed no limit on state legislation concerning unborn children where such legislation leaves unimpaired a woman's right to choose abortion. In fact, the Roe Court itself acknowledged that states have a valid and important interest in encouraging childbirth. It stated that states have an "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life." 410 U.S. at 162. The Court repeated its Roe language in Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977), adding that a state's "strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth" exists "throughout the course of the woman's pregnancy." 432 U.S. at 445-46.

In Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), the Supreme Court faced the question of whether a woman's "freedom of choice" included an entitlement to Medicaid payments for abortions that are not medically necessary. The Supreme Court stated that the district court failed to understand the scope of the right recognized in Roe. The Roe Court did not create an absolute right to abortion; rather, it protects a woman from "unduly burdensome interference" with her right to obtain an abortion. The Court emphasized that Roe "implies no limitation on the authority of a state to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion . . . ." 432 U.S. at 471, 473-474.

The Maher Court emphasized that a state need not show a compelling interest for its policy choice favoring normal childbirth. 432 U.S. at 477. A state statute need only comply with the less demanding test that the statute be rationally related to a "constitutionally permissible purpose." 432 U.S. at 78. The Court acknowledged the state's " 'strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth' . . . an interest honored over the centuries" and held that the regulation rationally furthered that interest. See also Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 325 (1980).

Section 1.205 clearly complies in its entirety with the pronouncements and guidelines of Maher and McRae. It does not create any "unduly burdensome interference" with the right to choose abortion, but, at most, indicates a "value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion . . . ." Maher v. Roe, supra, 432 U.S. at 471, 473-474. The findings and policy declarations made to justify this legislation are constitutional and the courts below erred by holding otherwise.

III. The State of Missouri Has a Compelling Interest in Requiring a Physician Who Is About to Perform an Abortion to Make a Determination Whether the Unborn Child Is Viable, and in So Doing to Cause to Be Performed Such Examinations and Tests As Are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child.

The district court and court of appeals correctly upheld the first sentence of § 188.029, which requires that before performing an abortion on a woman "he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age," the physician "shall first determine if the unborn child is viable . . . ." This holding was based on medical evidence by the plaintiffs' own witness, Dr. Maulik, and others, that showed that the twenty-week designation was reasonably related to viability because there may be a four-week or greater error in estimating gestational age (J.S. App. A33; supra, n. 37, 38).

Despite this conclusion, the court below facially invalidated the second sentence of § 188.029. The court of appeals, relying on dictum in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), that legislatures could not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability," concluded that "this is precisely what the Missouri legislature has attempted to proclaim." (J.S. App. A59.) The court of appeals also adopted the findings of the district court that the lung maturity provision required the use of amniocentesis, which was expensive and not rationally related to the determination of viability at twenty weeks (J.S. App. A60, n. 5).

The court of appeals' reliance on Colautti is misplaced. Colautti dealt with a state statute which subjected a physician to potential criminal liability if he failed to use a certain procedure "when the fetus 'is viable' or when there is 'sufficient reason to believe that the fetus may be viable.' " 439 U.S. at 381. There the Court stated, "[b]ecause this point may differ with each pregnancy, neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus." Id. at 389. The Court struck down this provision, concluding that the term "may be viable" was unconstitutionally vague when stated in conjunction with the phrase "is viable" and because a "scienter requirement with respect to the finding of viability" was absent. Id. at 390.

Despite the fact that the court of appeals relied on the Colautti dictum that the legislature could not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant," that dictum is plainly not applicable to § 188.029. First, the General Assembly has not emphasized any "single factor," but instead has specified three factors—consistent with medical science—for which a finding must be made. Second, the legislature has not prejudged what those findings must be. Finally, the legislature has not made all or any of these factors "determinant" of viability. The determination of viability is left to the medical judgment of the attending physician. Although three objective factors medically consistent with a determination of viability are identified, none of these factors is made determinant and the physician may consider any other factors. For these reasons, Colautti does not warrant the striking of § 188.029.

Medical experts for both plaintiffs and defendants concurred during the trial that it is standard medical practice to perform an ultrasound examination to determine gestational age and viability of a fetus whenever it appears that a woman seeking an abortion is at least twenty weeks pregnant. The undisputed evidence further indicated that no current test other than measurements which can be performed with the use of ultrasound provide information necessary to determine viability prior to at least thirty weeks gestational age (Keenan Tr. 4-78; Maulik Tr. 1-55; Crist Tr. 1-98, 1-117; Pearman Tr. 1-139; Widdicombe Tr. 2-65).

The Court should note that the most important language of § 188.029 was ignored by the courts below during the process of construing the stricken provision. That vital language is contained in the first sentence, which was upheld by the district court. It states:

> . . . the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions.

This crucial language imposes upon the physician a standard of care which would clearly forbid the performance of a medical examination or test which could not reveal anything or might unnecessarily increase the risk of harm to a mother or unborn child. The State of Missouri submits that § 188.029 cannot be construed as requiring a physician to perform examinations or tests contrary to the standard of care imposed upon a careful and prudent physician under similar circumstances. Yet the construction utilized by the courts below mandates actions by a physician contrary to the appropriate standard of care set forth in the statute.

The court's invalidation of the second sentence of § 188.029 because of the fetal weight and lung maturity language ignores normal principles of constitutional adjudication in a facial challenge. See United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987). The court of appeals misread the plain language of § 188.029 as a matter of law. The plain language provides that the physician shall cause to be performed such examinations and tests "as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child . . . ." The court read this language as saying that "doctors must perform tests to find gestational age, and fetal weight and lung maturity." (J.S. App. A60, n. 5.) But there is a significant difference between a requirement to perform "tests to find" and one to perform "such . . . tests as are necessary to make a finding."

The court read into the plain language specific tests which are not required by the statute on its face. The statutory language allows for the distinct possibility that no findings can be made, or that findings can be made by a single test, thereby making unnecessary the use of another test, or that a finding can be derived without an intrusive test. The statutory language provides flexibility that the court's construction excises.

This allowance for flexibility in obtaining a finding is directly relevant to the "lung maturity" language. The district court and the court of appeals would read the plain language as specifically requiring amniocentesis, despite the fact that the plain language specifies no tests, but refers more generally to "such . . . tests as are necessary to make a finding." The evidence provided by the medical experts at trial was that amniocentesis could make "no finding" of lung maturity at twenty weeks. Within the language of the statute, an amniocentesis test cannot be a "necessary" test to "make a finding" if it can provide no information.

The appellants submit that the only reasonable facial construction of § 188.029 is that the statute requires a physician to use ordinary care and utilize such medical examinations or tests as are necessary to make appropriate findings in the case before him. An unnecessary test should never be utilized and an examination or test which increases the risk to a mother or her unborn child should only be utilized if medically appropriate for the care of the mother or unborn child. Under all circumstances, however, the State has a compelling interest in requiring a physician to record his findings regarding viability and the findings derived from such tests as he deems necessary to render a decision. Statutes designed to further the State's compelling interest in preserving life need not be drafted to "accommodate every conceivable contingency." Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 483, n. 7 (1983).

The court of appeals' analysis was erroneous as a matter of law. It was based on a misreading of the plain language and it employed an erroneously high standard of review. The court thus erred in facially invalidating the second sentence of § 188.029.

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life.

The court below reversed the district court's decision declaring the first part of § 188.205 to be unconstitutional because the trial court's order was contrary to the holdings of Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), which decided that a government may refuse to provide any public assistance for any abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. The court felt bound to uphold the provision of § 188.205 which forbids the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. However, the court declared the remainder of § 188.205 to be facially invalid because the phrase "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" was unconstitutionally vague and because the ban constituted an obstacle to a woman's exercise of her right to privacy. Each rationale expressed by the court below is inconsistent with decisions rendered by this court regarding the subsidizing of constitutional rights and the standard for reviewing facial challenges to state statutes on the basis of vagueness.

A. The State Is Not Required to Subsidize With Public Funds the Exercise of a Constitutional Right.

As recently as March, 1988, this Court held that a government is not required to furnish funds in order for a person to maximize the exercise of a constitutional right. The Court stated in Lyng v. International Union, UAW, 108 S.Ct. 1184, 1190 (1988), that "'we have held in several contexts [including the first amendment] that a legislature's decision not to subsidize the exercise of a fundamental right does not infringe the right.' Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540, 549 (1983)." Clearly, with regard to § 188.205, the State of Missouri does not violate a woman's right to obtain an abortion by refusing to allow public funds to be used for abortion counselling services. Contrary to the court of appeals' decision, this Court's rulings in Maher v. Roe, Harris v. McRae, and Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), conclusively establish that § 188.205, which is concerned expressly with the expenditure of public funds, does not constitute an obstacle in violation of a woman's right to privacy.

The court of appeals' decision that the right to privacy is violated by a refusal to fund abortion counseling would in another context mean that a parent has a right to have his or her child taught a particular foreign language in any free public school. The district court's reasoning would prohibit the state from restricting the content of its curriculum. Such reasoning has been explicitly rejected by the United States Supreme Court in Maher v. Roe. In that case the Court stated:

> [W]ere we to accept appellees' argument, an indigent parent could challenge the state policy of favoring public rather than private schools, or of preferring instruction in English rather than German, on grounds identical in principle to those advanced here. We think it abundantly clear that a state is not required to show a compelling interest for its policy choice to favor normal childbirth any more than a state must so justify its election to fund public but not private education.

Id., 432 U.S. at 477; see also Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455, 462 (1973).

Similarly, if a city may ban the performance of abortions and staff a hospital with physicians who refuse to perform abortions, as in Poelker, government may necessarily refuse to provide public counseling to have abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother. By doing so, it merely leaves the woman dependent on private funding.

This was confirmed by the Ninth Circuit in Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983). Reviewing a state ban on public assistance for "counseling for abortion procedures," the Ninth Circuit held that the State of Arizona may not unreasonably interfere with the right of Planned Parenthood to engage in abortion or abortion-related speech, but the state need not support, monetarily or otherwise, those activities. 718 F.2d at 944. The appeal from this holding to the Supreme Court was dismissed. Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 479 U.S. 926 (No. 86-378) (1986). See also Planned Parenthood Association-Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 531 F. Supp. 320, 325 (N.D. Ill. 1981), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 700 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983).

This Court should note that the court of appeals did not separately focus on the "encouraging and counseling" language of § 188.205. Instead, it broadly held "that the ban on using public funds, employees and facilities to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion is an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." (J.S. App. A70.) Clearly, the court below was primarily concerned with the more restrictive language contained in §§ 188.210 and 188.215, which sought to forbid speech by employees and in public facilities. Section 188.205 does not forbid speech; it is only concerned with the spending of public money. By refusing the use of public funds for the purpose of directly urging a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life, the State does not impose any obstacle on the right created by Roe v. Wade.

Consequently, it cannot be concluded that the language of § 188.205 facially violates a right to privacy. The court of appeals' broad condemnation is inapplicable to the limited restrictions of this statutory provision.

B. First Amendment Rights Are Not Infringed by a Restriction on the Use of Public Funds.

As indicated above, both Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. at 546, and Lyng v. International Union, 108 S.Ct. at 1190, "reject the notion that First Amendment rights are somehow not fully realized unless they are subsidized . . . ."

The language of § 188.205 directs officials not to expend public funds under their control for the purpose of performing abortion services, including encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life. It is well recognized that the First Amendment rights of public employees are only implicated when employees "comment on matters of 'public concern.'" Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. 2891 (1987); Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 140 (1983). The Supreme Court has permitted governments to place absolute restrictions on some First Amendment rights of public employees. See United States Civil Service Commission

v. National Association of Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973).

Obviously, the language of this statute does not forbid any discussion regarding abortion issues or any other type of public concern; nor does it reach any private speech or conduct. Thus, it would be inappropriate to conclude that the First Amendment was implicated by reliance upon cases reviewing criminal laws applied entirely to private persons or conduct, such as Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809 (1975).

Instead, the only question is whether a woman has a First Amendment right to publicly funded counseling services. Such a right is imaginary. The recent decision of a New York district court concerning the constitutionality of regulations setting standards under Title X of the Public Health Services Act of 1970, 42 U.S.C. 300, et seq., contains an appropriate comment:

> The point here, however, is that HHS's regulations, which merely withhold grants of federal funds from those who wish to counsel women about abortion, refer them to abortion providers, or advocate, encourage or promote abortion in other ways, do not violate the rights of either such persons or their patients. The regulations do not prohibit or compel speech. They grant money to support one view and not another; but that is quite different from infringing on free speech.

New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261, 1273-1274 (S.D. N.Y. 1988).[8]

---

8. The constitutionality of the Title X regulations is currently before three courts of appeals. The regulations have been permanently enjoined by two district courts. Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.); Planned Parenthood Federation v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal docketed, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.). They have been upheld by one district court. New York v. Bowen, supra.

The State of Missouri submits that § 188.205 does not implicate or infringe upon any First Amendment rights.

C. The Phrase "for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion . . ." Is Not Vague.

In its eagerness to declare the encouraging and counseling language used by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri to be vague, the court of appeals ignored not only the appropriate standard for review but also the "well-established principle that statutes will be interpreted to avoid constitutional difficulties [citations omitted]. Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 2501 (1988). In reaching its decision regarding the second half of § 188.205, the court below decided that the language implicated First Amendment rights, rejected a narrow interpretation offered by the Missouri Attorney General's Office, and ignored the most accepted definitions of the words it declared vague.

Initially, as discussed above, this Court should note that § 188.205 does not explicitly implicate the First Amendment rights of any person. The court of appeals clearly erred in reviewing § 188.205 pursuant to a strict scrutiny standard. The statute has no criminal penalties, and does not forbid anyone from freely discussing abortion.

Reviewing courts have frequently "expressed greater tolerance of enactments with civil rather than criminal penalties because the consequences of imprecision are qualitatively less severe." Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, 455 U.S. 489, 498-499 (1982). Although the district court in this case acknowledged that "it is clear that these sections do not impose criminal penalties . . . ," Id. at 1317, n. 48, each court below concluded that strict judicial scrutiny was warranted in its review of § 188.205 because First Amendment freedoms of expression were "clearly involved."

Since First Amendment freedoms are not implicated here, the court erred in not applying a less restrictive standard of vagueness to determine the validity of this provision regarding the expenditure of public funds. As this Court recently observed, "Vagueness challenges to statutes not threatening First Amendment interests are examined in light of the facts of the case at hand; the statute is judged on an as-applied basis." Maynard v. Cartwright, 108 S.Ct. 1853, 1858 (1988). Thus, plaintiff's facial challenge is inappropriate.

Even if First Amendment freedoms are somehow implicated, a "strict scrutiny" review of vagueness is not applicable. In Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972), and Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973), First Amendment freedoms were "implicated." Yet this Court did not apply any "strict scrutiny" test. Likewise, Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, supra, does not establish that civil regulations "implicating" free speech are subject to such a standard. Rather, Flipside, in dictum, implied merely that criminal laws that "interfere with the right of free speech" are subject to "a more stringent vagueness test." 455 U.S. at 499. For this proposition, the court cited Grayned, 408 U.S. at 109, involving a criminal statute, in which the court did not apply any "strict scrutiny" test.

The State submits that § 188.205 is constitutional and it "delineate[s] [its] reach in words of common understanding." Grayned, 408 U.S. at 112. When the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals examined similar but less specific language, it concluded that the term "counseling for abortion procedures" was not so vague that a reasonable person would not understand what abortion-related activities Arizona had legislatively decided not to fund. See Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 948-949 (9th Cir. 1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd, Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986).

The language which must be examined is "[f]or the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." In Black's Law Dictionary "encourage" is defined as follows:

> In criminal law. To instigate; to incite to action; to give courage to; to inspirit; to embolden; to raise confidence; to make confident; to help; to forward; to advise.

Black's Law Dictionary, 620 (4th ed. 1957). "Counseling" is defined as:

> 3. Advice given by one person to another in regard to a proposed line of conduct . . . .

Id. at 418.

When one reads the terms "counseling" and "encouraging" in the context of the rest of the sentence, it is clear that the statute has a much narrower and specific reach than suggested by the court of appeals. The courts below read the terms as though they referred to "'encouraging or counseling' women about abortions" generally. The Attorney General of Missouri submits that this restriction is clearly designed to prohibit the expenditure of public funds for the identified purpose of affirmatively advocating to a particular woman that she undertake an abortion procedure not necessary to save her life. The statute does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy.

Contrary to the reasoning of the court of appeals, appellants do not argue that "encouraging" or "counseling" have the same meaning. Obviously, one can encourage an action without the formality normally associated with a counseling session. However, both "encouraging" and "counseling" refer to advocacy in the context of the statute.

Section 188.205 is not directed at the conduct of any physician or health care provider, private or public. Instead, it is directed solely at those persons responsible for expending public funds. Under Missouri law, funds cannot be expended unless appropriated by law for that purpose. See §§ 33.170 and 21.260, RSMo 1986. Section 188.205 directs public officials and governing bodies not to expend funds under their control for the purpose of performing abortion services, including counseling women to have elective abortions.

The statute does not forbid incidental conduct or the incidental use of funds for counseling, so long as the expenditure has a legitimate public purpose. The section refers to "encouraging" and "counseling" for a particular line of proposed conduct. The section is not vague on this score. The purpose of this statute is one which may not be desired by the plaintiffs, but there is nothing vague about it and it provides a reasonable person fair notice of the conduct which will not be subsidized by the state.

A statute is not vague because there exists a potential for a difference of opinion regarding the scope of the statute. See Arizona, 718 F.2d at 948. Although there may be disputes regarding the meaning of terms and phrases, one must acknowledge, as this Court has, that "there are limitations in the English language with respect to being both specific and manageably brief, and it seems to us that although the prohibitions may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, they are set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with without sacrifice to the public interest." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. at 608.

The court below mistakenly relies upon one of the Supreme Court loyalty-oath cases of the 1960's which the court understood to establish that the word "counsel" is "fraught with ambiguity." (J.S. App. A68.) Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 367 (1964), quotes Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction, 368 U.S. 278, 286 (1961), which invalidated an oath for teachers. The oath in Cramp was very different from the Missouri law because it required an employee to swear that he "has not lent aid, advice, counsel and the like to the Communist Party." 368 U.S. at 285. That language—lent aid, advice, counsel —was very broad in its context because the oath takers were required to swear "that they have not in the unending past ever knowingly lent" such aid. Id. at 286. In contrast, § 188.205 does not refer to "counsel" in the abstract, as the Cramp oath did, but rather "counseling" for a very specific purpose—"to have" a particular type of abortion—one "not necessary to save the life of the mother."

In sum, the State submits that the plain language of § 188.205 forbids the expenditure of public money for the purpose of advising a woman to have an elective abortion. Because the statute "delineates its reach in words of common understanding," § 188.205 is not void for vagueness. Grayned, 408 U.S. at 112.

V. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding That Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy Because This Court Previously Held in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), That a Public Hospital Need Not Provide Abortion Services.

In §§ 188.210 and 188.215, the State of Missouri provided in part that it should be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. These provisions were declared to be unconstitutional under Nyberg v. City of Virginia (Nyberg II), 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), a two-to-one decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in which the court refused to remove an injunction previously issued against a municipality entered because of an ordinance prohibiting the performance of abortion in a community hospital.[9]

The Eighth Circuit's decision to rely upon Nyberg and declare the performing or assisting language in each of these two statutes to be unconstitutional is contrary to the superior authority of Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), wherein this Court upheld a mayor's "directive," id. at 550, applicable to both of the two city-owned hospitals in St. Louis, id. at 519, which totally "prohibited the performance of abortions in the city hospitals

---

9. The Nyberg decision has created considerable confusion in the law since 1983. It contributes to a recent trend by federal courts to ignore the holding of Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), and to force public hospitals and public programs to support abortion services. See, e.g., Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) (permanently enjoining federal regulations at 53 Fed. Reg. 1922 (Feb. 2, 1988) that preclude federally funded projects from providing abortion counseling or referral); Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988) (same); Roe v. City of Owensboro and Daviess County, No. 88-0097 (W.D. Ky. June 22, 1988) (temporary restraining order entered against enforcement of Ky. Ref. Stat. 311.800(1), prohibiting use of pubic facilities to perform abortions). See, contra, New York v. Bowen, No. 88-0701 (S.D. N.Y. June 30, 1988) (upholding regulations at 53 Fed. Reg. 2922); County Executive of Prince George County v. Doe, 300 Md. 445, 479 A.2d 352 (1984) (challenge to order prohibiting abortions in public hospitals did not raise substantial federal claim).

except when there was a threat of grave physiological injury or death to the mother." Id. at 520. This Court also upheld a staffing practice whereby one city hospital used doctors only from "a Jesuit-operated institution opposed to abortion." Id.[10]

The court of appeals' decision is also in conflict with several decisions of this Court which have broadly held that government may refuse to provide any public assistance for any abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. In Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), this Court limited benefits for abortions "to those that are medically necessary," id. at 466, because it placed "no obstacle—absolute or otherwise—in the pregnant woman's path . . . she continues as before to be dependent on private sources for the service she desires." Id. at 474. It "imposed no restriction on access to abortions that was not already there" (i.e., the dependency on private sources). Id. The court held that the policy was constitutional, even if it made it "impossible" for a woman to have an abortion that was not "medically necessary." Id. at 466, 474.

Most recently, in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), this Court upheld "the most restrictive version of the Hyde Amendment," id. at 325, n. 27, which withheld funds for abortion "except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term." Id. at 325, n. 27. Citing Maher, the Court held that the most restrictive Hyde Amendment was constitutional even if it made it "impossible" for a woman to obtain an abortion in a case where "the life of the mother would [not] be endangered if the fetus were carried to term." Id. at 315-316, n. 27. See also Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980).

10. The dissent of Judge Heaney in Nyberg II describes the serious conflicts between the language of Poelker and the majority decision of the Eighth Circuit panel. 667 F.2d 759-760 (Heaney, J., dissenting).

In applying these controlling precedents, the courts below erroneously limited their broad principle to mean merely that the government is not obligated to fund abortions. They found Poelker uncontrolling where no public funds would be expended. This is a misconstruction. The directive upheld in Poelker was not a narrow restriction on "funding" abortions but broadly prohibited "the performance of abortions in the city hospitals." 432 U.S. at 520 (emphasis added). As the dissent emphasized, the directive made no exceptions for "paid" abortions, for doctors who "would willingly perform them," or for small communities "where the public hospital is the only health care facility." Id. at 523-524 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The court did not require such exceptions, but broadly held that St. Louis could elect "as a policy choice, to provide publicly financed hospital services for childbirth without providing corresponding services for nontherapeutic abortions." Id. at 521 (emphasis added).

The decision by the court of appeals that the abortion right of a paying customer is violated by a statute forbidding a public medical facility from performing an abortion not necessary to save the life of the paying customer means that every public medical facility must provide abortion services. Clearly, if a state cannot direct a public facility to not provide elective abortion services, the public facility cannot refuse such services of its own accord. In essence, the court below held that the abortion right established in Roe v. Wade, requires the State to provide the services of its employees to perform abortions in any existing medical facility to someone willing to pay for the cost of the service.

The court of appeals accepted plaintiffs' reasoning that since one public hospital in the State of Missouri purports to charge enough to cover the full expense of an abortion, then the performance of the operation is not being provided as a public service (J.S. App. A76-A78, n. 14). Apparently, the services of a public facility cannot be withheld in compliance with the will of the public if a large enough fee is offered. The error of plaintiffs' contention and the decisions below becomes obvious when one realizes that a service provided by the public to the public remains a public service, no matter how the government derives the funds to build a facility, maintain a facility, or compensate the public employees who work at a facility.[11] Whether the funds come from state taxes, local taxes, or user fees, the public nature of the service does not undergo any fundamental metamorphosis. Thus, this Court was entirely correct when it decided in Poelker v. Doe that "the constitutional question presented here is identical in principle with that presented . . . in Maher v. Roe." Id. 432 U.S. at 521.

The misapplication of Poelker by the courts below was particularly egregious because Poelker challenged the local policy as it was applied to a particular woman denied an abortion in St. Louis' public hospitals, whereas

11. A concurring opinion by Circuit Judge Clark in Greco v. Orange Memorial Hospital Corporation, 513 F.2d 873 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1000 (1975), succinctly addresses the issue:

> Doe and Roe teach that a state cannot forbid certain types of abortions but they do not create any duty on Orange County's part to furnish facilities for such operations. Just as the Eagle Coffee Shop in Wilmington's parking garage could not have been forced to furnish kosher food or serve fish on Friday, so the Orange County Hospital cannot be compelled to allow its facilities to be used for elective abortions. 513 F.2d at 883.

plaintiffs' is merely a facial challenge. See United States v. Salerno, ..... U.S. ....., 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987).

Plaintiffs simply cannot persuasively argue that §§ 188.210 and 188.215 impose any obstacle which would substantially burden the effectuation of a woman's decision to obtain an abortion.[12] Since this Court's decision in Poelker v. Doe, and the affirmance by the Eighth Circuit of the district court's decision upholding the Mayor's directive, there have been no public hospitals providing abortions in the City of St. Louis. Despite the unavailability of such public services, there is no evidence whatsoever that any St. Louis woman has been unable to effectuate her decision through the private abortion providers in the St. Louis area, including Reproductive Health Services, Inc.[13]

The appellants respectfully submit that the court of appeals' decision regarding the "performing or assisting" language in §§ 188.210 and 188.215 was erroneous as explained in this section of the argument. Federal courts are obligated to separate constitutional provisions from unconstitutional provisions in a statute "and to maintain the act in so far as it is valid." Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 652 (1984). Missouri has a general severability clause in its statutes. Section 1.140, RSMo 1986.

12. Only three hospitals in Missouri provide abortions on a regular basis (an average of one per week) (Plf. Exh. 19, Tr. 2-76). Only one of those three hospitals is a public facility, Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri. No evidence was introduced indicating that any other type of public medical facility, i.e. a public ambulatory surgical center, provides abortions in the State.

13. Reproductive Health Services, Inc., provided 8,000 abortions in 1985 and projected a total of 7,800 in 1986 (Widdecombe Tr. 2-59 - 2-60). A total of ten private clinics regularly provided abortions during 1988 in the State of Missouri (per Dr. Vicky Pierson, Missouri Department of Health, 1988 health statistics).

The district court relied on this severability clause to sever and uphold the first sentence of § 188.029, and the court of appeals severed and upheld the first sentence of § 188.205. The court of appeals should have likewise severed and upheld the "performing or assisting" language of §§ 188.210 and 188.215. Consequently, the judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the courts below were in error when they rendered their decisions. The judgment of the court of appeals, insofar as it invalidated §§ 1.205.1(1) and 1.205.1(2), the second half of § 188.029, the second half of § 188.205, and the first half of §§ 188.210 and 188.215, should be reversed and the injunctions dissolved.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782
Attorneys for Appellants

APPELLEE'S

BRIEF

FILED

JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

—v.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR APPELLEES

[redacted]
[redacted]
[redacted]
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
[redacted]
New York 10019
[redacted]

[redacted]
[redacted]
Blumenthal, Kummel & Steffrin
[redacted]
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern and Western Missouri
[redacted]

Attorneys for Appellees

[redacted]
ACLU Foundation, Inc.

Counsel of Record

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iv

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 1

ARGUMENT

I. THE STATE'S AND THE SOLICITOR GENERAL'S SUGGESTION THAT THIS COURT OVERRULE ROE V. WADE SHOULD BE REJECTED 2

A. The Values Embodied In The Doctrine of Stare Decisis Demand That Roe v. Wade Not Be Overruled 3

B. The Decision To Terminate Or Continue A Pregnancy Is A Fundamental Right 6

C. The Compelling State Interest In The Fetus Logically Arises At Viability 11

D. The Precedents Set In Roe And Its Progeny Are Neither Complex Nor Difficult To Apply; At Any Rate, Complexity Is Not An Adequate Justification For Abandoning Constitutional Rights 15

E. Returning The Abortion Issue To The States Defeats Basic Principles Of Constitutional Government 17

II. SECTIONS 1.205.1(1) AND (2), WHICH PURPORT TO DEFINE WHEN HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AND GRANT TO THE UNBORN "PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH, AND WELL-BEING," VIOLATE THE UNITED STATES AND MISSOURI CONSTITUTIONS 19

PAGE

A. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Violate The United States Constitution 19

1. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Are Operative Statutory Provisions Which Define The Reach Of The State's Abortion Regulations 19

2. Sections 1.205(1) And (2) Extend The Meaning Of The Act's Abortion Restrictions To Severely Restrict Access To Some Contraceptives 21

B. Sections 1.205(1) And (2) Violate The Missouri Constitution 23

III. SECTION 188.029, REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO MAKE FINDINGS OF GESTATIONAL AGE, FETAL WEIGHT AND LUNG MATURITY, IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL UNDER ANY STANDARD OF REVIEW 26

A. Section 188.029 Advances No Legitimate State Interest 26

B. The State's Statutory Interpretation Is Too Implausible To Represent An Acceptable Saving Construction 28

C. If This Court Is Inclined To View § 188.029 As Fairly Susceptible To The State's Proposed Construction, It Should Abstain From Federal Jurisdiction 30

PAGE

IV. THE BAN ON THE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR "ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION" SHOULD BE REMANDED FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOOTNESS; IF THIS ISSUE IS NOT MOOT, THE RESTRICTION MUST BE FOUND UNCONSTITUTIONAL IN VIOLATION OF THE FIRST AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENTS. 31

A. There Appears No Longer To Be A Case Or Controversy 31

B. If There Is a Case or Controversy, Then The Public Funds Provision Is Unconstitutional. ... 35

1. The Public Funds Provision Violates The First Amendment 35

2. The Phrase "Counseling and Encouraging" Is Unconstitutionally Vague 41

3. The Public Funds Restriction Violates The Fourteenth Amendment 43

V. THE BAN ON ABORTIONS IN PUBLIC FACILITIES IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE IT AFFECTS TOTALLY PRIVATE CONDUCT 44

A. The Public Facilities Provision Unconstitutionally Interferes With Wholly Private Medical Treatment In Government Owned And Operated Institutions. 45

B. The Public Facilities Provision Unconstitutionally Interferes With Wholly Private Medical Treatment In Private Institutions And Other Private Settings 47

CONCLUSION 50

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

PAGE

Alsager v. Polk County, 406 F. Supp. 10 (S.D. Iowa 1975), aff'd, 545 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1976) 41

Arkansas Writer's Project v. Ragland, 107 S. Ct. 1722 (1987) 40

Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288 (1936) 34

Berry v. Majestic Milling Co., 223 S.W. 738 (Mo. 1920) 24

Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809 (1975)..... 36

Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964) 41

Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products, 463 U.S. 60 (1983)... 36

Boos v. Barry, 108 S. Ct. 1157 (1988) ..:..... 38

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 8

Bradwell v. Illinois, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 130 (1873) 8

Brandenburg v. Ohio, 396 U.S. 444 (1969)..... 5

Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491 (1985) 30

Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) 5, 8, 9, 16

Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, 349 U.S. 294 (1955)..... 6

Brown v. Board of Education, 671 F. Supp. 1290 (D. Kan. 1987)..... 16

Brown Group, Inc. v. Administrative Hearing Commission, 649 S.W.2d 874 (Mo. banc 1983) 29

PAGE

Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977) 4, 7, 10, 23, 50

Charles v. Carey, 579 F. Supp. 464 (N.D. Ill. 1983).... 15

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 4, 5, 15, 20, 36, 43, 44, 46

City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984) 38

City of Mesquite v. Aladdin's Castle, Inc., 455 U.S. 283 (1982) 23

Cleveland Board of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) 4, 10

Clites v. Iowa, 322 N.W.2d 917 (Iowa App. 1982) 4

Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15 (1971)..... 37

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979).....28, 36, 43

Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983)..... 39

County of Washington v. Gunther, 452 U.S. 161 (1981).. 4

Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction, 368 U.S. 278 (1961) 41

Deaconess Hospital v. McRoberts, No. 874-00172 (Mo. Cir. Ct. St. Louis County May 21, 1987) 20-21

Deakins v. Monaghan, 108 S. Ct. 523 (1988)..... 33

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 23

Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 2, 6, 9, 23

PAGE

Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97 (1968) 40

Erie Railway Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) 5

Eubanks v. Collins, No. C 82-0360 L(A) (W.D. Ky. Sept. 11, 1985) 15

Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1 (1947) 50

Federal Communications Commission v. League of Women Voters of California, 468 U.S. 364 (1984) ... 41

Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S. Ct. 2495 (1988) 29-30

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 5

Giaccio v. Pennsylvania, 382 U.S. 399 (1966) 41

Givhan v. Western Lines Consolidated School District, 439 U.S. 410 (1979) 39

Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972).....30, 42

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).....2, 6, 8, 9, 23, 35, 36

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 43, 44, 46, 49

Illinois ex rel. McCollom v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203 (1948)..... 16

In re Bowen, 82 B.R. 102 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1988)..... 24

In re Ray, 83 B.R. 670 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1988) 24

In the Matter of Steven S., 126 Cal. App. 3d 23, 178 Cal. Rptr. 525 (Cal. Ct. App. 1981)..... 12

PAGE

Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) 5, 14-15

Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589 (1967).... 40

Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 355 (1983).....30, 42

Kremens v. Bartley, 431 U.S. 119 (1977)..... 34

Libson v. Henry, 204 S.W.2d 310 (Mo. 1947) 42

Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 3

Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) 2, 7

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 49

Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961) 5

Margaret S. v. Treen, 597 F. Supp. 636 (E. D. La. 1984) 15

Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil, 312 U.S. 270 (1941) 33

Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.)..... 33

Matter of Quinlan, 70 N.J. 10, 355 A.2d 647 (1976) ... 4

Mesker Brothers Industries v. Leachman, 529 S.W.2d 153 (Mo. 1975) 30

Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973) 14

Moore v. East Cleveland Ohio, 431 U.S. 494 (1977).... 4

Morgentaler v. Her Majesty, The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 40 D.L.R. 4th 385 (Canada S. Ct. 1988) 17

Munson v. Meierhenry, No. 80-3043 (D.S.D. Sept. 29, 1983)..... 15

New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261 (S.D.N.Y. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-6204 (2d Cir.) 33

PAGE

Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 46

Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928) 9

Owens v. City of Jennings Municipal Fire and Police Civil Service Board, 454 So. 2d 426 (La. Ct. App. 1984) 4

Paton v. United Kingdom (1980) 3 E.H.R.R. 408 (European Commission of Human Rights) 17

People v. Stewart, No. M508197 (San Diego Mun. Ct. Feb. 26, 1987) 12-13

Perry Education Association v. Perry Local Educators' Association, 460 U.S. 37 (1983) 14

Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 2

Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 5, 30

Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988) 33

Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 687 F. Supp. 540 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.) 33

Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348, aff'd mem. sub. nom. Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 479 U.S. 925 (1986) 42, 49

Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) 8

Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 9, 35

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 44, 45, 46

Propeller Genessee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 443 (1851) 5

PAGE

Protection Mutual Insurance Company v. Kansas City, 504 S.W.2d 127 (Mo. 1974) 25

Puerto Rico v. Branstad, 107 S. Ct. 2802 (1987) 5

The Queen v. Bayliss and Culleon (1986) 9 Qld Lawyer Reps. 8 (Queensland, Australia) 17

Railroad Commission of Texas v. Pullman Co., 312 U.S. 496 (1941) 30

Rankin v. McPherson, 483 U.S. 378, reh'g denied, 108 S. Ct. 31 (1987) 39

Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 71 (1971) 14

Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971) 8

Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 40-41

Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549 (1947) 34-35

Reyes v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 3d 214, 141 Cal. Rptr. 912 (Cal. Ct. App. 1977) 13

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) 15

Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976) 23

Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 2

A.B. Small v. American Sugar Refining Co., 267 U.S. 233 (1925) 41

PAGE

Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649 (1944) 4

Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393 (1975) 34

Southwestern Oil v. Texas, 217 U.S. 114 (1910) 8

Stallman v. Youngquist, 531 N.E.2d 355 (1988) 12

State ex rel. McNary v. Stussie, 518 S.W.2d 630 (Mo. banc 1974) 25

State ex rel. Missouri State Board of Registration for the Health Arts v. Southworth, 704 S.W.2d 219 (Mo. banc 1986) 29

Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452 (1974) 33

Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 354 U.S. 234 (1957) 40

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 2, 5, 9, 10, 11 15, 36, 43

Treasury Employees v. Von Raab, U.S. Docket No. 86-1879 (March 21, 1989).....34, 49

Turner v. Safley, 107 S. Ct. 2254 (1987)..... 4, 7

United States v. Vaughn, Crim. No. F-2172-88B, 117 Daily Wash. L. Rptr. 441, Mar. 7, 1989 (D.C. Sup. Ct. Aug. 23, 1988) 13

Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254 (1986) 3, 5

Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489 (1982)..... 41

Virginia v. American Booksellers Association, Inc., 108 S. Ct. 636 (1988) 30

Virginia State Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748 (1976) 36

PAGE

Wainwright v. City of New Orleans, 392 U.S. 598 (1968) 35

Watson v. City of Memphis, 373 U.S. 526 (1963)..... 9

West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943)..... 18

Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 44

Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483 (1955) ... 28

Wolman v. Walter, 433 U.S. 229 (1977) 16

Women's Community Health Center v. Tierney, Nos. 79-162-P, 79-165-P (D. Me. Sept. 9, 1983)..... 15

Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978) 4, 7

Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952) 16

Books, Articles and Other Publications:

Alan Guttmacher Institute, Legislative Record, State Legislatures—1984 Bills Enacted (1984)..... 15

American Medical Association, Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs (1986) 37

Benshoof, The Chastity Act: Government Manipulation of Abortion Information and the First Amendment, 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1916 (1988) 33

Burnhill, Intrauterine Contraception, in Fertility Control 271 (1985) 22

Court-Ordered Cesareans: A Growing Concern for Indigent Women, 1988 Clearinghouse Review 1064 21

Donovan, Fertility-Related State Laws Enacted in 1981, 14 Family Planning Perspectives 63 (1979) 15

Henshaw et al., Abortion Services In The United States 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63 (1987) 46

PAGE

W. Hern, Abortion Practice (1984) 46

Hirt, Why the Government Is Not Required To Subsidize Abortion Counseling And Referral, 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1895 (1988) 33

International Planned Parenthood Federation, Family Planning Handbook for Doctors (6th ed. 1988)..... 22

Law, Rethinking the Constitution, 132 U. Pa. L. Rev. 955 (1984) 14

D. Mishell & V. Davagan, Infertility, Contraception & Reproductive Technology (2d ed. 1986)..... 22

J.C. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy (1978).....7, 8, 9

Obstetric-Gynecologic Terminology (E. Hughes ed. 1972)..... 2

Report of the Committee on Fetal Extrauterine Survivability to the New York State Task Force on Life and the Law (January 1988) 13-14

Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Report on Fetal Viability and Clinical Practice (1985) 14

M. Yudoff, When Government Speaks (1983)..... 38

Yuzpe, Postcoital Contraception, in Fertility Control 289 (1985)..... 22

PAGE

Constitutions, Statutes and Regulations:

United States Constitution:
Article III 33
First Amendment 35-44
Fourteenth Amendment .....passim

Missouri Constitution:
Art. 3, § 23 24
Art. 3, § 28 .....25, 26

Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 38 § 81-21 (Smith Hurd 1977) 18

Idaho Code § 18-614 (Michie 1987) 18

Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 311.710(5) (Michie 1983) 18

La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40.1299.35.0 (West 1989 Supp.) . 18

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1986).....19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26
§ 188.015 21
§ 188.029 .....6, 26, 27, 30, 31
§ 188.200 45
§ 188.205 31
§ 188.210.....22, 31, 47
§ 188.215 .....21, 22, 31, 44
§ 334.100 41
Chap. 197 47

H.B. No. 1596, Mo. Gen. Assem., 2d Sess. (1986)..... 19

S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-21 (Michie 1986)... 18

21 C.F.R § 801.427(b)(2) (1988) 37

Miscellaneous:

Arizona Att'y Gen. Op. No. 179-252..... 42

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) should be neither reconsidered nor overruled. The right to choose abortion is properly among the fundamental liberties protected by this Court's jurisprudence. It is a right consistent with our concept of ordered liberty, our history, and tradition. Recognition of viability as the point at which a state interest in fetal survival becomes compelling is also consistent with our history, medical reality, and the constitutional principle that a woman's autonomy not be abrogated by state action because of a pregnancy.

The declaration of when life begins is unconstitutional because it is the foundation of an Act that regulates abortion and it has impermissible substantive effect. It requires the abortion regulations in the Act to reach a variety of methods of contraception. Alternatively, this issue should be remanded for consideration of unaddressed questions of state law.

The testing requirement is unconstitutional because it burdens the obtaining of abortions for no legitimate reason. The State's reading of the statute is implausible, and deference is due the statutory interpretation of the Court of Appeals. If this Court believes that construction is obviously wrong, then abstention should be ordered.

There appears no longer to be a case or controversy about the restriction on the use of public funds for the purpose of counseling or encouraging a woman to have an abortion. The State has not appealed and is not challenging the holding invalidating the same restrictions on public employees and anyone in a public facility. This issue should be remanded for consideration of mootness. To reach the merits presumes there is a restriction on the speech of the plaintiffs. Such a restriction violates the first amendment because it is government manipulation of highly important personal communications. It is viewpoint discriminatory and unconstitutionally vague. It violates the fourteenth amendment rights of women to make a choice about abortion in consultation with their physicians.

The public facilities provision is unconstitutional because it imposes a substantial obstacle for women who must obtain an abortion in a hospital owned and operated by the State, even when no State funds are involved. It will also interfere with and penalize private conduct in private institutions solely because that conduct implicates some asset controlled by the State.

ARGUMENT

I. THE STATE'S AND THE SOLICITOR GENERAL'S SUGGESTION THAT THIS COURT OVERRULE ROE V. WADE SHOULD BE REJECTED

Once again this Court has been asked to reconsider and to retreat from its holding in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Roe is a decision of enduring constitutional significance. It shielded a woman's private choice of whether to terminate or continue a pregnancy from the vicissitudes of the political process, making clear that the fourteenth amendment's guarantee of liberty "extends to women as well as to men." See Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 772 (1986). By so doing, the Court enabled millions of American women to enter the work force, continue their education, and escape the spectre of illegal abortions or forced pregnancies which had threatened the lives of countless women before them.

Roe was a logical and necessary outgrowth of the long line of cases preceding it which recognized a fundamental right to privacy in matters of childbearing and family life. Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) (contraception); Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) (marriage); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (contraception); Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) (procreation); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) (childrearing). Those cases embodied the principle that the value our society places on individual autonomy demands that decisions with a profound effect on personal identity and destiny be placed largely beyond the reach of government. Eisenstadt, 405 U.S. at 453; Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772. Roe arose inevitably out of that principle because this Court recognized that the decision to terminate or continue a pregnancy has the same, if not greater, implications for altering the course of a woman's life[1] as the decisions on contraception and marriage which it had previously found to be protected by the fundamental privacy right. 410 U.S. at 153.

A. The Values Embodied In The Doctrine of Stare Decisis Demand That Roe v. Wade Not Be Overruled

A proponent of overruling precedent normally must meet a "heavy burden of persuading the Court that changes in society or in the law dictate that the values served by stare decisis yield in favor of a greater objective." Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 266 (1986). That burden must be especially heavy in this case. Overruling Roe has the potential to undermine the values served by stare decisis to a greater extent than any such action in the history of this Court.

First, in overruling Roe, this Court would, for the first time in its history, withdraw from constitutional protection a previously recognized fundamental personal liberty.[2] Concomitantly, also in an unprecedented manner, constitutionally protected conduct undertaken daily by literally thousands of citizens would be open to abrupt criminalization.[3]

---

1 Roe recognized the difficulties of caring for an unwanted child, the stigma of unwed motherhood, the taxing of mental and physical health by child care, and the health risks of pregnancy. 410 U.S. at 153. Studies have documented the profound effect on educational and employment opportunities for women of untimely pregnancies as well as the continued advances in the safety of abortion since its legalization. See Brief Amici Curiae of Seventy-seven Organizations Committed to Women's Equality In Support of Appellees; Brief Amicus Curiae of American Public Health Association In Support of Appellees.

2 Although this Court has modified rights, it has never adjusted precedent so as to withdraw from constitutional protection a fundamental individual liberty. While cases repudiating the principles of Lochner v. N.Y., 198 U.S. 45 (1905), recognized greater governmental power in the area of economic regulation, they in no sense withdrew a fundamental freedom comparable to the right recognized in Roe, one that is central to basic life choices.

3 A number of states have already enacted their intention to do so in laws scheduled to take effect should Roe be overruled. See statutes cited at infra note 30.

Second, there can be no assurance that overruling Roe will be "like a restricted railroad ticket, 'good for this day and train only.' " County of Washington v. Gunther, 452 U.S. 161, 183 (1981) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (quoting Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649, 669 (1944) (Roberts, J., dissenting)). Because Roe is a necessary outgrowth of the sixty years of constitutional evolution delineating the right to privacy, overruling it will open to question the fundamental principles of personal autonomy upon which that right rests, principles which continue to be recognized and applied pervasively in American law.[4]

Third, this Court has already twice in the past six years rejected suggestions that Roe be overruled, resoundingly reaffirming in each instance the principles of that decision. In City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983), this Court rejected the argument that Roe "erred in interpreting the Constitution," id. at 419, and enumerated the "especially compelling reasons for adhering to stare decisis in applying the principles of Roe v. Wade:"

> That case was considered with special care. It was first argued during the 1971 Term, and reargued—with extensive briefing—the following Term. The decision was joined by the Chief Justice and six other Justices. Since Roe was decided in January 1973, the Court repeatedly and consistently has accepted and applied the basic principle that a woman has a fundamental right to make the highly personal choice whether or not to terminate her pregnancy.

---

4 See, e.g., this Court's post-Roe cases applying the right to privacy: Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977) (contraception); Moore v. East Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) (right to make a home with immediate family members); Cleveland Board of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) (pregnancy); Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978) (marriage); Turner v. Safley, 107 S.Ct. 2254 (1987) (prisoners' right to marry). See also state cases applying the privacy right: Matter of Quinlan, 70 N.J. 10, 355 A.2d 647 (1976) (right to privacy includes right to decline medical treatment); Clites v. Iowa, 322 N.W. 2d 917, 922 (Iowa App. 1982) (forcible injection of psychotropic drugs violates right to privacy); Owens v. City of Jennings Municipal Fire and Police Civil Service Bd., 454 So. 2d 426 (La. Ct. App. 1984) (right to privacy includes right not to be penalized for unwed pregnancy).

Id. at 420 n.1 (citations omitted).

Again, in Thornburgh, the Solicitor General urged this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade. But, this Court held: "[a]gain today, we reaffirm the general principles laid down in Roe and in Akron." 476 U.S. at 759. In doing so, this Court noted that "[t]he constitutional principles that led this Court to its decisions in 1973 still provide the compelling reason for recognizing the constitutional dimensions of a woman's right to decide whether to end her pregnancy." Id.

Given the potential for uprooting legal principles so recently reaffirmed and so pervasively relied upon throughout society, overruling Roe strikes at the heart of the value of stare decisis: that "bedrock principles," which establish rules of conduct and scope of rights, have continuity and predictability because they are "founded in the law rather than in the proclivities of individuals." Vasquez, 474 U.S. at 265. Surely, meeting the burden of convincing this Court to disturb those values in circumstances such as these must encompass factors more enduring[5] than a change in the composition of this Court. "[I]t should go without saying that the vitality of these constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with 5 This Court has deviated from the rule of stare decisis only when special circumstances demanded that course. See, e.g., Brown v. Board of Educ., 347 U.S. 483, 492-94 (1954). Such circumstances include changed factual conditions, The Propeller Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 443, 456 (1851); experience showing that the prior rule has been "unsound in principle and unworkable in practice," Garcia v. San Antonio Metrop. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528, 546 (1985); Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 74 (1938); Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 651-53 (1961); and the existence of intervening decisions so inconsistent with the prior rule as to have eroded its force. See, e.g., Puerto Rico v. Branstad, 107 S. Ct. 2802, 2808 (1987); Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969); Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 353 (1967). As the discussion infra will demonstrate, none of these factors is present in this case. Both the factual and legal arguments now offered as grounds for rejecting Roe were made at the time of the decision itself. The rule of Roe has proved as "workable in practice" as any principled decision conferring hard-won and controversial rights. Finally, intervening decisions have supported, rather than eroded, the holding in Roe. See, e.g., Thornburgh, 476 U.S. 747; Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983); City of Akron, 462 U.S. 416.

---

them." Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294, 300 (1955).

As shown below, both the State and the Solicitor General have utterly failed to meet their burden of justifying the radical step they propose.[6]

B. The Decision To Terminate Or Continue A Pregnancy Is A Fundamental Right

The State and the Solicitor General argue first that Roe should be abandoned because the right to abortion is not a fundamental right. This argument is based on three assertions: that abortion is not an explicit guarantee in the Bill of Rights, that it is not deeply rooted in the nation's history and tradition, and that, because of the presence of the fetus, it is different in kind from any privacy right heretofore recognized by this Court.

In support of his argument that Roe should be abandoned because there is no explicit right to abortion in the Constitution, the Solicitor General asserts that Roe was this Court's first privacy case not based on an explicit guarantee in the Bill of Rights. As an historical matter, this is patently false.[7] There can 6 Notably, the State fails to link its suggestion that Roe be overruled to any specific issue in this case. Thus, while it argues that the rational basis test is the correct standard of review for abortion legislation, it does not propose how any provisions of the Act would meet that constitutional test. For example, its defense of the testing requirements (§ 188.029) is based solely in what it alleges to be an error of statutory construction by the Court of Appeals.

The Solicitor General, likewise, only coyly suggests that certain of the provisions "may" run afoul of Roe, Solicitor General's Brief at 8 n.5, but offers no explanation of how or why they would fare better under some other mode of analysis.

7 Although in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, Justice Douglas based the right to privacy on penumbras of the Bill of Rights, five Justices wrote three separate concurrences to emphasize that the holding was not dependent on any explicit constitutional guarantee. See, e.g., id. at 502 (White, J., concurring). The Solicitor General similarly mischaracterizes Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, as simply an equal protection case. In holding that the state may not discriminate between the married and unmarried in access to contraception, the Court said, "[i]f the right of privacy be no doubt, in any event, that the right to privacy, apart from any right to abortion, exists in this Court's modern day jurisprudence as a fundamental right founded on the fourteenth amendment's "liberty" guarantee alone. See, e.g., Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. at 684; Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. at 384; Turner v. Safley, 107 S. Ct. at 2265 (citing Zablocki).

The State and the Solicitor General next argue that abortion is not a fundamental right because it is not "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" or "deeply rooted in the Nation's history and tradition," in part because abortion was illegal in many states by the time the fourteenth amendment was adopted. Solicitor General's Brief ("S.G. Brief") at 13; State's Brief at 17. Factually, they give an incomplete view of history; and legally their conclusions are fallacious.

At the time of the founding of our Republic, abortion before quickening was an accepted practice, protected at common law.[8] Early nineteenth century abortion laws, passed in a few states, mirrored the common law.[9] In the mid-nineteenth century, abortion began to be practiced for the first time on a large scale by married middle-class women in order to limit family size.[10] An effort to suppress this practice resulted in a proliferation, between 1860 and 1880, of the laws banning abortion throughout pregnancy which remained in effect into the twentieth century.[11] These laws were not primarily motivated, however, by notions that abortion was immoral because it took fetal means anything, it is the right of the individual, married or single, to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child." Id. at 453. See also Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. at 12 (right to marry is based on the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment).

8 See generally J.C. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy 3-19 (1978); Brief Amici Curiae of American Historians In Support of Appellees.

9 Mohr, supra note 8, at 43-45.

10 Id. at 86-118.

11 Id. at 200-201.

life, but rather by a broad combination of desires to protect women from unsafe practices,[12] to secure the role of the emerging medical profession,[13] to enforce a narrow vision of the role of women in society,[14] and to stem the falling birth rate among white native-born women at a time of mass immigration.[15] Thus, the arrival and existence of these statutes at the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment is of little relevance to the question of our "nation's history and tradition" when they are considered against the backdrop of abortion as a generally accepted practice and the reasons for their enactment.[16]

Moreover, as a legal matter, the existence of laws at the time of the enactment of the fourteenth amendment does not mean such laws are outside the protection of that amendment. The purpose of the fourteenth amendment was precisely to provide protection against state restrictions on liberty then in effect. Southwestern Oil v. Texas, 217 U.S. 114, 119 (1910). If it were otherwise, then much of this Court's twentieth century constitutional jurisprudence would have to be discarded. Compare Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) and Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971) with Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) and Bradwell v. Illinois, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 130 (1873).

Specifically, this Court has never considered the status of state laws at mid-nineteenth century relevant to ascertaining the scope of the right to privacy. Griswold, 381 U.S. 479, for example, struck down an 1879 state law forbidding the use of contraceptives. That law was itself part of a nationwide wave of similar "Comstock laws" passed contemporaneously with the 12 Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 148-49.

13 Mohr, supra note 8, at 147-170.

14 Id. at 168-69.

15 Id. at 166-67. See also id. at 180-81, 207-208.

16 The State's and the Solicitor General's analogy to Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), is misplaced. In Bowers, this Court declined to find a right to engage in sodomy within the right to privacy because laws against sodomy had "ancient roots," id. at 192, dating at least to the common law received by the states at the time of the ratification of the Bill of Rights. In contrast, "laws generally proscribing abortion . . . are not of ancient or even of common-law origin." Roe, 410 U.S. at 136.

1860-80's abortion legislation discussed above. See Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 519-20 n.10 (1961) (Douglas, J., dissenting).[17] In fact, the 1873 federal Comstock Act was passed by a Congress presumably made up largely of the same members who voted to propose the fourteenth amendment to the states seven years earlier.[18]

The Solicitor General's most serious error is his argument that a fundamental right to abortion does not flow logically out of the general right to privacy or personal autonomy which protects matters of procreation and family life, including contraception, because the woman is not "isolated in her privacy" in making the abortion decision. S.G. Brief at 14, citing Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 792 n.2 (White, J., dissenting). Apparently, the Solicitor General believes that the presence of the fetus, rather than going to the nature of countervailing state interests, as acknowledged in Roe, undercuts the "fundamental" nature of the right itself.

This line of argument misconceives the nature of the "privacy" right in such cases as Griswold and Eisenstadt. That right is in no way dependent on whether an individual is "isolated" in his or her privacy. Rather, it is a right, "as against the Government . . . to be let alone," Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting) (emphasis added), in making the intensely personal decisions regarding the bearing and begetting of children. Such decisions are best left to the individual rather than the state, not because of some abstract value in solitary decisionmaking, but because of the profound effect such decisions have on an individual's destiny.

17 See Mohr, supra note 8, at 196-99, 220-21.

18 Moreover, regardless of its historical position a hundred years ago, the fact is that abortion, through its nationwide legalization sixteen years ago, has become so assimilated into the fabric of society as to become "deeply rooted." This Court noted just nine years after its decision in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, that the rights recognized in that case had become "long-declared and well-established." Watson v. City of Memphis, 373 U.S. 526, 533 (1963). So too the abortion right, exercised by some 20 million women since 1973, has become part of the pattern of American life. Millions of women and teen-age girls today have literally lived their entire childbearing years with the option of safe, legal abortion in the event of an unwanted pregnancy.

Roe, 410 U.S. at 153. In terms of the effect on an individual's future life and the consequent need for personal autonomy, there is little to differentiate such decisions before and after conception.[19] If anything, an individual's privacy interest becomes more weighty after conception. While an individual denied the right to use contraception can avoid pregnancy by avoiding sexual intercourse, a pregnant woman has no alternative beside abortion to avoid bearing a child against her will. Carey, 431 U.S. at 713 (Stevens, J., concurring). See also Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 776 (Stevens, J., concurring).

Indeed, if this Court adopts the Solicitor General's proposed analysis of fundamental rights, according to which the countervailing state interests undercut the nature of the right itself rather than guiding the extent to which it can be abridged, it will have set itself on a course which reaches far beyond the narrow issue of proscription of abortion. If the presence of the fetus demotes the pregnant woman's privacy right to less-than-fundamental status, what other incursions on her personal liberty will be allowed? Since she is no longer "isolated in her privacy," will government be able to dictate her lifestyle and working conditions with the only proviso being that such restrictions pass merely a "rational basis" test?[20] Conversely, can government compel abortion to further rational interests in population control or to save society the expenses of caring for unwanted or handicapped children? Clearly, the wholesale derailment of personal liberty entailed in that analysis is not consistent with the Court's recognizing as "fundamental" those rights necessary to a "free, egalitarian and democratic society." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 793 (White, J., dissenting).

---

19 The view that the presence of the fetus changes the nature of the privacy right is difficult not only jurisprudentially, but in practice. Distinctions between some forms of contraception and abortion are increasingly complicated. Under the definitions in the Missouri statute, all fertilized ovum—even before implantation (when pregnancy occurs)—are protected. This definition, should abortion be made illegal, would prohibit those forms of contraception that act post-fertilization but prior to implantation, such as those discussed in Point II.A.2., infra pp. 21-23.

20 Surely, a case such as Cleveland Board of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) would be overruled by such an analysis.

C. The Compelling State Interest In The Fetus Logically Arises At Viability

The State and the Solicitor General argue that even if there is a fundamental right to decide about abortion, Roe was flawed in holding that the State's countervailing compelling interest in fetal life arises only at viability. They argue that conception, not viability, is the compelling point because (1) viability is an "arbitrary" point, and (2) it is an unworkable principle because it shifts with changing medical technology.

There is nothing arbitrary about fetal viability as the point at which the state interest in fetal life becomes sufficiently substantial to justify interfering with a woman's choice about abortion. Prior to viability, the fetus is dependent upon the body of the woman who conceived it, and it cannot survive without her. Any recognition of an overriding state interest in the fetus during the previability phase necessarily eradicates the woman's privacy interest. After viability, by comparison, the fetus is capable of survival outside of the woman's body, and thus, from that point, a state interest in preventing destruction of the fetus may be implemented without necessarily subordinating the woman's ability to make a choice. Of course, as this Court has consistently held, that state interest never overrides the woman's right to protect her health. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 769.

The balance struck by placing the compelling point at viability is an eminently practical one within a framework of limited government. It allows vindication of the state's interests while leaving this critical life decision, to the maximum extent feasible, in the hands of the person it most affects—the woman. See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 781 (Stevens, J., concurring) ("it is far better to permit some individuals to make incorrect decisions than to deny all individuals the right to make decisions that have a profound effect upon their destiny").

To hold, as the State and amici would have this Court do, that fetal interests are compelling throughout pregnancy would be to say that there is no meaningful distinction between a "freshly fertilized egg" and "a 9 month-gestated fully sentient fetus." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 779 (Stevens, J., concurring).[21] Not only does this position defy logic, its ramifications are profoundly disturbing. Like the argument that abortion should be stripped of its "fundamental" status, an overriding interest in fetal life throughout pregnancy could justify state intervention in areas of individual autonomy other than abortion. The Illinois Supreme Court foresaw such ramifications recently in rejecting a child's suit against its mother for tortious pre-natal injuries. "Any action which negatively impacted on fetal development would be a breach of the pregnant woman's duty to her developing fetus. Mother and child would be legal adversaries from the moment of conception until birth." Stallman v. Youngquist, 531 N.E.2d 355, 359 (1988).[22]

---

21 In recognizing viability as the compelling point, the Roe Court maintained the historic legal tradition of assigning greater value to fetal life late in pregnancy. As this Court observed in Roe, to the extent that limitations on abortion did exist in ancient and common law, they were imposed after quickening or "viability." For example, this Court observed that "[m]ost [ancient] Greek thinkers . . . commended abortion, at least prior to viability," 410 U.S. at 131, and that if abortion was a crime at all at common law, it was only abortion after quickening. Id. at 132-36. The earliest American statutes governing abortion applied only after quickening, id. at 138, and those that applied throughout pregnancy "dealt severely with abortion after quickening but were lenient with it before quickening." Id. at 139.

The significance of quickening at common law "appears to have developed from a confluence of earlier philosophical, theological, and civil and common law concepts of when life begins." Id. at 133. It has also been suggested that the "adoption of the 'quickening' distinction through received common law and state statutes tacitly recognize[d] the greater health hazards inherent in late abortion . . ." Id. at 151-52.

Thus, throughout history, many religious, legal and philosophical perspectives have assigned greater significance to fetal existence at an indefinite point late in pregnancy. Viability constitutes the modern day, and medically meaningful, equivalent of quickening.

22 Efforts by the states to restrain the liberty of pregnant women in order to advance fetal interests have become commonplace. See, e.g., In the matter of Steven S., 126 Cal. App. 3d 23, 178 Cal. Rptr. 525 (Cal. Ct. App. 1981) (pregnant woman detained two months because of alleged inability to care for herself or fetus—appeal dismissed as moot); People v. Stewart, No. M508197 (San Diego Mun. Ct. Feb. 26, 1987) (woman jailed for "fetal neglect" after taking drugs and failing to follow doctor's orders while pregnant—charges later dismissed); Reyes v. Super. Ct., 75 Cal. App. 3d 214, 141 Cal. Rptr. 912 (Cal. Ct. App. 1977) (charges against woman for prenatal child abuse for taking drugs while pregnant and failing to seek prenatal care dismissed on appeal); U.S. v. Vaughn, Crim. No. F-2172 88B, 117 Daily Wash. L. Rptr. 441, Mar. 7, 1989 (D.C. Sup. Ct. Aug. 23, 1988) (woman found guilty of check forging misdemeanor, who tested postive for cocaine, ordered jailed until birth of child despite prosecutor's recommendation of probation).

The State's and Solicitor General's argument that viability is unworkable because it is a "shifting" point is both factually exaggerated and legally unsound.

Contrary to the State's assertion, there is no evidence that viability is moving inexorably toward conception. All available evidence indicates little if any change in this Court's original understanding that viability, a flexible point, arises between the twenty-fourth and twenty-eighth weeks of pregnancy. Roe, 410 U.S. at 160. As the District Court found, medical testimony from both defendants' and plaintiffs' experts and recent medical literature "provid[e] clear evidence that 23½ to 24 weeks gestation is the earliest point in pregnancy when a reasonable possibility of viability exists." Jurisdictional Statement ("J.S.") at A32-33.[23] A recent study concludes that this point may well be immutable.

> The increasing ability over the past decade to save progressively younger neonates is primarily due to the ability to support and assist, at an earlier age, the organs already present in the fetus. The developmental biology of the fetus, however, has not changed. After reviewing the developmental biology of several crucial fetal organs, including the brain, the kidneys, and the lungs, the Committee concluded that a point exists before which the fetal organs are too immature to function even with the assistance of sophisticated medical technology. This point in time is 23-24 weeks of gestation; prior to that time, fetal life cannot be maintained outside the womb.

---

23 Nevertheless, the average survival rate of fetuses in the 23½–25 week range is only 10%. Tr. 4-49 (Keenan).

Report of the Committee on Fetal Extrauterine Survivability to the New York State Task Force on Life and the Law 9 (January 1988).[24]

Moreover, as a legal proposition, there is nothing "unworkable" or novel about the fact that the viability of a particular fetus and hence the physician's duties under the criminal law may vary depending on the state of medical technology, the place where the abortion is performed, and the medical facts of the individual woman's pregnancy. The facts and circumstances of each case determine the scope of many other constitutional protections. For example, in order for a state to establish that speech is obscene and outside the protection of the first amendment, it must show that the speech violates contemporary community standards of decency and does not have overriding artistic, literary or social value as defined by a broader reasonable person standard. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). See also Perry Education Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37, 44 (1983) (right of access to public property differs depending on the character of the property at issue); Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 104 (1980) ("totality of the circumstances" determines whether a person has a reasonable expectation of privacy under the fourth amendment).

Moreover, legal rights and duties change continuously with changes in scientific knowledge. See, e.g., Katz v. United 24 See also similar conclusions in Brief Amici Curiae for American Medical Association and others In Support of Appellees; and Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Report on Fetal Viability and Clinical Practice 14 (1985). See also Law, Rethinking the Constitution, 132 U. Pa. L. Rev. 955, 1023 n.245 (1984) (clarifying sources cited in City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 457 and n.15 (O'Connor, J., dissenting)).

The state's suggestion that the testimony presented to the lower court in this case documents its assertion is patently false. The State claims that evidence showed "a woman who appears to be carrying an unborn child of twenty weeks gestional age (LMP) may have a viable unborn child under 1986 technology . . . two months prior to the third trimester time drawn in Roe v. Wade." State's Brief at 13. What the record did show is that a woman who appears to be twenty weeks pregnant may on further examination and testing be found to be 24 weeks pregnant and therefore possibly carrying a viable fetus. J.S. at A33 n.38. For this reason, the district court upheld the requirement that the physician determine whether the fetus is viable if the woman appears to be twenty weeks pregnant.

States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) (wiretappping applied to the fourth amendment); Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) (blood alcohol testing applied to the fifth amendment). Indeed, the wisdom of an abortion regulation tied to viability is that it does not require legislative action in order to adjust to changes in technology. Rather, the physician's obligations under such a regulation change as technology changes, in the same manner as physicians' tort law obligations continuously change to reflect improvements in all areas of medical care.

D. The Precedents Set In Roe And Its Progeny Are Neither Complex Nor Difficult To Apply; At Any Rate, Complexity Is Not An Adequate Justification For Abandoning Constitutional Rights

The Solicitor General next contends that Roe should be overruled because judicial applications of Roe have become "increasingly complex." S.G. Brief at 19-20. Contrary to the Solicitor's assertion, however, application of Roe has decreased in complexity. The fine points of the scope and application of Roe have been largely resolved by this Court's decisions in Akron and Thornburgh. Following those decisions, numerous lower courts were able to resolve summarily the question of the constitutionality of the statutes before them.[25] State legislatures have passed fewer legislative measures regulating abortions for adult women,[26] focusing instead on parental notice and consent for minors, an issue not yet entirely resolved by this Court. This 25 See, e.g., Charles v. Carey, 579 F. Supp. 464 (N.D. Ill. 1983); Margaret S. v. Treen, 597 F. Supp. 636 (E.D. La. 1984); Eubanks v. Collins, No. C 82-0360 L(A) (W.D. Ky. Sept. 11, 1985); Munson v. Meierhenry, No. 80-3043 (D.S.D. Sept. 29, 1983); Women's Community Health Center, Inc. v. Tierney, Nos. 79-162-P, 79-165-P (D. Me. Sept. 9, 1983).

26 For example, the year after the enactment of the Akron Ordinance (1979), ten states enacted similar laws. Thereafter, the numbers declined, apparently in response to lower federal court decisions declaring such laws unconstitutional, to four such laws in 1980, three in 1981. Donovan, Fertility-Related State Laws Enacted in 1981, 14 Family Planning Perspectives 63, 66 (1979). In contrast, in 1984, the year after City of Akron was decided, only one state legislature enacted a comprehensive anti-abortion statute. The Alan Guttmacher Institute, Legislative Record, State Legislatures—1984 Bills Enacted (1984).

refusal to retreat from the principles established in Roe v. Wade, and its consistent application of these principles in subsequent decisions, has plainly clarified the law for both courts and legislatures.

But even if this were not so, "complexity" of any degree has never alone provided a ground for retreat from heightened constitutional protection of fundamental rights. Indeed, the precise contours of equality in education under this Court's seminal decision in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, remain the subject of pending litigation to this day.[27] If mere "complexity" in application could undermine constitutional guarantees, the Bill of Rights itself would be in jeopardy.[28]

Moreover, unless this Court wholly immunizes abortion from judicial review, it will remain in the business of drawing lines. Even a more lenient rational basis test, as advocated by the Solicitor General, will require continued judicial review and line drawing. Only clear reaffirmation of Roe will serve to diminish the burden on this Court of repeated litigation, and contribute to quieting the ranks of those who have resisted the right of women to make reproductive decisions in accord with personal conscience instead of majority vote.

---

27 See Brown v. Board of Educ., 671 F. Supp. 1290 (D. Kan. 1987), appeal pending, No. 87-1668 (10th Cir.) (Brown III) (deciding whether vestiges of de jure segregation remain in Topeka schools).

28 For example, this Court has not retreated from the fundamental principles of religious freedom underlying the Establishment Clause simply because of the often great difficulties of determining when and how to maintain separation between state governments and religious institutions. See, e.g., Wolman v. Walter, 433 U.S. 229 (1977) (upholding state program of providing speech and hearing diagnostic services and off-site remedial services to parochial school students but invalidating loans of secular instructional materials such as maps and science kits and provision of field trip services). Compare Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952) (upholding state's released-time program for private religious instruction outside of public school building during school hours) with Illinois ex rel. McCollom v., Board of Educ., 333 U.S. 203 (1948) (invalidating state's released-time program for private religious instruction in public school building during school hours).

E. Returning The Abortion Issue To The States Defeats Basic Principles of Constitutional Government

The Solicitor General finally argues that resolution of the conflict between a woman's right to autonomy and the State's interest in fetal life is not amenable to judicial resolution because the only "principled" resolution of this conflict involves "adopting a moral theory of the sanctity of the person, or a theory of when human life begins—neither of which can be derived through ordinary processes of adjudication." S.G. Brief at 20. It is wrong to characterize the resolution of Roe as unprincipled. Roe has been reaffirmed twice by this Court and continues to command broad respect in our nation[29] and in other nations. See Morgentaler v. Her Majesty, The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 40 D.L.R.4th 385 (Canada S. Ct. 1988); Paton v. United Kingdom (1980) 3 E.H.R.R. 408, 415 (European Commission of Human Rights); The Queen v. Bayliss and Culleon (1986) 9 Qld Lawyer Reps. 8, 10, 49, 54-56 (Queensland, Australia). Moreover, the Solicitor General cannot assert credibly that his proposal to subjugate totally a woman's autonomy to the State's interest in fetal life is somehow more "principled" than Roe.

There is no promise and should be no expectation that leaving abortion to the states will result in some acceptable "compromise" of the conflicts between privacy rights and state interests. Such a default will more likely result in many legislatures acting upon the sweeping authority proposed by the Solicitor General to outlaw abortion entirely,[30] resulting in a

---

29 Over thirty briefs amici curiae have been filed in support of appellees and urging that Roe be retained. These briefs represent the interests of hundreds of individuals and organizations, including the American Medical Association, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Public Health Association, American Academy of Pediatrics, American Psychological Association, National Association of Public Hospitals, American Nurses Association and Members of Congress.

30 The Solicitor General notes the tendency of some state legislatures to enact "inflammatory" abortion statutes and remarkably blames Roe for this phenomenon. S.G Brief at 21 n.15. A more honest assessment would blame patchwork of state restrictions which allow the affluent to exercise their right of choice, while condemning others, hampered by class, race and economics, to seek out illegal procedures or bear children against their will.

The Solicitor General is even more wrong in principle than he is in logic. Critical to the Solicitor's comparison of the law of this nation to the legislative resolution of abortion rights in others, is the assumption that we are not somehow "radically different." See S.G. Brief at 24. But we are different. We are a constitutional democracy and we have a Bill of Rights.

> The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943) (emphasis added).

Finally, appellees note that the right of choice in childbearing may be grounded in other constitutional rights in addition to the "liberty" guarantee of the fourteenth amendment: equal protection, the right to be free of involuntary survitude and cruel and unusual punishment, and the rights of the people under the ninth amendment. In the unlikely event this Court decides to abandon the rationale of Roe v. Wade, appellees urge this Court to remand this case for consideration of what hostility in those legislatures to a woman's right to choose abortion. That assessment indicates that if Roe is eliminated, inflammatory legislation will not abate, but will flourish unchecked. Indeed, five states have announced their intention to criminalize abortion (except only to save the life of the mother) if and when this Court permits them to do so: Idaho Code § 18-614 (Michie 1987); Ill. Ann. Stat. ch.38, § 81-21 (Smith Hurd 1977); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 311.710(5) (Michie 1983); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:1299.35.0 (West 1989 Supp.); S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-21 (Michie 1986).

---

other constitutional principles can support the right recognized in Roe.

II. SECTIONS 1.205.1(1) and (2), WHICH PURPORT TO DEFINE WHEN HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AND GRANT TO THE UNBORN "PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH, AND WELL-BEING," VIOLATE THE UNITED STATES AND MISSOURI CONSTITUTIONS

A. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Violate The United States Constitution

1. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Are Operative Statutory Provisions Which Define The Reach Of The State's Abortion Regulations

Sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) declare that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being." The Court of Appeals held that these sections are "simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins." J.S. at A64.

In an attempt to save these sections, the State argues that they inform only the reach of § 1.205 itself, but have no substantive effect on and relation to the other abortion restrictions which are the subject of the Act. State's Brief at 21-23.[31]

The State's claim defies logic. Section 1.205.1 was enacted as part of "AN ACT To repeal [certain sections of Missouri's revised statutes] relating to unborn children and abortion, and to enact . . . new sections relating to the same subject . . . ."[32] These sections are not identified in the statute as "preamble," nor is there any other textual source for the State's claim that they were intended as mere "prefatory state-

---

31 The State contradicts itself as to the effect of §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2). It claims both that these provisions have no substantive effect and that they guide the interpretation of § 1.205. State's Brief at 21.

32 H.B. No. 1596, Mo. Gen. Assem., 2d Sess. (1986) (emphasis added). To the extent the Act relates to subjects other than, or in addition to, unborn children and abortion, as claimed by the State, it is unconstitutional under Missouri law. See Point II.B, infra pp. 23-24.

ments of fact." State's Brief at 21. Rather, they are the first sections of a comprehensive Act regulating abortion,[33] clearly intended to guide the interpretation of every provision of that Act. The State acknowledges as much when it argues that the legislature may make the findings in §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) "pursuant to a public policy of protecting the life and health of unborn children to the fullest extent possible in . . . abortion law." State's Brief at 21 (emphasis added). Thus, the Court of Appeals correctly concluded that:

> [T]he declaration of when life begins can only have been intended as an introductory and foundational comment . . . . The only plausible inference is that the state intended its abortion regulations to be understood against the backdrop of its theory of life. Rather than being abortion-neutral, the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations.

J.S. at A64.[34] See Roe, 410 U.S. at 159-62; City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 444.[35]

Indeed, these sections already have been given substantive effect. In Deaconess Hospital v. McRoberts, No. 874-00172

33 That § 1.205 is located elsewhere in Missouri's revised statutes from Chapter 188 (Regulation of Abortions) does not render meaningless its connection to abortion. See State's Brief at 22. To argue otherwise necessarily means that § 1.205 has no effect upon "state tort, property, and criminal law," as claimed by the State, because these subjects are also codified in different chapters of Missouri's revised statutes. It is §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2)'s location in the abortion bill passed by the state legislature, and not its numerical designation in the revised statutes when codified, that is determinative.

34 The Court of Appeals also rejected the State's reasoning that the statute is saved from unconstitutionality by making it subject to the United States Constitution and the decisions of this Court:

> Such a statement cannot . . . validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the constitution. To accept the state's position would be to hold that every state law is valid as long as it contains a clause subjecting the law to the supremacy clause. We decline to so hold.

J.S. at A64-65.

35 See Brief of Distinguished Scientists and Physicians, Including Nobel Laureates, As Amici Curiae in Support of Appellees.

(Mo. Cir. Ct. St. Louis County May 21, 1987), a court heard a hospital's petition to perform a cesarean section upon a woman, finding that it had jurisdiction "pursuant to Section 1.205(1)-(2) (sic) . . . [because] the life, health and well-being of the unborn child . . . may be jeopardized" by the woman's refusal to permit the performance of such a procedure upon her body.[36] The court ordered the surgical procedure performed, concluding that "the intrusion involved in the life of [the woman was] outweighed by the duty of the State to protect a living unborn human being . . . ." Id. Deaconess thus negates the State's claim that §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) are "legislative findings without operative effect."

2. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Extend The Meaning Of The Act's Abortion Restrictions To Severely Restrict Access To Some Contraceptives

When viewed as a "backdrop" to the State's abortion regulations, it is clear that §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) have substantial and far reaching effect. Just as the State recognizes that these provisions "provide guidance in interpreting the operative language of § 1.205," State's Brief at 21, so too will they provide guidance to the state courts in interpreting the operative language of the other challenged provisions of the Act. For example, § 188.215 prohibits the use of "any public facility for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion." Section 188.015(1) defines abortion as the intentional destruction of "human life" and §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) establish that protectable human life begins at "conception," which Missouri law defines as the "fertilization of the ovum of a female by a sperm of a male."[37] Thus, by giving a fertilized egg the status of a live 36 The woman had undergone three previous cesarean deliveries, and desired to deliver her fourth baby vaginally. The court issued the surgical order against the woman's wishes and despite her willingness and informed consent to undertake any risk involved in a vaginal delivery. See Court-Ordered Cesareans: A Growing Concern for Indigent Women, 1988 Clearinghouse Review 1064, 1065.

37 Section 188.015(3) (definition of "conception"). The Missouri legislature's definition of conception as synonymous with fertilization is contrary human being, and defining abortion as the intentional destruction of such "life," the Missouri law reaches those methods of contraception which can operate after fertilization but prior to the implantation of the fertilized ovum and the onset of pregnancy: the intrauterine device (IUD), progestogen-only oral contraceptives (the "mini-pill"), and the so-called "morning after" or postcoital contraceptives.[38]

The Act's expansive definition of protectable "life" means that it would be illegal under the public facilities provision (§ 188.215) for a physician in a public facility to insert an IUD, prescribe the "mini-pill," or administer postcoital contraceptives. Additionally, physicians or other health-care providers who are public employees would be forbidden under the "perform or assist" restriction of § 188.210 from prescribing or administering these contraceptive methods. Moreover, if the public funds provision restricts physicians' speech,[39] then publicly-employed physicians will not be able to "encourage or counsel" women to use the IUD, the "mini-pill," or post-coital contraceptives. This means that the statute interferes with the rights of the thousands of women who use methods of birth control which can act after fertilization and subjects to possible to the accepted medical view. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) defines conception as "the implantation of the blastocyst [fertilized ovum]," and pregnancy as "the state of a female after conception and until termination of the gestation." Obstetric-Gynecologic Terminology 229, 327 (E. Hughes ed. 1972). Conception and the onset of pregnancy occur six to seven days after fertilization, when the blastocyst implants in the uterus. D. Mishell & V. Davagan, Infertility, Contraception, & Reproductive Technology 109-110 (2d ed. 1986).

38 Each of these contraceptive methods is believed to act in part by interfering with implantation of the fertilized ovum in the uterus. See Burnhill, Intrauterine Contraception, in Fertility Control 271, 280 (1985) (IUD); International Planned Parenthood Federation, Family Planning Handbook for Doctors 62 (6th ed. 1988) ("mini-pill"); Yuzpe, Postcoital Contraception, in Fertility Control 289 (1985) (postcoital contraceptives).

39 See infra Point IV.B.

sanction those health care providers who prescribe such methods.[40]

Thus, rather than prefatory statements without operative effect, §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) impact directly upon the other challenged provisions of the Act. By defining the fertilized ovum as a human being with protectable interests in life, health, and well-being, the Act's restrictions reach the right to contraception, which this Court has held is protected by the Constitution. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485-86 (1965); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 453 (1972); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 687-91 (1977).[41]

B. Sections 1.205.1(1) And (2) Violate The Missouri Constitution

This Court has enunciated a strong policy of "avoiding the unnecessary adjudication of federal constitutional questions" where state law might provide "independent support" for the judgment below. City of Mesquite v. Aladdin's Castle, Inc. 455 U.S. 283, 294-95 (1982). Moreover, this Court has recognized that the federal courts of appeal are in a better position than it to resolve state law issues. Id. at 293. There are at least two provisions of Missouri's constitution which provide independent support for the judgment of the Court of Appeals. Plaintiffs urge this Court to affirm the judgment below or remand this issue for consideration of alternative state grounds to support that judgment.[42]

If this Court agrees that § 1.205 "expands existing state tort, property, and criminal law protection for unborn children,"

40 Plaintiff health care providers and facilities offer abortion counseling and services as well as contraceptive services and thus have standing to challenge §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2). See, e.g., Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 187-89 (1973); Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 113 (1976). See also 851 F.2d at 1075-76, J.S. at 62-63; 662 F. Supp. at 412, J.S. at A13.

41 See Brief Amici Curiae of the Association of Reproductive Health Professionals And Others In Support Of Appellees, at Point I.

42 Because the Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's judgment that §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) were unconstitutional under the United States Constitution, it stated that it need not address the argument that these sections violated the state constitution. J.S. at A65.

State's Brief at 22, then it should remand the issue of § 1.205's constitutionality to the Court of Appeals to consider whether that statutory provision violates the Missouri constitution. Article 3, § 23 of the constitution prohibits a bill from containing more than one subject and requires that the subject be clearly expressed in the bill's title.[43]

In In re Ray, 83 B.R. 670 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1988), the court held unconstitutional a statutory provision because the provision had no relationship with the rest of the bill's contents, which dealt only with the subjects encompassed in the title. Id. at 672. See also In re Bowen, 82 B.R. 102 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1988) (holding unconstitutional the same statute); Berry v. Majestic Milling Co., 223 S.W. 738, 741 (Mo. 1920) (holding unconstitutional a section of an act because "it [did] not come within the subjects expressed in the title of the act.")

Here too, tort, property, and criminal law are not subjects encompassed by the title of the Act.[44] Nor do these various subjects have any relation to the rest of the bill's contents, which deal with abortion. Section 1.205 thus violates Art. 3, § 23 of the Missouri constitution.

Additionally, consideration of the constitutionality of § 1.205 should be remanded to the Court of Appeals because the statute violates another section of the State constitution. Section 1.205 purports to amend all the laws of the State so as to grant "rights, privileges, and immunities" to the unborn from the moment of conception without including "the words to be inserted [in the various statutes]. . . together with the act or section set forth in full as amended," as required by Article

43 Mo. Const. Art. 3, § 23 states:

> No bill shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title, except bills enacted under the third exception in section 37 of this article and general appropriation bills, which may embrace the various subjects and accounts for which moneys are appropriated.

44 See supra p. 19.

3, § 28 of the Missouri constitution.[45] The purpose of this constitutional limitation on statutory amendment is to apprise legislators and the public of the changes in the law and to prevent ambiguities and uncertainties in legislative enactments. State ex rel. McNary v. Stussie, 518 S.W.2d 630, 632-34 (Mo. banc 1974).

In Stussie, the Missouri Supreme Court held unconstitutional an act which lowered the age of majority in the state to eighteen years and gave persons attaining that age "all the privileges, rights, and immunities . . . of adulthood." Id. at 631. The court held that:

> If . . . [the Act] is construed to require substitution of "age of eighteen" for "age of twenty-one" whenever the latter appears, then we are going beyond what [the Act] literally states and directs and we would be amending statutes based on what we believe the General Assembly intended by their attempted blanket amendment. This is what Art. III, § 28 was designed to avoid. Statutory amendments should set out the statute as amended and not leave us to guess as to whether and in what respect an existing statute was amended.

Id. at 634. See also Protection Mutual Insurance Company v. Kansas City, 504 S.W.2d 127, 130 (Mo. 1974) (statute held unconstitutional under Art. 3, § 28; absent a legislative act amending a particular law, statute revisors have no authority to change the substantive meaning and application of a law).

Here too, we are left guessing as to whether and in what respect the various laws of the State of Missouri are amended by § 1.205. None of the words to be inserted are included, and the laws as amended are not set forth in full. When the legislature's intent is unclear, as it is here, the statute's codifiers have 45 Article 3, § 28 of the Missouri constitution provides, in relevant part:

> No act shall be amended by providing that words be stricken out or inserted but the words to be stricken out, or the words to be inserted, or the words to be stricken out and those inserted in lieu thereof, together with the act or section amended, shall be set forth in full as amended.

no authority to revise the substantive meaning of the law. Section 1.205 is invalid under Article 3, § 28 of the State constitution.

III. SECTION 188.029, REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO MAKE FINDINGS OF GESTATIONAL AGE, FETAL WEIGHT AND LUNG MATURITY, IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL UNDER ANY STANDARD OF REVIEW

A. Section 188.029 Advances No Legitimate State Interest

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 requires a physician to make a determination of viability whenever a woman who appears to be twenty weeks pregnant requests an abortion. The District Court upheld this requirement, J.S. at A35-36, and plaintiffs do not challenge that holding. Section 188.029 further provides:

> In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

J.S. at A90. The Court of Appeals and District Court struck this requirement because it unduly constrains physicians' judgment by requiring medical procedures which are expensive and dangerous in order to make "findings" which are irrelevant to determining viability. J.S. at A59-60 and n.5; id. at A37.

The facts supporting the lower courts' decisions are not in dispute. The State concedes in its brief that prior to thirty weeks of pregnancy, the only one of the required "findings" relevant to determining viability is the finding of gestational age[46] and the standard medical procedure for ascertaining it is ultrasonography.[47] The State has not disputed that "findings" of fetal weight are accomplished by using more sophisticated ultrasound equipment than is used to determine fetal age alone,[48] and would unnecessarily add approximately $125-250 to the cost of an abortion. J.S. at A36. Neither has the State disputed the finding of the District Court, concurred in by the State's own witness, Dr. Keenan,[49] that the only known test to determine fetal lung maturity is amniocentesis.[50] Amniocentesis is an invasive procedure which would add hundreds of dollars to the cost of an abortion, pose risks to both the woman and the fetus, including risks resulting from delays required to schedule the procedure, and yet yield no information useful to the determination of viability until at least the twenty-eighth to thirtieth week of pregnancy. J.S. at A36, A37 n.41.[51]

The State has never argued that § 188.029 is constitutional if it requires any of the tests described above—either additional ultrasonography to determine fetal weight or amniocentesis to make a finding of lung maturity. The reasons are obvious, regardless of the constitutional "standard of review" which is utilized. Even under the most lenient "rational basis" test advocated by the State and the Solicitor General for reviewing 46 The State says: "[t]he undisputed evidence further indicated that no current test other than measurements which can be performed with the use of ultrasound provide information necessary to determine viability prior to at least thirty weeks gestational age (Keenan Tr. 4-78; Maulik Tr. 1-55; Crist Tr. 1-98, 1-117; Pearman Tr. 1-139; Widdicombe Tr. 2-65)." State's Brief at 32. The ultrasound tests alluded to by the cited witnesses are ultrasound tests used to determine gestational age.

---

47 Ultrasound is a process using sound waves to create a visual image.

48 Tr. 1-99-100 (Crist). The more sophisticated equipment is required because, while fetal age requires only linear measurements of the diameter of the fetal skull or length of the femur, weight estimations require three-dimensional measurements of the girth of the fetal abdomen and/or chest. Id.

49 Tr. 4-81.

50 Amniocentesis involves inserting a hollow needle into the uterus to extract amniotic fluid. The fluid is then analyzed for the presence of certain chemicals which indicate the presence of surfactant in the fetal lungs. Surfactant is the substance which indicates that the lungs are mature. J.S. at A36 n.39.

51 The reason amniocentesis yields no useful information until that point is that, while fetuses may be "viable"—able to survive with artificial aid—at twenty-four weeks of gestation, their lungs do not mature until thirty or more weeks of pregnancy. Tr. 1-41, 42 (Maulik). Immature lungs make the fetus more prone to hyaline membrane disease, a leading cause of morbidity and mortality in premature infants.

abortion legislation, legislative enactments must "bear a rational relation to valid state objectives." S. G. Brief at 11, quoting Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 491 (1955). See also State's Brief at 18. Assuming the statute is intended to insure protection of viable fetuses, there is simply no rationality to requiring expensive and intrusive tests to make "findings" which do not become relevant to the determination of viability until at least eight to ten weeks later in pregnancy. Of course, such an overbroad effort to protect fetal life also violates the principles of strict scrutiny applicable to abortion legislation, Roe, 410 U.S. at 155, as well as this Court's holdings that the manner in which viability is determined must be left to the discretion of the attending physician. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-89 (1979).

B. The State's Statutory Interpretation Is Too Implausible To Represent An Acceptable Saving Construction

The State's sole defense of this provision is an attempt to interpret the statutory language so as to avoid constitutional infirmities. This interpretation, however, is utterly illogical, denying both the plain meaning of the language of the statute and established rules of statutory construction. This Court should defer to the Court of Appeals, which rejected it.

The State argues that the challenged "tests" and "findings" provision must be read in light of the sentence which precedes it, requiring physicians determining viability to exercise "that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician . . ." State's Brief at 33 (quoting J.S. at A89-90). According to the State, this means that, under the challenged provision, a physician must utilize only "such medical examinations or tests as are necessary to make appropriate findings in the case before him or her. An unnecessary test should never be utilized . . ." State's Brief at 34 (emphasis added). The physician need only "record his findings regarding viability and the findings derived from such tests as he deems necessary to render a decision." Id. Although somewhat self-contradictory on this point, the State seems to be saying that neither specific tests, nor any findings at all on fetal age, weight or lung maturity are necessary:[52] the physician need only exercise reasonable care in determining viability and record what he finds about viability on the patient's chart.

This interpretation simply wishes the challenged language out of existence. Except for the requirement to record findings regarding viability, the Act would have exactly the same meaning if the challenged language were excised as it has under the State's interpretation. This alone violates a basic principle of statutory construction: "Each 'word, clause, sentence and section' of a statute should be given meaning." State ex rel. Missouri State Board of Registration for the Healing Arts v. Southworth, 704 S.W.2d 219, 225 (Mo. banc 1986) (citing Brown Group, Inc. v. Administrative Hearing Commission, 649 S.W.2d 874, 881 (Mo. banc 1983)). Moreover, the State's construction is simply at odds with the plain meaning of the provision and was for that reason rejected by the Court of Appeals. As the Court of Appeals said, it is not tests necessary to determine viability the statute requires, but tests necessary to make specific findings regardless of their relevance to viability. J.S. at A60 n.5. See also J.S. at A38.

The State's interpretation of the statutory language is nonsensical and this Court should reject it for that reason alone. Moreover, this Court should reject it for the independent reason that a federal court sitting in Missouri has done so. This is in keeping with the practice of "deferr[ing] to the construction of a state statute given it by the lower federal courts . . . to reflect our belief that district courts and courts of appeal are better schooled in and more able to interpret the laws of their respective States." Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S. Ct. 2495, 2500

---

52 Cf. State's Brief at 32: The General Assembly "has specified three factors—consistent with medical science—for which a finding must be made." (emphasis in original). The State has been similarly inconsistent in the position it has taken on the meaning of this statute to the District Court and the Court of Appeals. To the District Court it argued that all findings had to be made but no tests were necessary; to the Court of Appeals, it argued, as it does here, that neither findings nor tests are necessary. Compare J.S. at A37-38 with J.S. at A60 n.5. This inconsistency is yet another reason to reject the State's proffered interpretation as implausible.

(1988) (quoting Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 499-500 (1985)).

C. If This Court Is Inclined To View § 188.029 As Fairly Susceptible To The State's Proposed Construction, It Should Abstain From Federal Jurisdiction

Implausible as it is, the construction the State suggests for § 188.029 virtually eliminates the constitutional issue in this case. Yet, although this Court has a duty to construe state laws so as to avoid constitutional infirmities, Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 493 (1983), it is powerless to adopt a limiting construction which is neither obvious from the face of the statute, nor proposed by an authoritative source. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 110 (1972); Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S 352, 355 (1983). This is the case here, as the State's interpretation results not from any obvious reading of the statute but from a wholesale excision of its substance, cf. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 493; moreover, the Attorney General is not an authoritative source of statutory interpretation, as he has no power to bind the state courts or law enforcement authorities. Virginia v. American Booksellers Ass'n Inc., 108 S. Ct. 636, 644 (1988).[53] Therefore, if this Court is inclined to read § 188.029 as "fairly susceptible" to the State's proposed construction (although not obviously so), the proper course is for it to abstain from federal jurisdiction in order to allow the state courts to render the saving construction the State has proposed. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Pullman, 312 U.S. 496 (1941). See also Brockett v. Spokane Arcades Inc., 472 U.S. at 508 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

---

53 Missouri law is clear that the Attorney General's opinions are not binding interpretations of state law. Mesker Brothers Industries, Inc. v. Leachman, 529 S.W.2d 153, 158 (Mo. 1975).

IV. THE BAN ON THE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR "ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION" SHOULD BE REMANDED FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOOTNESS; IF THIS ISSUE IS NOT MOOT, THE RESTRICTION MUST BE FOUND UNCONSTITUTIONAL IN VIOLATION OF THE FIRST AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENTS

A. There Appears No Longer To Be A Case Or Controversy

The Act contains three provisions relating to "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Section 188.205 states that no public funds can be used for that purpose; section 188.210 states that no public employees can, within the scope of their employment, engage in that speech; and section 188.215 forbids such speech in so-called "public facilities."

These provisions would restrict the speech of the named plaintiff doctors and other health care professionals,[54] who counsel women with problem pregnancies about abortion. The restrictions would have occurred either when these individuals were acting as public employees or when, although acting in a private capacity, they were doing so in a so-called public facility. Additionally, the public funds provision appeared to pose an overlapping restriction, because when the plaintiffs acted as public employees they would be paid with public funds; and as the District Court observed, the public funds provision "certainly is broad enough to make 'encouraging or counseling' unlawful for anyone who is paid from [public funds]." J.S. at A46.

---

54 The District Court certified this as a class action with two classes: (a) facilities and Missouri-licensed physicians, or other health care professionals, which offer abortion counseling and services; and (b) pregnant women seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling within Missouri. These broadly defined classes were appropriate because many of the provisions of the Act affected all doctors and their patients. See, e.g., section 188.029. Only subsets of the certified classes are affected by the public employees, public facilities, and public funds provisions; and it is unclear which subset, if any, is affected by the public funds provision as it is presented on this appeal.

Both lower courts essentially considered these three provisions together, and found them to be unconstitutional because they restrict the speech of physicians, are vague, and interfere with a woman's right to make an informed choice about abortion.

The State did not appeal the Court of Appeals' holdings with respect to the public employee and public facility provisions. J.S. at I-II ("Questions Presented"), State's Brief at I-II ("Questions Presented"). It has stated that it does not challenge these holdings. State's Brief at 9.

It has, however, appealed the holding with respect to the public funds provision, arguing that "the court of appeals did not separately focus on the 'encouraging and counseling' language of [this provision]," State's Brief at 37;[55] and that the public funds provision is different from the public employees and public facilities provisions. The public funds provision "directs officials not to expend public funds under their control for the purpose of . . . encouraging or counseling. . . ." Id. at 38. "[It] is not directed at the conduct of any physician or health care provider, private or public. Instead, it is directed solely at those persons responsible for expending public funds." Id. at 43. By comparison, the public employees and public facilities provisions "sought to forbid speech by employees and in public facilities." Id. at 38.

The public funds provision—isolated and distinguished from the other two provisions, as the State has chosen to present it on this appeal—appears not to affect Plaintiffs adversely. They are protected by the unchallenged holdings of the Court of Appeals declaring their rights as public employees or as private practitioners in public facilities. The State here seems to disavow any interpretation of the public funds provision that would allow it to function as an overlapping restriction; for example, as a basis for withholding a physician's salary because he counseled a woman to have an abortion. And plaintiffs are neither grant-

55 The State posits that the "court below was primarily concerned with the more restrictive language" of the public employees and public facilities provisions. State's Brief at 38. In fact, the language of all three provisions is the same; and the Court of Appeals was obviously concerned that none of the provisions be used to censor speech and manipulate information.

ees nor employees of programs—if such exist—facing possible discontinuation because the purpose of the program is to counsel or encourage women to have abortions.

Article III of the Constitution requires the presence of an "ongoing controvers[y] between litigants" even at this advanced stage of litigation; and mootness as to an issue can arise because of a decision made by one litigant subsequent to the final ruling of the court of appeals. Deakins v. Monaghan, 108 S. Ct. 523, 528 (1988).

Here, the State has made such a decision. It states that it does not challenge the holding of the Court of Appeals that it cannot prevent public employees or individuals speaking in public facilities from encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion. It disavows any such purpose for the public funds provision, and defends it as being instead a legislative directive to public officials responsible for making funding choices.

Thus, as to the public funds provision, there appears no longer to be " 'a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.' " Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 460 (1974) (quoting Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273 (1941)).

This Court should note that the constitutional issues connected to governmental funding decisions about abortion counseling, and to efforts to justify impermissible suppressions of speech as governmental funding decisions, are the subject of evolving litigation and legal debate.[56] Given the "gravity and delicacy" of these constitutional questions, this Court should adhere to its tradition of "rigid insistence" upon an actual case 56 See, e.g., Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (prelim. inj.), 687 F. Supp. 540 (final judgment) (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.); New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261 (S.D.N.Y. 1988), appeal pending Nos. 88-6204, 6206 (2d Cir.); Massachussets v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.). See also Brief Amicus Curiae of National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association in support of Appellees; Benshoof, The Chastity Act: Government Manipulation of Abortion Information and the First Amendment, 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1916 (1988); Hirt, Why the Government is Not Required to Subsidize Abortion Counseling and Referral, 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1895 (1988).

or controversy, Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 345 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring), before undertaking to resolve them.[57]

"When this Court has entertained doubt about the continuing nature of a case or controversy, it has remanded the case to the lower court for consideration of the possibility of mootness." Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 402 n.12 (1975). Similarly, earlier this term, this Court remanded an issue in a case involving significant constitutional concerns when it could not "resolve [an] ambiguity on the basis of the record before [it]." Treasury Employees v. Von Raab, U.S. Docket No. 88-1879, slip op. at 20 (March 21, 1989).

That is the appropriate disposition for the public funds provision. On such a remand the parties will be able to develop an appropriate record[58] to clarify the scope of the public funds provision standing alone in the light of the unchallenged holdings declaring the public employees and public facilities restrictions unconstitutional. That record may confirm what appears here—that there is no longer a case or controversy as to the public funds provision—or it may uncover a constitutional problem neither apparent nor capable of discovery through the exchange of briefs before this Court. If a controversy remains, then there can be an orderly "reconsideration of the class definition, exclusion of those whose claims are moot, and substitution of class representatives with live claims." Kremens v. Bartley, 431 U.S. 119, 129-36 (1977). Then, that controversy can be addressed specifically. If no controversy remains, then the litigation on this issue will end. In either event, the remand will avoid the problem presented now: that this dispute is, "so unfocused as to make informed resolution of [it] almost impossible." Id. at 134. See also Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of 57 "The availability of thoroughly prepared attorneys to argue both sides of a constitutional question, and of numerous amici curiae ready to assist in the decisional process . . . does not dispense with the requirement that there be a live dispute . . . before we decide such a question." Kremens v. Bartley, 431 U.S. at 134 n.15.

58 For example, pleadings can be amended to address specifically this issue; if necessary, discovery can be undertaken; and stipulations can be negotiated.

Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549, 575 (1947) (appeal dismissed because "constitutional issues come to us in highly abstract form"); Wainwright v. City of New Orleans, 392 U.S. 598 (1968) (Harlan, J., concurring) (writ of certiorari dismissed because "record too opaque to permit any satisfactory adjudication . . .").

B. If There Is a Case or Controversy, Then The Public Funds Provision Is Unconstitutional

If there is a case or controversy here—that is, if plaintiffs are adversely affected by the public funds provision—then that must be because, contrary to the State's assertions, the public funds provision does restrict the speech of physicians and health care professionals paid with public funds.[59] Any such restriction violates first amendment rights of the physicians and health care professionals and first and fourteenth amendment rights of their patients.

1. The Public Funds Provision Violates The First Amendment

This Court recognized in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. at 482, that "the State may not, consistently with the spirit of the First Amendment, contract the spectrum of available knowledge." Even the dissent in Griswold recognized that had the doctor there only "express[ed] opinions [to patients] . . . that certain contraceptive devices, medicines or practices would do them good and would be desirable, . . ." his conviction would have violated the first amendment. Id. at 507-508 (Black, J., dissenting). Indeed, as Justice Douglas observed, "The right of the doctor to advise his patients according to his best lights seems so obviously within First Amendment rights as to need no extended discussion." Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 513 (1961) (Douglas, J., dissenting).[60]

59 It is also possible that the restriction will reach private speech in a government owned and operated public facility. This is the sort of ambiguity that argues for a remand of this issue.

60 The dissent was from a standing decision which did not discuss the first amendment question one way or the other.

Although this is not a commercial speech case, this Court has recognized that, even in that context, government is strictly limited in its ability to regulate communications when there are " 'substantial individual and societal interests' " in the information being communicated, and when that information relates to activity protected from unwarranted government interference. Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products, 463 U.S. 60, 69 (1983) (quoting Virginia State Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 766 (1976)). See also Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 822 (1975). This Court has consistently underscored that, for a woman considering continuation or termination of a pregnancy, the unimpeded advice and counsel of her physician is precisely that kind of substantial individual interest. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 387 ("central role of the physician . . . in consulting with the woman . . ."); City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427 (woman's right that her physician be free to "assist . . . in the decision-making process . . ."); id. at 443 ("primarily the responsibility of the physician to ensure that appropriate information is conveyed to his patient, depending on her particular circumstances").[61]

In the light of these constitutional principles, a restriction upon the ability of physicians, when they are being paid with public funds, to speak as candidly and, if need be, emphatically as they choose cannot stand. Such a restriction will "officially structure . . . the dialogue between the woman and her physician;" and impose upon her the "state medicine" condemned in Thornburgh, "not the professional medical guidance she seeks." 476 U.S. at 763.[62]

This restriction will impact in instances where professional guidance is most significant. These circumstances include serious, even lethal, fetal abnormalities, or severe health threats to the mother which will be exacerbated by pregnancy, such as cardiac disease, stroke, or diabetic retinopathy.[63] Although even in these circumstances physicians do not dictate one course of treatment over another, they will frequently be guided by their professional responsibility to their patients to recommend or urge a particular course of treatment, including abortion. J.S. at A71 n.12.[64] See also American Medical Association, Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs § 8.07 (1986) (physician's obligation "to present the medical facts accurately to the patient . . . and to make recommendations . . .").

---

61 Of course, the first amendment protects the right to receive "information and ideas." Virginia State Board of Pharmacy, 425 U.S. at 756-57; Griswold, 381 U.S. at 482.

62 The restriction here is more damaging than the one invalidated in Thornburgh. There, no restriction was placed upon what a physician could say; he was, however, required to give certain information in all circumstances. 476 U.S. at 759-61. Here, the physician is restricted in his ability to provide advice. Thus, unlike Thornburgh, the quantum of information made available is reduced. See also infra at p. 43.

A central tenet to this Court's first amendment jurisprudence is the protection of the individual's capacity for informed and autonomous choice. Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 24 (1971) (right of free expression "comport[s] with the premise of individual dignity and choice upon which our political system rests"). That concept is totally undermined by the prospect of government manipulation of the advice and information provided by government funded professionals to individuals relying upon that advice and information in making choices central to their well-being.[65]

---

63 Additionally, the restrictions will threaten the ability of physicians and health care professionals to provide counseling about contraceptive choices. For example, federal law requires that before an intrauterine device (IUD) is prescribed for a woman, she must be counseled that should she become pregnant with it in place, severe complications are possible and she should be prepared to consider an abortion. 21 C.F.R. § 801.427(b)(2) (1988). See also Amici Curiae Briefs in Support of Appellees of the American Medical Association and of the Association of Reproductive Health Professionals.

64 The Court of Appeals noted the evidence showing that the ambiguity of the words "counsel" and "encourage" would force physicians to steer wider than the unlawful zone and refrain from most comments relative to abortion. J.S. at A68-69 n.11.

65 "A theory of freedom of expression that ignores the communicative powers of the public sector may fail to protect the liberal democratic values it

This manipulation of information is particularly egregious because it is viewpoint biased. As Circuit Judge Arnold recognized in his concurring and dissenting opinion, "a physician, for example, could discourage an abortion, or counsel against it . . . but he or she could not encourage or counsel in favor of it. That kind of distinction is flatly inconsistent with the First Amendment . . . ." J.S. at A83. Judge Arnold's conclusion is mandated by this Court's holding that:

> [T]he State may sometimes curtail speech when necessary to advance a significant and legitimate state interest . . . . [T]here are some purported interests—such as a desire . . . to exclude the expression of certain points of view from the marketplace of ideas—that are so plainly illegitimate that they would immediately invalidate the rule.

City Council v. Taxpayers For Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 804 (1984) (citations omitted).

The State argues that it is not required to subsidize the exercise of constitutional rights and that therefore the first amendment is not violated by this restriction on the use of public funds. State's Brief at 36, 38. If there is a case or controversy here, then the State's argument misperceives the dispute: the question is not whether government can be forced to subsidize an activity; the question is whether government can manipulate or censor the medical information or advice provided to patients by doctors paid with public funds. This is not a choice about allocation of resources. This is an attempt to manipulate private behavior of citizens by censoring information they receive from state funded advisors.

The applicable standard of review, therefore, is whether the State has demonstrated a compelling state interest that could not be achieved through a narrower restriction. Boos v. Barry, 108 S. Ct. 1157, 1164-65 (1988). The State has made no serious effort to meet this test.

---

is designed to serve. Government has the potential to engineer public consent by . . . selectively disclosing or revealing information." M. Yudoff, When Government Speaks 145 (1983).

The State's reliance on Rankin v. McPherson, 483 U.S. 378, reh'g denied, 108 S. Ct. 31 (1987), and Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983), is misplaced. Those cases balance the competing interests of public employees in commenting upon matters of public concern with the interests of government employers in operating an efficient public service. Efficiency is not the issue here. At issue, instead, is what state interest, if any, justifies manipulation of advice and information given by publicly-paid health care professionals when the subject matter involved is central to their professional responsibilities, and when the hearer of the advice and information is dependent upon it for the purpose of making a profound personal decision.

The State's invocation of Rankin and Connick implies an unrealistically one-dimensional view of the first amendment considerations that bear upon the speech of publicly paid speakers. This Court has repeatedly recognized that applying the first amendment to regulations of government employee speech will involve balancing different considerations in different contexts. Givhan v. Western Lines Consolidated School District, 439 U.S. 410, 415 n.4 (1979); Connick, 461 U.S. at 154.

Primary among those considerations in this case is the interests of the recipients of the speech. Those recipients are individual members of the public with indisputable concerns about the uncensored content, advice, and information they receive from their physicians. See supra p. 37. The interests of the speaker in the speech in question is another significant consideration. Surely a physician's interest in giving complete and conscientious medical advice to a patient is at least as important as the interest of the clerk in Rankin who commented upon the attempted assassination of President Reagan. When these interests are considered, and "balanced" against the notably absent assertion of a significant state interest, the restrictions on speech imposed by the public funds provision must be rejected.[66]

The analogy to public education found in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 477 (1977) is more instructive. State's Brief at 36-37.

---

66 See Brief Amici Curiae of American Civil Liberties Union and others in Support of Appellees.

The dispute here is not analogous to a dispute over whether government must fund private schools equally with public schools, or must fund a particular curriculum. Rather, the dispute here is analogous to a dispute over the power of government, once a curriculum is set, to dictate the content of discourse in the classrooms of its public universities. The Constitution has unswervingly protected freedom of communication between teachers (even in public universities) and their students. "The First Amendment 'does not tolerate laws that cast a pall of orthodoxy over the classroom.' " Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 105 (1968) (quoting Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 603 (1967)). See also Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 354 U.S. 234 (1957).

These cases recognize that the fact that government pays the speaker does not justify government manipulation of the speaker's message when doing so undermines and is antithetical to the core values of the relationship and communication involved. In the universities, those core values relate to open-mindedness and critical inquiry. Sweezy, 354 U.S. at 261-63 (Frankfurter, J., concurring). In the medical profession the core values relate to individual choice based on full disclosure of information and access to unfettered professional advice. See, e.g., Brief Amici Curiae of the American Medical Association and others In Support of Appellees. State imposed limitations on such information and advice when the physician is paid with public funds is equivalent to restrictions on the speech of professors in public universities. Both restrictions undermine and are antithetical to the core values at stake. Thus, as the "pall of orthodoxy" is not tolerated in the public university, neither should it be tolerated in publicly-funded medicine.

Finally, the State's freedom of subsidy position also entirely fails to address the fact that the public funds provision imposes a viewpoint discriminatory restriction on speech. The opinions of this Court make clear that even when a subsidy is at issue, "a more stringent, prophylactic rule" is appropriate, "when the subsidy pertains to the expression of a particular viewpoint on a matter of political concern." Arkansas Writer's Project v. Ragland, 107 S. Ct. 1722, 1731 (1987) (Scalia, J., dissenting). See also Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540, 548 (1983), id. at 551 (Blackmun, J., concurring); F.C.C. v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364, 383-84 (1984), id. at 406-408 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

2. The Phrase "Counseling and Encouraging" Is Unconstitutionally Vague

"The most important factor affecting the clarity that the Constitution demands of a law is whether it threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally-protected rights." Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 499 (1982). As pointed out above, and as the Court of Appeals recognized, J.S. at A67, a restriction on the ability of a publicly-paid physician to speak freely to a patient about abortion threatens to inhibit the exercise of both first and fourteenth amendment rights, and is therefore subject to rigid vagueness analysis.[67]

Under such an analysis, the public funds provision must fall. Phrases such as "counsel" or "encourage" have a long history of being viewed as unconstitutionally vague. Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction, 368 U.S. 278, 286 (1961); Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964). It seems self-evident that physicians of "common intelligence" will have to "guess" at their meaning, and in particular at which words, gestures, expressions, or tones of voice pass beyond the permissible. Baggett, 377 U.S. at 367.

---

67 The State says that "First Amendment freedoms are not implicated here." State's Brief at 41. That is true if the public funds provision is not used to restrict the speech of publicly-paid physicians and other health care professionals, in which case, as pointed out above, there is no case or controversy here and this issue has become moot. If the provision does restrict such speech, then obviously first amendment freedoms are implicated.

The State also emphasizes that these sections are civil, not criminal, in nature. Civil statutes are subject to invalidation for vagueness. A.B. Small Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., 267 U.S. 233 (1925). Moreover, civil and criminal labels are not necessarily dispositive of the vagueness standard question. Nominally civil statutes that nonetheless threaten to exact penalties are treated as criminal statutes. Giaccio v. Pennsylvania, 382 U.S. 399 (1966). See also Alsager v. Polk County, 406 F. Supp. 10 (S.D. Iowa 1975), aff'd, 545 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1976). That is the case here because of the threat that by acting "unlawfully" in "encouraging or counseling," a physician stands to lose his license. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 334.100.

How is a physician who is counseling a patient to know when he or she, when referring to abortion, has transgressed the boundaries of these sections? Given the entirely subjective nature of these two words and borrowing the words of this Court, it is inevitable that physicians and counselors will steer far wider than the "unlawful" zone, in order to be certain not to run afoul of its vague boundaries. See Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 109 (1972).[68]

This dilemma is not solved by the State's proposed "narrow-[ing]" construction of "affirmative advocacy." State's Brief at 42.[69] As the Court of Appeals noted, this interpretation is unacceptable because it seeks to merge two separate restrictions ("encourage" or "counsel") under one label. J.S. at A67. The State's construction thus runs afoul of the basic canon of statutory construction that every part of a law be given significance or effect. Lisbon v. Henry, 204 S.W.2d 310, 315 (Mo. 1947). This Court cannot indulge such a construction when it is neither readily apparent from the language of the statute, see Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. at 110, nor an "authoritative" construction rendered by the state courts or responsible enforcement agency. See Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. at 355.

68 The Court of Appeals noted the evidence that the counseling and encouraging restrictions would have had precisely this effect. J.S. at A68 n.11.

69 The State also repeats here its argument, rejected by the Court of Appeals, that this provision is no more vague than the term "counseling for abortion procedures" found not vague by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348, aff'd mem. sub nom. Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 479 U.S. 925 (1986). There, however, the Court relied upon an existing Arizona Attorney General's Opinion that strictly limited the phrase and specifically directed that the phrase, " 'not be construed to interfere with the doctor-patient privilege.' " 718 F.2d at 918 (quoting Arizona Att'y Gen. Op. No. 179-252). The Ninth Circuit added that if the Arizona phrase was not limited by the opinion then the "vagueness claim would have been stronger." Id. There is no such interpretive opinion here, only the various arguments offered in the State's several briefs.

3. The Public Funds Restriction Violates The Fourteenth Amendment

This Court has unswervingly recognized that a woman's right to choose abortion encompasses the right to the unimpeded advice and counsel of her physician. Roe v. Wade identified many of the factors (which also were established in the trial before the District Court here) which would bear on a woman's choice, and recognized that these were factors "the woman and her responsible physician necessarily will consider in consultation." 410 U.S. at 153. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 387, reiterated that "Roe stressed repeatedly the central role of the physician." City of Akron also emphasized repeatedly the centrality of a physician's unencumbered consultation and advice to the woman's right of choice. In rejecting government efforts to "influence the woman's informed choice," this Court held: "It remains primarily the responsibility of the physician to ensure that appropriate information is conveyed to his patient, depending on her particular circumstances. . . ." 462 U.S. at 443. See also id. at 427, 429-30.

Most recently in Thornburgh, this Court rejected Pennsylvania's attempt to require that certain information be given by the physician to his patients because it came "close to being state medicine imposed upon the woman, not the professional medical guidance she seeks, and it officially structures—as it obviously was intended to do—the dialogue between the woman and her physician." Id. at 763.

Neither Thornburgh nor City of Akron involved restrictions on speech. They involved statutes which required the giving of information intended to manipulate the woman's choice. These restrictions left the physician free, however, to add whatever additional information or advice he deemed appropriate. That is not the case here where the restriction limits advice and information. Thus the public funds restriction here is a more egregious state interference with the professional medical guidance to which the woman is entitled, because it reduces the quantum of information available.

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), do not excuse the public funds restriction.

Maher and Harris held that a state's choice not to pay for abortions even when it paid for childbirth was constitutionally permissible because it left "indigent wom[en] with . . . the same range of choice in deciding whether to obtain [an abortion]." Harris, 448 U.S. at 317. The restriction here, by comparison, restricts that "range of choice" by limiting the physician's ability to provide advice to his patient.

Maher and Harris distinguished what they permitted—affirmative encouragement of an activity through allocation of funds—from what they would not permit—state efforts to place "obstacles" or to impose "restriction[s] . . . not already there." Harris, 448 U.S. at 314-15 (quoting Maher, 432 U.S. at 474, 475-76). City of Akron characterized government attempts to influence doctor-patient communications as "unreasonabl[e] . . . 'obstacles'," 462 U.S. at 445 (quoting Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 604 n.33 (1977)), and noted that such attempts to "influence . . . informed choice" were different from what Maher and Harris permit. 462 U.S. at 444. Thus, the Court of Appeals was on firm ground when it held that there could be "few obstacles more burdensome to the right to decide" than a restriction on publicly-paid physicians' right to give full advice and guidance to their patients. J.S. at A73.

V. THE BAN ON ABORTIONS IN PUBLIC FACILITIES IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE IT AFFECTS TOTALLY PRIVATE CONDUCT

Section 188.215 bans the use of so-called "public facilities" for performing or assisting abortions. In declaring this provision unconstitutional, the Court of Appeals focused on its impact upon the access of women and their physicians to public institutions, i.e., publicly owned and governmentally operated institutions. The Court of Appeals held that, in such instances, this provision goes beyond the restriction upheld in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), because it does more than elect, "as a policy choice, to provide publicly financed hospital services for childbirth" without doing likewise for abortion. Id. at 521. It bans all access to public institutions for abortions, even when neither public funds nor publicly-paid physicians are involved. J.S. at A74-77.

This holding, while correct, does not address the staggeringly broader reach of the public facilities provision. The provision reaches not only governmental institutions such as the "city-owned" hospital in Poelker, 432 U.S. at 519, but also purely private, otherwise legal activities wherever "any physical asset"[70] of the government is involved, regardless of the actual role, which may be none, of the government in the conduct of that activity, or the public or private status of the institutions and individuals involved, or the sources, public or private, of payment for the services. Thus, even if this Court believes Poelker could be expanded to shut the door on all use of governmentally operated institutions for abortion, the public facilities restriction must fall because it reaches so much further.

A. The Public Facilities Provision Unconstitutionally Interferes With Wholly Private Medical Treatment In Government Owned and Operated Institutions

Poelker found no constitutional violation in a government choice "to provide publicly financed hospital services for childbirth without providing corresponding services for nontherapeutic abortions." 432 U.S. at 521. This Court reached that conclusion because the constitutional question was "identical in principle" with the question resolved in Maher, 432 U.S. 464, regarding the government's choice to provide Medicaid reimbursement for childbirth expenses but not for abortion expenses. Poelker, 432 U.S. at 521.

The central holding in Maher was that government may "make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds." Id. at 474. Maher circumscribed this holding by recognizing the "basic difference between direct state interference with a protected activity and state encouragement of an alternative activity . . ." id. at 475, and by noting that the latter "places no obstacles . . . in the pregnant woman's path to an abortion." Id. at 474. See Harris, 448 U.S. at 314-15.

---

70 The Act defines a public facility as "any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivisions thereof." Section 188.200(2).

These principles also limit Poelker, and explain why the public facilities provision, just in terms of its impact on governmentally operated institutions, is unconstitutional. As the Court of Appeals stated, " '[t]here is a fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital.' " J.S. at A75 (quoting Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754, 758 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983)).

Where a woman and her doctor decide that an abortion should be performed in a hospital,[71] and the doctor has staff privileges only at a governmentally operated hospital, the public facilities provision will force the woman either to undergo the procedure with her doctor outside the hospital, or to locate a different doctor with privileges at some other, non-governmental hospital. This will happen even though no public subsidy is involved. Closing the door of the public hospital to private physicians and their patients is therefore a direct and unconstitutional intervention in the abortion decision.[72] See City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 434-35 (hospitalization requirement unconstitutional because it imposed significant obstacles of travel, increased cost, and additional health risk, and was not justified by State's interest in maternal health).

71 There are some situations where abortions should be performed in a hospital setting to insure maternal health and safety. Tr. 2-17 (Hern). For instance, abortions of molar pregnancies should be performed in a hospital operating room because of the increased risk of severe hemorrhage and "in case of pulmonary embolism and acute respiratory embarrassment." W. Hern, Abortion Practice 198-99. Other factors such as a maternal history of anemia, chronic infection or diabetes also increase the risk that a major hemorrhage will occur, which could require blood transfusions. Id. at 176.

72 In many smaller communities, hospitals are the only location where an abortion can be obtained. Henshaw, et al., Abortion Services In The United States 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63, 67 (1987). Frequently, the only hospital in such communities is a government owned or operated hospital, or at least a public facility within the broad meaning of the provision here. See, e.g., Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754. In all of these communities, the dislocation caused by the public facilities provision will be multiplied by the absence of nearby alternatives and the vicissitudes of travel.

These problems will not be solved by other hospitals stepping in to fill the breach. The unchallenged evidence at trial showed that private hospitals do not step in to expand abortion services if they become less available in a community, J.S. at A25 n.20, and Missouri has statutorily imposed limits on the ability of health care institutions to offer new health services or open new facilities. Mo. Rev. Stat. Chap. 197.

The State and the Solicitor General both argue that if government cannot ban abortions at government hospitals, this means government must go into the abortion business. State's Brief at 47; S.G. Brief at 28. The holding of the Court of Appeals means nothing of the kind. It means government cannot close the doors of an otherwise suitable facility to private physicians who seek to provide abortions to their patients at that facility if those physicians are otherwise qualified to practice at that facility.[73] It does not require the government to undertake any affirmative step.

B. The Public Facilities Provision Unconstitutionally Interferes With Wholly Private Medical Treatment In Private Institutions And Other Private Settings

Even if government can close the doors of its own facilities, the public facilities provision undertakes to close many more doors as well. Private institutions or individuals located on 73 The Court of Appeals also invalidated the restriction on public employees performing or assisting abortions. Section 188.210. J.S. at A78-9. Plaintiffs had challenged this provision as violating the eighth amendment, see J.S. at A51-54; but the Court of Appeals interpreted the phrase "perform or assist" in a narrow way that resolved plaintiffs' eighth amendment concerns. J.S. at A79-82. The Court of Appeals found, nonetheless, that the restriction on public employees was invalid because it "would be totally incongruous to hold that the state cannot deny use of public facilities for paid abortions but may forbid public employees from assisting in those surgical procedures." J.S. at A78 n.15. Plaintiffs agree that the public employees provision is unconstitutional insofar as it prevents private physicians and their patients from obtaining access to suitable government owned and operated facilities for the purpose of abortion procedures.

property "owned, leased, or controlled" by the government will also be barred from providing abortions.

Contrary to the State's bald assertion that this provision will not "impose any obstacle which would substantially burden the effectuation of a woman's decision to obtain an abortion," State's Brief at 49, the impact of this provision in Missouri will be devastating. In 1985, 97 percent of all hospital-based abortions at 16 weeks or greater gestation in Missouri were performed at a hospital that will be forced to cease providing that service because it is housed on property that it leases from a political subdivision of the State. J.S. at A51 n.57.

That hospital is not a publicly owned or government operated institution.[74] It is a private Missouri corporation. Its employees are not public employees; they are employees of the private corporation. Its physicians are not, for the most part, public employees; they are employees of a second private corporation that provides physician services to the hospital corporation pursuant to a contract.[75] Moreover, no public funds are involved in the abortion services provided at the hospital.[76] J.S. at A76 n.14.

Moreover, it is not true, as the State suggests, that there are no other instances in Missouri where this provision will prevent access to abortion services. State's Brief at 49. Wherever, for example, a physician's office is located on property "owned, leased, or controlled" by the government, that physician will be barred from providing an abortion to patients in his or her office.

Presumably the State's interests are related to a policy choice to promote childbirth and to disengage itself from the provision 74 The hospital is commonly thought of as a "public" hospital because it provides care to indigent residents of the city and county in which it is located.

---

75 Letter from G. Wilcher, General Counsel, Truman Medical Center, to Roger Evans, dated February 29, 1989.

76 The State says that this hospital is the only hospital in Missouri that provides abortions on a regular basis and is a public facility. State's Brief at 49, n.12. This assertion is not supported by the record; we do not know which other non-governmental hospitals would fall within the broad reach of this provision.

of abortion services.[77] Maher and Harris recognize the right of government to make this choice; but they do not recognize the right of government to implement that choice as the State has done in the public facilities provision. In those cases the government decisions to fund childbirth while not funding abortion provided affirmative incentives. They did not impose obstacles to private conduct. Here, by comparison, the public facilities provision—both as it applies to government institutions, and as it applies more broadly to other institutions and individuals on property owned, leased, or controlled by government—is an obstacle, not an incentive.

The public facilities provision is likewise not rescued by the State's interest in disengaging itself from the provision of abortion services. While it can disengage itself, it must do so in a way that is narrowly tailored so as not to penalize protected private conduct. Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 944-45 (9th Cir. 1983), appeal after remand, 789 F.2d 1348, aff'd mem. sub nom. Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 479 U.S. 925 (1986). Here, protected private conduct will be made "unlawful" in the State's far-reaching efforts at disengagement.

In Maher and Harris, this Court found the funding incentives rationally related to the legitimate objective of promoting childbirth. Here, even a rational basis test cannot be met. The principle the State seeks to vindicate here goes far beyond its right affirmatively to encourage childbirth; it is seeking vindication of its choice to become an adversary to private institutions and individuals seeking to provide abortions.

To uphold the public facilities provision would be to constitutionally enshrine a principle of far-reaching consequences. The State ban on the use of "any physical asset" it owns, leases, or controls for the performance of abortions seemingly reaches such public facilities as water and sewage lines which 77 Presumably, also, the State seeks to demonstrate its opposition to abortion. As Justice Scalia observed earlier this term in a different context, "I think it obvious that this justification is unacceptable; that the impairment of individual liberties cannot be the means of making a point . . . ." Treasury Employees v. Von Raab, U.S. Docket no. 86-1879, slip op. at 8 (March 21, 1989) (Scalia, J., dissenting).

---

are involved in the provision of abortions. Upholding the State's power to withdraw such facilities is to uphold the power of government to drive underground otherwise legal activity. That power can reach beyond abortion to other legitimate but disfavored activities. Could the State, for example, next ban the utilization of contraceptives in publicly owned housing? Abortion is a fundamental constitutional right, but, as Justice Stevens observed in a related context,[78] one need not posit a constitutional right to characterize the public facilities restriction as irrational and perverse.

CONCLUSION

Acceding to the State's and the Solicitor General's request that this Court overrule Roe v. Wade would strike at the heart of the values embodied in the rule of stare decisis and the role of this Court as a guardian of individual liberties, above the political fray. This Court should reaffirm its sixteen years of consistent rulings protecting the right to choose an abortion by affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

78 Justice Stevens observed, "It is as though a State decided to dramatize its disapproval of motorcycles by forbidding the use of safety helmets. One need not posit a constitutional right to ride a motorcycle to characterize such a restriction as irrational and perverse." Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. at 715 (Stevens, J., concurring). See also Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 17 (1947).

Respectfully submitted,

ROGER K. EVANS*
DARA KLASSEL
BARBARA E. OTTEN
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

FRANK SUSMAN
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel
& Shifrin
7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
American Civil Liberties Union of Eastern and Western Missouri
(314) 725-7300

Attorneys for Appellees

Of Counsel: JANET BENSHOOF
ACLU Foundation, Inc.

*Counsel of Record

March 30, 1989

REPLY

BRIEF

FILED
APR 20 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals
for the Eighth Circuit

APPELLANTS' REPLY BRIEF

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri

MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782

Attorneys for Appellants

April 20, 1989

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO., (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

25 pp

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

ARGUMENT 1

I. The Standard for Reviewing Abortion-Related Legislation Should be Reconsidered and Modified 1

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being." 9

III. The State of Missouri Has a Compelling Interest in Requiring a Physician Determining Viability to Cause to be Performed Such Examinations and Tests as are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child 13

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life 13

V. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding that Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy 16

CONCLUSION 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 8, 9, 10

Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737 (1984) 14

Blue Cross Hospital Service, Inc. v. Frappier, 681 S.W.2d 923 (Mo. banc 1984) 12

Borowski v. The Attorney General of Canada, No. 20411 (March 9, 1989) 2

Boyd-Richardson Company v. Leachman, 615 S.W.2d 46 (Mo. banc 1981) 12

Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715 (1961) 19

Century 21 v. City of Jennings, 700 S.W.2d 809 (Mo. banc 1985) 12

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 8

Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327 (1986) 3

DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dep't of Social Services, 109 S.Ct. 998 (1989) 16

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 1

Ferguson v. Skupka, 372 U.S. 726 (1963) 3

Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988) 11

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 3, 5, 7, 16

Hudgens v. NLRB, 424 U.S. 507 (1976) 3

Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) 9

Lyng v. International Union, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988) 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES–Continued

Page

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 16, 17, 18

Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 5

Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973) 3

Morgentaler v. Her Majesty the Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (1988) 2

New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297 (1976) 3

New York State Club Ass'n, Inc. v. New York, 108 S.Ct. 2225 (1988) 15

Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 5

Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 8

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 16, 17

Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 5

Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 16

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435 (1987) 3

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 6

United States v. Moore, 423 U.S. 122 (1975) 7

United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739 (1987) 15

United States v. Scott, 437 U.S. 82 (1978) 3

Westin Crown Plaza Hotel Company v. King, 664 S.W.2d 2 (Mo. banc 1984) 12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES–Continued

Page

STATUTES AND MISCELLANEOUS CITATIONS

First Amendment, U. S. Const. 3, 15, 16

Fourteenth Amendment, U. S. Const. 3, 15, 16

Art. III § 23, Mo. Const. 12

Art. III § 28, Mo. Const. 12

§ 1.205, RSMo 1986 ..... 11, 12, 13

§ 1.205.1(1), RSMo 1986 ..... 9, 10, 20

§ 1.205.1(2), RSMo 1986 ..... 9, 10, 20

§ 1.205.2, RSMo 1986 ..... 2, 10, 11

§ 188.029, RSMo 1986 ..... 13, 20

§ 188.030, RSMo 1986 ..... 2, 10

§ 188.200(2), RSMo 1986 18

§ 188.205, RSMo 1986 ..... 14, 20

§ 188.210, RSMo 1986 ..... 14, 20

§ 188.215, RSMo 1986 ..... 14, 18, 20

M. A. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law: American Failures, European Challenges (1987) 1, 2

Experts Assess a Decade of In Vitro Fertilization, New York Times, Tuesday, April 11, 1989, C5 8

ARGUMENT

I. The Standard for Reviewing Abortion-Related Legislation Should be Reconsidered and Modified.

It is a common assumption of many of the briefs filed by appellees and their amici that the alternative to the regime of abortion rights established by Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), is the automatic and total criminalization of abortion. That is clearly not the case. The alternative to the Court's continuing effort to oversee virtually all aspects of the abortion controversy is to leave that controversy "with the people and to the political processes the people have devised to govern their affairs." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 222 (1973) (White, J., dissenting). It will then be up to the legislatures of each state to determine the extent, if any, to which abortion should be prohibited or regulated.

It is not clear how individual states will respond to this challenge. If the experience of other countries is any guide, however, it is unlikely that widespread criminalization of abortion in early pregnancy will result if Roe v. Wade is overruled. See M. A. Glendon, Abortion and divorce in Western Law: American Failures, European Challenges, 13-15, 49 (1987). Indeed, the Court in Roe acknowledged that the states had begun a "trend toward liberalization of abortion statutes." 410 U.S. at 139-140. That trend was preempted by the Court's own action on the issue. Given the chance, there is no reason to believe that the political processes in the individual states will not be able to resolve this issue in a responsible manner, as other western democracies have done. But "[t]o a greater extent than in any other country, our courts have shut down the legislative process of bargaining, education, and persuasion on the abortion issue." Glendon, supra, at 2.[1]

The Missouri statutes at issue in this case are illustrative of what would happen if the regime of strict judicial review mandated in Roe v. Wade were abandoned. Contrary to appellees' assertion (Br. 21-22), abortion would not be automatically criminalized under existing Missouri statutes. Nor would methods of birth control that operate after conception but before implantation (such as the IUD or the "morning after" pill) be unlawful. Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception is limited in its effect by "specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state." § 1.205.2, RSMo 1986. Under current Missouri law, only post-viability abortions are unlawful, and even after viability an abortion may be performed "if necessary to preserve the life or health of the woman." § 188.030, RSMo 1986. That would continue to be the law of Missouri if Roe were overruled, absent an affirmative change by the legislature. Thus, a decision by this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade would not have the draconian effect suggested by appellees and supporting amici.

Appellees (Br. 3) and various amici (see, e.g., Brief for Certain Members of the Congress of the United States, 14-18) suggest that constitutional adjudication works as a sort of one-way ratchet, whereby precedents may be overruled in order to expand, but never to contract, constitutional rights. That is clearly not the case. See e.g., Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330-331 (1986); New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 306 (1976); Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435 (1987). In any event, at issue in this case is not the "abolition" of a constitutional right but rather a modification of the standard of review. The Court has previously made such modifications to property and contract rights (e.g., Ferguson v. Shupka, 372 U.S. 726 (1963)), to equal protection rights (New Orleans v. Dukes, supra), to First Amendment rights (Hudgens v. NLRB, 424 U.S. 507 (1976); Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973)), and to double jeopardy rights (United States v. Scott, 437 U.S. 82 (1978)). There is no reason inherent in constitutional adjudication or the doctrine of stare decisis why the Court should not similarly adjust the standard of review governing a woman's right to choose an abortion under the Fourteenth Amendment to bring its rulings in line with the general requirement that state regulations affecting a liberty interest protected by the due process clause need only be procedurally fair and bear a rational relation to valid state objectives.[2]

---

[1] Although the Canadian Supreme Court struck down its abortion law on grounds of procedural due process, see Morgentaler v. Her Majesty the Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (1988), that court has since made clear that the ultimate issue of the legality of abortion is one for legislative, not judicial, determination. See Borowski v. The Attorney General of Canada, No. 20411 (March 9, 1989). Morgentaler itself can at most be read as subjecting abortion restrictions to an "undue burden" analysis; only one Justice would have gone further to adopt the reasoning in Roe.

---

[2] Tacitly acknowledging the incongruity – under general due process jurisprudence – of the standard of review chosen by the Court in Roe v. Wade, various amici attempt to find other provisions of the Bill of Rights that will generate the same result. See, e.g., Brief Amicus Curiae for American Jewish Congress, et al. (free exercise clause of First Amendment); Brief for Organizations and Named Women as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellee (prohibition on involuntary service in Thirteenth Amendment); Brief for the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellees (equal protection). These arguments, however, to the extent they have not already been rejected by the Court, see Harris v.

(Continued on following page)

Appellees' reliance upon the barrier of stare decisis is particularly weak because the trimester framework announced in Roe v. Wade has proven to be inherently difficult to apply in any consistent or principled manner. Far from settling the issue of abortion in American law, Roe and its progeny have fostered confusion and generated unrelenting controversy.[3]

Appellees (Br. 9) contend that "a fundamental right to abortion . . . flow[s] logically out of the general right to privacy or personal autonomy which protects matters of procreation and family life, including contraception" and that "the presence of the fetus" is not sufficient to "undercut[] the 'fundamental nature' of the right itself." The life of the fetus, appellees claim, only comes into play in judging the extent of the State's countervailing interest, not in determining whether the fundamental right to privacy is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision to have an abortion. That contention is plainly incorrect. The existence of the fetus alters the fundamental nature of the decision in question. A woman deciding to have an abortion is not simply choosing a method of

---

(Continued from previous page)

McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 318-327 (1980), all suffer from the same flaws that infect the decision in Roe.

Other amici abandon any attempt to find a constitutional basis for the decision and instead present pure policy arguments to the Court. See, e.g., Brief for Population-Environment Balance, et al., as Amici Curiae Supporting Appellees (overpopulation); Brief Amici Curiae of the National Council of Negro Women, Inc., et al. (plight of poor women). While these policy concerns are not insubstantial, they are properly to be considered by the legislative branch, not the judiciary.

[3] See Brief of Hon. Christopher H. Smith, Hon. Alan B. Mollohan, Hon. John C. Danforth, and Other United States Senators and Members of Congress, as Amici Curiae in Support of Appellants, which addresses at length the inappropriateness of stare decisis as a justification for refusing to reconsider Roe v. Wade.

contraception. She is choosing "the purposeful termination of a potential human life." Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 325 (1980). Such a choice is different in kind from choices concerning marital privacy and the use of contraceptives.

The flaw in appellees' argument is apparent. Choices concerning the raising of one's children are clearly encompassed within the sphere of personal autonomy and family choice recognized in such cases as Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 400 (1923), and Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925). It does not follow, however, that parents have a fundamental right to abuse their children – a "right" overcome only by the State's compelling and countervailing interest in protecting the victims of such abuse. The infliction of serious physical injury by a parent on a child is simply not included within the relevant right to privacy. It is different in kind from the sorts of decisions and activities traditionally embraced by that right. Cf. Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 164-171 (1944) (rejecting claim that child labor laws are unconstitutional under Meyer and Pierce).[4]

Similarly, the fact that abortion involves the purposeful termination of a potential human life takes it altogether outside the bounds of the right to privacy recognized in this Court's decisions prior to Roe v. Wade. Decisions concerning marital privacy and the use of contraceptives bear no logical relationship to – and should provide no precedential support for – a decision that involves, not the woman alone, but also the potential life of the fetus. It is certainly true "that a woman's ability to choose an abortion is a species of 'liberty' that is subject to the general protections of the Due Process Clause." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 790 (1986) (White, J., dissenting). But the presence of this liberty interest should be accommodated, like other liberty interests, by the requirement that any state regulation affecting that interest must be procedurally fair and must bear a rational relationship to valid state objectives. For example, if a state "were to prohibit an abortion even where the mother's life is in jeopardy," there would be little doubt that "such a statute would lack a rational relation to a valid state objective." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 173 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).[5] Heightened scrutiny, however, is neither necessary nor warranted.

---

[4] Appellees' version of the historical regulation of abortion is extremely distorted as exhaustively discussed by Professor Joseph W. Dellapenna in the Brief of the Association for Public Justice and The Value of Life Committee, Inc., in Support of Appellant, William L. Webster; see also Brief of Certain American State Legislators as Amici Curiae in Support of Appellants.

A similar flaw infects the Amicus Brief of the American Medical Assoc., et al. (at 25-35), which argues from the premise that "individuals have a fundamental right to make decisions about their medical care" to the conclusion that " a woman's choice whether or not to terminate her pregnancy should be deemed a fundamental liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause." The conclusion does not follow from the premise for an obvious reason already recognized by this Court: "Abortion is inherently different from other medical procedures,

---

[5] The AMA asserts (Br. 37) that the rationality review proposed by appellants and the United States "leaves no room for the woman to terminate a pregnancy to protect her own health or even to save her life." We do not understand the United States to make such an argument; in any event, it is not the position of the State of Missouri. Such a case, of course, would implicate not just a generalized liberty interest, but life itself.

because no other procedure involves the purposeful termination of a potential life." Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. at 325. The Constitution does not grant to physicians the ultimate say on all questions of policy related to medicine. Nor are medical choices constitutionally protected merely because a doctor is involved in implementing them. Otherwise, euthanasia could also "be deemed a fundamental liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause," as could the use of laetrile and other nonapproved drugs. Cf. United States v. Moore, 423 U.S. 122, 131-133 (1975) (physicians may be prosecuted for unlawfully dispensing narcotics).

Appellees (Br. 13-15) and their supporting amici (e.g., 167 Distinguished Scientists Br. at 8-16; AMA Br. at 5-8) also take issue with our contention that Roe's selection of viability as the point at which the state may intervene to protect fetal life is arbitrary and unworkable. They contend that there is in fact a fixed "floor" in terms of weeks of gestation below which it is impossible to sustain the life of a fetus outside the womb with artificial support. Nevertheless, appellees acknowledge, as they must, that changes in medical technology have resulted in an "increasing ability over the past decade to save progressively younger neonates" (Br. 13, quoting Report of the Committee on Fetal Extrauterine Survivability to the New York State Task Force on Life and the Law, 9 (January, 1988)). Moreover, as both the record in this case and the various amicus briefs demonstrate, there is no agreement between experts as to exactly what the current lower limit may be. Compare AMA Br. 6 (23-24 weeks) with American Assn. of Prolife Obstetricians and Gynecologists, et al., Br. 6 (22 weeks). And of course, notwithstanding the confident assertions of certain amici to the contrary (see 167 Distinguished Scientists Br. 8), it is impossible to predict the future development of medical technology. In 1973, when Roe was decided, no one had heard of the possibility of in vitro fertilization; today, over 5,500 in vitro babies have been born in the United States alone. Experts Assess a Decade of In Vitro Fertilization, N.Y. Times, Tuesday, April 11, 1989, at C5. Similar breakthroughs may occur in the medical technology for bringing a fertilized ovum to gestation.

But Roe's selection of viability as the critical point in the State's power to regulate abortion is arbitrary not only because viability is a shifting point. Perhaps even more serious is the uncertainty over how viability is to be determined. The evidence in this case, as the district court acknowledged (J. S. App. A33), reveals that determining the number of weeks of gestation is difficult, and that "inaccuracies of up to four weeks are not uncommon." Given these uncertainties, the Roe framework creates the following dilemma: either the State must adopt legislation instructing physicians regarding the determination of viability (as Missouri has done here in § 188.029), or the State must relegate any control over whether abortions are performed on viable fetuses to the sole discretion of private physicians.

This dilemma is entirely the creation of the framework established by Roe v. Wade, and illustrates why that framework is unworkable. This Court has on several occasions been required to revisit questions about the proper role of the states in defining viability and the methods for determining viability, and whether those judgments comport with the views of the medical and scientific communities. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 434-438 (1983); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-389 (1979); Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64 (1976). These decisions have taken the Court far afield from the traditional sources that are used to resolve questions of constitutional entitlement. Although it is true that advances in science and technology may present issues about the application of established constitutional rights in new contexts that could not have been contemplated by the framers (e.g., Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) (telephone wire tap)), it is not true that in any other context the very dimensions of the constitutional right turn on disputed issues of technical fact. Because this Court's Roe v. Wade framework has required its "continued functioning as the nation's 'ex officio medical review board with powers to approve or disapprove medical and operational practices and standards throughout the United States,'" Akron, 462 U.S. at 456 (O'Connor, J., dissenting), it should be reconsidered, and upon reconsideration, overruled.[6]

II. The State of Missouri May Make Legislative Findings That "the Life of Each Human Being Begins at Conception" and That "Unborn Children Have Protectable Interests in Life, Health, and Well-Being."

The appellees argue that §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2), RSMo 1986, violate the right to privacy because they are operative statutory provisions which define the reach of the State's abortion regulations and may restrict access to some contraceptives. Appellees initially contend that the subsections in question are not identified as prefatory statements. How else can one characterize a statute which begins "1. The general assembly of this state finds . . . "? A "finding" is not a directive. Granted, Missouri does not label its findings as a preamble. But there is no conceivable basis for considering the General Assembly's "findings" as anything but prefatory.

Appellees' contention that it is impermissible for Missouri to preface an act pertaining to unborn children [6] Of course, it would always be possible to render the Roe framework more workable by abandoning the concept of viability and declaring by fiat that the states have no power to regulate abortion until a fixed number of weeks of gestational age. But this would achieve greater workability only at the expense of dropping any pretense of constitutional legitimacy.

---

and abortion with a declaration that life begins at conception is plainly incorrect, even assuming the continued validity of Roe v. Wade. In Akron, 462 U.S. at 444, this Court did say that "a state may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." But the Court's point was simply that, in balancing the competing constitutional interests at stake and setting the boundaries of permissible regulation of abortion by the states, the Court would not take into account a state's assertion as to when life begins. The Court did not suggest that it was improper for a state to express its views on this issue in the course of passing otherwise constitutional law.

Appellees continue to overlook the substantive language of § 1.205.2, which follows the prefatory findings declared invalid by the court below. § 1.205.2 states as follows:

> Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state. (Emphasis added.)

Appellees' argument that the findings of §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) somehow interfere with access to abortion or contraceptives clearly ignores the explicit limiting language of § 1.205.2. As we explained in our opening brief (at 27-29), § 1.205.2 has significant – and perfectly permissible – effects on state tort, criminal, and property law. But the provision has no effect on the availability of abortion in Missouri because Missouri law makes abortion illegal only after viability. § 188.030, RSMo 1986. See Argument I, supra. It is equally fallacious to wildly hypothesize that § 1.205 will interfere with access to contraceptive materials.

The constitutionality of the substantive language of § 1.205 has never been challenged by the appellees. It is operative law today. Contrary to the court of appeals' opinion (J.S. A64-A65), the limiting language of § 1.205.2 is very meaningful. The language explicitly incorporates existing state and federal law. The court of appeals' construction is directly contrary to the "well-established principle that statutes will be interpreted to avoid constitutional difficulties" [citations omitted]. Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 2501 (1988).

To the extent that the findings of the General Assembly have relevance to Missouri's abortion laws, they simply explain why the State of Missouri chooses to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by this Court's abortion precedents. Provided the State's substantive restrictions on abortion remain within the limits set by those decisions, however, the state's motivation in fashioning such restrictions is irrelevant. Missouri is not precluded from viewing abortion as the purposeful termination of an actual human life; nor is it required to pledge agnosticism on the subject of when life begins as a prerequisite to any and all regulations of abortion. The court of appeals' blatant intolerance of the expression of a moral viewpoint with which it simply disagrees (see J.S. A64-A65) has no place in constitutional adjudication.

Appellees devote four pages of their argument (Br. 23-26) to an alternative contention that the General Assembly's findings violate the Missouri Constitution. This argument concerning state law was not raised in the district court or passed on by the courts below, and we agree with appellees, id. at 23 n. 42, that this Court need not address it. However, since the appellees' arguments are blatantly incorrect under Missouri law, a remand would be inappropriate.

Appellees argue that since the operative language of § 1.205 will impact upon existing tort, property, and criminal law protection for unborn children, then the statute violates Art. III § 23 of the Missouri Constitution because tort, property, and criminal law are not subjects encompassed by the title of the act (J.A. at A22). The quick and easy response is that appellees never challenged the operative language set forth in § 1.205.2. But, it is also very clear under controlling case law that the title of the act in question provided sufficient notice to interested persons of its subject matter, which is the purpose of Art. III § 23 of the Missouri Constitution. Blue Cross Hospital Service, Inc. v. Frappier, 681 S.W.2d 923 (Mo. banc 1984). "The test is whether all provisions of the bill fairly relate to the subject expressed in the title, have natural connections therewith, or are incidents or means to accomplish the express purpose." Id. at 929, 930. See also Westin Crown Plaza Hotel Company v. King, 664 S.W.2d 2 (Mo. banc 1984), wherein the Missouri Supreme Court noted that "[t]he title to a bill need only indicate the general contents of the act," id. at 6, and that Art. III § 23 is to be "liberally construed." Id. Clearly, all provisions of the act in question fairly relate to the general subject expressed in the title, "Unborn children and abortion."

Appellees' reliance upon Art. III § 28 is equally misplaced because their argument that various statutes affected by the adoption of § 1.205 should have been set forth in the act was rejected by the Missouri Supreme Court in Century 21 v. City of Jennings, 700 S.W.2d 809, 812 (Mo. banc 1985), wherein the court held that Art. III § 28 does not require a "detailed cross-referencing of . . . related statutes. 'The fact [an act] has consequences for other statutes does not bring it into conflict with Art. III § 28.' Boyd-Richardson Company v. Leachman, 615 S.W.2d 46, 53 (Mo. banc 1981)." By its own terms, § 1.205.2 states that its provisions are fully subject to "specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state." So § 1.205 does not amend any specific language of any other Missouri statute. Neither the substantive nor prefatory language of § 1.205 are subject to attack under the Missouri Constitution.

III. The State of Missouri Has a Compelling Interest in Requiring a Physician Determining Viability to Cause to be Performed Such Examinations and Tests as are Necessary to Make a Finding of the Gestational Age, Weight, and Lung Maturity of the Unborn Child

The State's position regarding this issue is fully addressed in the opening brief. A thorough discussion and refutation of appellees' contention that § 188.029 facially requires dangerous or unnecessary medical tests is set forth in the Brief of the American Association of Prolife Obstetricians and Gynecologists (AAPLOG) and the American Association of Pro-Life Pediatricians (AAPLP) as Amici Curiae in Support of Appellants. Under Roe v. Wade the State has a compelling interest in protecting a viable unborn child, but that interest is mere verbiage if a physician cannot even be required to make and record the findings which cause him to conclude whether an unborn child is viable.

IV. The State of Missouri May Constitutionally Refuse to Support Abortion Services by Declaring Unlawful the Expenditure of Public Funds for the Purpose of Encouraging or Counseling a Woman to Have an Abortion Not Necessary to Save Her Life.

Appellees contend (Br. 31-35) that the controversy over the ban on the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion is "moot." This is incorrect. As appellees note, appellants did not appeal the court of appeals' judgment insofar as it held invalid those portions of §§ 188.210 and 188.215, RSMo 1986, that forbid public employees from encouraging a woman to have an abortion and that forbid public facilities from being used for that purpose. Appellants only sought review of the judgment insofar as it held invalid the ban in § 188.205 on the use of state funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion. Appellees now suggest (Br. 31-35) that the funding ban in § 188.205 "appears not to affect Plaintiffs adversely," since "public employees" and "private practitioners in public facilities" may counsel women to have an abortion under the judgment below that §§ 188.210 and 188.215 are invalid (Br. 32), and since "plaintiffs are neither grantees nor employees of programs" whose state funding may be discontinued if they encourage women to have an abortion, id. at 32-33.

Appellees' assertion that the funding ban does not "affect Plaintiffs adversely" does not mean, however, that this issue is now "moot." Appellees have confused mootness with standing. If appellees are not affected by the funding ban, then they lack standing to challenge it, and the judgment below should be reversed for that reason, since injury-in-fact is a requirement of standing. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 751 (1984). Appellees have no less standing to challenge § 188.205 than they had at the outset of this litigation.[7]

The funding ban forbids state officials from appropriating public funds to counsel or encourage women to have abortions. Thus, state and local agencies and officials may not establish programs for abortion counseling, print brochures that advocate abortion, or hire persons to serve as abortion counselors. Pregnant women can challenge a law limiting the use of public funds in this manner, since they can allege an injury from it, and the plaintiff class certified by the district court included "pregnant women seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling within Missouri," J.S. App. A57 n. 1; J.A. A13-A14 (appellees' proposed class).[8] Moreover, appellees' complaint alleged that the funding ban "interfere[s] unconstitutionally with the privacy rights of pregnant women seeking abortions or seeking professional advice and assistance as to their pregnancies." J.A. A17. Appellees' complaint thus alleged that the funding ban concretely injured an identifiable category of persons, which is sufficient to establish appellees' standing to challenge the constitutionality of the funding ban.

[7] Appellants' construction of § 188.205 has never altered. The distinct effect of the funding ban was expressed at length in defendants' post-trial memorandum (see J.S. A45-A46), and it was raised in the appellants' brief in the court of appeals.

On the merits, appellees clearly err in claiming that the funding ban, properly understood, is facially unconstitutional under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Generally, a law may not be held facially invalid unless its every application is unconstitutional. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745 (1987). A statute can be held facially invalid under the First Amendment, however, if it poses a realistic danger that it will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the court. New York State Club Ass'n, Inc. v. New York, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 2233 (1988). Neither is true here. Appellees fail to distinguish between a state restriction on the ability of a private party or state employee to counsel a woman to have an abortion – something which is no longer at issue here – and a state restriction on the uses to which its own funds may be put. It is this latter issue that is presented by the funding ban. As we explained in our opening brief (at 35-44), neither the First nor Fourteenth Amendment requires a state to supply or to underwrite abortion counseling or any other abortion-related service. See also U.S. Br. 26-27. This Court expressly held in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, supra, that due process guarantees no such right, and the Court reaffirmed that principle this term in DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services, 109 S.Ct. 998, 1003 (1989) ("the Due Process Clauses generally confer no affirmative right to governmental aid, even where such aid may be necessary to secure life, liberty, or property interests of which the government itself may not deprive the individual"). It is also clear that there is no constitutional requirement that the government subsidize the private exercise of First Amendment rights, Lyng v. International Union, 108 S.Ct. 1184, 1190 (1988); Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983), much less that the government must itself become an advocate for any point of view. In sum, the funding ban only limits the uses to which the state's own funds may be put. As such, it is facially valid under this Court's precedents.

[8] Appellees imply that the plaintiff class consists only of "public employees," "private practitioners in public facilities," and "grantees [and] employees" of programs whose funds may be discontinued. Br. for Appellees 32-33. The class certified by the district court, however, was far broader, as appellees themselves elsewhere point out. Br. for Appellees 31 n. 54.

V. The Court of Appeals Erred in Holding That Civil Statutes Forbidding the Performance of Abortion Services by a Public Employee or in a Public Facility Violate a Woman's Right to Privacy.

The court of appeals also held facially unconstitutional Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist in abortions that are not necessary to save the life of the mother. Appellees attempt (Br. 44-50) to defend that ruling by noting that the prohibition will prevent a private physician, with staff privileges at a public hospital, from performing an abortion at that hospital and thereby make it more difficult for women to have abortions because there may be no private facilities readily available for that purpose. It is clear, however, that the State is no more required to make up for a lack of private facilities to perform abortions than it is required to make up for a lack of private funds for abortions. As long as there is no "direct state interference," Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 475, with the performance of abortions by private physicians in private hospitals and clinics, the State may freely implement "its policy choice to favor normal childbirth," id. at 477, through its allocation of public facilities and the services of public employees. That such an allocation "may make it difficult . . . for some women to have abortions is neither created nor in any way affected by [Missouri's prohibitions]." Id. at 474.

In any event, as already noted, a law may not be held facially invalid unless its every application is unconstitutional. Appellees do not even suggest that the prohibition is unconstitutional as applied to the performance of abortions by public employees in public facilities.[9] The statute cannot therefore be facially invalid. And the statute is certainly not rendered facially invalid by appellees' speculation (Br. 45) that the statute might be applied to prohibit purely private conduct in a private setting simply because some "physical asset" owned by the government was involved. If the State were ever, for example, to extend the reach of the statute by providing for a state monopoly on certain types of medical equipment essential to abortions and by making that equipment available only through lease agreements, then – assuming the continued validity of Roe v. Wade – a prohibition on the use of such equipment in performing abortions would be unconstitutional as a "direct state interference with a protected activity." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 475. But nothing approaching that sort of "direct interference" is in question here.

---

[9] Thus, appellees do not attempt (see Br. 47 n. 73) to defend the court of appeals' conclusion that the restriction on public employees is constitutionally invalid because "it would be totally incongruous to hold that the state cannot deny use of public facilities for paid abortions but may forbid public employees from assisting in those surgical procedures." J.S. A78 n. 15. Nor is that conclusion in any way defensible. Not only is its premise incorrect – as this Court's decision in Poelker v. Doe, supra, demonstrates – but the court of appeals' singular concept of what might be incongruous has no bearing on the constitutional issue before this Court.

Appellees point out (Br. 48) that Truman Medical Center is a "public facility" within the meaning of § 188.215, see § 188.200(2), RSMo 1986, even though it is run by a private Missouri corporation. The Court should also note that almost one-third of Truman Medical Center's yearly operating revenue is provided by the State of Missouri and political subdivisions of the State; that the Board of Directors of the corporation must include at least fourteen city or county officers and five state employees representing the University of Missouri-Kansas City; and that all facilities of the Truman Medical Center are owned by and the legal title of the land sites is vested in the political subdivision of Jackson County, Missouri. The Truman Medical Center West facility is leased by Jackson County to Truman Medical Center, Inc., for one dollar.[10] Under these circumstances, it is surely natural to regard Truman Medical Center as a "public facility" and surely constitutional for the State to place restrictions on the use of that facility in accordance with public policy. The policies of Truman Medical Center will naturally and properly be viewed as those of the State of Missouri and the State of Missouri may set those policies accordingly. Cf. Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715 (1961) (discrimination by restaurant that leases space from the state government is attributable to the government as state action).

[10] Truman Medical Center, Inc., Financial Statements and Schedules, April 30, 1988 and 1987.

The statistical evidence presented during the trial of this action established that only 710 of a total of 19,482 abortions performed in Missouri in 1985 were performed in hospitals. (Pl. Exh. 17, Tr. 2-73, 2-76). Truman Medical Center provided 507 of the abortions which were performed in hospitals. (Pl. Exh. 18, Tr. 2-73, 2-76.) There was no evidence in the record that any clinic providing abortions was a public facility as defined by § 188.200(2). Clearly, appellees' own evidence proved that women do not obtain abortions in small community hospitals in the State of Missouri. (Pl. Exh. 18, Tr. 2-73, 2-76.) Further, the record provides no basis for asserting that private hospitals and clinics cannot meet the demand for abortions by women in Missouri. Finally, appellees provide absolutely no justification for asserting that the provisions of Chapter 197, RSMo, will be utilized to prevent private health care institutions from offering needed health services or opening new private facilities. In fact, the parties stipulated that Chapter 197 was not applicable to Reproductive Health Services or Planned Parenthood of Kansas City. (J.A. at A-53, ¶ 16.)

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the courts below were in error when they rendered their decisions. The judgment of the court of appeals, insofar as it invalidated §§ 1.205.1(1) and 1.205.1(2), the second half of § 188.029, the second half of § 188.205, and the first half of §§ 188.210 and 188.215, should be reversed and the injunctions dissolved.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General
State of Missouri

MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-8782

Attorneys for Appellants

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

(13)

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

WILLIAM C. BRYSON
Acting Solicitor General
JOHN R. BOLTON
Assistant Attorney General
THOMAS W. MERRILL
Deputy Solicitor General
ROGER CLEGG
STEVEN R. VALENTINE
Deputy Assistant Attorneys General
MICHAEL K. KELLOGG
Assistant to the Solicitor General
Department of Justice
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 633-2217

37P

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Interest of the United States	1
Statement	2
Summary of argument	5
Argument:
I. Roe v. Wade should be reconsidered and, upon reconsideration, overruled	8
II. The State of Missouri is not required by the Constitution either to fund pro-abortion counseling or to use public employees and public facilities to perform abortions	25
Conclusion	30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Bowen v. Kendrick, No. 87-253 (June 29, 1988)	2
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)	13, 14
Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973)	25
Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927)	20
Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976)	27
Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977)	14, 22
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	1, 6, 8, 9, 15, 18, 19, 20
Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Centre, Inc. 473 U.S. 432 (1985)	21

Cases—Continued: Page

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 8, 19
Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977) 9
CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973) .. 26
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 7, 24
Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 12, 14
Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) ... 9, 10
Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 6, 10, 18
Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) .. 9
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) . 12, 14
Harris v. McCrae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 5, 14, 27
Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106 (1940) 9
Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489 (1932) 25
Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905) 20
Judgment of Feb. 25, 1975, 39 BVerfGE 1 24
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) 12
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 5, 26, 27, 28, 29
Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.) 2
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 12
Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600 (1974) 9

Cases—Continued: Page

Monell v. Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658 (1978) 9
Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 13
Morgentaler v. Her Majesty the Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (1988) 23
Myer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1932) 12
New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297 (1976) .. 10
New York v. Bowen, No. 88-701 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-6204 (2d Cir.) 2
New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982) 16
Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 5
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 13
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 12
Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983) 26
Planned Parenthood Fed'n v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.) 2
Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 8, 22, 24
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Chicago v. Kempiners, 700 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983) .. 27
Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202 (1982) 21
Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 16, 24

Cases—Continued: Page

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 28

Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) . 12

Regan v. Taxation with Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 27

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) . . . . . passim

Simopoulos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983) . . 20

Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) . . . 12

Solorio v. United States, No. 85-1581 (June 25, 1987) 9

Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) 12

Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261 (1980) 9

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) . . . 1, 6, 10, 11, 14, 15, 21

United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166 (1974) 21

United States Dept. of Agriculture v. Moreno, 413 U.S. 528 (1973) 21

Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254 (1986) 9

West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 10

Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483 (1955) 11

Constitution, statutes and regulations:

U.S. Const.

Amend. I 12, 26

Establishment Clause 2

Constitution, statutes and regulations—Continued: Page

Amend. IV 12

Amend. V (Due Process Clause) 11

Amend. XIV 11, 12, 13, 14

Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. 300z et seq. 2

42 U.S.C. 300z-10(a) 2

Public Health Services Act of 1970, Tit. X, 42 U.S.C. 300 et seq. 2

42 U.S.C. 300a-6 2

Mo. Ann. Stat. (Vernon Supp. 1989):

§1.205.1-2 . . . . . 3, 8

§188.029 . . . . . 3, 8

§188.205 . . . . . 1, 3, 4, 26

§188.210 . . . . . 2, 3, 4, 5

§188.215 . . . . . 2, 3, 4, 5

§188.220 25

42 C.F.R. 59.8(a)(1) 2

Miscellaneous:

A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 11

Burt, The Constitution of the Family, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 329 11

A. Cox, The Court and the Constitution (1987) 11

J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust (1980) 11

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 12

Miscellaneous—Continued: Page

Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 11

53 Fed. Reg. (1988):

p. 2922 2

p. 2945 2

M.A. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law: American Failures, European Challenges (1987) 23-24

Gunther, Some Reflections on the Judicial Role: Distinctions, Roots, and Prospects, 1979 Wash. U.L.Q. 817 11

J. Mohr, Abortion in America (1978) 13, 16-17

J.B. Thayer, John Marshall (1901) 21

Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231 20

Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudication, 83 Yale L.J. 221 (1973) 11

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

Appellants have asked this Court to reconsider its decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). The United States has previously filed briefs as amicus curiae in City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983), and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986), questioning the regime of judicial review established by Roe v. Wade. The United States continues to believe that Roe v. Wade unduly restricts the proper sphere of legislative authority in this area and should be overruled by this Court.

In addition, the United States has a direct programmatic interest in the disposition of this case. The court of appeals struck down provisions of a Missouri statute that forbid the expenditure of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" (Mo. Ann. Stat. §188.205) and that prohibit the use of public facilities and public employees "for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother" (§§188.210, 188.215). The United States has placed similar restrictions on federally funded programs. Title X of the Public Health Services Act of 1970, 42 U.S.C. 300 et seq., authorizes the federal government to make grants to public and private nonprofit entities for family planning projects, but expressly provides that "[n]one of the funds appropriated under this [title] shall be used in programs where abortion is a method of family planning" (42 U.S.C. 300a-6).[1] Similarly, the Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. 300z et seq., provides funds for demonstration projects designed to discourage adolescent pregnancy, but specifies that grants may be awarded only to "programs or projects which do not provide abortions or abortion counseling or referral" (42 U.S.C. 300z-10(a)).[2] The Court's ruling with respect to the funding and public facilities provisions of the Missouri statute may affect the outcome of pending constitutional challenges to these analogous federal provisions.

STATEMENT

In 1986, the State of Missouri passed a statute regulating abortions. The first section of the statute contains a general

[1] The Department of Health and Human Services promulgated regulations in 1988 setting standards for compliance with Title X of the Public Health Services Act. See 53 Fed. Reg. 2922 (1988). Under the regulations, both "counseling concerning the use of abortion as a method of family planning" and "referral for abortion as a method of family planning" are forbidden. 53 Fed. Reg. 2945 (1988) (to be codified in 42 C.F.R. 59.8(a)(1)). The Title X regulations have been enjoined on constitutional grounds by two district courts, Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.); Planned Parenthood Fed'n v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.), but have been upheld by a third, New York v. Bowen, No. 88-701 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-6204 (2d Cir.).

[2] This Court recently upheld the funding provisions of the Adolescent Family Life Act against a facial attack under the Establishment Clause in Bowen v. Kendrick, No. 87-253 (June 29, 1988).

"finding" by the state legislature that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and a requirement that all state laws be interpreted to provide unborn children with all the rights of other persons "subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court" (Mo. Stat. Ann. §1.205.1-2). Among its various other provisions, the statute requires that, prior to performing an abortion on any woman whom a physician has reason to believe is 20 or more weeks pregnant, the physician must determine whether the fetus is viable by performing "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child" (§188.029). The statute also provides that no public funds, employees, or facilities may be used for the purpose of "encouraging or counseling" a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life or for "performing or assisting" an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother (§§188.205, 188.210, 188.215).

Five publicly employed physicians and nurses and two nonprofit corporations brought a class action challenging the constitutionality of these and other provisions of the Missouri statute. The district court held the challenged provisions unconstitutional (J.S. App. A1-A55) and the court of appeals affirmed (id. at A56-A84). The court of appeals concluded (id. at A64) that Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception was "simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." The court of appeals rejected (ibid.) Missouri's reliance on the declaration's caveat requiring compatibility with the Constitution and Supreme Court precedent on the ground that a mere recitation of the Supremacy Clause "cannot * * * validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the constitution."[3]

[3] Judge Arnold dissented (J.S. App. A83-A84) from this aspect of the decision below, contending that Missouri's declaration of when life begins

The court further concluded (J.S. App. at A59-A60) that the requirement that physicians perform viability tests is an unconstitutional legislative intrusion on a matter of medical skill and judgment. The court found that tests to determine fetal weight at 20 weeks are unreliable, inaccurate, and would add $125 to $250 to the cost of an abortion. And the court determined that "amniocentesis, the only method available to determine lung maturity, is contrary to accepted medical practice until 28-30 weeks of gestation, expensive, and imposes significant health risks for both the pregnant woman and the fetus." Id. at A60 n.5.

The court of appeals also invalidated the provision prohibiting the use of public funds for "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" (Mo. Ann. Stat. §188.205), finding that provision both overly vague and inconsistent with the right to abortion recognized in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).[4] "[T]he statute is vague," the court stated (J.S. App. A68), "because the word 'counsel' is fraught with ambiguity; its range is incapable of objective measurement." In addition, the court held (id. at A70), the prohibition "is an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." The court rejected as "completely inapt" (id. at A72) the analogy to the bans on the use of public funds to should be upheld "insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion," such as "creating causes of action against persons other than the mother" for wrongful death or bringing fetuses within the protection of the criminal law.

---

[4] In addition to banning the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion, the Missouri statute also forbids any public employee acting within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life and forbids the use of any public facilities for that purpose. See Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 188.210, 188.215. Although the court of appeals also struck down those provisions (J.S. App. A47-A51), the State of Missouri has not appealed from this aspect of the judgment below.

perform or assist abortions upheld in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), and Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). "Missouri," the court concluded (J.S. App. A72), "is not simply declining to fund abortions when it forbids its doctors to encourage or counsel women to have abortions. Instead, it is erecting an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth."

Finally, the court of appeals struck down Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees "to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother." Mo. Stat. Ann. §§188.210, 188.215. The court distinguished this Court's cases holding that the government need not provide funding for elective abortions on the grounds that "'[t]here is a fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital.'" J.S. App. A75 (quoting Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754, 758 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983)). The court noted (J.S. App. A79) that all of the public facilities' costs in providing abortion services, including the costs of employees' services, are recouped from funds provided by the patient. Hence, the court stated (id. at A75), the question at issue is not whether the State is required to fund abortions but whether "the state creates an undue burden or obstacle to the free exercise of the right to choose an abortion" when it prohibits the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist abortions.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade, as the Court is well aware, has been intensely controversial from the day it was decided. That controversy is more than simply a reflection of the deep divisions in American society over the underlying question of abortion. Rather, the controversy has, in substantial measure, been a product of the decision itself. Roe rests on assumptions that are not firmly grounded in the Constitution; it adopts an unworkable framework tying permissible state regulation of abortion to particular periods in pregnancy; and it has allowed courts to usurp the function of legislative bodies in weighing competing social, ethical, and scientific factors in reaching a judgment as to how much state regulation is appropriate in this highly sensitive area. In similar circumstances, the Court has "not hesitated" to overrule a prior interpretation of the Constitution. Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528, 557 (1985). It should do so here as well.

The Court's decision in Roe v. Wade rests upon two key premises—that there is a fundamental right to abortion and that the States do not have a compelling interest in protecting prenatal human life throughout pregnancy. Neither premise, however, is supportable. The fundamental right to abortion can draw no support from the text of the Constitution or from history. Even assuming that the various "privacy" cases relied upon by Roe establish a generalized right to privacy, it does not follow that the abortion decision is encompassed within such a right. Abortion involves the destruction of the fetus, and is therefore "different in kind from the decision not to conceive in the first place" (Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 792 n.2 (1986) (White, J. dissenting)). Roe's other critical assumption—that a State that wishes to regulate abortion does not have a compelling interest in protecting prenatal life throughout pregnancy—is similarly lacking in any logical or historical foundation. "[P]otential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward." Akron, 462 U.S. at 461 (O'Connor, J. dissenting) (emphasis in original).

Roe's flaws are both illustrated and compounded by the manner in which the Court sought to implement its unfounded premises. The Court in Roe erected a framework for reviewing abortion regulations based on the division of pregnancy into three trimesters, with different types of state regulation permitted in each trimester. The dividing lines were grounded not in any principle of constitutional law, but rather in medical findings. As a consequence, the lines must either become increasingly arbitrary over time or change as medical technology changes. Debate over these and other issues has spawned extensive litigation and has put the Court in the position of reviewing medical and operational practices beyond its competence.

We therefore believe that the time has come for the Court to abandon its efforts to impose a comprehensive solution to the abortion question. Under the Constitution, legislative bodies cannot impose irrational constraints on a woman's procreative choice. But, within those broad confines, the appropriate scope of abortion regulation "should be left with the people and to the political processes the people have devised to govern their affairs." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 222 (1973) (White, J., dissenting). Other Western countries have, through the legislative process, reached reasonable accommodations of the competing interests involved in the abortion controversy. There is no reason to believe that American legislatures, if basic decision-making responsibility were returned to them, would not similarly arrive at humane solutions.

Even if the Court is not inclined to reconsider Roe v. Wade, we believe that the court below erred in striking down provisions of the Missouri statute prohibiting the use of public funds to counsel a woman to have an abortion and the use of public facilities and public employees to perform abortions. Through these provisions, the State of Missouri has placed no obstacles in the path of women seeking to obtain an abortion. The State has simply chosen not to encourage or assist abortions in any respect. That is a permissible choice even assuming the continued vitality of Roe v. Wade.

ARGUMENT

I. ROE v. WADE SHOULD BE RECONSIDERED AND, UPON RECONSIDERATION, OVERRULED

Appellants have asked the Court (J.S. II) to reconsider the approach to determining the constitutionality of abortion regulations established in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). We think this case presents a proper occasion for such a reconsideration. As we argue below (see Part II, infra), those provisions of the Missouri statute related to abortion counseling and the use of state facilities and personnel to perform abortions should be upheld even assuming the continued validity of Roe. But other provisions of the Missouri statute appear to reflect legislative choices foreclosed by Roe. In particular, the provision mandating the performance of certain viability tests when a woman is 20 or more weeks pregnant and the declaration that human life begins at conception are in tension with the severe limitations imposed by Roe on the ability of the States to adopt any measures to protect prenatal life prior to viability.[5] We accordingly agree with the State of Missouri that a consideration of the constitutionality of these provisions raises the question whether Roe v. Wade should be reconsidered.

[5] The mandated viability tests (Mo. Stat. Ann. §188.029) are aimed at promoting the State's interest in the life of the unborn child rather than in maternal health. To the extent that these tests add to the cost of an abortion prior to the end of the second trimester, they may run afoul of the rigid trimester approach mandated in Roe. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 434-438 (1983). They may also run afoul of the Court's repeated admonition that the determination of viability is to be left wholly to "the judgment of the attending physician on the particular facts of the case before him." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-389 (1979). See also Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64 (1976). The provisions of the statute setting forth a general "finding" by the state legislature that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and a requirement that all state laws be interpreted to provide unborn children with all the rights of other persons "subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court" (Mo. Stat. Ann. §1.205.1-2), may run afoul of the Court's assertion that "a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." Akron, 462 U.S. at 444. It may also—to the extent it provides unborn children with property rights and the protection of state tort and criminal laws—place a burden of uncertain scope on the performance of abortions by supplying a general principle that would fill in whatever interstices may be present in existing abortion precedents.

A. We recognize of course that the principle of stare decisis serves important purposes in our legal system. It promotes the evenhanded, predictable, and consistent development of legal principles; it fosters reliance on judicial rules; and it contributes to the fact and appearance of integrity in our judicial system. See, e.g., Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 265-266 (1986); Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261, 272 (1980) (plurality opinion). Those considerations must be given due weight in this as in any other area of the law. See Akron, 462 U.S. at 420 n.1.

Nonetheless, as Justice Frankfurter explained, "stare decisis is a principle of policy and not a mechanical formula of adherence to the latest decision, however recent and questionable, when such adherence involves collision with a prior doctrine more embracing in its scope, intrinsically sounder, and verified by experience." Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119 (1940). Furthermore, it is well settled that stare decisis has less force in constitutional litigation, where, short of a constitutional amendment, this Court is the only body capable of effecting a needed change. Monell v. Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 696 (1978); Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 543 (1962). For that reason, "[i]t is * * * not only [the Court's] prerogative but also [its] duty to re-examine a precedent where its reasoning or understanding of the Constitution is fairly called into question." Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600, 627-628 (1974) (Powell, J., concurring). See also Solorio v. United States, No. 85-1581 (June 25, 1987), slip op. 15; Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58 n.30 (1977); Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 77-78 (1938).

Although this Court has never adopted a "rigid formula" for determining when a prior construction of the Constitution should be overruled (Vasquez, 474 U.S. at 266), it has identified several factors that bear on this inquiry. One question of obvious importance is whether the prior ruling is inconsistent with basic assumptions about the nature of the Constitution or established methods for giving effect to its key provisions. See Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. at 547-555; New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 306 (1976); West Virginia State Bd. of Ed. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943); Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. at 78-80. Another factor that is clearly relevant is whether the prior rule has proved to be unworkable, has bred confusion, or has led to unforeseen or anomalous results. See Solorio, slip op. at 12-14; Garcia, 469 U.S. at 537-547; Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. at 74-78. Finally, the Court has stated that prior decisions, even if of fairly recent vintage, should be reconsidered if they "disserve[] principles of democratic self-governance." Garcia, 469 U.S. at 547. Taken together, these factors strongly suggest that the regime of judicial review established by Roe v. Wade should be abandoned.

B. The decision in Roe v. Wade rests on two crucial but highly problematic premises: that a woman has a fundamental right to decide whether or not to terminate her pregnancy and that the States do not have a compelling interest in protecting prenatal human life throughout the term of a woman's pregnancy. See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 796 (White, J., dissenting). The first premise—that the right to an abortion is fundamental—means that abortion regulation is subject to strict scrutiny and, thus, that the State must demonstrate that it has a compelling interest before it may burden that right. The second premise—that the State does not have a compelling interest in protecting fetal life throughout pregnancy—yields the conclusion that, except for regulations designed to preserve the health of the mother, the Constitution prohibits any effort by the State to regulate or discourage abortion in the early months of pregnancy. Neither of those essential premises, however, is tenable.

1. All Members of this Court who have addressed the issue agree "that a woman's ability to choose an abortion is a species of 'liberty' that is subject to the general protections of the Due Process Clause." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 790 (White, J., dissenting). See also Roe, 410 U.S. at 173 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). The presence of such a liberty interest, however, ordinarily means only that any state regulation affecting that interest must be procedurally fair and must bear a rational relation to valid state objectives. See Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 491 (1955). In order to subject state regulation to the far more demanding requirements of strict scrutiny, it is necessary to show that it interferes with a "fundamental" constitutional right. The abortion decision, however, cannot be counted as a "fundamental" constitutional right under any of the traditional means used to identify such rights.[6]

The primary source for fundamental rights lies in the provisions of the Constitution other than the Fourteenth Amendment itself. "[T]he Court is on relatively firm ground when it deems certain of the liberties set forth in the Bill of Rights to be fundamental and therefore finds them incorporated in the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee that no State may deprive any person of liberty without due process of law." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 790 (White, J., dissenting). All of the "privacy" cases that preceded Roe v.

---

[6] This judgment is shared by a broad spectrum of constitutional scholars. See, e.g., A. Cox, The Court and the Constitution 322-338 (1987); J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust 2-3, 248 n.52 (1980); A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent 27-29 (1975); Gunther, Some Reflections on the Judicial Role: Distinctions, Roots, and Prospects, 1979 Wash. U.L.Q. 817, 819; Burt, The Constitution of the Family, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 329, 371-373; Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159; Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudication, 83 Yale L.J. 221, 297-311 (1973).

Wade—and upon which the Court relied in Roe—are explicable in terms of some other constitutional command beyond the generalized interest in "liberty" secured by the Fourteenth Amendment. They were rooted in accepted principles, whether of equal protection,[7] or of freedom of expression at the core of the First Amendment,[8] or of freedom from unreasonable searches assured by the Fourth Amendment.[9] In contrast, the right to abortion identified in Roe was grounded only in the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. As this Court recently reaffirmed, [7] Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535, 538 (1942) (criminal sterilization act violated equal protection by distinguishing without an adequate basis between persons convicted of larceny and embezzlement); Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 12 (1967) (statute prohibiting interracial marriages involved "invidious racial discriminations"); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 446-455 (1972) (statute prohibiting distribution of contraceptives violated equal protection by treating married and unmarried women differently without a rational basis).

[8] Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 400 (1923) (invalidating law prohibiting the teaching of foreign languages in private elementary schools because "[m]ere knowledge of the German language cannot reasonably be regarded as harmful"); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) (invalidating statute requiring all children to attend public schools); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 164 (1944) (prosecution of Jehovah's Witness under statute prohibiting sale by minors of periodicals implicates but does not violate freedom of religion); Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) (invalidating criminal conviction for mere possession of obscene films in defendant's home).

[9] As one commentator has explained, this Court's decision in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965), invalidating a statute regulating the use of contraceptives, as opposed to their manufacture or sale, indicated an underlying concern that enforcement of the statute "would have been virtually impossible without the most outrageous sort of governmental prying into the privacy of the home." Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 929-930 (1973) (emphasis in original). A statute limiting a medical procedure performed by a doctor in a clinic or hospital is simply not analogous; abortion statutes could obviously be enforced without the necessity of repulsive searches. Fourth Amendment policies accordingly provide no support for the holding in Roe v. Wade.

"[t]he Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution." Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 194 (1986).

In addition to rights secured by specific provisions of the Constitution, the Court has indicated that an interest will be deemed to be constitutionally fundamental if it is "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" (Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325 (1937)) or "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" (Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 (1977) (opinion of Powell, J.)). See Bowers, 478 U.S. at 191-192. It cannot be credibly argued, however, that the abortion decision forms a part of any historically recognized right that is fundamental in this sense. As the Court in Roe acknowledged in its review of the history of abortion regulation (410 U.S. at 129-141), and as Justice Rehnquist emphasized in his dissent (id. at 174-176 & n.1), state laws condemning or limiting abortion were very common at the time the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted.[10] "By the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868, there were at least 36 laws enacted by state or territorial legislatures limiting abortion. While many States have amended or updated their laws, 21 of the laws on the books in 1868 remain in effect today." Id. at 174-176 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).[11] Against this background, the right to abortion cannot be described as one that is "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." Compare Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S.

[10] Indeed, the period between 1860 and 1880 witnessed "the most important burst of anti-abortion legislation in the nation's history." J. Mohr, Abortion in America 200 (1978).

[11] Prior to the mid-Nineteenth Century, the legal status of abortion was more uncertain. It is clear, however, that the abortion of a fetus after "quickening" was regarded as a crime at common law. Roe, 410 U.S. at 132-136. And the earliest English abortion statute, adopted in 1803, made abortion a criminal offense throughout pregnancy. Id. at 136.

at 192-194 (rejecting claim that there is a fundamental right to engage in homosexual sodomy based in part on discussion of criminal sodomy laws existing "[i]n 1868, when the Fourteen Amendment was ratified").

The most plausible source of support for a fundamental right to abortion lies in the Court's "privacy" decisions that antedate Roe. But even assuming that cases like Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965), and Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972), establish a general right to privacy or personal autonomy under the Fourteenth Amendment, see Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 684-686 (1977), it does not follow that the abortion decision is encompassed within such a right. "The pregnant woman," this Court acknowledged (Roe, 410 U.S. at 159), "cannot be isolated in her privacy." Her decision to seek an abortion is "inherently different" from decisions concerning marital privacy and the use of contraceptives because it "involves the purposeful termination of a potential life" (Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. at 325). As Justice White has observed (Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 792 n.2):

> That the decision involves the destruction of the fetus renders it different in kind from the decision not to conceive in the first place. This difference does not go merely to the weight of the state interest in regulating abortion; it affects as well the characterization of the liberty interest itself. For if the liberty to make certain decisions with respect to contraception without governmental constraint is "fundamental," it is not only because those decisions are "serious" and "important" to the individual, * * * but also because some value of privacy or individual autonomy that is somehow implicit in the scheme of ordered liberties established by the Constitution supports a judgment that such decisions are none of the government's business. The same cannot be said where, as here, the individual is not "isolated in her privacy."

If a woman does not have a fundamental constitutional right to choose an abortion, then the Roe framework collapses. Absent such a right, abortion regulations, like other forms of regulation that affect general liberty interests, should be upheld as long as they are procedurally fair and bear some rational relationship to a permissible governmental goal.

2. Equally central to the Roe holding was the Court's determination that a State that chooses to regulate abortion does not have a compelling interest in preserving fetal life throughout the term of pregnancy. The Court acknowledged (410 U.S. at 154) that a woman's right to terminate her pregnancy "is not unqualified and must be considered against important state interests * * * in safeguarding health, in maintaining medical standards, and in protecting potential life." But the Court concluded that these interests are not present in the same degree from conception to birth; instead, the court found (id. at 162-163) that they "grow[] in substantiality as the woman approaches term." Especially critical in this regard was the Court's conclusion that "the State's important and legitimate interest in potential life" does not become "compelling," i.e., sufficiently weighty to overcome the fundamental right to abortion, until the fetus has reached the point of viability (id. at 163).

The assumption that a State's asserted interest in protecting prenatal life is qualitatively different at different periods of pregnancy is debatable at best. As Justice O'Connor has observed, "potential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward." Akron, 462 U.S. at 461 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original). See also Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 795 (White, J., dissenting). But even if there is a core of common sense in the notion that a State's legitimate interest in prenatal life "grows in substantiality" along with the development of the fetus, it does not follow that this interest should not be regarded as compelling throughout pregnancy. An interest may be sufficiently weighty to be compelling in the constitutional sense even if subsequently it takes on even greater urgency.

The problem with the Court's treatment of the State's interest in fetal life is that it is not rooted in any analysis of what interests have been historically recognized as compelling. Deciding what is a "compelling" state interest is a little like deciding whether or not a particular value is "fundamental." Judges have not been left "free to roam where unguided speculation might take them." Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 542 (1961) (Harlan, J., dissenting). See New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 756-758 (1982) (citing prior judicial decisions, legislative findings, and the enactment of legislation by "virtually all" States and the United States as relevant factors in identifying a compelling interest). The historical record here is clear (see pp. 13-14, supra). The tenor and contemporaneous understanding of the anti-abortion laws enacted from the mid-Nineteenth Century up to the time of the decision in Roe v. Wade leave little doubt that they were directed not only at protecting maternal health, but also at what was widely viewed as a moral evil comprehending the destruction of actual or nascent human life. See J. Mohr, Abortion in America (1978). Moreover, the historical record reveals that this interest has been consistently asserted by the States throughout the term of pregnancy, not just after viability or "quickening" or some other arbitrary line of demarcation.[12] [12] Prior to concluding that a State does not have a compelling interest in prenatal life throughout pregnancy, the Court in Roe observed that Nineteenth Century English and American law typically treated abortion after quickening as a more serious crime than an abortion performed before quickening. 410 U.S. at 136-139. Obviously, however, the fact that an abortion performed in the early months of pregnancy was regarded as "only" a misdemeanor, rather than a felony, does not support the conclusion that the State has no compelling interest in preventing abortion in the earlier period. See Mohr, supra, at 200 ("most of the legislation passed between 1860 and 1880 explicitly accepted the [regular physicians'] assertions that the interruption of gestation at any point in pregnancy should be a crime and that the state itself should try actively to restrict the practice of abortion") (emphasis supplied). That conclusion is further undermined by the Court's observation that, "[b]y the end of the 1950's, a large majority of the jurisdictions banned abortion, however and whenever performed, unless done to save or preserve the life of the mother." Id. at 139 (emphasis supplied).

---

If a State that wishes to regulate abortion has a compelling interest in protecting prenatal life throughout pregnancy, then Roe's framework cannot survive. For even if there is a fundamental right to abortion, that right may be overridden by the State's compelling interest in protecting prenatal life. Laws that impinge upon fundamental rights are not automatically invalid; rather, they will survive strict scrutiny if they are "narrowly drawn to express only the legitimate state interests at stake." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 155 (citing cases). If a State's interest in protecting prenatal life is compelling throughout pregnancy, then abortion regulation designed to advance that interest in a rational manner should be permissible throughout pregnancy.

C. The untenable nature of Roe's premises is demonstrated and compounded by the unworkable framework the Court adopted to implement those premises. To provide a framework for delimiting the permissible scope of abortion regulation, Roe divided pregnancy into three trimesters, with radically different consequences for state regulatory power in each. During the first trimester, both "the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left to the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician" (410 U.S. at 164). During the second trimester, the State "may, if it chooses, regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health" (ibid.). After viability, the State "may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother" (id. at 165).

This analytical framework has proved to be "a completely unworkable method of accommodating the conflicting personal rights and compelling state interests that are involved in the abortion context." Akron, 462 U.S. 454 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). For example, it is difficult to grasp why the compelling quality of a State's interest in safeguarding maternal health should undergo a radical change at the end of the first trimester. Indeed, "[t]he fallacy inherent in the Roe framework is apparent: just because the State has a compelling interest in ensuring maternal safety once an abortion may be more dangerous than childbirth, it simply does not follow that the State has no interest before that point that justifies state regulation to ensure that first-trimester abortions are performed as safely as possible" (id. at 460 (emphasis in original)).

The Court in Roe chose the end of the first trimester as a crucial point based on its determination—basically one of legislative fact—that "in the light of present medical knowledge * * * until the end of the first trimester mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth" (410 U.S. at 149, 163). However, "developments in the past decade, particularly the development of a much safer method for performing second-trimester abortions, * * * have extended the period in which abortions are safer than childbirth" (Akron, 462 U.S. at 429 n.11). The fact that the Court in Akron, despite this evidence, found it "prudent" to retain the end of the first trimester as the sharply determinative point demonstrates the essential arbitrariness of the framework: the Court "simply concluded that a line must be drawn * * * and proceeded to draw that line" (Garcia, 469 U.S. at 543).

It was similarly arbitrary for the Court in Roe to determine that the State's legitimate interest "in protecting prenatal life" (410 U.S. at 150, 153-154) undergoes a constitutionally significant transformation at the point of fetal viability. The Court defined "viability" as the point when the fetus is "potentially able to live outside the mother's womb, albeit with artificial aid." 410 U.S. at 160; see Colautti, 439 U.S. at 387. There is no obvious constitutional connection between the ability of a fetus to survive outside the womb with artificial support and the magnitude of a State's lawful concern to protect future life. As Justice O'Connor said in her Akron dissent, "potential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward. * * * The choice of viability as the point at which the state interest in potential life becomes compelling is no less arbitrary than choosing any point before viability or any point afterward" (462 U.S. at 461 (emphasis in original)). "[T]he State's interest, if compelling after viability, is equally compelling before viability." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 795 (White, J., dissenting).

The "viability" standard is particularly unworkable as a constitutional reference point because, as the Court has acknowledged, the point when a fetus may survive outside the womb with artificial aid changes with "advancements in medical skill" (Colautti, 439 U.S. at 387). The "increasingly earlier fetal viability" demonstrated in recent scientific studies (462 U.S. at 457 (O'Connor, J., dissenting)) is the product of improvements in medical techniques, not of any change in our perceptions about how fully developed or worthy of life a fetus is at any point in time. It is disturbing to attribute constitutional significance to a point which, besides being in motion rather than being fixed, moves in response to advances in medical science rather than in response to forces more familiar to traditional judicial analysis. And it is troubling to contemplate a constitutional doctrine that would permit the State's power to regulate to vary from community to community—or from hospital to hospital—depending on the availability of sophisticated medical technology.

The arbitrary nature of Roe's analytical framework is also reflected in the increasingly complex linedrawing of its progeny. A State may require that certain information be furnished to a woman by a physician or his assistant (Akron, 462 U.S. at 448), but it may not require that such information be furnished to her by the physician himself (id. at 449). A State may require that second-trimester abortions be performed in clinics (Simopoulos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983)), but may not require that they be performed in hospitals (Akron, 462 U.S. at 437-439). As each set of these subtle distinctions has been crafted, still more unanswered questions have been posed. During the decade and a half since Roe v. Wade, the adversaries in the abortion debate have come back again and again, asking this Court to spin an ever finer web of regulations.[13] The adversaries are back again today, and they are sure to return.

D. At the heart of the abortion controversy lies a divisive conflict between a woman's interest in procreative choice and the State's interest in protecting the life of an unborn child and promoting respect for life generally. This is not the kind of conflict that is amenable to judicial resolution. If a "principled" resolution of this conflict is to be reached, it can only be by adopting a moral theory of the sanctity of the person, or a theory of when human life begins—neither of which can be derived through ordinary processes of adjudication.[14] Failing such a resolution, it will be necessary to [13] Between the decision in Roe and 1985, state legislatures enacted more than 250 statutes regulating abortion. Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231, 247.

[14] Roe specifically declined to adopt either type of theory. The Court stated (410 U.S. at 154): "it is not clear to us that the claim asserted by some amici that one has an unlimited right to do with one's body as one pleases bears a close relationship to the right of privacy previously articulated in the Court's decisions. The Court has refused to recognize an unlimited right of this kind in the past. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905) (vaccination); Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927) (sterilization)." And the Court declined to address the question of when life may be said to begin (410 U.S. at 159): "We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer."

reach an accommodation among the competing interests involved. Under our democratic system of government such an accommodation can be reached only through the political process. As long as the various factions continue to look to the courts, however, a constructive dialogue will be impossible.[15]

The proper role of a court in reviewing abortion legislation is neither to substitute its judgment for that of the legislature, nor to abdicate. Instead, as long as such legislation is procedurally fair and does not violate any of the specific prohibitions of the Bill of Rights, a court should simply ask whether the resolution reached by the legislature is rational—whether it is reasonably related to the advancement of legitimate governmental objectives. That standard of review is deferential, but it is not toothless. Compare, e.g., Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, Inc., 473 U.S. 432, 446-447 (1985); United States Dept. of Agriculture v. Moreno, 413 U.S. 528, 534 (1973). The important point is that the resolution of the abortion controversy, including [15] The Court's continuing effort to oversee virtually all elements of the abortion controversy has seriously distorted the nature of abortion legislation. Because Roe and its progeny have resolved most of the central questions about the permissible scope of abortion regulation, legislative action in this area has been relegated to relatively peripheral issues. And because legislators know that whatever they enact in this area will be subject to de novo review by the courts, they have little incentive to try to moderate their positions. The result, all too often, has been statutes that are significant primarily because of their highly "inflammatory" symbolic content—such as fetal description requirements and humane disposal provisions. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 762 n.10. This process has undermined the accountability of legislative bodies, and has disserved the courts and the Constitution. As James Bradley Thayer once observed, the "tendency of a common and easy resort" to the power of judicial review "is to dwarf the political capacity of the people, and to deaden its sense of moral responsibility." J.B. Thayer, John Marshall 106-107 (1901). See also Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 253-254 (1982) (Burger, J. dissenting); United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 188 (1974) (Powell, J., concurring).

any compromise, must come from the legislature; it cannot be imposed by the courts from above.

It is possible to envision a standard of review more deferential than that adopted by Roe v. Wade, yet more stringent than rationality review, such as the "undue burden" analysis thoroughly delineated by Justice O'Connor in her separate opinions in Akron and Thornburgh, and urged in our brief in Akron. On reflection, however, we believe that any such intermediate standard would inevitably fall prey to the same difficulties that have beset the Roe framework. The concept of an "undue burden" obviously is not self-defining; in giving effect to such a concept, the Court would be required to develop a new regime of substantive abortion rights. Like the regime it would replace, this new system would lack any moorings in the Constitution and would quickly reintroduce the arbitrary linedrawing characteristic of Roe. And because it would hold forth the promise of continued and intensive (albeit not strict) judicial arbitration of the competing interests, it would undermine the attempts of the legislative branch to negotiate a compromise among those interests. If such a political resolution of the abortion controversy is ever to become a reality, the Court must unequivocally announce its intention to allow the States to act "free from the suffocating power of the federal judge, purporting to act in the name of the Constitution." Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. at 93 (White, J., dissenting).[16] [16] If the Court does adopt an "undue burden" analysis, we think the appropriate characterization of the liberty interest that must not be burdened is not a "right to abortion," but rather an interest in procreational choice—"whether or not to beget or bear a child" (Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 685 (1977)). Thus, in asking whether any particular state regulation imposes an undue burden, the relevant question would be whether a woman has been afforded a meaningful opportunity to avoid an unwanted pregnancy, taking into account all of the options available to her, including abstinence and contraception. Under this type of analysis, a regulation that prohibits the use of abortion as a form of routine family planning might not be regarded as imposing an undue burden, because it could not be said in this context that a woman lacks a meaningful opportunity to exercise procreational choice. On the other hand, a regulation that prohibits abortion in cases of rape or incest presumably would entail an undue burden, because in such cases, where the pregnancy is the result of coercion, a woman has not been afforded a meaningful opportunity to avoid pregnancy through alternative means. We reiterate, however, that these judgments are more appropriately drawn by legislatures rather than courts.

---

In a recent study of the abortion laws of 20 Western countries, a leading comparative law scholar reported two striking conclusions. M.A. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law: American Failures, European Challenges (1987). First, under the abortion regime established by Roe, "we have less regulation of abortion in the interest of the fetus than any other Western nation * * *." Id. at 2.[17] The fact that the regime established by Roe is out of step with the legislative judgment of virtually every other country with which we share a common cultural tradition by itself suggests that the decision ought to be reconsidered. Second, and more fundamentally, "[t]o a greater extent than in any other country, our courts have shut down the legislative process of bargaining, education, and persuasion on the abortion issue." Id. at 2.[18] The survey indicates that [17] Professor Glendon reports that two countries (Belgium and Ireland) have blanket prohibitions against abortion in their criminal law, subject only to the defense of necessity. Four countries (Canada, Portugal, Spain, and Switzerland) permit abortion only in early pregnancy and only in restricted circumstances, as where there is a serious danger to the pregnant woman's health, a likelihood of serious disease or defect in the fetus, or where the pregnancy resulted from rape or incest. Eight countries (England, Finland, France, West Germany, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands) permit abortion in early pregnancy in a wider variety of circumstances that pose a particular hardship for the pregnant woman. Five countries (Austria, Denmark, Greece, Norway, and Sweden) permit elective abortions in early pregnancy, though abortions are strictly limited thereafter. Glendon, supra, at 13-15 & Table 1. Only in the United States is elective abortion permitted until viability. Ibid.

[18] After the publication of Glendon's book, the Canadian Supreme Court struck down its abortion law on grounds similar to those stated in Roe v. Wade. See Morgentaler v. Her Majesty the Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (1988). The West German high court, by contrast, had earlier struck down a law liberalizing access to abortion on the grounds that "life democratic legislatures are fully capable of reaching a resolution of the competing interests in the abortion controversy. Indeed, the fact that this issue touches or can touch nearly everyone's life—not just those representing a special interest or defending a discrete and insular minority—means that it should be capable of resolution through the process of political dialogue. In short, unless the American political culture is somehow radically different from that of other countries with which we share a common heritage, it would appear that there is nothing inherent in the abortion controversy, or the sharply conflicting interests and viewpoints in this area, that makes it uniquely resistant to legislative resolution.

Under the Constitution, legislative bodies cannot impose irrational constraints on a woman's procreative choice. But within those broad confines, the proper scope of abortion regulation "should be left with the people and to the political processes the people have devised to govern their affairs." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 222 (White, J., dissenting). The effect of the decisions in Roe and its progeny has been "to withdraw from community concern a range of subjects with which every society in civilized times has found it necessary to deal." Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. at 546 (Harlan, J., dissenting). The time has come to end this "difficult and continuing venture in substantive due process." Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. at 92 (White, J., dissenting).

---

developing within the womb is constitutionally protected." See Judgment of Feb. 25, 1975, 39 BVerfGE 1 (quoted in Glendon, supra, at 26).

II. THE STATE OF MISSOURI IS NOT REQUIRED BY THE CONSTITUTION EITHER TO FUND PRO-ABORTION COUNSELING OR TO USE PUBLIC EMPLOYEES AND PUBLIC FACILITIES TO PERFORM ABORTIONS

The State of Missouri has chosen not to encourage or assist abortions in any respect. We believe that is a permissible choice, even assuming the continued vitality of Roe v. Wade. Missouri's prohibitions on the use of public funds to counsel a woman to have an abortion and on the use of public facilities and public employees to perform abortions should therefore be upheld even if this Court's abortion precedents remain intact.

A. Missouri's prohibition on the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life is not unconstitutionally vague. This Court has stressed that civil statutes are not to be held to the same standards of precision as criminal statutes, Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 498-499 (1982). Missouri's prohibition on the use of public funds does not impose any criminal penalties and can be enforced only by injunctive action. See J.S. 3; Mo. Stat. Ann. §188.220.[19] In any event, it cannot be said that the statute is "so vague that 'men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning.'" Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 607 (1973) (citation omitted).

As the State of Missouri explains (J.S. 25), the statute "does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy." Rather, the statute forbids only the use of public funds to advise a woman that she should have an abortion that is not necessary to save her life. See Mo. Stat. Ann. §188.205. "[A]lthough [that prohibition] may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, [it is] set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with." CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 579 (1973). See Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 948-949 (9th Cir. 1983) (state prohibition on the use of state funds for "counseling for abortion procedures" not unconstitutionally vague).

---

[19] The court of appeals suggested (J.S. App. A67) that Missouri's prohibition must meet a higher standard of precision because it "implicates both first and fourteenth amendment rights of both physicians and their patients." As explained below, however, the law does not in fact burden any fundamental rights and, thus, no heightened scrutiny is appropriate.

The court of appeals was also mistaken in holding that the Missouri statute violates the right of pregnant women to have an abortion. Missouri has merely decided not to encourage abortions in any respect, and this Court has already held that the States are not precluded from making "a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and * * * implement[ing] that judgment by the allocation of public funds." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474. The State of Missouri is not "erecting an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth" (J.S. App. A72). While the State has chosen not to urge women to have elective abortions, women in Missouri are still free to make a contrary choice and to seek out medical advice and encouragement consonant with their decision.

In a separate opinion, Judge Arnold suggested (J.S. App. A83) that Missouri's prohibition violated the First Amendment because it "sharply discriminate[s] between kinds of speech on the basis of their viewpoint: a physician, for example, could discourage an abortion, or counsel against it, while in a public facility, but he or she could not encourage or counsel in favor of it." See also Mot. to Aff. 13. The State of Missouri does not, however, impose any restrictions on speech by private parties. Nor does it impose any limitations on the type of counseling or advice that a pregnant woman may receive from private sources. It is simply implementing its legislative preference for childbirth over abortion by declining to devote public resources to encouraging or counseling women to have abortions.

"Constitutional concerns are greatest when the State attempts to impose its will by force of law; the State's power to encourage actions deemed to be in the public interest is necessarily far broader." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 476. A State may thus spend state funds to encourage activities deemed to be in the public interest without simultaneously funding activities that are inconsistent with state policy. Regan v. Taxation with Representation, 461 U.S. 540, 549 (1983); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 93-95 (1976). "The Constitution presumably does not engraft an 'equal time' requirement onto the dispensation of state funds for the encouragement of matters reflecting a legitimate state interest." Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Chicago v. Kempiners, 700 F.2d 1115, 1128 (7th Cir. 1983) (Cudahy, J., concurring).[20] "There is a basic difference," this Court has noted (Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 475), "between direct state interference with a protected activity and state encouragement of an alternative activity consonant with legislative policy."

B. The court of appeals also held (J.S. App. A79) that "the state's desire to discourage abortions" is an insufficient justification for Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist abortions that are not necessary to save the life of the mother. The court concluded that as long as the patient pays for the services in question, the State has no legitimate grounds for not providing them. In effect, the court of appeals has held that the Constitution compels Missouri to go into the abortion business, provided the State can break even or turn a profit in doing so. But there is no legal basis for the rule that what the government cannot ban, it must sell if it can do so profitably. This Court has stressed (Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474) that a woman's "freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy * * * implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds." The same principle applies when the State chooses to implement its value judgment by the allocation of public facilities and the services of public employees.

---

[20] Recipients of federal funding under Title X are required to counsel clients concerning various methods of birth control. As a consequence, Catholic organizations have largely refused to participate in the Title X program. No one suggests, however, that Title X therefore violates the First Amendment. Catholic organizations are still free to counsel against the use of any artificial method of birth control, and they are not "penalized" in any respect for doing so. They are simply unable to take part in a government-sponsored program with a different purpose. "A refusal to fund protected activity, without more, cannot be equated with the imposition of a 'penalty' on that activity." Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 317 n.19 (1980). See also Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474-475 n.8.

The court of appeals' decision on this question cannot be reconciled with Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) (per curiam), in which the Court upheld a decision by the City of St. Louis not to perform abortions in city hospitals. Although the suit in Poelker was filed by an indigent who could not afford to pay for her abortion, the prohibition at issue in that case applied whether or not the pregnant woman was able to pay. 432 U.S. at 520; id. at 524 (Brennan, J., dissenting). Furthermore, the suit was brought by the plaintiff "on her own behalf and on behalf of the entire class of pregnant women residents of the City of St. Louis, Missouri, desiring to utilize the personnel, facilities and services of the general public hospitals within the City of St. Louis for the termination of pregnancies."–497 F.2d 1063, 1065 (8th Cir. 1974). The complaint sought general relief from the City's policy against providing abortion services, not simply relief for indigents. 515 F.2d 541, 542 (8th Cir. 1975). In rejecting this broad challenge, this Court stated (432 U.S. at 521) that, whatever other medical services it provides, the City of St. Louis has no constitutional obligation to provide "services for nontherapeutic abortions."

The court of appeals' conclusion that Missouri's refusal to perform abortions creates an "undue burden or obstacle to the free exercise of the right to choose an abortion" is unfounded. The State is not placing restrictions on the right of women to seek abortions from private sources. It is simply refusing to provide abortion services itself. We are informed by the State of Missouri that there are more than 9,000 licensed physicians practicing in the State; only 292 (or less than 4%) work full-time or part-time for the State of Missouri. There are more than 160 private hospitals and clinics in the State, and only 19 state hospitals. Under these circumstances, the State's decision to stay out of the abortion business cannot be said to erect an impermissible obstacle to a woman's effort to seek an abortion.

Furthermore, the court of appeals' conclusion (J.S. App. A79) that Missouri's prohibition on the use of public facilities and public employees to perform or assist abortions must be supported by a "compelling state interest" runs directly counter to this Court's statement that it is "abundantly clear that a State is not required to show a compelling interest for its policy choice to favor normal childbirth" (Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 477). Whether that policy choice is implemented by the State's allocation of public funds, public facilities, or public employees acting within the scope of their employment is constitutionally irrelevant.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.
Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM C. BRYSON
Acting Solicitor General
JOHN R. BOLTON
Assistant Attorney General
THOMAS W. MERRILL
Deputy Solicitor General
ROGER CLEGG
STEVEN R. VALENTINE
Deputy Assistant Attorneys General
MICHAEL K. KELLOGG
Assistant to the Solicitor General

FEBRUARY 1989

☆ U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1989—241-699/00119

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

MOTION FILED
FEB 13 1989

(5)

Case No. 88-605

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term 1989

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, STATE OF MISSOURI

Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE: Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W, Appellee.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AND BRIEF OF JAMES JOSEPH LYNCH, JR. AS AMICUS CURIÆ IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT

JAMES JOSEPH LYNCH, JR.
Attorney at Law
P.O. Box 15766
Sacramento, CA 95852
(916) 448-7871

Attorney for Amicus Curiæ

41PP

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

As Rephrased by Amicus Curiæ:

(1) Do physicians or other medical personnel have standing to contest the constitutionality of state regulation of abortion?

(2) Should Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) be reconsidered and discarded in favor of finding that a fetus is a member of Posterity, and therefore a person in the Constitutional sense, and thus entitled to the protection of the Constitution?

(4) Is state statute facially unconstitutional that attempts to regulate an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother?

As framed by the parties (57 LW 3315):

(1) Do physicians or other medical personnel have standing to contest the constitutionality of state legislative preamble in abortion statute?

(2) Are legislative findings in preamble to state abortion bill that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well being" facially unconstitutional?

(3) Where statute requiring determination of fetal viability when physician "has reason to believe" that fetus is "of 20 or more weeks gestational age" has been held to be constitutional, is it facially unconstitutional to require that, in making this determination, physician shall cause to be performed such "medical examination and tests as are necessary to make finding of gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of unborn child . . . ."?

(4) Is state statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life."?

(5) Is state statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public employee within scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother."?

(6) Is state statute facially unconstitutional that makes it "unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother."?

(7) Should Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), trimester approach for selecting test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed be reconsidered and discarded in favor of a rational basis test?

Case No. 88-605

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term 1989

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, STATE OF MISSOURI

Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE: Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W, Appellee.

On Appeal from
the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE AMICUS CURIÆ BRIEF*

James Joseph Lynch, Jr., respectfully moves this Court, pursuant to Rule 36, for leave to file the accompanying brief of amicus curiæ in support of appellant.

Amicus is an attorney admitted to practice law in the highest court of the State of California, and a member of the Bar

---

* A table of contents and table of authorities follows at pages (vi) and (viii) respectively.

 Appellants Attorney General William L. Webster and the State of Missouri have consented to the filing of this brief. Appellees have not so consented, and therefore it is necessary to request leave to file.

of this Court. He has taken an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States and to defend the poor, down trodden, and oppressed. He is a professor of Law, University of Northern California, Lorenz Patiño School of Law. He is affiliated with, but does not represent, a number of pro-life groups and has himself concentrated his practice in the areas of Civil Rights Law, Human Rights Activities, Constitutional Law, and Criminal Defense. He has written and copy righted one article on Abortion entitled Abortion and Inalienable Rights in American Jurisprudence: A Prospective Policy. He lived four years in England where he engaged in a self directed study of the English Political System from the inception of the Magna Carta (1215). He is a graduate of McGeorge School of Law (1978).

This case touches and concerns the continuing validity of Roe v. Wade, and as such, a decision herein will affect not only the Laws of the State of Missouri, but the State of California wherein amicus resides, and effects what public funds and resources a state may, or may not expend, on abortions, which in amicus' belief constitutes the destruction of human life. It must be remembered that under Nazi Germany, nearly 9 million innocent lives were lost in a holocaust because no one, at the outset had the courage to say no.[3] If, as contended here, a fetus is a human life, then amicus has an interest as a taxpayer to insure that no public funds or resources are utilized for purposes which are contra bono mores, or illegal.

Amicus is also concerned about the rights of that class of persons recognized in the Preamble of the Constitution denominated "posterity", and its subclass "fetus" and is concerned, and has been concerned for some time, that fetuses, have been unrepresented or under-represented in any court in the years of litigation which has followed since Roe v. Wade was decided in this court in 1973. Amicus was convinced then, and remains convinced that the court was misled as to the meaning of personhood in that arguably a fetus is a member of posterity found in the Preamble of the Constitution, and that it is imperative, for the preservation of a basic respect for human life, and the values enshrined in the Constitution of the United States that fetuses be recognized as a member of posterity, but due to the inherent nature of our adversary process, has been limited to writing articles concerning the topic.

[3] It is certain that the atrocities began at least as early as 1938. 6 Enclopædia Britanica 253a (1971). World War II did not start until September 1, 1939, by the Nazi, with United States entry on December 8, 1941 and then only because of events in Hawaii. 22 Id 681b, following.

It is amicus' desire, pro bono publico, to present to this court, from the fetus' point of view, the rights of the fetus, as it appears to be found in the term Posterity in the Preamble of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Dated: February 12, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES JOSEPH LYNCH, JR.
Attorney at Law
P.O. Box 15766
Sacramento, CA 95852
(916) 448-7871

Attorney for Amicus Curiæ

Table of Contents

QUESTIONS PRESENTED ..... (i)

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE AMICUS CURIÆ BRIEF ..... (iii)

Table of Contents ..... (vi)

Table of Authorities ..... (viii)

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIÆ IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT 1

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIÆ 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 3

I THE APPELLEES HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE THE REGULATIONS UNDER SCRUTINY 3

II STARE DECISIS IN LESS BINDING ON THIS COURT ON CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS EVEN IN THE FACE OF LONG STANDING & WIDESPREAD PRACTICE 4

III A FETUS IS A PERSON IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL SENSE BY VIRTUE OF THE TERM POSTERITY IN THE PREAMBLE OF THE CONSTITUTION 5

A. Introduction - Roe v. Wade Did Not Consider Posterity. 5

B. While the Preamble Does not Create Rights, it does define for Whom the Rights were Created 6

C. The Constitution was Established "By The People" 7

D. The Preamble Creates Two Classes of Persons, on an Equal Footing - "Ourselves" and "Posterity" 8

E. Posterity Was Understood At the Time of Adoption to Include All Future Generations 9

F. That a Fetus was intended as a member of Posterity is Consistent with Common Law Tradition 10

G. That a Fetus was intended as a member of Posterity is Consistent with the known object and Purposes of the Framers 12

H. Posterity, including a fetus, has Presently Enforceable Rights 14

I. A fetus is life within the meaning of the 5th Amendment 16

IV A STATE HAS AN INTERNATIONAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL OBLIGATION TO PROTECT HUMAN LIFE, AND THEREFORE THE REGULATIONS UNDER SCRUTINY ARE CONSTITUTIONAL 18

CONCLUSION 20

APPENDIX, Excerpts from Farrands A1

Table of Authorities

CASES

Adams v. Storey, 1 Paine (U.S.) 79, 1 Fed. Cas. p. 141 (1817) 7

Alamo School District v. Jones, 182 Cal.App.2d 180, 6 Cal.Rptr. 272 (1960) 11, 12, 13

Anderson v. United Realty Co., 79 Ohio St. 23, 86 N.E. 644 14

Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch) 61, 85 (1809) 7

Barber v. Pittsburgh, F.W. & C.R. Co., 166 U.S. 83, 17 S.Ct. 488, 41 L.Ed. 925 14

Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954) 4

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 6, 19

Breckenridge v. Denny, 71 Ky (8 Bush.) 523 10

Brown v. Bd. of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) 4

Brown v. Bd. of Education, 349 U.S. 289 (1953) 4

Brown v. United States, 256 U.S. 335 (1921) 19

Coggs v. Berherd, 2 Ed.Raym. 909 ..... 14, 15

Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 3

Ex Parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333 (1867) 4

Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649 (1891) 4

Flash v. Cohen, 392 U.S.83 17

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972) 19

Gannon v. Albright, 183 Mo. 238, 81 S.W. 1162 13

Gay v. Scates, 37 Pa 31 13

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Weat.) 1 (1824) 7

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Weat.) 1 (1824) 8

Haward v. Howe, 12 Gray (Mass.) 49 13

Hertz v. Abrahams, 110 Ga. 707, 36 S.E. 409 13

Hockett v. State Liquor Licensing Board, 110 N.E. 485, 91 Ohio St. 176, L.R.S. 1971B, 7 6

Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) 19

Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 87 (1900) 7

Larew v. Larew, 146 Va. 134, 135 S.E. 819 13

Locke v. New Orleans, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 172 (1866) 7

Locke v. New Orleans, 71 U.S. (4 Wall) 172 (1866) 8

McIntosh v. Dill, 86 Okla. 1, 205 P. 917, 925 ..... 16, 17, 18

Mullane v. Central Hanover B&T, 339 U.S. 706 (1950) 17, 18

People v. Emery, 314 Ill. 220, 145 N.E. 349 13

Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) 4

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 2, 3, 5, 20

Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404 (1857) 6, 8, 9, 11

Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976) 3

Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa 267, 164 A.2d 93 (1960) 11, 16

Taltarum's Case, Y.B. 12 Edw. IV, Mich., fo 14 b, pl, fo 19a, 25 (1472) 15

United States v. Block, 4 Sawy. (U.S.) 211, 24 Fed.Cas. 14,609 (1877) 8

United States v. Block, 4 Sawy. (U.S.) 211, 24 Fed.Cas. 14,609 (1877) 7

United States v. Boyer, 85 F.425 (D.C., Mo., 1898) 6

United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941) 7

United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. (2 Otto) 542 (1876) 6, 8, 9, 11

United States v. Harris, 1 Abb. (U.S.) 110, 26 Fed. Ca. No. 15, 312 (1866) 8

United States v. Harris, 1 Abb. (U.S.) 110, 26 Fed. Ca. No. 15, 312 (1866) 7

Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 5 U.S. (8 Wall.) 533 (1869) 7

Veazie Bank v. Fenno,

75 U.S. (8 Wall) 533 (1869) 8
White v. Hart, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 646 12
Witters v. Washington Dept of Social Svcs for the Blind, 474 U.S. 481 (1986) 11
Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583 (1938) 7

CONSTITUTIONS

United States

Preamble ..... passim
Art. I, § 2, cl 3 ..... 6, 8
Art. I, § 8, cl. 17 13
Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 13
Art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 13
Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 13
Art. VI, cl 2 19
1st Amendment 7
2nd Amendment 19
3rd Amendment 13
4th Amendment 13, 19
5th Amendment 5, 13, 16, 19
13th Amendment 6, 8
14th Amendment 6, 8, 19
22nd Amendment 15
22nd Amendment, § 1 15
22nd Amendment, § 2 15

STATUTES

England

10 Halsbury's Statutes of England (4th Ed) Constitutional Law, 25 Edw 1 (Magna Carta)(1297), p. 14, Notes, ¶ 2 18
13 Edw. I, c. 1 14
13 Edw. I, c. 1. 14
Y.B. 12 Edw. IV, Mich., fo 14 b, pl. 16., fo. 19a, 25 14
Statute of De Donis 14

MISCELLANEOUS

Acquinas, Summa Theologiæ, 1, q. 76, a. 5 and q. 118, a. 2 11
American Declaration of Independence 12
American Declaration of Independence, ¶ 2 12
American Jurisprudence (2nd), vol. 28, Estates, § 53 14
Aristotle, Politics, VII, 1335b, 24-26 11
Bible, I Sam. 16, II Sam. 5, 9-20, I Kings 1-2 7
Biology, Observation & Concept by Case & Steirs (1971), p. 110 17
Id, irritation, pp. 267, 329, 330 17
Id, pp. 122, 141, 143, 149-150 17
Id, pp. 324-327 17
Id, pp. 70, 80 17
Id, pp. 8, 51, 64, 77 17
Id, reproduction, pp. 122, 163-165, 298-299, 327, 329 17
Chitty on Contracts (23rd ed, 1968) 134 ..... 14, 15
Corpus Juris Secundum, vol. 31, Estates § 4 13
Edge, R., "Voidability of Minor's Contracts; A Feudal Doctrine in a Modern Economy," 1 G.L.Rev. 205 (1967) 15
Encyclopædia Britannica (1971) 12
Farrand, Max, The Constitutional Debates, vol. 2, pp. 152, 163, 177, 193, 196, 209, 565, 582, 590, 651 15
Halbury's Laws of England (1st ed, 1911), vol. 17, Infants ¶¶ 132, 135 ..... 16, 17, 18
Hobb, Leviathan (1651) 15
International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Congressional Digest, December 1984 19
Jacobs, Warren M. and Jacobs Mark A., MDs, Obstetrics and Gynecology, Family Health &

Medical Guide (1979), page 93 17
Landmark Briefs and Arguments of the Supreme Court of the United States, vol. 75 6
Laqueur, The Human Rights Reader 15
Locke, Second Treatise of Government (1690) 15
Magna Carta (1215), Article 54 11
McKechnie, Magna Carta 18
Noonan, Contraception, 86-88 (Harv. U. Press, 1965) 11
Pardoning Power of the President, 5 Opinion U.S. Atty. Gen. 532 (1852) 7, 8
Restatement (1st) Contracts § 77 ..... 14, 15
Restatement (2nd) Torts §§ 63, 64, & 65 19
Rotunda, Treatise on Constitutional Law, vol. 3, § 23.33, p. 512 (1986) 4
Rotunda, vol. 3, p. 663, note 1 15
Schwartz, The Bill of Rights, A documentary history 12
Stephens Commentaries, vol. 2 (1841) 16, 17
Verdross, Forbidden Treaties int'l Law, 31 AJIL 571 (1937) 15, 18
Id, Jus Dispositivum & Jus Cogens in Int'l Law, 60 AJIL 55 (1966) 15, 18

Case No. 88-605

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term 1989

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, STATE OF MISSOURI

Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE: Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W, Appellee.

On Appeal from
the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF JAMES JOSEPH LYNCH, JR., AS AMICUS CURIÆ IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIÆ

The Interest of the Amicus is set forth ante in the Motion for leave to file this brief.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Health care professionals and facilities offering abortion counseling and services and pregnant women seeking abortion services or pregnancy counseling brought a class action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief challenging constitutionality of several sections of Missouri's statute relating to regulation of abortions. The trial court declared several portions of the statue unconstitutional and permanently enjoined their enforcement. 662 F.Supp. 407.

Appellants herein appealed to the Eighth Circuit. 871 F.2d 1071. The court of appeals held that (1) section of statute requiring abortions performed at 16 weeks gestational age or later to be performed at hospital was unconstitutional; (2) state could not dictate either test or findings which enter into physician's decision whether fetus is viable; (3) section which declared that life began at conception was unconstitutional; (4) section which prohibits public funds, employees, and facilities from being used for "encouraging or counseling" women to have abortions not necessary to save mother's life was unconstitutional; (5) section prohibiting use of public facilities for abortion not necessary to save life of mother was unconstitutional when no public moneys were expended; (6) section prohibiting public employees from performing abortions not necessary to save mother's life was unconstitutional when no public moneys were expended; and (7) section prohibiting use of public funds for performing or assisting abortion not necessary to save life of mother did not violate Eighth Amendment rights of pregnant female inmates.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. It is clear from precedents in this court that health care professionals have standing in cases such as that here where the asserted state action regulates the patient-doctor relationship.

2. This Court has recognized that unconstitutional conduct which has been widespread and in long use cannot stand, and that with respect to the Constitution, stare decisis is of less importance than in other cases, and therefore the holding of Roe v. Wade is not necessarily binding on this Court, and in fact should be rejected for reasons set forth hereinafter.

3. While the Preamble of the Constitution does not create any rights, it defines for whom the rights were created - Ourselves and Our Posterity, and a construction that Posterity includes fetuses is consistent with the intent of the framers and the common law understanding that a fetus was a person in being, such that a fetus is a person in the Constitutional sense, and because this was not brought to this Court's attention in Roe v. Wade, Roe v. Wade must be reversed as unsound and contrary to the intent of the framers.

4. Because a fetus is human life and a person in the constitutional sense, and the state has a valid and legitimate right to protect human life, recognized as an international duty, and imposed as a duty in the Constitution of the United States, the abortion regulations under scrutiny are constitutional.

Conclusion. Based upon the foregoing, this court should overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) prospectively, affirm the decision of the Eighth Circuit at 871 F.2d 1071 as to standing, reverse the decision as to the constitutionality of the Missouri Statutes, and remand for further proceedings not inconsistent with this Court's opinion.

ARGUMENT

I

THE APPELLEES HAVE STANDING TO CHALLENGE THE REGULATIONS UNDER SCRUTINY

This court has made it clear that medical personnel have standing by virtue of their economic stake in their relationship with patients to challenge contraceptive and abortion statutes. Generally, Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976), and their progeny. Because standing is nothing more than this Court's self imposed rules of restraint that "one to whom application of the statute is constitutional will not be heard ...." (Ibid), and not a constitutional question on the merits, there is no reason in this case to depart from stare decisis. Therefore, clearly, appellees have standing, and therefore this court should affirm that portion of the opinion found at 871 F.2d, at 1076, as to standing.

II

STARE DECISIS IN LESS BINDING ON THIS COURT ON CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS EVEN IN THE FACE OF LONG STANDING AND WIDESPREAD PRACTICE

Statutes or practices inconsistent with the Constitution, however numerous, can create neither a power which the Constitution does not bestow nor furnish a construction which the Constitution does not warrant. Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649, 691 (1891); 3 Rotunda, Treatise on Constitutional Law § 23.33, p. 512 (1986). This court, with characteristic good grace, invalidated its own Rules of Court, in part, based on a Congressional Statute requiring attorney's to take an oath with respect to their activities before the civil war, when it was pointed out that the provision was in fact unconstitutional. Ex Parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333 (1867). Faced with the Constitutionality of "separate but equal facilities, a practice in existence throughout the south for nearly 60 years, and sanctioned by this Court, this Court overruled, and rightfully so, Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) in Brown v. Bd. of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) (Brown III). Accord, Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954). Moreover, where the importance of the question is great, and touches sensitive issues which need to be resolved once and for all, this court has not allowed the fact that some issues were not properly addressed in the courts below from ordering further argument on the omitted issues so that the continuing controversy could be settled. Brown III, 347 U.S., at 488-89, 496 (1953); Brown v. Board of Ed., 349 U.S. 289, 294, 298 (Nature of remedy to be utilized).

Such is the case at bench. This court can judicially notice its own docket, which has been impacted by abortion cases. Similarly, it is common news that throughout the country, abortion controversy has led to disorder in the streets.[1]

This court, with the characteristic good grace it exhibited in Garland, should now recognize, for reasons which will become apparent hereinafter, that in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) it was misled, overrule it prospectively, and remand for further proceedings in light of the fact that the fetus is, by virtue of the term Posterity, found in the Preamble of the Constitution, a person in the Constitutional sense.

III

A FETUS IS A PERSON IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL SENSE BY VIRTUE OF THE TERM POSTERITY IN THE PREAMBLE OF THE CONSTITUTION

A. Introduction - Roe v. Wade Did Not Consider Posterity.

This court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), held that a state had no right to regulate abortions in the first trimester of pregnancy in view of the right of privacy of the mother, could provide some regulation in the second trimester, and had the right to full regulation in the third trimester. In reaching this result, the court noted that Texas had failed to demonstrate where in the Constitution the fetus was a person in the Constitutional sense. 410 U.S., at 157-59. A reading of the Petition, Response, and Briefs on the merits by the parties and amicus in Roe v. Wade, shows that the primary focus of argument was on the term person as found in the 5th and 14th

[1] It is not suggested that the disorder is the reason for overruling Roe. Quite the contrary, the reason is because a fetus is a person in the Constitutional sense by virtue of the term Posterity found in the Preamble. The notation of the problem is put a recognition that the problem must be resolved.

Amendments of the Constitution. 75 Landmark Briefs and Arguments of the Supreme Court of the United State. The opinion itself does not address the Preamble, nor any of the terms found in the preamble.

In at least one subsequent opinion, this court has held that the right of privacy cannot be used by consenting adults in the privacy of their own bedroom to engaged in homosexual conduct forbidden by State Law. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). There is no case that has ever reported that a female, based on her right to privacy, can do whatever she wishes with her body, including acts of prostitution in the privacy of her own bedroom in violation of state law. A fortiori, if the fetus is a person in the Constitutional sense, it does not seem reasonably possible that a woman can, absent justification or excuse of taking the life of a fetus in violation of state law.

This court has used the term "posterity" on one prior occasion, United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. (2 Otto) 542, 550 (1876), but has never before been called upon to define the term, and to, or for, whom it was intended to include.

B. While the Preamble Does not Create Rights, it does define for Whom the Rights were Created

The Preamble's true office is to expound the nature and extent and application of the powers actually conferred by the Constitution, and not substantively to create them. United States v. Boyer, 85 F.425 (D.C., Mo., 1898) (Quoting Mr. Justice Storey on the Constitution, Section 462). Cf., Hockett v. State Liquor Licensing Board, 110 N.E. 485, 91 Ohio St. 176, L.R.S. 1971B, 7. That aside, it does define for whom the constitution was created, and where sovereignty resides. Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404 (1857);[2] Cruikshank, supra, 92

[2] The 13th & 14th Amendments do not overrule this proposition. Rather, they redefine citizen (See, Article I, § 2, cl 3; § 9, cl. 1), and thus en-

U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

C. The Constitution was Established "By The People"[3]

The Constitution,[4] in the Preamble, declares that "We the People" do ordain and establish this Constitution. "Here, in strictness, the people surrender nothing; and as they retain large the class of persons who are citizens.

[3] Recorded history first notes that a sovereign rules with the consent of the governed in I Sam. 16, II Sam. 5, 9-20, I Kings 1-2. There, David as a youth was anointed as the successor to Jesse, his father. When his father died, he ruled over the seven tribes of Judah for seven years. At that time, when the rest of Israel were doing poorly, they noted that Judah prospered under David, so they asked that he rule them as well. Thereafter David ruled over all of Israel and Judah for forty years. But there is nothing to indicate the right to rule was in writing. Other codes, most notably the Code of Hammurabi, were in writing, but were unilateral acknowledgments of human rights. Thus, the Magna Carta, infra, appears to be the first written document executed by both the sovereign and its subjects. The U.S. Constitution abolished traditional concepts of sovereignty, placed sovereignty in the People, signed by their representative, and ratified by them according to their respective state procedures. Infra.

[4] In the solution of constitutional questions the same rule of interpretation, and sources of judicial information, may be resorted to as in the construction of statutes and other instruments granting power. Adams v. Storey, 1 Paine (U.S.) 79, 1 Fed. Cas. page 141, 145 (1817). The constitution and the law are to be expounded without leaning one way or the other, according to those general principles which usually govern the construction of fundamental or other laws. Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch) 61, 85 (1809). No word or clause can be rejected as superfluous or unmeaning, but each must be given its due force and appropriate meaning. Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583, 588 (1938); Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 87 (1900). Words and terms are to be taken in the sense they were used and understood at common law and at the time the constitution and the amendment were adopted. Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 533, 542 (1869); Locke v. New Orleans, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 172 (1866); Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Weat.) 1, 188-189 (1824); United States v. Harris, 1 Abb. (U.S.) 110, 26 Fed. Ca. No. 15, 312 (1866); United States v. Block, 4 Sawy. (U.S.) 211, 24 Fed.Cas. 14,609 (1877); Pardoning Power of the President, 5 Opinion U.S. Atty. Gen. 532, 535 (1852). Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred. United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299, 316 (1941).

every thing they have no need of particular reservation, 'We, THE PEOPLE of the United States, to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.' Here is a better recognition of popular rights than volumes of those aphorisms which make the principle figure in several of our State bills of rights and which would sound much better in a treatise of ethics than a constitution of government." Hamilton, The Federalist Papers, No. 84.; Preamble, Amicus Appendix, p. A8.

The words "people of the United States" and "citizens" are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the "sovereign people" and every citizen is one of these people, and constituent member of this sovereignty. Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404 (1857);[5] Cruikshank, supra, 92 U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

D. The Preamble Creates Two Classes of Persons, on an Equal Footing - "Ourselves" and "Posterity"

There being no debate, and the question of the meaning "to ourselves and our Posterity" being one of first blush, we must turn to the meaning commonly understood at the time of the adoption to determine its extent and application. Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 75 U.S. (8 Wall) 533, 542 (1869); Locke v. New Orleans, 71 U.S. (4 Wall) 172 (1866); Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Weat.) 1, 188-189 (1824); United States v. Harris, 1 Abb. (U.S.) 110, 26 Fed. Ca. No. 15, 312 (1866); United States v. Block, 4 Sawy. (U.S.) 211, 24 Fed.Cas. 14,609 (1877); Pardoning Power of the President, 5 Opinion U.S. Atty. Gen.

[5] The 13th & 14th Amendments do not overrule this proposition. Rather, they redefine citizen (See, Article I, § 2, cl 3; § 9, cl. 1), and thus enlarge the class of persons who are citizens.

532, 535 (1852).

The phrase in question begins with the preposition "to". As so used, it marks the object for which the purposes were secured. Webster's Dictionary of the English Language, 1968.

"Ourselves" is a pronoun, the plural of "ourself", and when used in the objective, as here, it simply serves as the reflexive pronoun corresponding to "we" or "us". Ibid. "We", in this case, appears at the beginning of the preamble and is defined by the parenthetical statement immediately following "the People of the United States." "Ourselves" is therefore synonymous with "the people of the United States" and hence also "citizen". Scott v. Sanford, supra, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404; Cruikshank, supra, 92 U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

"And" is a particle joining words and sentences, and expressing the relations of connection or addition. Webster's, op. cit. In this case, its purpose is to add to the object for which the purposes were secured. "Our" means of, or belonging to, "us", i.e., to the speaker (in this case "We, the People of the United States), or to the speaker and the person or persons whom he speaks for or includes. It is a possessive adjective corresponding to "We", "Us"; expressing the genitive of possession; also, the objective genitive, as in "our defense", "our Maker", "our persecutors". Oxford English Dictionary, Compact Edition, 1971. (Hereinafter, OED). Its purpose is to include "Posterity" on an equal footing with, and the same rights as, "our selves" as evidenced by the parallel structure of the phrase. Therefore, "posterity" is synonymous with "citizen". Scott v. Sanford, supra, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404; Cruikshank, supra, 92 U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

E. Posterity Was Understood At the Time of Adoption to Include All Future Generations

Posterity, as it appears in the Preamble, has not been defined by the Supreme Court, therefore we must turn to what the framer's understood it to mean at the time the constitution was adopted in 1789. Ante, footnote 3, and the citations therein.

"Posterity", at the time of the Framers, was defined as "1. The descendants collectively of any person; all who have proceeded from a common ancestor. 2.+.a. A later generation (with plural). obs. b. All succeeding generations (collectively)." OED, op. cit. Accord, Breckenridge v. Denny, 71 Ky (8 Bush.) 523.

The Preamble is not concerned with an individual in particular, as in 1. Nor in the sense of 2.a, which in any event is obsolete. 2b appears to be the sense which the framers had in mind. Samuel Johnson, "Idler No. 3", p. 5, used it in that sense in 1758 when he wrote, "The Ocean and sun will last our time, and we may leave posterity to shift for themselves." It was again used in that sense by Colquhounn in Commentaries on the Thames, ix, 284 when he wrote in 1800 "They will deserve the Thanks of the Nation, and the gratitude of Posterity." OED, op. cit.

The Constitution was signed on September 17, 1787, and Congress on February 18, 1791 formally recognized that the states had ratified the Constitution and therefore it was in effect. 3 Rotunda, Treatises on Constitutional Law, pp. 663-64, note 1. Thus it may be assumed the same sense was intended. Ante, footnote 3, and the citations therein.

F. That a Fetus was intended as a member of Posterity is Consistent with Common Law Tradition.

The Framers used the term Posterity without qualification. In 1644, in a well known pamphlet, it was argued that Parliament can no more censure the issue of the mind than it can the issue of the womb." Milton, John, "Aeropagitica" (1644).[6] At common law, it was understood that certain members of future generations, fetuses,[7] were a life in being for the purposes of the Rule Against Perpetuities. Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities (4th Ed.); Alamo School District v. Jones, 182 Cal.App.2d 180, 6 Cal.Rptr. 272 (1960). Moreover, prenatal injuries, were to a limited extent, recognized at Common Law. "To kill a child in its mother's womb is now no murder, but a great misprision: but if the child be born alive and death by reason of the potion or bruises it received in the womb, it is murder in such as administered or gave them." Lord Coke, repeated by Blackstone at Book IV, p. 198.[8] And common law does not appear to have barred tort actions for prenatal injuries. Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa 267, 164 A.2d 93, 94 (1960).

It thus appears that the framer's intended that "All succeeding generations (collectively)" include common law concepts of the rights of a fetus and to be synonymous with "citizen". Scott v. Sanford, supra, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 404; Cruikshank, supra, 92 U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

---

[6] Milton went on to observe that he did not believe that his remarks applied to Catholics. While this Catholic takes exception to the exception, his premise appears sound in all other respects. It may be that today he would have different feelings on the matter.

[7] That a fetal has rights was probably recognized as early as 322 BC at least. Aristotle, Politics, VII, 1335b, 24-26; Acquinas, Summa Theologiæ, 1, q. 76, a. 5 and q. 118, a. 2; Noonan, Contraception, 86-88 (Harv. U. Press, 1965). The Old Testiment provided a remedy for anyone causing a miscarriage. 21 Exodus 22. It does not offend the Establishment Clause of the 1st Amendment merely because civil enforcement corresponds to the tenants of some religious beliefs. Generally, Witters v. Washington Dept of Social Svcs for the Blind, 474 U.S. 481 (1986).

[8] Lord Coke's rationale rested on the impossibility of determining when life began, hence there would always be reasonable doubt as to whether or not murder had been committed. Two reasons may be advanced for that. First, at common law, "No man shall be taken or imprisoned upon the appeal of a woman, for the death of any other than her husband." Magna Carta (1215), Article 54. Thus, a failure of evidence. Second, medical knowledge as to the status of a fetus was quite primitive when compared to modern medical practices.

G. That a Fetus was intended as a member of Posterity is Consistent with the known object and Purposes of the Framers.

As the Preamble appears to confer rights upon "posterity" equal to "our selves", it is necessary to determine whether the framer's[9] intended that the rights be vested. Ante, footnote 3, and the cites therein. One measure of intent would be to determine whether vesting has occurred for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities. Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities (4th Ed.); Alamo School District v. Jones, 182 Cal.App.2d 180, 6 Cal.Rptr. 272 (1960).

Had the framers used "and our heirs", it would have created the equivalent of a fee simple absolute with the powers of alienation. But such a concept would have been inconsistent with the concept of "unalienable rights" found in the Declaration of Independence[10] and the concept of an "indestructible and perpetual union." White v. Hart, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 646, 650. Therefore, the framer's must have had a different intent in mind when they used "Posterity."

If "Posterity" is to be viewed as conferring a contingent remainder to a class, then it must fail for being obnoxious to the [9] Of the 39 signers of the constitution, at least 8 were lawyers (of which one studied at the Middle Temple in London England and another studied law in England), two more appear to have studies law extensively (Chs. C. Pinchkney at the Middle Temple in London, England), and two more were, or became, judges. Generally, Encyclopaedia Britannica (1971) (Comparison with signers Volume 22, p. 695, with their biographies.). Hence it is fair to assume that the framer's were not unaware of what they were doing, and how to secure that which they wished to do.

[10] American Declaration of Independence; Schwartz, The Bill of Rights, A documentary history. The Declaration states, in relevant part: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these rights, Government are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, ..." American Declaration of Independence, ¶ 2.

rule against perpetuities because there would be members of the class capable of taking more than 21 years, plus the gestation period, after lives in being. Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities (4th Ed.); Alamo School District v. Jones, 182 Cal.App.2d 180, 6 Cal.Rptr. 272 (1960). But if void, then it would create a fee simple absolute in the present generation, thus, once again, frustrating the intent of the framer's in creating "unalienable rights" and a "perpetual union". Therefore, another meaning consistent with the framer's intent must be found. Ante, footnote 3, and the citations therein.

Under the rule in Shelly's Case, a limitation of an estate to an ancestor for life, with the remainder to his heirs or the heirs of his body, gave the whole estate in fee to the ancestor. 31 Corpus Juris Secundum, Estates § 4. This rule applies only where the estate in freehold and the estate in remainder are created by the same instrument as in the Preamble. People v. Emery, 314 Ill. 220, 145 N.E. 349; 69 C.J.S. p. 512, note 77. Again, because this is inconsistent with the known intent of the framers, another meaning must be found. Ante, footnote 3, and the citations therein.

An estate tail may, under certain circumstances, be created or arise by implication. Hertz v. Abrahams, 110 Ga. 707, 36 S.E. 409; Haward v. Howe, 12 Gray (Mass.) 49; Gannon v. Albright, 183 Mo. 238, 81 S.W. 1162; Gay v. Scates, 37 Pa 31; Larew v. Larew, 146 Va. 134, 135 S.E. 819. Such a situation commonly arises if a conveyance[11] or devise in fee has been made to some particular person named without issue, upon an indefinite failure of issue. In other words, whenever it appears in the instrument creating the estate that it was intended that the issue of the first taker should take by inheritance in a direct line, and in a regular order and course of decent, so long as his posterity should endure, and an estate in fee or in tail is given in remainder upon an indefinite failure of issue, then the estate first created will be construed to be an estate tail, or fee tail. 28 American Jurisprudence, Second, Estates, § 53. Cf., Barber v. Pittsburgh, F.W. & C.R. Co., 166 U.S. 83, 17 S.Ct. 488, 41 L.Ed. 925; Anderson v. United Realty Co., 79 Ohio St. 23, 86 N.E. 644, affmd 222 U.S. 164, 32 S.Ct. 50, 56 L.Ed. 144 (recognizing by dictum that this rule was followed at common law).

[11] The Constitution expressly concerns estates and interests in lands. See, Art. I, § 8, cl. 17 (District of Columbia; Places purchased); Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 (forfeitures); Art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 (privileges and immunities), § 3, cl. 2 (property belonging to the United States; Amendment III (Quartering of soldiers); Amendment IV (Secure in their persons, houses); Amendment V (nor be deprived of ... property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation ....).

The Statute of De Donis[12] made fee tails unalienable by using the words "to A and the heirs of his body." In 1472, Taltarum's Case virtually abolished tails for most purposes. Y.B. 12 Edw. IV, Mich., fo 14 b, pl, fo 19a, 25. An estate in tail was not subject to The Rule Against Perpetuities because it was a present future interest. See, 13 Edw. I, c. 1. Y.B. 12 Edw. IV, Mich., fo 14 b, pl. 16., fo. 19a, 25. Hence it is reasonable to infer that in lieu of the common law formulation the framers chose "to ourselves and our Posterity" to effectuate their intent that the "first takers should take by inheritance in a direct line, and in a regular order and course of decent, so long as his posterity should endure". This construction would carry out and effectuate the intent of the framers that the rights conferred be "unalienable", and to create a perpetual union. Ante, footnote 3, and the citations therein.

H. Posterity, including a fetus, has Presently Enforceable Rights

There are three points in time when one could cross the threshold of being "our selves" (present interest) from "posterity" (Presently enforceable future interests): conception; at birth; at age of capacity. Chitty on Contracts (23rd ed, 1968) 134; Restatement of Contracts (1st) § 77; Coggs v. Berherd, 2 Ed.Raym. 909.

[12] 13 Edw. I, c. 1.

Implicit in the Preamble is the concept that the Constitution is to be a social contract. Eg, Hobb, Leviathan (1651); Locke, Second Treatise of Government (1690); Laqueur, The Human Rights Reader. It was submitted to the People for ratification. 2 Farrand, Max, The Constitutional Debates, pp. 152, 163, 177, 193, 196, 209, 565, 582, 590, 651; Amicus Appendix. 3 Rotunda, op cit, p. 663, note 1. Thus it is implicit that acceptance could only be by those not suffering from a disability, ie., persons with the capacity to consent. R. Edge, "Voidability of Minor's Contracts: A Feudal Doctrine in a Modern Economy," 1 G.L.Rev. 205 (1967). Viewed as a social contract, the Individual in general promises the individual in particular to secure for him inalienable rights, in return for which the individual promises to conform to the laws of the majority which do not derogate[13] from the promise of inalienable rights. Such mutual promises have always been considered sufficient consideration for enforceability. Chitty on Contracts (23rd ed, 1968) 134; Restatement of Contracts (1st) § 77; Coggs v. Berherd, 2 Ed.Raym. 909.

As persons who have not reached the age of capacity[14] could not consent, Chitty, op. cit., it would appear that adults are of the class "our selves," and all others of the class "Posterity."

[13] Verdross, Forbidden Treaties int'l Law, 31 AJIL 571 (1937); Id, Jus Dispositivum & Jus Cogens in Int'l Law, 60 AJIL 55 (1966).

[14] The 22nd Amendment provides: "Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age. Section 2. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." Arguably, without this provision, any "person born in the United States or under its jurisdiction" is a citizen, and could vote regardless of age. In practice, age was regulated by the States, and it was understood to be the common law age of maturity, unless modified by the respective states. 3 Rotunda, op. cit., p. 688, Historical Note.

At common law, with few exceptions, the tenant in possession of a fee tail could be enjoined from alienation by those with a right to inherit. Moreover, a guardian ad litem, a guardian appointed by a court, could prosecute or defend for an infant in any suit to which he may be a part, 2 Stephens Commentaries 342 (1841), or by the State acting in Parens patriae. McIntosh v. Dill, 86 Okla. 1, 205 P. 917, 925; 17 Halbury's Laws of England (1st ed, 1911) Infants ¶¶ 132, 135. Thus, it is clear that at common law that at least those members of Posterity who were born had a presently enforceable right.

Turning to whether a fetus, as a member of Posterity, had a common law protectable interest, it appears in the affirmative. As already noted, ante p. 10-11 citing Lord Coke, while it is was not murder to kill a child in a mother's womb, it was still a misprision (crime)!. The unborn was a life in being for purposes of the rule against perpetuities. Gray, op.cit. Moreover, it does not appear that common law barred tort actions for prenatal injuries, Sinkler v. Kneale, supra, 164 A.2d 93, 94 (1960), which could be brought by a representative. 2 Stephens Commentaries 342 (1841); McIntosh v. Dill, supra, 205 P. 917; 17 Halbury's Laws of England (1st ed, 1911) Infants ¶¶ 132, 135.

It thus appears that in view of the known object and intent of the framer's that they intended to create unalienable rights and a perpetual union, knew of the common law rights of the unborn, and chose Posterity without limitation to include within the class of persons protected the unborn conceived fetus.

I. A fetus is life within the meaning of the 5th Amendment

The Constitution provides, in relevant part:

"No person shall be, ... deprived of life ... without due process of law."

U.S. Constitution, 5th Amendment. Neither a State nor the federal government may utilize money to take life without due process of law. Eg, Flash v. Cohen, 392 U.S.83, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed.2d 947 (1968). Assuming, arguendo, that the fetus is a life, it has the right to representation, 2 Stephens Commentaries 342 (1841); McIntosh v. Dill, supra, 205 P. 917; 17 Halbury's Laws of England (1st ed, 1911) Infants ¶¶ 132, 135, to be heard on the question as to whether its life should be terminated. Generally, Mullane v. Central Hanover B&T, 339 U.S. 706 (1950).

It would appear that a fetus has all of the characteristics of life:[15] excretion,[16] ingestion,[17] respiration,[18] irritation,[19] and reproduction.[20] A zygote (early fetus) is viable, in contradistinction to the ovum and sperm which are not.[21] Whether or not it can be ascertained at any point in time that it is human is an absurd proposition; assuming it goes to term it cannot be anything but human. The fact that the zygote is not viable extrauterine does not negate the fact of life. Life exists in an environment. No one would seriously consider sending an astronaut tied to an "umbilical cord" on a space walk to test whether or not the astronaut were life by cutting the umbilical cord to see if the astronaut could survive; such a proposition is absurd. Moreover, even a fetus securely within the womb will die if there is an abruption of the placenta.[22] Finally, the [15] Biology: Observation & Concept by Case & Steirs (1971), p. 110.

---

[16] Id, pp. 122, 141, 143, 149-150.

[17] Id, pp. 70, 80.

[18] Id, pp. 8, 51, 64, 77.

[19] Id, irritation, pp. 267, 329, 330.

[20] Id, reproduction, pp. 122, 163-165, 298-299, 327, 329.

[21] Id, pp. 324-327.

[22] Jacobs, Warren M. and Jacobs Mark A., MDs, Obstetrics and Gyne-courts can judicially notice the advance of science in making possible test tube pregnancies, and transfers from one womb to another, all suggesting the presence of life from conception.

The terms "ensoulment", "psych", "free will", and when they manifest themselves, are not relevant. We are concerned with Posterity, and it cannot be denied, in light of the arguments heretofore made, that Posterity includes all future generation, with the conceived having a presently protectable interest. 2 Stephens Commentaries 342 (1841); McIntosh v. Dill, supra, 205 P. 917; 17 Halbury's Laws of England (1st ed, 1911) Infants ¶¶ 132, 135. Therefore, the fetus is a life which may not be taken without due process of law, and a compelling, legitimate governmental interest.[23] Generally, Mullane v. Central Hanover B&T, 339 U.S. 706 (1950).

IV

A STATE HAS AN INTERNATIONAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL OBLIGATION TO PROTECT HUMAN LIFE, AND THEREFORE THE REGULATIONS UNDER SCRUTINY ARE CONSTITUTIONAL

Under International Law, a State has the obligation to provide police protection of its citizens at home. Verdross, Forbidden Treaties int'l Law, 31 AJIL 571 (1937); Id, Jus Dispositivum & Jus Cogens in Int'l Law, 60 AJIL 55 (1966). The concept to protect a person from due process in American Jurisprudence is derived from the Magna Carta (1215). McKcology, Family Health & Medical Guide (1979), page 93.

[23] Because a fetus is a person, the State has an interest in protecting that life, and it therefore becomes a balancing test weighing the interest of the mother against that of the fetus. It would appear then that the life of the fetus could be terminated only if it threatens the life of the mother, because other alternatives are now available such as transferring the zygote to the womb of a willing carrier or mother.

echnie,[24] Magna Carta; the Great Charter of King John. The 5th Amendment prohibits the taking of life without due process of law, and it is enforced and made binding against the states by the 14th Amendment. Generally, Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972), and it progeny; Cruikshank, supra, 92 U.S. (2 Otto), at 549.

Given a state's obligation to protect it citizens at home, and to ensure life is not taken without due process of law, Missouri has a legitimate interest in providing for the protection of fetal life. It's citizens, and the citizen's of every state has an interest in insuring that there exists safeguards to insure that abortion does not become a tool for genocide. Eg, International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Congressional Digest, December 1984; U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl 2 (treaties).

This is not to say that a State may say a woman does not have any right to privacy and may never have an abortion. Clearly, the Constitution implicitly recognizes the right to privacy. U.S. Const., 2d (Quartering of soldiers), and 4th (search and seizure) Amendments; Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967), and its progeny. And it is equally clear that a person cannot use the right of privacy and the right to do with one's body what he or she wishes to do with their body if the conduct amounts, under state law, to a crime. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). Nonetheless, every person has the right to self defense. Foster, Crown Law 273-277 (1762); Restatement (2nd) Torts §§ 63, 64, & 65; Brown v. United States, 256 U.S. 335 (1921). Thus it would appear where the woman's life or health is endangered, termination of the pregnancy would be justified. But even here, there appears to be less drastic alternative means than outright abortion. This court can judicially notice, or remand for consideration, the fact that modern advances have made possible womb to womb transfers to embryos. On the same basis, this court may notice or remand the fact that there are many persons unable to conceive who would welcome such transfers.

[24] McKechnie is the recognized scholar on the Magna Carta. 10 Halsbury's Statutes of England (4th Ed) Constitutional Law, 25 Edw 1 (Magna Carta)(1297), p. 14, Notes, ¶ 2.

Based on the foregoing, Missouri's statutes which do nothing more than to regulate abortions is a legitimate governmental function imposed by international law and the U.S. Constitution. It does not absolutely bar abortions, but does insure that life is not arbitrarily taken.[25]

CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, this court should overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) prospectively, affirm the decision of the Eighth Circuit at 871 F.2d 1071 as to standing, reverse the decision as to the constitutionality of the Missouri Statutes, and remand for further proceedings not inconsistent with this Court's opinion.

Dated: February 12, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES JOSEPH LYNCH, JR.
Attorney at Law
P.O. Box 15766
Sacramento, CA 95852
(916) 448-7871

Attorney for Amicus Curiæ

a

[25] Indeed, arguably Missouri, misled no doubt by Roe, has not gone far enough in the protection of fetal life because it appears not to attempt to regulate pregnancy before the 20th week. But that issue is not now before the court, although under Brown I and Brown II, this Court could, land probably should, consider that issue as well.

EXCERPTS FROM

2 Farrand, Max, The Constitutional Debates*

[129]

COMMITTEE OF DETAIL, I

***

[Proceedings of the Convention, June 19 -- July 23.]

[152]

COMMITTEE OF DETAIL, IV

*****

VI

We the People of (and) the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New. York, New. Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North. Carolina, South. Carolina and Georgia do ordain declare and establish the following Constitution for the Government of ourselves and of our Posterity.

* Pages from Farrand's are indicated at the beginning of the page in [ ]. All punctuation and capitilization is exactly as found in Farrand's which faithfully follows the manucript originals in Madison's book. All footnotes were omitted unless deemed important to the issues under consideration. The most commonly omitted footnote says "Found among the Wilson Papers and in Wilson's handwriting. Portions in parenthese represent parts crossed out. Italics represent later insertions."

1.

*****

[163]

COMMITTEE OF DETAIL, IX

*****

IX

We the People of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, South-Carolina and Georgia do ordain, declare and establish the following Constitution for the Government of ourselves and our Posterity.

1.

*****

[177]

Monday MADISON August 6

MADISON

Monday August 6th. In Convention

<Mr. John Franics Mercer from Maryland took his seat.>

Mr. Rutlidge <delivered in> the Report ofthe Committee of detail as follows: < a printed copy being at the same time furnished to each member.>

We the people of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, South-Carolina and Georgia do ordain, declare, and establish the following Constitution for the Government of Ourselves and our Posterity.

Article I

****

[193]

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1787.

JOURNAL

Tuesday August 7, 1787.

[To refer thereport to a Committee of the whole Ayes -- 5; noes -- 4.

Delaware being represented during the Debate a question was again taken on ye Committee of ye whole Ayes --- 3; noes --- 6.]

On the question to agree to the Preamble to the constitution as reported from the committee to whom were referred the Proceedings of the Convention -- it was passed unan: in the affirmative [Ayes -- 10; noes --- 0.]

*****

MADISON

Teusday August 7th. In Convention

The Report of the Committee <of detail being> taken up,

***

The <preamble> of the Report was agreed to nem. con. So were Art: I & II.

*****

MCHENRY

Augt. 7.

*****

The preamble or caption and the 1. and 2. article passed without debate, ...

*****

COMMITTEE OF STYLE

Proceedings of Convention Referred to the Committee of Style and Arrangement.

We the People of the States of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, South-Carolina and Georgia do ordain, declare and establish the following Constitution for the Government of ourselves and our Posterity.

ARTICLE I.

*****

COMMITTEE OF STYLE

Report of Committee of Style

WE, the People of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

*****

[604]

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1787.

JOURNAL

Thursday September 13, 1787.

****

Resolved that the preceeding Constitution be laid before the United States in Congress assembled,and that it is the opinion of this Convention that it should afterwards be submitted to a Convention of Delegates, chosen in each State by the People thereof, under the recommendation of it's Legislature; for their asent and ratification. ***

*****

[604]

***

[To postpoine thereport respecting the 22nd and 23rd --- 9; noes --- 1.] Ayes

*****

To strike out the word "to" before establish justice --- 8; bites --- 2,] Ayes

[641]

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1787.

JOURNAL

Monday September 17, 1787.

Detail of Ayes and Noes

	The Constitution Unanimously agreed to.	To deliver over the Journal and papers to the President.
	[567]	[568]	[569]
New Hampshire	aye	aye	aye
Massachusetts	aye	aye	aye
Rhode Island	aye	aye	aye
Connecticut	aye	aye	aye
New York	aye	aye	aye
New Jersey	aye	aye	aye
Pennsylvania	aye	aye	aye
Delaware	aye	aye	aye
Maryland	aye	aye	no
Virginia	aye	aye	aye
North Carolina	aye	aye	aye
South Carolina	aye	dd	aye
Georgia	aye	aye	aye

MADISON

Monday Sepr. 17. 1787. In Convention

The engrossed Constitution being read, ...

Docr. Franklin rose with a speech in hand ....

*****

[643]

... --- He then moved that the Constitution be signed ...

[644]

*****

On the question to agree to the Constitution enrolled inorder to be signed. It was agreed to by all the States answering ay.

*****

[649]

MCHENRY

Monday Sepr. 1787.

Read the engrossed Constitution. Altered the representation in the house of representatives.

*****

[651]

THE CONSTITUTION
OF THE UNITED STATES

We, the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

*****

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

In The Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL., APPELLEES

ON APPEAL TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR LARRY JOYCE AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

THOMAS P. JOYCE
Counsel of Record for the Amicus Curiae Larry Joyce

6203 N. Keeler Ave.
Chicago, IL 60646
(312) 282-5398

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Interest of Larry Joyce.....	1
Summary of Argument.....	1
Argument:
I. The Court need not reach Roe v. Wade in order to consider the personhood of prenatal human life within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.	4
II. Prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status from the moment of conception on for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment.	9
Conclusion.....	62

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Abele v. Markle, 351 F.Supp 224 (D.C.Conn. 1972).....	10
Allaire v. St. Luke's Hosp., 184 Ill. 359, 56 N.E. 638 (1900)..16,	21
Buel v. United Railways Co., 248 Mo. 126, 154 S.W. 71 (1913)...	12
Byrn v. New York City Health & Hospitals Corp., 31 N.Y.2d 194, 335 N.Y.S.2d 390, 286 N.E.2d 887 (1972).....	10
Campbell v. U.S., 365 U.S. 85 (1961).....	57
Cheaney v. State, 285 N.E.2d 265 (Ind. 1972).....	10

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)..... 58

Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 139 Cal. 480, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244..... 15

Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651 (1974)..... 7

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. at 309..... 17

Jones v. Mayer, 392 U.S. 409 (1968)..... 44

Keeler v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.3d 619, 87 CalRptr. 481, 470 P.2d 617 (1970)..... 10,12

Lehnhausen v. Lake Shore Auto Parts Co., 410 U.S. 356..... 61

Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968)..... 7, 8, 53, 54

Lilienthal's Tobacco v. U.S., 97 U.S. 237 (1877)..... 57

Magnolia Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. Jordan, 124 Tex. 347, 78 S.W.2d 944..... 14

McGarvey v. Magee-Womens Hospital, 340 F.Supp. 751 (W.D. Pa.1972)..... 9

Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630 (1850)..... 33, 35, 45

Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204 (1879)..... 11, 33, 34

Montana v. Rogers, 278 F.2d 68 (CA7 1960), aff'd sub nom. Montana v. Kennedy, 366 U.S. 308..... 10

Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 154 App.Div. 667, 139 N.Y.Supp. 367 (1913)..... 13

People v. Chavez, 77 C.A.2d 621, 176 P.2d 92 (1947)..... 12

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).... 4, 6, 8, 9, 17, 20, 25 30, 34, 35, 38, 39, 47, 48

Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727 (1972)..... 18, 19

Scott v. McPheeters, 33 C.A. 2d 629, 92 P.2d 678 (1939)... 12, 15, 51

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L.Ed. 394 (1973). 46

Smith v. Brennan, 31 N.J. 353, 157 A.2d 497 (1960)..... 51

State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52 (1849)..... 34, 35, 45

State v. Dickinson, 28 Ohio St.2d 65, 275 N.E.2d 599 (1971)..... 10, 12

State v. Jones, 2 Miss. (1 Walker) 39 (1820)..... 33

State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112 (1858)..... 35, 45

U.S. v. Denver & RGR Co., 191 U.S. (1903)..... 57

U.S. v. Price, 383 U.S. 787. 44

U.S. v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971)..... 8, 10

Walker v. Great Northern Ry. Co. of Ireland, 28 L.R. (Ire.) 69..... 13, 14

Webster v. Fall, 266 U.S. 507 (1925)..... 8

Miscellaneous:

ALR Digests Evidence 93 & 122. 57

29 Am.Jur.2d Evidence sects. 122, 124-126, 130-131..... 57

63A Am.Jur.2d Property sects. 1-3..... 49

Biological Sciences Curriculum Study (BSCS), Biological Science: Molecules To Man (Blue Version) (1963)..... 28

Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed.)..... 49

Blackstone, Commentaries *129-130..... 17

Brown, Biology (2d ed.) (1961). 28

California Medicine (now known as The Western Journal of Medicine), Sept. 1970 at 67..... 29

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089, 2766 (1866)..... 41, 42

3 Cong. Rec. 1794 (1875). 42

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U.Pitt. L.R. 359 (1979)..... 13, 34

Dukeminier and Krier, Property, 5 & 58 (1981)... 49

E. Gardner, History of Biology, (1972).....24, 26, 27, 28

Gorman, A Balancing Act of Life and Death, Time, Feb. 1, 1988 at 49..... 47

Greep and Weiss (eds.), Histology (3d ed.) (1973).. 24

Hafez and Kenemans (eds.), Atlas of Human Reproduction By Scanning Electron Microscopy (1982)..... 24

3 Inst. 50 21

D. Kraemer, Intra- and Intra-Specific Embryo Transfer, Journal of Experimental Zoology, Nov. 1983, vo. 228, at 363..... 58

L. Magner, A History of the Life Sciences, (1979)..... 24, 26, 27, 28

E. Mayr, The Growth of Biological Thought: Diversity,

Evolution, and Inheritance (1982)..... 26

New York Times, Jan 8, 1984, sect. 6, at 42, col. 1..... 58

Note, 21 Ariz.L.Rev. 755 (1979)..... 58

1 P.Wms. 345..... 21

Planned Parenthood pamphlet (1963)..... 28

H. Ratner, Is It a Person or a Thing? (1966)..... 28

C. Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Houston L.Rev. (1973)..... 28

Simpson, Life: An Introduction to Biology, (1957).... 28

R. Taton (ed.), History of Science: Science in the Nineteenth Century (Vol. 3) (1964)..... 26

The Western Journal of Medicine (See California Medicine)..... 29

H. Tiefel, The Cost of Fetal Research: Ethical Considerations, The New England Journal of Medicine, Jan 8, 1976 at 86..... 49

12 Trans. of the Am.Med. Assn. 75-76 (1859)..... 25

von Frisch, Biology (1964).. 28

Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary (1987)..... 49

INTEREST OF LARRY JOYCE

The amicus is a pharmacist and an attorney who wishes to ensure that the issues pertaining to the relationship between personhood in biology and personhood in law are adequately discussed. Most of the research for this brief was done while the amicus was completing six units of independent study on Roe v. Wade while in law school.*

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENTS

The Court need not reach Roe v. Wade before considering the personhood status

---

* Special thanks to Bill Anderson, Ronald E. Harbut, M.D., Dan Joyce, and Rev. Jerry Peyton for their assistance in the preparation of this brief.

Special thanks also to Prof. Roy G. Spece, Jr., College of Law, University of Arizona, and to my classmates in the Law and Medical Technology seminar, Fall Semester, 1984, for their help and constructive comments and criticisms, without which this brief would not have been possible.

of prenatal human life. The basic premise of Roe is that a woman has a constitutional right to terminate her pregnancy. Personhood status for prenatal human life would only affect the de facto applications of Roe; it would not affect the validity of Roe de jure.

Prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. The cases cited in Roe for the contrary conclusion are not precedents for the proposition that prenatal human lives are not persons. Those cases were decided either on the basis that prenatal human lives are not persons in locus standi or on the basis that defendants' rights prevented the application of Tort and Criminal law in most cases.

Scientists of the 1860's thought we would literally change species in our mothers' wombs, starting life perhaps as a fish, then becoming a bird, and then an ape before finally becoming a human being only at the very end of pregnancy. That being the case it is not likely that a court would have been willing to recognize a presumption of personhood that would have brought under the scope of federal law an area that had always been left to the states. But a finding can be made by this Court today that the facts are sufficient to establish the presumption, for a presumption is established or rebutted according to the facts as they are known. And since this is a finding of whether the facts are sufficient to establish the presumption, rather than a finding of fact per se, this Court would not be saying that it is a fact of science---or of any other discipline---that human life begins at conception.

The holding sought by this brief will not alter the role of the judiciary viz a viz the legislature. The fact-finding powers of the legislature will still be needed, and the mere provision of different penalties and liabilities for abortion will not suffice to establish a denial of equal protection or due process. The legislature will be able to treat pregnancies resulting from rape or incest different from other pregnancies. And matters pertaining to birth control methods which work after conception will still be almost entirely legislative questions.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT NEED NOT REACH ROE v. WADE IN ORDER TO CONSIDER THE PERSONHOOD OF PRENATAL HUMAN LIFE WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The basic premise of Roe v. Wade[1]

---

1. 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973).

is that a woman has a constitutional right to terminate her pregnancy. A holding that prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment will not require overruling this basic premise. It would only mean that the states could not allow a woman a right to terminate her pregnancy in a manner which would cause such right to constitute a denial of Due Process and Equal Protection on the part of the state. Granted, in the context of present medical technology, this would place much of Roe temporarily on hold in its applications; for it would probably mean that unless self-defense were applicable, a woman could terminate her pregnancy only after the child became viable, and that the pregnancy could be terminated only in a manner reasonably calculated to produce a live birth (i.e. by induced labor or by Cesarsean section). Nevertheless, artificial gestational technology is on the rise,[2] and the day may be near when the important interests of Roe can be vindicated early in pregnancy without threatening prenatal human life. Thus, though the question of prenatal personhood is central to the de facto application of Roe, it is not central to the validity of Roe de jure.

Granted, this Court said in Roe that the State of Texas could not, by adopting one theory of life, override the right to terminate a pregnancy. But by that point in Roe this Court had already found that prenatal human life would not be afforded personhood status within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.[3] Thus, this Court was not saying that the constitutional status of personhood, if separately established, could not override the interests of the mother; rather, it was only saying that a mere theory of personhood, which it had already found to be of less than the constitutional status of personhood, could not override such interests. Later cases based on Roe assumed this nonpersonhood status.

2. See infra note 45 and text.
3. 410 U.S. at 162.

In considering whether to overrule this nonessential point of Roe, this Court should bear in mind what it has already recognized: stare decisis plays a different role in constitutional law than it does in the common law.[4]

The Court should adhere to the wisdom of an earlier case, Levy v. Louisiana, in which this Court said,

> "We start from the premise that illegitimate children are not 'nonper-

4. See note 14 of Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 671, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 1359, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, 667 (1974).

> sons.' They are humans, live, and have their being. They are clearly 'persons' within the meaning of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." [5]

The Missouri statute itself raises the issue of personhood. In light of the context in which it was enacted, it is evident that this was intended to raise the issue of this Court's holding of the non-personhood of prenatal human life under the Fourteenth Amendment rather than to be merely a finding of state law.

---

5. 391 U.S. 68, 70, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 1510-1511, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, 439 (1968). This Court noted in Roe that a finding of prenatal personhood would seem to overrule an implicit part of its holding in U.S. v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971). See 410 U.S. at 159. But this Court has recognized that prior cases are not precedents for points decided sub silencio. Webster v. Fall, 266 U.S. 507, 511 (1925). Further, Roe overruled a different part of Vuitch: the implicit statement that there is no constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy.

ARGUMENT

II. PRENATAL HUMAN LIFE MUST BE AFFORDED PERSONHOOD STATUS FROM THE MOMENT OF CONCEPTION ON FOR PURPOSES OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

In Roe this Court wondered why it was that, if prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status under the Fourteenth Amendment, no court at or near the time of the adoption of that amendment had extended a full recognition of personhood to prenatal human life either for purposes of its own state law or for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment.[6]

6. 410 U.S. at 157-158. The Court cited a line of cases to support its conclusion that a prenatal life is not a person. The court in McGarvey based its decision on the fear that great confusion in the law could result otherwise, apparently not realizing that being a person is not the same thing as being a person in locus standi. (See infra, notes 8 to 14 and text accompanying

This reading of the history of prenatal personhood was basically correct, though there were some exceptions which this Court apparently was unaware of. But in any event, this question which the Court posed is no mystery at all. First, with respect to common law, the hesitancy of the courts to hold that prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status reflects nothing more than the reluctance of the courts to charge someone with an offense which, prior to the act itself, had not been clearly considered an offense by the law. The courts felt them-and immediately following.) The court in Bryn employed a conclusory analysis. In determining whether a prenatal human life is a person, the court said that such life has the potential to become a full-fledged human being. Thus, the court's conclusion was built into its analysis. The court in Abele made the same incorrect assumption regarding Vuitch as is mentioned in note 5, supra. (Cheaney, as indicated, supported the opposite conclusion.) Montana is inapposite; the issue there was citizenship, not personhood. Keeler is discussed in note 7, infra, as is Dickinson.

---

selves bound by stare decisis with respect to their own law, and by the rules of precedent generally with respect to cases of first impression, where they would look to the law of other states. Thus, the courts recognized their role viz a viz the legislature. A case in point: The Supreme Court of Kentucky said, "The limit of our duty is to determine what the law is, and not to enact or declare it as it should be." The court said further, "...the law should punish abortions and miscarriages, wilfully produced, at any time during the period of gestation." The court also noted the discrepancy between personhood for purposes of civil law and personhood for purposes of criminal law, and said that the prosecutor should address this matter to "the law-making department of the government", and not to the court.[7]

7. Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204,

The appellate court of California would later come to note that the practical effect of the common law's general lack of recognition of the personhood of prenatal human life for purposes of crimes (or torts) against its person was that a presumption which operated in favor of the defendant had arisen in the law to the effect that at the time of the alleged injury, the prenatal life was either dead or would be stillborn.[8] Apparently this presumption was not expressly stated earlier, but the California court's insight does help illustrate the point that in the absence of legislation, the courts

209-210 (1879). See Scott v. McPheeters, 33 C.A.2d 629, 633-637, 92 P.2d 678, 680-682 (1939) and the authorities cited therein; also Buel v. United Railways Co., 248 Mo. 126, 154 S.W. 71 (1913), and Keeler v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.3d 619, 87 Cal.Rptr. 481, 470 P.2d 617 (1970), and State v. Dickinson, 28 Ohio St.2d 65, 275 N.E.2d 599 (1971).

8. People v. Chavez, 77 C.A.2d 621, 626, 176 P.2d 92, 95 (1947). Note: This was a different appellate district from McPheeters, supra note 7.

were not going to take from a defendant a right which he otherwise had in the law.

There were five other reasons for those courts to adhere to stare decisis. First, in claims based on a contractual relationship, there would have been no duty to the prenatal life.[9]

Second, there would have been evidentiary problems. This point, and many others which this Court considered important in Roe, are discussed by Professor Joseph Dellapenna in an excellent law review article.[10] The article is of great help in any comprehensive review of abortion.

With respect to evidentiary problems

9. Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 154 App.Div. 667, 139 N.Y.Supp. 367 (1913). (See also an Irish case, Walker v. Great Northern Ry. Co. of Ireland, 28 L.R. (Ire.) 69.

10. Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt.L.R. 359 (1979).

the Supreme Court of Texas quoted the leading Irish case in this matter, in which the court noted the "boundless sea of speculation in evidence"[11] the court would find if it were to allow recovery for prenatal injuries.

Who could possibly testify as to the exact state of the prenatal life's health one moment prior to the injury to the mother, or one moment after? And with respect to Tort or Contract law, would this not make causation impossible to establish? And if, as a matter of law, causation were impossible to establish, would it come as any surprise that in the law of Torts and Contracts, the courts would recognize no duty to prenatal life, and thus no standing to sue?

The third reason for adhering to stare decisis is that allowing a person to sue for prenatal injuries would upset the Civil Procedure doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel as well as joinder of parties. For if a suit were to be brought on behalf of the child as a separate legal entity, it would be brought by the child's parents, whose claims might already have been settled or adjudicated. This would allow parents to circumvent a defendant's protection in the law against multiple litigation for the same claim. The parties would not be literally the same; but since the claim would be brought by the parents on behalf of the child, they would be effectively the same parties. And there would be a substantial temptation to fraudulently conceal an early pregnancy so as to bring a second claim.[12]

11. See Walker, supra note 9, and Magnolia Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. Jordan, 124 Tex. 347, 78 S.W.2d 944.

12. Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 139 Cal. 480, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244. McPheeters, supra note 7, 33 C.A.2d at 638-640, 92 P.2d 683 and 684.

The fourth reason for adhering to stare decisis is that to do otherwise would have upset Family law. As the Illinois Supreme Court said,

> "If an action can be maintained, it necessarily follows that an infant may maintain an action against its own mother for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the mother while pregnant with it." [13]

The fifth reason is that overly harsh penalties could result in Tort and Criminal law. This would be particularly the case in Criminal law. One defendant who had struck the abdomen of a pregnant woman with one sharp blow that one would never suspect could cause death could face the gallows for killing the person within her; but another defendant who had beaten a nonpregnant woman to within an inch of her life with savage blows all about her body would be convicted only of assault and battery, or attempted homicide at most. The law can produce enough harsh results as it is; the courts, no doubt, would have been unwilling to add one more.[14]

13. Allaire v. St. Luke's Hosp., 184 Ill. 359, 368, 56 N.E. 638, 640 (1900).

Claims pertaining to prenatal injuries presented the courts with vexing problems, for one could easily sympathize with the would-be plaintiffs. But in light of the above principles of law, cases which denied recovery were, for the most part, properly decided. Those courts recognized that the issue before them was not whether a prenatal human life is in fact a person, whether by scientific criteria or otherwise; rather, they recognized that the only issue before them was whether a prenatal human life is a person _in locus standi_.

14. See 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *129-130. (cited in Roe 410 U.S. at 135.) In another context see Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. at 309 (Stewart, J., concurring) (application of the death penalty under the statute in question was cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning was cruel and unusual.)

To hold otherwise would not just have overruled precedent on the limited point of whether a prenatal human life should have standing to sue. It would have wrought havoc in Criminal law and in the law of Contracts, Torts, Evidence, Civil Procedure, and Family Relationships. And since these cases were resolved on issues of standing and defendants' rights under precedent, the courts were precluded from reaching the issue of personhood per se. Thus, the courts effectively deemed the issue to be moot.

In _Sierra Club v. Morton_[15] this Court held that members of the Sierra Club could not bring suit in that case because they were not persons _in locus standi_; are we to conclude, on that basis, that members of the Sierra Club are not persons? Significantly, Sierra Club and Roe were originally brought up at the same time to review the issue of standing and other questions pertaining to jurisdiction; but for the fact that Roe was put over for reargument the next term, they both might have been decided by this Court on the same day. This Court's holding in Sierra Club was in keeping with the aforementioned common law holdings that claims must be limited only to persons with standing to sue; it was not a statement to the effect that those who do not have standing are not persons. (It should be noted, though, that Justice Douglas wrote in an imaginative dissent that one should not even have to be a person-in-fact, much less a person in locus standi, to bring suit. Two other justices, Brennan and Blackmun, also filed dissents.)[16]

15. 405 U.S. 727, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 31 L.Ed. 2d 636 (1972).

16. 405 U.S. at 741, and at 755.

The questions of whether a prenatal human life had standing to sue in civil matters, and whether it was in esse for purposes of crimes against its person in criminal matters, were based on the law's overall view of prenatal human life. But this overall view was not based on just one way of looking at prenatal life; it was based instead on two views of the law which operated separately and independently of each other. One was a presumption which operated in favor of prenatal life. It brought such life within the broad meaning of the word person by enabling such life to sue, through a guardian, in certain instances.[17] This is a right which no animal, born or unborn, had. Thus, prenatal human life was always at least something higher up in the eyes of the law than an animal was.

17. This is discussed in Roe, 410 U.S. at 132-136.

The other view of the law focused on the rights of the defendant, the practical effect of which, as mentioned earlier, was to create a presumption that the prenatal life was dead or would be stillborn. If the prenatal life were born alive and later died as a result of the injuries suffered while still in the womb, the defendant could be prosecuted for murder, for the presumption would have been rebutted by the live birth of the child.[18] Thus, the law's overall view of prenatal human life did not arise by focusing solely on such life; the law's overall view was based on a presumption of personhood for prenatal human life, a recognition of defendants' rights under stare decisis, and questions of standing. The law's overall view did not constitute a statement that a prenatal human life was not a person; far from it, for the overall view included a presumption of personhood. The 18. 3 Inst. 50; 1 P.Wms. 345 (cited in Allaire, supra note 13, 184 Ill. at 371. (Boggs, J., dissenting).

law's overall view constituted a recognition that each person's rights in the law are subject to everyone else's rights in the law and to the principle that one had to be in proper standing to bring suit in order to assert a claim.

When this Court said in Roe that the common law's lack of recognition of the personhood of prenatal human life for all purposes constituted, in effect, a statement by the common law that a prenatal human life is not a person, this Court was reading something into those cases that was not necessary for their holdings. Thus, those cases do not constitute precedents for the proposition that a prenatal human life is not a person. If anything at all can be gathered from those cases, the fact that they would discuss questions of standing and defendants' rights under precedents implies that they recognized a presumption of personhood for prenatal human life; for if a prenatal human life were not a person at all, why would the courts even have bothered to discuss standing and defendants' rights?

A presumption, though not a finding of fact per se, is based upon the facts which give rise to the presumption. A look at the facts of prenatal development as the courts knew them will assist this Court in understanding the relationship between the knowledge of the facts of prenatal development and the presumption of personhood in law which the courts historically recognized.

In 1828 it was proven that prenatal human life is not preformed at conception, as some had thought. In 1839 it was shown that the cell is the basic unit of living things. By 1855 it was shown that the linings of the body cavities, including the reproductive tract, are lined with epithelial cells (i.e. skin tissue) which are continuous with the skin of the outer body surfaces. Thus, prenatal life in the Fallopian tubes (where conception takes place) or in the womb itself can be deemed---in a strictly technical, biological sense---to be outside of the body.[19]

These new developments in biology led the American Medical Association to make a statement in 1859 calling for increased protection for prenatal human life. The AMA denounced the "wide-spread popular" belief that "the foetus is not alive till after the period of quickening." The AMA based its position on the knowledge of the "independent and actual existence of the child before birth, as a living being." Contrary views, they noted, were "...based, and only based, upon mistaken and exploded medical dogmas."[20]

19. E. Gardner, History of Biology, 245, 253-254, 314-319 (1972). L. Magner, A History of the Life Sciences, 203-204 (1979), Greep and Weiss (eds.), Histology (3d ed.) 107-137 (1973), and Hafez and Kenemans (eds.), Atlas of Human Reproduction By Scanning Electron Microscopy 7-11 (1982).

But just after the AMA published its statement, Charles Darwin published his theory of evolution. Biologists were already aware that embyros of different species, including our own, resemble one another at different stages in the womb. Thus, early in development, prenatal human life resembles embryos of fish, birds, and apes before finally appearing distinctly human only at the end of pregnancy.

With Darwin's theory gaining rapid acceptance in the scientific community, Fritz Muller put forth the idea in 1864 that individual development repeats evolution. Another biologist, Ernst Haeckel, became the main champion of this theory, and coined the phrase "Ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny" (i.e. the development of the individual repeats the development of the species). To Darwin, these observations were irrefutable proof that his theory of evolution was true, and he considered embryology to be the most important field of biology at that time. T.H. Huxley, who did more than any other 19th century biologist to champion Darwin's theory, made the statement that in the womb we climb the family tree of our ancestry. This theory was widely popular, and it did not fall into disfavor until the first decade of the 20th century.[21]

20. 12 Trans. of the Am.Med.Assn. 75-76. (This is cited in Roe, 410 U.S. at 141.)

21. Gardner, supra note 19, at 255-256 and 303-304. Also, Magner, supra note 19, at 204-205. R. Taton (ed.), History of Science: Science in the Nineteenth Century (Vol. 3) 462-463 (1964) and E. Mayr, The Growth of Biological Thought: Diversity, Evolution, and Inheritance 474 (1982). (Note: The exact order of supposed ascendancy in the womb still had not been agreed upon when the discovery of the genetic basis of inheritance

In 1879 it was shown that the sperm and egg play equal roles in the development of a new individual, thereby disproving the various theories as to which, if either, dominated. And in the 1880's Louis Pasteur and John Tyndall finally disproved the theory of spontaneous generation. This theory stated that various plants and animals can come forth from inanimate matter without any parents.[22]

And it was not until the year 1900 that the genetic basis on inheritance came to light. In that year Hugo de Vries rediscovered the works of Gregor Mendel, which had gone unnoticed since 1866.[23]

Our genes fix at conception our indi-and species determination was brought to light in the year 1900. See infra notes 23 and 24 and text.)

---

22. Gardner, supra note 19, at 258 and Magner, supra note 19, at 251-253.
23. Magner, supra note 19, at 241.

vidual identity and what species we are a member of. They fix at conception how we shall be identified later in life in court, for it is then that our genes fix what our fingerprints shall be. They also fix at conception our pigmentation---the color of our eyes, skin, and hair---and they fix at conception our gender, as well as all of our other physical characteristics, such as the shape of the nose, ears, and the other basic contours and features of the face.[24]

By 1963 a Planned Parenthood pamphlet would state that an abortion "...kills the life of a baby after it has begun."[25]

24. Magner, supra note 19, at 437-468, Gardner, supra note 19, 399-426, von Frisch, Biology, 416, 442-48 (1964), Simpson, Life: An Introduction to Biology, 292 (1957), Brown, Biology (2d ed.) 237 (1961), Biological Sciences Curriculum Study (BSCS), Biological Science: Molecules To Man (Blue Version) 415-416 (1963).

25. H. Ratner, Is It a Person or a Thing? 20, 22 (1966), cited in Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century,

But by the 1970's protection for prenatal human life was on the decline. And in an editorial in the September of 1970 issue of the official journal of the California Medical Association, an editorial which defended the ethic which abortion is based on, the author of the editorial noted society's

> "...curious avoidance of the scientific fact, which everyone really knows, that human life begins at conception and is continuous whether intra- or extra-uterine until death. The very considerable semantic gymnastics which are required to rationalize abortion as anything but taking a human life would be ludicrous if they were not often put forth under socially impeccable auspices. It is suggested that this schizophrenic sort of subterfuge is necessary because while a new ethic is being accepted the old one has not yet been rejected." [26]

Granted, those trained in medicine

10 Houston L.Rev. 1059, 1071, n. 64 (1973).

26. Editorial, A New Ethic for Medicine And Society, California Medicine (now known as The Western Journal of Medicine), Sept., 1970 at 67.

and biology do not agree on when human life begins when one uses theological or philosophical concepts such as ensoulment or other transcendent criteria to determine personhood. But simultaneously those trained in medicine and biology do not disagree on when human life begins when one uses only objective criteria to determine the beginnings of human life.

In Roe this Court found it significant that those trained in medicine, theology, and philosophy did not agree on when human life begins.[27] But in light of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment, should one person's views of theology and philsophy be afforded sufficient weight to deprive another person of personhood status under the law? Objective criteria do not offend the Establishment Clause.

The significance of the fact that the scientific community itself was aware that it did not yet have the answers to some of the fundamental questions of prenatal development is this: It shows that in holding that prenatal human life must be afforded at least some protection of the law, the courts could not possibly have been trying to resolve the underlying question of biology and medicine as to whether a prenatal human life is in fact a person. There weren't just a few details in biology that had to be cleared up at the time of Blackstone or at the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. Whole concepts in biology had yet to be elucidated; entire pieces of the puzzle were missing.

27. 410 U.S. at 159.

Thus, instead of employing a fact analysis of personhood, the courts and the early commentators were employing a presumption analysis. The presumption that there was life there that the law must protect would arise in response to a recognition of sufficient facts to establish such a presumption.

The presumption was never greater than the facts could establish at any given time, but it was never less than the facts could establish, either. In fact, it must have been relatively easy to establish, for Blackstone noted that some courts deemed it manslaughter to kill a prenatal human life long before any of the basic facts of biology had come to light.[28] And significantly, the acceptance of the idea by the scientific community that we change species in our mothers' wombs did not bring about a reversal of the presumption of personhood already present in the law by case and by statute.

The result which the courts would reach in any given case seems to have depended on the court's reading of the history of the common law and question of whether the court would place more emphasis on the presumption operating in favor of the prenatal human life or the defendant's rights under precedent. In 1820, for instance, the Supreme Court of Mississippi expressed in dictum a preference for the presumption operating in favor of prenatal human life. At issue was whether a slave owner had committed a murder when he killed his own slave. The court held that a slave was a sufficiently "reasonable creature" to be a person protected by the homicide statutes, as would be "a lunatic, an idiot, or an unborn child."[29]

28. See supra note 14.

29. State v. Jones, 2 Miss. (1 Walker) 39 (1820). Accord, Mills, infra in text p. 35 ("By the well-settled and established doctrine of the common law, the civil rights of an infant en ventre sa mere are fully protected at all periods after conception." 13 Pa. at 632); contra, Mitchell, supra note 7 ("...after a patient investigation,

In 1849 the Supreme Court of New Jersey held that an injury to an unborn child is a separate offense from the offense to the mother. State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52 (1849). The court further said that an unborn child is in esse rather than merely in posse for purposes of crimes against its person. The court also said that the protection of the law should extend to the first physical proof of life, which is how that court defined quickening.

One year later the Supreme Court of we are forced to the conclusion that it never was a punishable offense at common law to produce, with the consent of the mother, an abortion prior to the time when the mother became quick with child.") (Mitchell, 78 Ky. at 210. Such a highly polarized split of the authorities implies that the courts rarely had to face the matter one way or the other, for then the rule would have been clear to all. This, in turn, might mean that abortion was not common at this time. See Dellapenna, supra note 10; but see Roe, 410 U.S. at 158. ("...abortion practices were far freer than they are today...").

Pennsylvania employed essentially the same approach and held that under the common law, "...the civil rights of an infant en ventra sa mere are fully protected at all periods after conception...". Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630, 632 (1850).

The holding in Cooper was reaffirmed in 1858. State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112 (1858). The court in Murphy noted that the primary purpose of the abortion statute was to protect the life of the mother. This case was cited for that proposition in Roe. But according to the court in Murphy there was also another offense taking place---that of the mother, in submitting to the abortion, "...against the life of the child." 27 N.J.L. at 114.

With respect to constitutional law, it is not likely that the issue of prenatal personhood could have been properly presented to the courts. Protection for prenatal life was on the increase, not on the decrease. And this would remain so until the second half of this century. Thus, a claim based on a denial of Equal Protection or Due Process would have been difficult to establish. For the mere existence of different penalties and liabilities for abortion would not suffice to establish a denial of Due Process or Equal Protection; this point is discussed later in this brief.[30] And if a denial of Due Process or Equal Protection could not be established, who could have standing to sue to establish personhood within the meaning of those clauses for prenatal life?

Furthermore, even if the issue were properly presented to a court in 1868, we would expect it to have been reluctant to recognize the personhood of prenatal human life under the Fourteenth Amendment without a very great quantum of proof to establish a presumption of personhood, for to recognize the personhood of prenatal life under that amendment would bring an area that had been exclusively a matter of state law under the scope of the amendment. But that great quantum of proof does exist today.

30. See infra notes 47 and 48 and text.

The presumption analysis, rather than a fact analysis, is in keeping with the special competence of the courts to decide questions of law rather than questions of biomedical fact. It is particularly important for the courts to follow this approach with respect to a legal status, such as personhood, for a legal status is ultimately a question of law for the courts. If personhood is simultaneously, in contemplation of law, a question of the actual biomedical fact itself, then the question of what does and what does not constitute a person would best be left to the legislature with its superior fact-finding capabilities.

But if a legal status depends upon whatever finding of fact a legislature chooses to make, then the protection offered by that status would have no meaning, for it could mean anything that the legislature would want it to mean---unless, of course, this Court, in reviewing the findings of fact, were also to make itself an ultimate finder of biomedical fact. This is what this Court seems to have done in Roe. For though the Court did establish a birth requirement, it did consider the question of personhood-in-fact to be an issue that had to be addressed. And, if that "difficult question" could ever be resolved by agreement among the respective disciplines of medicine, theology, and philosophy, and personhood-in-fact established, then a prenatal human life would have to be deemed a person within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.[31]

The question of what life must be afforded personhood status depends, of course, on what life the status of personhood has been affirmatively extended to by the Fourteenth Amendment. Granted, if the scope of personhood was meant to be restricted in nature, then entitlement to the status of personhood would have to be proven by showing that one is a member of a class specifically identified and recognized in the minds of the authors of that amendment. And in close cases, the benefit of the doubt would have to go to not recognizing personhood status.

Even with respect to adults personhood has always been a presumption rather than an analysis of fact. For genetics, the basis of species determination, was unknown until the year 1900. And even if genes had been known in 1868, the technology to analyze the chromosomes for species identification certainly did not exist.

31. 410 U.S. at 159.

What would be the case if an explorer had returned to the United States from a remote jungle in 1868 with a person suffering from gross congenital deformities and tried to sell him on an auction block, claiming that this being was not a person, but only a creature that looked like a person? Or what if the person he wanted to sell were a pygmie, either with or without congenital deformities? A tissue sample could not have been sent to a laboratory to check the chromosomes, which weren't even known to exist yet, for species determination. It being that the factual basis for species determination was not known yet, we must realize that personhood in the eyes of the law has always been based on a presumption.

But if the status of personhood was meant to be broad in scope, and not restricted to any given group or groups of humanity, then entitlement to the status of personhood must be available to all those who can establish that they are within that broad scope of the word person.

The sponsor of the Fourteenth Amendment in the U.S. House of Representatives, John A. Bingham, said that the amendment was "universal" and that it applied to "any human being."[32] His counterpart in the Senate, Jacob Howard, said the amendment applies to "the humblest, the poorest, the most despised." And, as U.S. Sen. Allen A. Thurman of Ohio would say a short time later, in 1875, the Equal Protection Clause

32. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089 (1866).

> "...covers every human being within the jurisdiction of a State. It was intended to shield the foreigner, to shield the wayfarer, to shield the Indian, the Chinaman, every human being within the jurisdiction of a State from any deprivation of an equal protection of the laws."[34]

These are persons who historically had been denied standing solely by reason of their membership in these classes and not by operation of the rules that otherwise pertained to standing. With respect to persons who are prenatal humans, the situation was different. The only reason they did not fall within the complete scope of many of the laws was because of the ordinary operation of the rules of standing, the need for the legislature to initiate any change in the law of Contracts, Torts, Civil Procedure, and Family

33. Id. at 2766.
34. 3 Cong. Rec. 1794 (1875).

Relations, and defendants' rights pertaining to Evidence, causation, and precedent. Thus, historically the law expressed even less hostility to persons who are prenatal humans than it did towards persons who are members of the well-recognized suspect classes. To hold that prenatal human lives are not persons turns the Fourteenth Amendment inside out, for it removes from an entire class of persons the protection which they had formerly enjoyed under the law. A holding that prenatal human lives are persons does not mean that they are entitled to special rules of standing, that defendants' rights must be diminished, or that the legislature may not be the law-making department of government in Contracts, etc. It means only that this Court has recognized the plain and simple status of their personhood, for the facts are sufficient to establish a presumption of their personhood.

What this Court said in the context of another civil rights case---that of how to construe the scope of the Civil Rights Act of 1866---gives guidance here:

> "As we said in a somewhat different setting two Terms ago, 'We think that history leaves no doubt that, if we are to give (the law) the scope that its origins dictate, we must accord it a sweep as broad as its language.' United States v. Price, 383 U.S. 787, 801, 16 L.Ed.2d 267, 276, 86 S.Ct. 1162. 'We are not at liberty to seek ingenious analytical instruments,' ibid., to carve from S 1982 an exception for private conduct---even though its application to such conduct in the present context is without established precedent. And, as the Attorney General of the United States said at the oral argument of this case, 'The fact that the statute lay partially dormant for many years cannot be held to diminish its force today.'"[35]

Significantly, not only would the presumption analysis be consistent with the case and statutory law of the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, it probably would not have required this 35. Jones v. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409, 437 (1968).

Court to strike down any of those statutes or decisions on Fourteenth Amendment grounds, for it is not likely that the factual basis for clearly establishing the presumption would have existed at the time even if biologists did not believe that humans change species in the womb.

Further, in light of Cooper, Mills, and Murphy, the supreme courts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania would no doubt have been surprised to learn that their own states and the others as well had placed a birth requirement for personhood into the Constitution. They certainly never saw any reason to overrule those cases.

Of equal significance, a holding by this Court under the presumption analysis that prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment would not run contrary to what this Court said in the Slaughter-House Cases. This Court expressed therein the opinion that it was unlikely that claims alleging a denial of equal protection would ever be recognized except in cases pertaining to Negroes.[36] At issue in the Slaughter-House Cases was whether a particular form of state action (i.e. the legislation in question) denied a certain class of persons their right to the equal protection of the law. But here, with respect to the Fourteenth Amendment, there is no issue of whether this, that, or some other form of state action denies to any person the equal protection of the law. Rather, here the only issue is whether a prenatal human life is a person within the meaning of that amendment. For the Missouri statute is not being challenged on Equal Protection grounds. If this Court holds that prenatal human life must be afforded personhood status within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, any question as to whether a particular form of state action denied to such persons the equal protection of the laws would be a matter for another claim and another case.

36. 16 Wall. 36, 81, 21 L.Ed. 394, 410 (1873).

This Court's analysis in Roe can produce bizarre results utterly at odds with the purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment. Under Roe the mother may sell the organs of her nine month child within her for transplant operations on children who are already born. But the recipient child could be younger than the donor child if the recipient had been born prematurely. Under Roe the mother can still seek an abortion or let the child be born, leaving it, if she wishes, in an orphanage with no arms, no legs, and only one lung. Is[37] it a sufficient answer to say that even under Roe the state can probably place limits on this type of conduct? I think not. For if we do not recognize the personhood of prenatal human life in law, an entire class of persons is placed at the mercy of society to protect their rights if society should wish to do so. But without the status of personhood, the rights of prenatal persons among us will always be in doubt.

37. Levine, Help From the Unborn, Time, Jan. 12, 1987 at 62. Gorman, A Balancing Act of Life and Death, Time, Feb. 1, 1988 at 49.

The field of fetal research can likewise produce results inconsistent with purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment. This was not an issue in 1868 because the technology to do this did not yet exist. But even Roe itself is not the main reason such research takes place, for it started before Roe. The reason this can take place is a lack of an adjudication of the personhood of prenatal human life. Hans O.

Tiefel, Ph.D., points out that the reason scientists are so eager to experiment on prenatal human life is that the fetus is life and a Homo sapiens. "Fetuses are the last of the unemancipated," he notes.[38] Fortunately, a lack of federal funding has kept such research in this country to a relative minimum so far.

And are there no Thirteenth Amendment rights here? The Thirteenth Amendment does not use the word person, but it does use the word slavery. One of the definitions of the word slavery is the ownership of a human being as chattel property. Under Roe, prenatal human life fits any legal definition of the word property.[39]

38. Tiefel, The Cost of Fetal Research: Ethical Considerations, The New England Journal of Medicine, Jan. 8, 1976 at 86.
39. Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary (1987). Dukeminier and Krier, Property, 5 and 58 (1981). Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed.) ("property" and "property right"). 63A Am.Jur.2d Property sects. 1-3.

Further, the presumption analysis is consistent with the actual choice of the word person itself. The Fourteenth Amendment does not define the word person; it thus takes its meaning, in contemplation of law, from the purpose for which it was chosen and from the body of law that it was taken from: the common law.[40] The meaning of the word person in the common law is, in turn, established by the overall view of the common law towards personhood. And, as we have seen, this included a presumption analysis. As the facts regarding prenatal development came more and more to light, this presumption would become so strong to the appellate court of California that it would eventually go on to say,

40. With respect to the Constitutional references to the word person, such as the census, trying to count prenatal life would have presented obvious problems; and since prenatal life was not counted in any state, no given state would be prejudiced. And with respect to immigration and fugitive slaves, whatever provisions affected the mother affected her prenatal life, anyway.

> "The respondent asserts that the provisions of section 29 of the Civil Code are based on a fiction of law to the effect that an unborn child is a human being separate and distinct from its mother. We think that assumption of our statute is not a fiction, but upon the contrary that it is an established and recognized fact by science and by everyone of understanding." [41]

The reason prenatal human life still did not enjoy all of the protections and benefits of the law wasn't that the presumption wasn't sufficient to establish personhood. Rather, it was that the aforementioned reasons for adhering to stare decisis were still applicable.

In Roe this Court looked at the history of the common law and noted that even though the common law had extended some protection to prenatal human life, and had recognized personhood for such life for certain purposes, the common law had not recognized prenatal human lives as being persons in the sense that post-natal human lives are. This Court thus concluded that a prenatal human life is not a person within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. But this was the wrong approach. It was, in fact, entirely backwards. For the common law, throughout its whole history, gave prenatal human life protection based on a presumption as great as the facts could establish at any given time that there was life there that the law had to recognize and protect. Thus, the whole history of the common law pointed not to a barrier against the protection of prenatal human life, but rather towards increasing protection consistent with such presumption as the facts could establish.

41. See McPheeters, supra note 7, 33 C.A. 2d at 634, 92 P.2d at 681. See also, Smith v. Brennan, 31 N.J. 353, 157 A. 2d 497, 502 (1960).

Significantly, the aforementioned statement of this Court in Levy was this Court's only discussion of the issue of the personhood of illegitimate children.[42] Yet one could easily make the argument that they were not persons "within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment", or persons "in the whole sense", on the basis of the law's past treatment of their standing.

Since the analysis used to determine what is a person is an inherent part of the legal meaning of the word person, the application of the facts to the analysis does not constitute an expansion (or a narrowing) of the scope of the word person.

Furthermore, the presumption analysis

42. See supra note 5.

does not alter the relationship between the judiciary and the legislature. First of all, as stated previously, a presumption is based upon the facts which give rise to the presumption. Under the presumption analysis the courts would have been greatly assisted by the superior fact-finding capabilities of the legislature in the 1800's, when the facts of prenatal development were only just then coming to light. As noted earlier, the statutory law of the mid- to late-1800's was probably, in effect what we would have expected to see in the law if this Court had adopted the presumption analysis in 1868. At the present time there may be little or need for the legislatures' fact-finding capabilities. For how could one reasonably and in good faith find that a prenatal human life is not alive, or not a Homo sapien, or not endowed with an identity separate and distinct from that of the mother? Or, to parallel this Court's words in Levy, quoted above, who could find that prenatal human lives are not human, or not alive, or that they do not have their being?[43]

The closest one could come at the present time to rebutting the presumption would be to point out that identical twins have the same genetic makeup. The phenomenon of identical twins is seen when, after conception, the fertilized ovum goes through a rare division into two separate zygotes instead of a single two-cell structure. Thus, an additional separate life comes into-being, albeit one with identical genetic characteristics of the original life. One might argue on that basis that an individual identity is not established at conception, but afterwards. But the fact that this event can take place and bring about two live births is no more probative of the possibility that an individual identity is established after conception than it is of the possibility that a person with an individual identity can, while still in the unicellular stage of growth, divide into two separate unicellular lives and thereby bring about the creation of a second life. Alternatively, this phenomenon is equally probative of the possibility that when the division which produces twins takes place, the original life ceases to be, and two new lives which were not present before come into being. This would mean that there is more than just one way (i.e. conception) for a new life to come into being. But it would not mean that conception is not also a way that a new life comes into being. In any event, since all of these possibilities are equally likely, the presumption that an individual life comes into being at conception is not rebutted, and the presumption stands.[44]

43. Id.

There is a role for the legislature in this. Later developments in science might establish facts sufficient to rebut the presumption that an individual comes into being at conception. Rational findings of fact on the matter can be of assistance to the courts in determining whether the facts are sufficient to rebut the presumption. The presumption analysis does not preclude forever a later finding as new facts come to light.

And what is the case with respect to human embryo transfer? Live births have already been reported from this technique.

44. See, e.g., Lilienthal's Tobacco v. U.S., 97 U.S. 237, 266-267 (1877), Teamsters v. U.S., 431 U.S. 324, 359 n. 45 (1977), U.S. v. Denver & RGR Co., 191 U.S. 84, 91-92 (1903), Campbell v. U.S., 365 U.S. 85, 96 (1961). 29 Am.Jur.2d Evidence sects. 122, 124-126, 130-131; ALR Digests Evidence 93 and 122.

This involves taking a developing embryo from the womb of one woman, before the placenta is formed, and transfering the embryo to the womb of another woman.[45] Does this constitute a birth---more than mere momentary existence outside of the womb, albeit sustained with artificial aid---so that the prenatal life is a person with respect to the original mother? And if that is so, is this life simultaneously not a person with respect to the surrogate mother?[46]

If today this Court rejects the per-

45. N.Y. Times, Jan 8, 1984, sect. 6, at 42, col 1. See also, Note, Artificial Gestation: New Meaning for the Right to Terminate Pregnancy, 21 Ariz.L.Rev. 755, espec. pp. 758-759 (1979), and D. Kraemer, Intra- and Inter-Specific Embryo Transfer, Journal of Experimental Zoology, Nov. 1983, vol 228, at 363. (discussing possible embryo transfer between species).

46. See Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387, 99 S.Ct. 675, 681, 58 L.Ed. 2d 596, 604 (1979).

sonhood status of prenatal human life, it must face the endless task of being an on-going biomedical review board. The presumption analysis, though, gives the Court one clear, consistent standard to apply today and in the future, and which could have been applied in 1868. But if this Court continues to adhere to the doctrine of the nonpersonhood status of prenatal human life, it must face the task of changing the rules on a piecemeal basis with every new advance in science.

There are also other ways that the presumption analysis would be consistent with this Court's usual relationship with the legislatures and also with the state courts. First of all questions of what state of mind constitues the requisite malice for various crimes---homicide, assault and battery, reckless endangerment, etc.---would still be state law questions.

Questions of what evidence would suffice to prove causation of a crime or a tort would likewise still be state law questions, as would issues of standing. Perhaps the net result of all of this would be a revival---perhaps to a great degree or perhaps to a small degree---of the old common law presumption that a prenatal life was dead at the time of an alleged injury.

Second, in light of this the legislatures might enact separate penalties for abortion to balance the interests of protecting prenatal human life with the right of defendants not to be found guilty of a crime without adequate proof.[47]

47. "The Equal Protection Clause does not mean that a State may not draw lines that treat one class of individuals or entities differently from the others. The test is whether the difference in treatment is an invidious discrimination. Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 666, 86 S.

The holding sought by this brief would also allow the states to treat pregnancies resulting from rape and incest differently from other pregnancies.[48] For the state would be under no obligation to recognize a family relationship in law between the biological mother and the child so conceived. Thus, the child would be a trespasser, and the woman could terminate her pregnancy at the earliest point of viability without being liable under the child neglect statutes.

As a closing note, the holding sought by this brief would probably have little or no effect, as a matter of constitutional law, on birth control methods currently on the market which work after conception. There would be the obvious ev-

---

Ct. 1079, 1081, 16 L.Ed.2d 169." (quoted in Lehnhausen v. Lake Shore Auto Parts Co., 410 U.S. 356, 359, 93 S.Ct. 1001, 1003, 35 L.Ed.2d 351, 354 (1973)

48. Id.

identiary questions of state law, for how could one prove that in a given instance a life had even ever existed, much less been threatened or killed? And there would be a state law question of mens rea where a drug or device was already in place or in use before the woman could know whether she had conceived or not.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be vacated and the case remanded for reconsideration in light of the standard proposed in this brief.

Respectfully submitted.

Thomas P. Joyce

Counsel for the amicus curiae Larry Joyce.

February 23, 1989.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 22 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In The
Supreme Court of the United States
October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF OF RIGHT TO LIFE ADVOCATES, INC. IN SUPPORT OF THE APPELLANTS

RICHARD W. SCHMUDE
P.O. Box 674
Tomball, Texas 77375
(713) 376-0277
Attorney of Record for Amicus Curiae

DALE JEFFERSON
5847 San Felipe, Suite 1250
Houston, Texas 77057
(713) 781-5932
Co-Counsel for Amicus Curiae

RORY R. OLSEN
10370 Richmond, Suite 760
Houston, Texas 77042
(713) 266-9100
Co-Counsel for Amicus Curiae

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO., (800) 225-6964
or call collect (402) 342-2831

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF CONTENTS i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT 1

ARGUMENT:

I. THE LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AT ISSUE COVER SUBJECTS WHICH WERE NOT, BUT SHOULD HAVE BEEN, CONSIDERED ON THE MERITS IN ROE V. WADE AND, HENCE, PRESENT AN OPPORTUNITY FOR THE RECONSIDERATION AND OVERRULE OF THAT DECISION 2

A. Background 2

B. Discussion 4

II. THE COURT SHOULD RECONSIDER AND OVERRULE ROE V. WADE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL REASONS AND, IN THE PROCESS, SHOULD HOLD THAT AN UNBORN CHILD IS A PERSON UNDER THE 14TH AMENDMENT TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION 6

A. The U.S. Constitution Does No Include or Provide Any Fundamental Right of Abortion 6

1. Threshold Problem 7

2. The Right To Life 8

3. The Posture of Abortion 9

B. The Unborn Child Is a Person Under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution 11

1. Eighteenth Century English Common Law 12

a. Natural Person 13

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

b. Rights Posture 15

c. Offenses re Abortion 15

d. Execution Reprieve 17

2. Abortion Not a Liberty When 14th Amendment Adopted 18

3. Failure To Apply Personhood Holdings Under the 14th Amendment 20

4. Human Personhood Under the 14th Amendment Extends Prenatally 22

5. Legal Posture of Unborn Children 23

C. Infringement of Certain Reserved Constitutional Authorities of the States 26

CONCLUSION 30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

I. FEDERAL AND STATE CASES:

Adams v. Weinberger, 521 F. 2d 656 (C.A. 2, 1975) 25-26

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 28

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 7

Brantley v. Boone, 34 S.W. 2d 409 (Tex. Civ. App.—Eastland, 1931, no writ) 24

Chrisfield v. Storr, 36 Md. 129 (Ct. App. Md., 1872) 24

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 28, 29

Dissenting Opinion, O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., and White, J., 462 U.S. at:

pp. 453-461 27

p. 461 28

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 29

Commonwealth v. Kelsea, 157 A. 42 (Superior Ct. of Pa., 1931) 18

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 11, 29

Dissenting Opinion, White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., 410 U.S. at 221-222 (Dissenting Opinion in Doe v. Bolton applicable also to Roe v. Wade) 7

Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) 27

First Nat. Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765 (1978) 20-21

Gay v. Baker, 58 N.C. 344 (S.C.N.C., 1860) 24-25

Glona v. Am. Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co., 391 U.S. 73 (1968) 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Grinder v. The State, 2 Tex. 339 (Tex., Dec. Term, 1847) 19

Gulf, Colo. and Santa Fe R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150 (1887) 9

Hall v. Hancock, 32 Mass. 255 (15 Pick.) (S.J.C. Mass., March Term, 1834) 25

H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 28, 29

In the Matter of Diane Catoe v. Lavine, 378 N.Y.S. 2d 623 (App. Div., 2nd Dept., N.Y., 1976), mot. for lv. to app. den., 386 N.Y.S. 2d 1027 26

Jefferson v. Griffin Spalding Co. Hosp. Authority, 274 S.E. 2d 457 (S.C. Ga., 1981) 25

Labine v. Vincent, 401 U.S. 532 (1971) 26

Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968) 20, 21

Lynch v. H.F.C., 405 U.S. 538 (1972) 23

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 28

Matthews v. Diaz, 426 U.S. 67 (1986) 21

McArthur v. Scott, 113 U.S. 340 (1885) 25

Mills v. The Commonwealth, 13 Pa. St. 630 (S.C. Pa., 1850) 18

People v. Sessions, 26 N.W. 291 (S.C. Mich., 1886) 17

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 29

Planned Parenthood of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 29

Porter v. Lassiter, 87 S.E. 2d 100 (Ga. App., Div. 2, 1955) 24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Presley v. Newport Hosp., 365 A. 2d 748 (S.C.R.I., 1976) 24

Raleigh Fitkin-Paul Morgan Mem. Hosp. v. Anderson, 201 A. 2d 537 (S.C.N.J., 1964), cert. denied, 337 U.S. 985 25

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Dissenting Opinion, Rehnquist, J., 410 U.S. at:

pp. 174-176, including n. 1 10

pp. 174-175 and n. 1 at 175-176 18

pp. 174, 176 19

Dissenting Opinion, White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., 410 U.S. at 221-222 (Dissenting Opinion in Doe v. Bolton applicable also to Roe v. Wade) 7

Santa Clara County v. So. Pac. R. Co., 118 U.S. 394 (1886) 20

Schick v. United States, 195 U.S. 65 (1904) 10

Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97 (1934) 9

State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 544 (S.C.N.C., 1880) 18

Tex. Employers' Ins. Co. v. Shea, 410 F. 2d 56 (C.A.5, 1969) 26

The People v. Jackson, 3 Hill 92 (S.C.N.Y., May Term, 1842) 18

The State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128 (S.C. Ia., 1868) 17

The State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333 (S.C. Ark., 1885) 18

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Dissenting Opinion, White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., 476 U.S. at:

pp. 790-791 9

pp. 791, 793-794 11

pp. 794-795 27

Dissenting Opinion, O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., 476 U.S. at 814 ..... 2, 28

Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891) 18

United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649 (1898) 12

Witty v. American General Cap. Distributors, 727 S.W. 2d 503, n. 2 at 512 (Tex., 1987) (Kilgarlin, J., joined by Hill, C.J., and Ray, J., dissenting) 24

II. English Cases:

Burnet v. Mann, 27 E. Repts. 953 (Ch., 1748) 14-15

Margaret Tinkler's Case (Durham, 1781), I East, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown (Phil., 1806), pp. 230, 354-356 16

Millar v. Turner, 27 E. Repts. 907 (Ch., 1747-1748) 14, 15

R. v. Wodelake (K.B., 1530), referred to in II The Reports of Sir John Spellman (Selden Society, London, 1978), p. 306 16

The Trial of Sarah Baynton et al (Q. B., 1702), XIV Howell, State Trials, p. 598 18

Wallis v. Hodson, 27 E. Repts. 642 (Ch., 1740) 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

III. U.S. Declaration of Independence, Constitution, Texas Annexation Materials and Statutes:

A. U.S. Declaration of Independence (July 4, 1776) 8, 9

B. U.S. Constitution:

Preamble 9

Article III 27

Bill of Rights (1791) 10, 13

5th Amendment 8, 22

9th Amendment 8

10th Amendment 27, 28

14th Amendment ..... passim

C. Texas Annexation Materials:

Annexation Accord (1845) 19

5 U.S. Stats. at Large 797-798 19

9 U.S. Stats. at Large 108 19

D. U.S. Statutes:

Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. 901 et seq. 26

Social Security Act:

Subchapter II, 42 U.S.C. 401 et seq. 25

Subchapter IV, 42 U.S.C. 601 et seq. 26

IV. Republic of Texas Constitution and Statute and Texas Constitution of 1845:

Republic of Texas:

Const. Rep. of Texas, 1836 Art. IV, § 13 19

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Act Punishing Crimes and Misdemeanors, Sec. 54, approved December 21, 1836, 1 Gam., The Laws of Texas 1247, 1255 19

State of Texas:

Tex. Const. of 1845:

Art. Thirteenth, § 3, see § 13 19

Art. Seventh, § 20 19

V. Missouri Statute:

R.S. Mo. § 1.205.1 ..... 3, 5

VI. English Statutes:

12 Ch. II, c. 24, §§ VIII and IX (1660) 25

9 Geo. IV, c. 31, § XIII (1828) 17

Lord Ellenborough's Act, 43 Geo. III, c. 58 (1803) 17

7 Wm. IV and I Vict., c. 85 (1837) 17

VII. Treatises, Textbooks and Writings:

2 Antieau, Modern Constitutional Law (1969), § 15.41, pp. 716-720 ..... 12, 13

Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England:

Vol. I (c. 1765):

pp. 123, 129 14

pp. 129-130 ..... 10, 16

p. 130 15

Vol. IV (c. 1769), p. 198 ..... 10, 16

Vol. V (c. 1770), p. 394 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Boke of justyces of peas (1515 ed.), referred to in II The Reports of Sir John Spellman (Selden Society, London, 1978), p. 306 16

III Chitty, A Practical Treatise of the Criminal Law (Phil. and N.Y., 1832), pp. 799-801 17

III Coke, Institutes of the Laws of England (London, 1644), pp. 50-51 16

Finch, Law, Or a Discourse Thereof; in Four Books (1759), "The Third Book of Law", pp. 185-186 16

Flanagan, The First Nine Months of Life (N.Y., 1962), Preface, p. 9 17

I Hale, The History of the Pleas of the Crown (1st Am. ed., Phil., 1847), p. 432 16

Hawkins, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown (1716), (Curwood, London, 1824):

Vol. I, ch. 13, pp. 94-95 16

Vol. II, p. 657 18

Macpherson, A Treatise on the Laws Relating To Infants (Phil., 1843), Ch. XLII, "INFANT IN VENTRE SA MERE," pp. 353-355 15

Means, "The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth Amendment Right About to Arise from the Nineteenth Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth Century Common Law Liberty?", 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) 16

Noonon, A Private Choice (1979), pp. 62-63 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts (4th ed., 1971), § 55, pp. 335-338 24

II Reports of Sir John Spellman (Selden Society, London) (1978), p. 306 16

Ryan, A Manual of Medical Jurisprudence (Phil., 1832), pp. 127, 128, 131 17

II Swift, A System of Laws of the State of Connecticut (1796), pp. 299, 365 18

II Wharton's Criminal Law (14th ed., by Charles E. Torica, 1979), § 250, p. 415 18

I Wood, An Institute of the Laws of England (1724), p. 11 ..... 13, 16

VIII. Miscellaneous:

Brief of Americans United for Life, Amicus Curiae, in Support of Appellee (in Roe v. Wade):

pp. 4-7 20

pp. 4, 7 20

p. 7 21

Tr. Oral Arg., Roe v. Wade, October 11, 1972, pp. 67-68, by Hoover Reporting Co., Inc. 19

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

Right To Life Advocates, Inc. is a Texas nonprofit membershhip corporation dedicated to the preservation of the sancity of human life from the time of conception to natural death. It is an advocacy organization which has engaged and continues to engage in various activities, including educational, counseling, picketing and litigation.

The instant case, which arose in a state abortion regulatory context, presents this Court with an opportunity to reconsider and overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Right To Life Advocates, Inc. ("Amicus") is interested particularly in such reconsideration and overrule, and in the constitutional recognition and protection of the fundamental natural right to life of unborn children in this Nation.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The 1986 legislative findings of the Missouri statute now before the Court, which are proper and constitutional, address or involve deficiencies in Roe v. Wade, decided in 1973. They present the Court with an opportunity to reconsider and overrule that decision.

Amicus urges the Court to reconsider and overrule Roe for constitutional reasons and, in the process, hold that an unborn child is a person under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Measured by tests enunciated by this Court for the determination of fundamental personal rights, the Constitution does not include or provide any fundamental right of abortion.

In addition, Roe did not consider the unborn child as a separate interest or the nature and reach of the fundamental lift right, as it should have. The unborn child has a separate legal posture when considered in light of the English Common Law, domestic law, this Court's 14th Amendment personhood holdings and implication from postnatal personhood stature. Accordingly, the unborn child is a person under the 14th Amendment, and the life right protected thereby covers such child from conception forward.

Finally, Roe operates to infringe reserved constitutional authorities of the States in the areas of protection of unborn human life and protection of maternal health. The restrictions and limitations imposed by the Court in such regard are arbitrary and unauthorized. The Court's abortion decisions "have already worked a major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 814 (1986) (O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting). They are symptomatic of the problem which is Roe v. Wade.

ARGUMENT

I.

THE LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AT ISSUE COVER SUBJECTS WHICH WERE NOT, BUT SHOULD HAVE BEEN, CONSIDERED ON THE MERITS IN ROE V. WADE AND, HENCE, PRESENT AND OPPORTUNITY FOR THE RECONSIDERATION AND OVERRULE OF THAT DECISION

A. Background

1. Four aspects of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), are here pertinent:

First, the abortion right formulated therein addressed only the interests of the pregnant female and her attending physician, on the one hand, and those of the State, on the other (Id. at 153-154, 162-165). Unborn life in and of itself had no interest or protectable interest against abortion and, instead, was treated only as a subject for discretionary State regulatory or proscriptive action after viability and with certain exceptions thereto (Id. at 159, 162-164, 164-165).

Second, the Court said that it "need not resolve" the question of when (human) life begins (Id. at 159). It noted briefly "the wide divergence of thinking on this most sensitive and difficult question" (Id. at 160).

Third, by positing the State's interest in the unborn as one addressed to "potential human life" (Id. at 159) or "potential life" (Id. at 163) or the "potentiality of human life" (Id. at 162, 164), and by not considering unborn life as an interest in and of itself, the Court, in effect, resolved that life did not begin prenatally.

Fourth, the Court said that it did "not agree that, by adopting one theory of life, Texas may override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake" (Id. at 162). Texas had argued that life began at conception, that life was present throughout pregnancy and that, therefore, it had a "compelling interest in protecting that life from and after conception" (Id. at 159).

2. The Missouri statute before this Court reads, in pertinent part (R.S. Mo. § 1.205.1):

> 1. The general assembly of this state finds that:
>
> (1) The life of each human being begins at conception;
>
> (2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being;
>
> • • •
>
> 2. Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. The District Court determined that the two legislative findings conflicted clearly "with the essence of Roe v. Wade" and, hence, were invalid as a matter of law (Jurisdictional Statement, p. A15). This aspect of the judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeals.

B. Discussion

The legislative findings at issue, made in 1986, involve important matters deficient or not before the Court in Roe v. Wade, decided in 1973. They are proper and constitutional exercises of state legislative authority.

The first finding is a matter of established scientific fact. The second finding is a natural and self-evident truism. Surely it cannot be unconstitutional for the State of Missouri to make findings consonant with scientific fact and reason. Although the findings are not regulatory provisions, they address or involve deficiencies in Roe, and, by so doing, extend to the Court an opportunity to reconsider and overrule that decision.

The first finding resolves the "sensitive and difficult question" of when life begins which, Amicus submits, is central to any meaningful consideration of induced abortion as a right under the Constitution. While the Court did not resolve that question expressly, Amicus submits that it did so impliedly, above, and that such determination was erroneous as a matter of scientific fact.

In addition, the first finding implies that human "personhood" begins at conception since the "life" of each human being begins at that time. A postnatal human being, who is a person without question, originated prenatally, i.e., life for such person began at conception. This is an extremely important subject not considered in Roe's determination that the unborn were not persons under the 14th Amendment. The Court recognized that such personhood would have caused the case against the Texas anti-abortion laws there at issue to collapse (Roe, 410 U.S. at 156-157).

The second finding posits generally certain vital protectible interests of unborn children. Insofar as induced abortion is concerned, such interests are elevated into the equation in a manner not provided by Roe, i.e., as separate and distinct ones inhering in unborn children. In Roe, "potential life" or the "potentiality of life" was protectible only at the instance of the State (Roe, 410 U.S. at 162-163, 164-165).

Finally, the two findings enhance properly Missouri's consideration and treatment of unborn children generally, including in an abortion regulatory context. Such statutory posturing was not before the Court when it passed on the constitutionality of Texas' anti-abortion laws in Roe.

To be sure, R.S. Mo. § 1.205.1, paragraph 2, above, provides that the interpretation and construction of the Missouri laws vis-a-vis rights, privileges and immunities of unborn children are subject, in part, to the U.S. Constitution and the "decisional interpretations thereof" by this Court. This, however, is but statutory recognition of the supremacy of the U.S. Constitution. It does not operate to emasculate the deficiencies in Roe treated by such findings or take away the opportunity for the Court to reconsider and overrule Roe.

II.

THE COURT SHOULD RECONSIDER AND OVERRULE ROE V. WADE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL REASONS AND, IN THE PROCESS, SHOULD HOLD THAT AN UNBORN CHILD IS A PERSON UNDER THE 14TH AMENDMENT TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

Amicus urges the Court to take the opportunity presented by this case to reconsider and overrule Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. 113, for constitutional reasons and, in the process, hold that an unborn child is a person under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Supportive positions are presented below:

A. The U.S. Constitution Does Not Include or Provide Any Fundamental Right of Abortion.

In Roe, the Court pointed out that "[t]he Constitution does not explicitly mention any right of privacy", but that "the Court has recognized that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy, does exist under the Constitution", and that it, or individual Justices, have found the root of such right in various amendments to the U.S. Constitution or in the "penumbras of the Bill of Rights" (Roe, 410 U.S. at 152). The Court said further, in pertinent part (pp. 152-153):

> These decisions make it clear that only personal rights that can be deemed "fundamental" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty," Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325 (1937), are included in this guarantee of personal privacy. They also make it clear that the right has some extension to activities relating to marriage, Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 12 (1967); procreation, Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535, 541-542 (1942); contraception, Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S., at 453-454; id., at 460, 463-465 (White, J., concurring in result); family relationships, Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944); and child rearing and education, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925), Meyer v. Nebraska, supra.
>
> This right of privacy, whether it be founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action, as we feel it is, or, as the District Court determined, in the Ninth Amendment's reservation of rights to the people, is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy.

1. Threshold Problem. The threshold problem with the Court's approach and conclusion is that nowhere does the Court establish—or even attempt to establish—that abortion was a "personal right" which could be deemed "'fundamental,'" or that abortion was "'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.'" Further, since abortion interdicts human life—or at the least, "potential life"—the Court's inquiry should have included life, however labeled, as a competing or affected value under the U.S. Constitution. As shown below, human life is a fundamental right embraced by the U.S. Constitution, and abortion is neither a right, much less a fundamental one, nor a subject "'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.'" In short, the Court's approach and conclusion are flawed substantially as a matter of constitutional law. Cf. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). As Justice White, with whom then Justice Rehnquist joined, said, in dissenting in Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, at 221-222 (1973), with application also to Roe v. Wade (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting):

> • • • I find nothing in the language or history of the Constitution to support the Court's judgment. The Court simply fashions and announces a new constitutional right for pregnant mothers and, with scarcely any reason or authority for its action, invests that > right with sufficient substance to override most existing state abortion statutes. * * * As an exercise of raw judicial power, the Court perhaps has the authority to do what it does today; but in any view its judgment is an improvident and extravagent exercise of the power of judicial review that the Constitution extends to this Court.

2. The Right To Life. On analysis, it is clear that human life is a fundamental U.S. Constitutional value, and that abortion is not. The Constitution, through various Amendments, treats or covers life, not abortion. Under the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments, the United States and the States, respectively, are forbidden to deprive persons of their lives without due process of law. Under the 9th Amendment, the enumeration of rights therein "shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." (Emphasis added.) Hence, any deficiency in the life right of the Due Process Clause of the 5th Amendment would be retained constitutionally by the 9th Amendment.

The life right is, of course, basic, for without it all other rights are meaningless. It is listed first in such Due Process Clauses, over "liberty" and "property." It is a natural right, one that inheres in every human being. As stated in the U.S. Declaration of Independence (July 4, 1776):

> * * * We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed * * *. (Emphasis added.)

The Declaration of Independence is foundational to the Constitution—declaring to the world the independence from Great Britain of the 13 U.S. Colonies and the right to their own self-governance. This Court has declared that "[i]t is always safe to read the letter of the Constitution in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence." Gulf, Colo. and Santa Fe R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150, 160 (1887). (Emphasis added.) Since the unalienable right to life expressed in the Declaration of Independence is endowed at creation—which precedes birth—it seems clear that such right exists prenatally as well as postnatally.

Finally, the analysis, above, is fortified by the fact that the Constitution does not address the subject of abortion or, for that matter, any right in one to destroy the life of another. Yet it is clear that the Constitution was intended "to secure the blessings of liberty" to the people and to their "posterity" (Preamble, U.S. Constitution). A liberty in mothers to abort their offspring is inconsistent with securing the "blessings of liberty" to such posterity.

3. The Posture of Abortion. Fundamental liberties not enumerated in the text of the U.S. Constitution have been defined as "those that are 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history or tradition'" or, more narrowly, "those interests that are 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed'" [Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 790-791 (1986) (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting), and authorities cited]. Due process is violated where a governmental practice or rule "offends some principle of justice so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental." Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105 (1934).

In Roe, the Court did not establish abortion as a fundamental right under either of these tests or, for that matter, under any other recognized constitutional standard. Nor do the Court's decisions in areas of procreation, marriage, contraception, family relationships and child rearing and education, to which the Court adverted, pp. 152-153, support the conclusion that abortion is a fundamental right. Indeed, the Court in Roe pointed out that the pregnant woman "cannot be isolated in her privacy", that she "carries an embryo and, later, a fetus, if one accepts the medical definitions of the developing young in the human uterus [citing a medical dictionary]", and that "[t]he situation therefore is inherently different from marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education, with which Eisenstadt and Griswold, Stanley, Loving, Skinner, and Pierce and Meyer were respectively concerned" (p. 159). (Emphasis added.)

Since abortion (1) was an offense under the English Common Law at the time of the adoption of the U.S. Constitution (1787) and the Bill of Rights (1791)[1] (as well as prior thereto), (2) was a statutory offense under most domestic law at the time of the adoption of the 14th Amendment (1868),[2] (3) was an offense under the laws of all domestic U.S. Jurisdictions at the time of Roe (although some States had liberalized their anti-abortion law to permit abortions under varying circumstances or time periods)[3] and (4) was a controversial subject at the time of Roe,[4] including opposition to abortion by various Christian and other churches as "an evil form of taking of human life",[5] it could hardly be maintained that abortion was rooted deeply in the history and tradition of the United States or that it was included impliedly in the ordered liberty concept so that if sacrificed or eliminated neither liberty nor justice could exist. See Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 791, 793-794 (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting). In short, the Court's denomination of abortion as a fundamental right under the Constitution was but the ipse dixit of seven Justices and imposed upon the Nation in contravention of duly enacted laws. Amicus submits respectfully that the Court's arbitrary exercise of power in such regard has no place in the constitutional law or life of this Nation.

[1] See, e.g., I Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, pp. 129-130 (c. 1765); IV Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, p. 198 (c. 1769). "Blackstone's Commentaries are accepted as the most satisfactory exposition of the common law of England." Schick v. United States, 195 U.S. 65, 69 (1904).

[2] See Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 174-176, including n. 1 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). In 1868, there were 37 States of the United States and various organized territories.

B. The Unborn Child Is a Person Under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

In Roe, the Court acknowledged that if the personhood of the "fetus" was established under the language and meaning of the 14th Amendment, as the appellee and certain amici argued, "the appellant's case, of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the Amendment" (Roe, 410 U.S. at 156-157). The Court reviewed those places in the Constitution where "person" is used and concluded that "in nearly all these instances, the use of the word is such that it has application only postnatally", and that "[n]one indicates, with any assurance, that it has any possible pre-natal application" (Id. at 157) (Footnote omitted.). The Court concluded (Id. at 158) (Footnote omitted.):

[3] See Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 118, including n. 2, and 140; Doe v. Bolton, supra, 410 U.S. at 182.

[4] See Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 116.

[5] Noonan, A Private Choice (1979), pp. 62-63.

> All this, together with our observation, supra, that throughout the major portion of the 19th century prevailing legal abortion practices were far freer than they are today, persuades us that the word "person," as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not include the unborn.

This conclusion and the methodology employed by the Court to reach the same are erroneous since the Court (1) did not examine fully the subject in light of Eighteenth Century English Common Law, (2) did not take into account the fact that when the 14th Amendment was adopted induced abortion was at least a statutory offense in most domestic U.S. jurisdictions, (3) did not consider its prior 14th Amendment personhood holdings, (4) failed to take into account the fact that postnatal human personhood originates prenatally, thereby implying commencement of personhood at the prenatal stage of development, and (5) did not consider fully the substantial legal recognition and rights posture of an unborn child in substantial areas of domestic law. These areas are discussed briefly below.

1. Eighteenth Century English Common Law. This Court declared that the Constitution "must be interpreted in light of the common law, the principles and history of which were familiarly known to the framers of the Constitution", and that "[t]he language of the Constitution • • • could not be understood without reference to the common law." United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 654 (1898). (Emphasis added.) See 2 Antieau, Modern Constitutional Law (1969) § 15.41, pp. 716-717.

The Court has interpreted various provisions of the Constitution in light of the common law or history. 2 Antieau, op. cit., § 15.41, pp. 717-720. Amicus submits that this principle applies to interpretation of "person" under the 14th Amendment since the same term was used by the framers in 1787 and those who drafted the Bill of Rights in 1791, and that the Court in Roe should have considered the full posture of an unborn child under Eighteenth Century English Common Law in 1787 and 1791 in its interpretation of 14th Amendment personhood vis-a-vis the unborn.

Under such Common Law, it is clear that (1) an unborn child was recognized as a natural person, (2) various legal rights and interests inhered or were recognized in such child, (3) it was unlawful to destroy a living unborn child by abortion, i.e., where the mother was "quick with child", and (4) a condemned woman who was "quick with child" was entitled to a reprieve from execution until after she gave birth to such child. These recognitions of the separate personal character of an unborn child are discussed briefly below.

a. Natural Person. In 1724, Thomas Wood wrote that "Persons are to be considered in their Natural and in their Relative or Civil Capacities"; that "[a] Person in its Natural Capacity is every Man or Woman: In Which Capacity the Law takes Notice of its Life, Sex, Health, Liberty, Good Name or Reputation"; and that "Life begins when an Infant stirreth in the Womb • • •." I Wood, An Institute of the Laws of England (1724), p. 11. (Emphasis added.)

Later, William Blackstone said that "persons" were "divided by the law into either natural persons or artificial"; that "[n]atural persons are such as the God of na- ture formed us"; that the "rights of persons considered in their natural capacities are • • • of two sorts, absolute, and relative"; and that there were three absolute rights—"personal security", "personal Liberty" and "private property." I Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (c. 1765), pp. 123, 129. As for the right of personal security, he wrote, in pertinent part (Id., pp. 129-130):

> I. THE right of personal security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation.
>
> 1. LIFE is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual; and it begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb. For if a woman is quick with child, and by a potion or otherwise, killeth it in her womb; or if any one beat her, whereby the child dieth in her body, and, she is delivered of a dead child; this, though not murder, was by the antient (sic) law homicide or manslaughter. But the modern law doth not look upon this offense in quite so atrocious a light, but merely as a heinous misdemeanor. (Emphasis added.)

The personhood or legal status of an unborn child was recognized in English case law. Thus, Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in holding that a posthumous child could inherit a share of the personal estate of her deceased brother, pointed out that the "principal reason" on which he based his opinion was that "the posthumous Sister was in ventre sa mere at the Time of the Death of her Brother, and consequently was a Person in rerum Natura." Wallis v. Hosdon, 27 E. Repts. 642 (Ch., 1740). (Emphasis added.) See Millar v. Turner, 27 E. Repts. 907, 908 (Ch., 1747-1748) (unborn child as "living" at the death of the child's father within the meaning of marriage articles for children) (Chancellor Hardwicke); Burnet v. Mann, 27 E. Repts.

953, 954 (Ch., 1748) (unborn children, per the "general rule", "are considered in esse for their benefit, not for their prejudice") (Chancellor Hardwicke).

b. Rights Posture. By the Eighteenth Century, the English Common Law recognized various property and other rights, vested and contingent, in unborn children. See, e.g., Macpherson, A Treatise on the Law Relating To Infants (Phil., 1843), Ch. XLII, "INFANT IN VENTRE SA MERE," pp. 353-355.

In Millar v. Turner, supra, 27 E. Repts. at 908, Chancelor Hardwicke described the rights posture of an unborn child in these terms:

> • • • A bill has been brought in favour of such infant to stay waste, and an injunction granted (3 Inst. 50): the destruction of him is murder; which shews the laws considers such infant as a living creature: in all cases relating to his advantage he must be considered as in esse, according to the rule of the civil law: so on the statute of distribution he shall be considered as living; the intention being to provide for all the children; and if that be so, the same reasoning will hold in a marriage-settlement where the intention was to provide for all the children of the marriage. (Emphasis in original.)

Blackstone addressed the subject as follows (I Blackstone, op. cit., at 130):

> An infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law to be born for many purposes. It is capable of having a legacy, or a surrender of a copyhold estate made to it. It may have a guardian assigned to it; and it is enabled to have an estate limited to its use, and to take afterwards by such limitation, as if it were then actually born. And in this point the civil law agrees with ours. (Footnotes omitted.)

c. Offenses re Abortion. By the Eighteenth Century, the English Common Law, as presented by authorities in that period, recognized three offenses dealing with abortion:[6]

- murder, if the woman died as a result of an abortion [Margaret Tinkler's Case (Durham, 1781), in I East, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown (Phil., 1806), pp. 230, 354-356];
- murder, if the child was born alive and died later as a result of a potion [I Wood, op. cit., p. 11; I Hawkins, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown (1716) (Curwood, London, 1824), ch. 13, pp. 94-95; IV Blackstone, op. cit., p. 198];[7]
- great misprison, heinous misdemeanor, etc. if a live unborn child, i.e., where the mother was "quick with child" or "big with child," died or was killed (in the womb) as a result of a potion, etc. [I Hawkins, op. cit., ch. 13, pp. 94-95; I Blackstone, op. cit., pp. 129-130; IV Blackstone, op. cit., p. 198; see Finch, Law, Or a Discourse thereof; in Four Books (1759), "The Third Book of Law," pp. 185-186; I Wood, op. cit., p. 11]

---

[6] Contrast central conclusions in Means, "The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise From the Nineteenth Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth Century Common Law Liberty?", 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971), including his criticism of Edward Coke [III Coke, Institutes on the Laws of England (London, 1644), pp. 50-51], with that part of Boke of justyces of peas (1515 ed.), referred to in the subsequently published II The Reports of Sir John Spellman (Selden Society, London) (1978), p. 306, containing an indictment charging, inter alia, the felonious slaying of an unborn child, and R. Wodelake (K.B., 1530), referred to in said Report, p. 306, involving an indictment for murder of an unborn child. Amicus has the texts of these indictments and translations. In Wodelake the indictment alleged, in part, that Wodelake (in 1526) tricked a certain pregnant girl into taking a drink meant to destroy her child and that this resulted in her being delivered of a dead child. [Wodelake was also charged with having raped her about 18 months earlier (in 1525).]

[7] Hawkins acknowledged that there were "opinions to the contrary" (I Hawkins, op. cit., p. 95) (Note omitted.). See Blackstone, op. cit., p. 198. For a contrary opinion, see I Hale, The History of the Pleas of the Crown (1st Am. ed., Phil., 1847), p. 432.

Abortion remained an offense at Common Law up to the enactment of Lord Ellenborough's Act, 43 Geo. III, c. 58 (1803), when abortion was first made a statutory offense in England. See III Chitty, A Practical Treatise of the Criminal Law (Phil. and N.Y., 1832), pp. 799-801.

The fact that the English Common Law in question did not understand the beginning of human life is of no particular moment. The concept of human fertilization was not understood until after the discovery, in 1827, of the mammalian ovum.[8] Flanagan, The First Nine Months of Life (N.Y., 1962), Preface, p. 9. Under the Common Law, life was "sacred" and "inalienable." People v. Sessions, 26 N.W. 291, 293 (S.C. Mich., 1886); see The State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128, 135-136 (S.C. Ia., 1868). In short, at the time of the adoption of the U.S. Constitution, the Common Law provided protection against abortion based on the understanding of when life began.[9]

d. Execution Reprieve. Finally, a live unborn child was recognized and protected against death by the execution reprieve rule. Under this rule, a condemned woman who was "quick with child" was given a reprieve from execution until after she gave birth to her child. The Trial of Sarah Baynton et al (Q.B., 1702), in XIV Howell, State Trials, p. 598; II Hawkins, op. cit., p. 657; see Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 253 (1891). However, if after giving birth, the woman became pregnant again, she would not be entitled to a second reprieve and "may now be executed before the child is quick in the womb • • •." V Blackstone, op. cit. (c. 1770), p. 394. (Emphasis added.)

---

[8] Not long after this discovery, a medical/legal work mentioned the human ovum in connection with a discussion of the human embryonic period and said that "the foetus is alive from the moment of conception", and that "abortion is the destruction of a human being * * *." Ryan, A Manual of Medical Jurisprudence (Phil., 1832), pp. 127, 128, 131.

[9] It is interesting to note that, in but ten years after the discovery of the mammalian ovum, the English anti-abortion law of 1828, which punished abortion more severely when the woman was "quick with child" [9 Geo. IV, c. 31, § XIII (1828)], was replaced with a statutory provision which made abortion a felony without regard to whether the woman was "quick with child" [7 Wm. IV and I Vict., c. 85 (1837)].

2. Abortion Not a Liberty When 14th Amendment Adopted. In Roe, the Court failed to take into account the fact that, when the 14th Amendment was adopted in 1868, abortion was not a liberty, much less a "fundamental" one, for purposes of constitutional inclusion and protection therein. As Justice Rehnquist pointed out, in dissenting in Roe, "[b]y the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868, there were at least 36 laws enacted by state or territorial legislatures limiting abortion" (Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 174-175 and n. 1 at 175-176, Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

This, coupled with the fact that "• • • in the early years of our country's existence the English common law of abortion was in force in virtually every state • • •"[10], [10] II Wharton's Criminal Law (14th ed., by Charles E. Torcia, 1979), § 250, p. 415. See II Swift, A System of Laws of The State of Connecticut (1796), pp. 299, 365; Mills v. The Commonwealth, 13 Pa. St. 630, 632-633 (S.C. Pa., 1850) (applying the crime "[t]he moment the womb is instinct with embryo life, and gestation has begun • • •", p. 632); State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 544, 545-546 (S.C. N.C., 1880) (holding that the criminal act "may be committed at any stage of pregnancy", p. 545). The common law offense was applied by some states after enactment of their anti-abortion statutes. The People v. Jackson, 3 Hill 92, 93 (S.C.N.Y., May Term, 1842); Commonwealth v. Kelsea, 157 A. 42 (Superior Ct. of Pa., 1931); The State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333, 334-335 (S.C. Ark., 1885).

showed that there was no liberty to abort a live unborn child, much less one which was rooted deeply in the social fabric of the people.[11] As Justice Rehnquist stated, in pertinent part (id. at 174, 176, Rehnquist, J., dissenting):

> The fact that a majority of the States reflecting, after all, the majority sentiment in those States, have had restrictions on abortions for at least a century is a strong indication, it seems to me, that the asserted right to an abortion is not "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental," Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105 (1934).
>
> • • •
>
> To reach its result, the Court necessarily has had to find within the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment

[11] During the second oral argument in Roe, Counsel for Henry Wade indicated erroneously that prior to 1854, when Texas first legislated on the subject of abortion, abortion was legal in the State (Tr. Oral Arg., Roe v. Wade, October 11, 1972, pp. 67-68 by Hoover Reporting Co., Inc.). Abortion was not legal in Texas prior to 1854. The Republic of Texas adopted the English Common Law as the "rule of decision" for application "in all criminal cases" (Const. Rep. of Tex., 1836, Art. IV, § 13) and, by statute in 1836, provided that "all offenses known to the common law of England," as then understood and practiced, which were not provided for in such statute (and abortion was not provided for therein), were to be "punished in the same manner as known to the said common law" (Act Punishing Crimes and Misdemeanors, Sec. 54, approved December 21, 1836, 1 Gam. The Laws of Texas 1247, 1255. The common law proscription against abortion formed part of the laws of the Republic of Texas which were carried forward into the laws of the State of Texas by the 1845 Annexation Accord between the Republic and the United States (Tex. Const. of 1845, Art. Thirteenth, § 3, see § 13; see id., Art. Seventh, § 20; 5 U.S. Stats. at Large, 797-798; 9 U.S. Stats. at Large 108). After statehood, the Supreme Court of Texas declared that "[t]he common law in criminal cases, not provided for by legislative enactment, was introduced by the constitution of the republic, and is still the law." Grinder v. The State, 2 Tex. 339, 340 (Tex., Dec. Term, 1847). (Emphasis added.)

a right that was apparently completely unknown to the drafters of the Amendment.

• • •

There apparently was no question concerning the validity of this provision [Texas' anti-abortion statutory enactment of 1857] or of any of the other state statutes when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. The only conclusion possible from this history is that the drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to this matter.

Moreover, the language of the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment is broad in reach. Nowhere does it even suggest that unborn life is not protected thereby, or that one has a liberty to destroy such life which a State may not infringe without due process of law.

3. Failure To Apply Personhood Holdings Under the 14th Amendment. While Amicus recognizes that 14th Amendment personhood for the unborn was urged in Roe [e.g., Brief of Americans United for Life, Amicus Curiae, in Support of Appellee, pp. 4-7, arguing personhood under the Equal Protection Clause of said Amendment, with Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968), as the centerpiece ("AUL Brief")], it submits that the Court failed to apply its own personhood holdings under that Amendment, and that, had it done so, the unborn would have been held to be persons thereunder. See id. at pp. 4, 7 (Equal Protection Clause).

Except for Roe, the Court has given a broad and healthy application to the term "person" under the 14th Amendment. Thus, the Court has held or declared that the term includes a corporation [Santa Clara County v. So. Pac. R. Co., 118 U.S. 394 (1886); First Nat. Bank of Boston

v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, n. 15 at 780 (1978)]; an alien, even "one whose presence in this country is unlawful, involuntary, or transitory • • •" [Matthews v. Diaz, 426 U.S. 67, 77 1986)]; and to illegitimate children (Levy v. Louisiana, supra, 391 U.S. at 70). In Levy, the Court declared that it started from the premise that illegitimate children were not "'nonpersons'", that they were "humans, live, and have their being", and they were "clearly 'persons' within the meaning of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (Emphasis added.) In Glona v. Am. Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co., 391 U.S. 73, 75-76 (1968), the Court indicated that the Levy test of personhood was one of "biological relationship." (Emphasis added.)

In Roe, the Court did not apply the human personhood standard formulated in Levy, nor did it explain how a corporation, which is an artificial entity not mentioned in the Constitution, could be considered a person for 14th Amendment purposes when an actual, developing human being, recognized in the law and possessive of legal rights, is not. Indeed, the Court's nonpersonhood holding in Roe cannot be squared with its constitutionally interpretive decisions in such regard, resulting in a crazy-quilt interpretation of the word person under the Amendment, not to mention an outright retreat from its broad interpretation of the Amendment's coverage.

An unborn child meets clearly the three-part test of human personhood of Levy and, therefore, is within the protective reach of the 14th Amendment. See AUL Brief, p. 7. The unborn child is alive since it results from the joinder of two live cells and thereafter grows and exhibits other manifestations of life. The unborn child has its own being or entityship since, while within and dependant upon the mother, the child has an existence and being separate from that of the mother. The unborn child is human because the offspring of human parents and possessive of the human genetic code from the beginning. The child has a biologic relationship with his or her parents.

Moreover, the Court's nonpersonhood holding for the unborn under the 14th Amendment, above, is unconstitutional since it discriminates invidiously against the unborn as compared to corporate entities, in violation of the due process clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution. Simply put, an unborn child, as an actual living being, with legal rights and recognitions aplenty, should not have been deprived of personhood status under the Amendment when the Court has recognized or accorded such status to artificial corporate beings not even mentioned in the Constitution. This is extremely important since, as the Court recognized, establishment of 14th Amendment personhood for the unborn would cause appellee's case in Roe to collapse (Roe, 410 U.S. at 156-157).

4. Human Personhood Under the 14th Amendment Extends Prenatally. By excluding the unborn from 14th Amendment personhood, the Court in Roe eliminated the well understood prenatal part of the life right and, in effect, recognized the personhood of an individual human as commencing at birth. This approach contravened the implied rights concept that the Court articulated in developing the constitutional right of privacy, including the abortion aspect; and distorted not only the well recognized nature of the life right—human life being a continuum which commences at a beginning (conception) and terminates at an end (death)—but the nature of human personhood under the Amendment.

As shown above, a human person under the 14th Amendment means a live human being. A deceased person has no such constitutional status because he or she no longer possesses life or any other constitutional or worldly right upon which the Amendment could operate for him or her. Constitutional personhood for a postnatal person extends, by implication, prenatally since such person is the same individual or entity that he or she was prenatally, only at a different developmental stage. It is a truism that the unalienable right to life of human beings begins not at birth but at the beginning. Accordingly, the Court's nonpersonhood holding in Roe fails to apply the very implied rights test to the meaning of person—implying from the generic term—which it applied to the meaning of liberty under the 14th Amendment as encompassing an abortion right.

Moreover, any doubt on this score should have been resolved in favor of personhood for the unborn since life is a fundamental right and protected specifically by the 14th Amendment; abortion, which is not even mentioned in the Constitution, destroys such right; and the Amendment was intended to have a broad and healthy reach, one which the Court, except for Roe, has recognized and applied. Further, nowhere does the Constitution provide or recognize in anyone the right to destroy human life.

5. Legal Posture of Unborn Children. Unborn children are recognized legally and have substantial rights, vested and contingent, in Texas and other States. Certain federal statutes have a similar operation. Since rights cannot and do not exist in vacuo, legal statuses stem therefrom. As this Court put it in Lynch v. H.F.C., 405 U.S. 538, 552 (1972), "Property does not have rights. People have rights.'' (Emphasis added.) Full appraisal of the legal posture of unborn children should have been made by the Court in considering the issue of personhood, including trends favorable to unborn children in tort law. See the broad brush treatment of this subject in Roe at 161-162—after the Court had established the right of abortion.

Numerous matters in this regard were—and continue to be—of great significance. For example, under the prenatal tort injury doctrine recognized in all States, a duty of care is recognized as owing to the unborn child. See Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts (4th ed., 1971), § 55, pp. 335-338. In a majority of States, an unborn child who has reached the viability stage and who is killed or stillborn is considered a person, etc., under their wrongful death statutes, and, in Georgia and Rhode Island, the prenatal stage is earlier, at quickening and conception, respectively. See Witty v. American General Cap. Distributors, 727 S.W. 2d 503, n. 2 at 512 (Tex., 1987) (Kilgarlin, J., joined by Hill, C.J., and Ray, J., dissenting); Porter v. Lassiter, 87 S.E. 2d 100, 103 (Ga. App., Div. 2, 1955); Presley v. Newport Hosp., 365 A. 2d 748, 754 (S.C.R.I., 1976). While Texas is in the minority in such regard, yet an unborn child was represented by his mother and took a share of a wrongful death award on the death of his father in Brantley v. Boone, 34 S.W. 2d 409, 411 (Tex. Civ. App.—Eastland, 1931, no writ). The child was born after entry of the judgment.

In other areas, a remainder interest in property may vest in an unborn child [Chrisfield v. Storr, 36 Md. 129, 145-146 (Ct. App. Md., 1872)], and an unborn child can take a vested interest in a trust [Gay v. Baker, 58 N.C.

344, 345, 346 (S.C.N.C., 1860)]. While the perfection of many property rights requires live birth, the law still recognizes the posture of an unborn child and makes allowance for such perfection as posthumous children, etc. See, e.g., Hall v. Hancock, 32 Mass. 255, 257-258 (15 Pick.) (S.J.C. Mass., March Term, 1834). This Court has recognized the matter similarly. See McArthur v. Scott, 113 U.S. 340, 391-392, 404 (1885), where the Court recognized that unborn children (not even in existence at the time) were entitled to be represented in judicial proceedings which affected them and, if not represented, a decree thus entered did not conclude their rights.[12]

An unborn child is entitled to a blood transfusion or to have the mother undergo a needed caesarian section procedure, notwithstanding the mother's objections for religious or other reasons, and is entitled to be represented in judicial proceedings on such subjects. Raleigh Fitkin-Paul Morgan Memorial Hosp. v. Anderson, 201 A. 2d 537, 538 (S.C.N.J., 1964), cert. denied, 337 U.S. 985; Jefferson v. Griffin Spalding Co. Hosp. Authority, 274 S.E. 2d 457, 459, 460 (S.C. Ga., 1981). Thus, the life right outweighed the mother's religious or other rights or interests.

An unborn child is recognized in relation to insurance benefits under the Social Security Act, Subchapter II, 42 U.S.C. 401 et seq. [Adams v. Weinberger, 521 F. 2d 656,

---

[12] By statute in England, a father was authorized to appoint, by deed or will, a guardian for his minor child, including his unborn child, and such guardian (testamentary guardian) was authorized to take custody of the profits of all lands, etc. of such child, for the use of such child, and "may bring such Action or Actions in relation thereunto, as by Law a Guardian in common Socage might do." 12 Ch. II, c. 24, §§ VIII and IX (1660).

660-661 (C.A. 2, 1975)]; to ADC benefits under Subchapter IV of that Act, 42 U.S.C. 601 et seq. [In the Matter of Diane Catoe v. Lavine, 378 N.Y.S. 2d 623, 626 (App. Div., 2nd Dept., N.Y., 1976), mot. for lv. to app. den., 386 N.Y.S. 2d 1027]; and to compensation benefits under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. 901 et seq. [Tex. Employers' Ins. Co. v. Shea, 410 F. 2d 56, 61, 62 (C.A. 5, 1969)].

C. Infringement of Certain Reserved Constitutional Authorities of the States.

There should be no question but that the States possess reserved authorities over such domestic matters as marriage, divorce and children, together with related subjects of health, education and safety. The "power to make rules to establish, protect and strengthen family life, as well as to regulate the disposition of property" at death "is committed by the Constitution of the United States and the people of * * * [the affected State] to the legislature of that State." Labine v. Vincent, 401 U.S. 532, 538 (1971). Prior to Roe, the States were relatively free of federal judicial control in such areas, including the protection of unborn life through anti-abortion laws.

Under Roe, the Court not only placed severe restrictions on the rights and authorities of the States to protect unborn life, but placed limitations on their rights and authorities to protect maternal health. These restrictions have adverse ancillary effects as well. For example, a pregnant woman whose husband has died not only could profit personally under his will if she underwent an abortion, but could frustrate his intention therein to provide for his child (who would have been born posthumously).

Since, as shown on pp. 6-11, above, there is no abortion privacy right in the Constitution, Roe stands as judicial infringement of such reserved rights and authorities, in derogation of the division of powers concept recognized in the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. See, in related vein, Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 77-80 (1938). Further, since an unborn child is a person within the reach of the 14th Amendment, pp. 11-26, above, Roe constitutes a class-based intrusion upon and denial of State responsibility to the unborn under said Amendment, in violation of said Amendment and of the Court's authority under Article III of the Constitution.

Moreover, the restrictions and limitations on such rights and authorities, above, represent arbitrary or unrealistic lines drawn by the Court. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 453-461 (1983) (O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., and White, J., dissenting); Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 794-795 (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting). As Justice White put it, in describing, in part, the State's interest in the "fetus" (id. at 795):

> The governmental interest at issue is in protecting those who will be citizens if their lives are not ended in the womb. The substantiality of this interest is in no way dependent on the probability that the fetus may be capable of surviving outside the womb at any given point in its development * * *. The State's interest is in the fetus as an entity in itself, and the character of this entity does not change at the point of viability under conventional medical wisdom.

Justice O'Connor said that the State's interests in protecting "potential human life" and maternal health were compelling ones "throughout pregnancy" (Akron, 462 U.S. at 461, O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J. and White, J., dissenting). The arbitrary—and unauthorized—lines which the Court prescribed in Roe on these important State interests are also violative of the division of powers concept recognized in the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Finally, "[t]he Court's abortion decisions have already worked a major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence" (Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814, O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting). This has manifested itself in decisions which appear to ignore principles or conclusions announced in prior decisions and in decisions where the Court looks and acts like a super medical, hospital and "know best" regulatory agency on the effectuation of abortion.[13] These decisions are symptomatic of the problem which is Roe v. Wade.

---

[13] For example, while the Court has recognized that "[t]he medical, emotional, and psychological consequences of an abortion are serious and can be lasting * * * particularly so when the patient is immature" [H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 411 (1981)], it is unconstitutional for a State to require a 24-hour waiting period for an abortion (Akron, 462 U.S. at 450-451) where the patient might have time to reflect on the subject, to consult with others and/or to consider alternatives to abortion. Further, while the State has a strong and legitimate interest in encouraging childbirth or normal childbirth [Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 445-446 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 478 (1977)], it becomes unconstitutional for it to furnish information to a pregnant woman contemplating abortion which is capable of furthering that interest (Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 760). On related subjects, the Court has extended broad license in the determination of maternal "health" [Doe, 410 U.S. at 192]; has opined on the concept of viability [Roe, 410 U.S. at 160, 163; Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64-65 (1976);

(Continued on following page)

Roe and much of its progeny have interposed improperly the Constitution in such domestic areas or concerns as the protection of unborn human life, the mother/child relationship, the husband/wife relationship, the parents/daughter relationship, the protection of maternal health, medical or surgical procedures and hospitalization requirements. In the process, central values which the Constitution was designed to protect and espouse have been eroded substantially. There should be no question but that the life right stands paramount over all other personal rights protected by the Constitution, and that the blessings of liberty extend not only to the people of this Nation but to their posterity. By abandoning Roe, the Court will serve the constitutional values denigrated by that and subsequent decisions—the primacy of human life and the rightful role of the States in relation thereto, including protection of unborn human life against induced abortion.

—o—

(Continued from previous page)

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-389 (1979)]; has instructed that no single element of viability appraisal is to be determinative (Colautti, 439 U.S. at 388-389); has invalidated hospitalization requirements for post first trimester abortions (Akron, 462 U.S. at 438-439); and has struck down hospitalization requirements for D & E abortions performed after the 12th week of pregnancy due to the Court's acceptance of maternal safety advances where such abortions are performed up to 16 weeks in outpatient facilities [Planned Parenthood of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 482 (1983)]. In this latter regard, one is prompted to ask what happened to the "serious" and possibly "lasting" "medical, emotional, and psychological consequences of abortion * * * particularly so when the patient is immature" (H.L., 450 U.S. at 411)?

CONCLUSION

For the reasons and authorities set forth, above, Amicus submits respectfully that the Court should reverse the Judgment of the Court of Appeals and, in the process, reconsider and overrule Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. 113, and hold that an unborn child in the United States is a person under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD W. SCHMUDE
P.O. Box 674
Tomball, Texas 77375
(713) 376-0277
Attorney of Record for
Amicus Curiae

DALE JEFFERSON
5847 San Felipe, Suite 1250
Houston, Texas 77057
(713) 781-5932
Co-Counsel for Amicus Curiae

RORY R. OLSEN
10370 Richmond, Suite 760
Houston, Texas 77042
(713) 266-9100
Co-Counsel for Amicus Curiae

February, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

FILED
FEB 22 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

-vs.-

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF DOCTORS FOR LIFE, MISSOURI DOCTORS FOR LIFE, MISSOURI CITIZENS FOR LIFE, MISSOURI NURSES FOR LIFE, AND LAWYERS FOR LIFE, INC. IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

ANDREW F. PUZDER*
KENNETH C. JONES
911 Washington Avenue
7th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63101
(314) 231-2800

MARLAN C. WALKER
3101 North Central Avenue
Suite 1500
Phoenix, Arizona 85012
(602) 280-1000

Counsel for Amici

*Counsel of Record

February 23, 1989

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICI	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT INCORRECTLY HELD THAT MO. REV. STAT. §1.205 IS A PART OF MISSOURI'S "ABORTION REGULATION STATUTE"	3
II. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT ERRED IN HOLDING THAT THE STATUTE WAS AN INVALID EXERCISE OF MISSOURI'S LEGISLATIVE POWER. JUDGE ARNOLD CORRECTLY STATED IN HIS DISSENT THAT THE STATUTE SHOULD BE "UPHELD INSOFAR AS IT RELATES TO SUBJECTS OTHER THAN ABORTION"	5
A. The Passage of the Statute Was a Legitimate and Constitutional Exercise of Missouri's Legislative Powers	8
B. The Statute in No Way Violates Anyone's Constitutional Rights and Is Wholly Consistent With the Supreme Court's Decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	13
C. The Supreme Court Has Not Precluded States From Declaring That, in Non-Abortion Contexts, Human Life Begins At Conception	17
D. Conclusion to Argument II	19
III. HOUSE BILL NO. 1596 CONTAINED ONE SUBJECT (UNBORN CHILDREN) AND WAS WHOLLY CONSISTENT WITH MISSOURI'S CONSTITUTION	19
IV. IF, UNDER ROE V. WADE, THE STATUTE IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL, THEN ROE SHOULD BE REVERSED AS IMPERMISSIBLY INTERFERING WITH LEGITIMATE STATE ACTION	21
CONCLUSION	23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

	Page
Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	19
Association of America Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310	7
Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977)	13
Biggs v. McCarty, 86 Ind. 352 (1882)	9
Boise Payette Lumber Co. v. Larsen, 214 F.2d 373 (9th Cir. 1954)	9
Bonbrest v. Kotz, 65 F.Supp. 138 (D.C. 1946)	8
Casbah, Inc. v. Thone, 651 F.2d 551 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1005 (1982)	11
Day-Brite Lighting v. Missouri, 342 U.S. 421 (1952)	12,13
Deal v. Sexton, 144 N.C. 157, 56 S.E. 691 (1907)	9
Doe v. Israel, 482 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 993 (1974)	18
Fitz v. Dolyak, 712 F.2d 330 (8th Cir. 1983)	11
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	15
Herndon v. St. Louis, & S.F.R. Co., 37 Okla. 256, 128 P. 727 (1912)	9
Industrial Trust Co. v. Wilson, 61 R.I. 169, 200 A. 467 (1938)	9
Kelly v. Gregory, 282 App. Div. 542, 125 N.Y.S. 2d 696 (1953)	8
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	14,15,16,18
Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417 (1974)	11,12,17
Murphy v. Matheson, 742 F.2d 564 (10th Cir. 1984)	12
National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767	7
O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904 (Mo.banc 1983)	9
Penner v. King, 695 S.W.2d 887 (Mo.banc 1985)	8
Powell v. Texas, 392 U.S. 514 (1968)	17
Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976)	9
Price v. Heckler, 733 F.2d 699 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1224 (1985)	12
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F.Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987)	2,17
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988)	2,5
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim

	Page
Schilb v. Kuebel, 404 U.S. 357 (1971)	11
State v. Green, 470 S.W.2d 571 (Mo.banc 1981)	8
Thellusson v. Woodford, 31 Eng. Rep. 117 (Ch. 1798)	9
Turchick v. United States, 561 F.2d 719 (8th Cir. 1977)	11
United States v. Fogarty, 692 F.2d 542 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1040 (1983)	11,12,17
United States v. Kiffler, 477 F.2d 349 (2nd Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 831 (1973)	11,18
Westin Crown Plaza Hotel Co. v. King, 664 S.W.2d 2 (Mo.banc 1984)	20
Wilson v. Robinson, 668 F.2d 380 (8th Cir. 1981)	11

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

Mo. Const. art. III, §1	8
Mo. Const. art. III, §23	20,21

STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 (1986)	passim
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.1(1)	7,20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.1(2)	7,10,20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.1(3)	10,20,21
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.2	6,20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.3	20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.4	6
Mo.Rev.Stat. §188	4,20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §188.015(6)	20
Mo.Rev.Stat. §565.024.1(3) (Amended by L. 1986, House Bill No. 1596, §A)	10,20,21
Ark. Stat. Ann.§41-2553 (1947)	10
Cal. Penal Code §187 (West 1970)	10
Fla. Stat. Ann. §782.09 (West Supp. 1983)	10
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §750-322 (West Supp. 1983)	10
Nev.Rev.Stat. §§200.210, 200.220 (Supp. 1983)	10
N.Y. Penal Law §§125.00, 125.05 (McKinney Supp. 1983)	10
Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 21 §§713, 714 (West Supp. 1983)	10

BILLS

Page

Missouri House Bill No. 315 (1985) 3
Missouri House Bill No. 1596 (1986) 3,19,20,21

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Proclamation No. 5761, 53 Fed. Reg. 1464 (1988) . . . 22
Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, Human Life Bill §158, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 7, 13 (1981) 22
W. Prosser, Handbook on the Law of Torts, 337 §55 (4th ed. 1971) 8
Uniform Probate Code, §§2-108 10
Uniform Probate Code Practice Manual, §1.11 10
Walker and Puzder, State Protection of the Unborn After Roe v. Wade: A Legislative Proposal, 13 Stetson L.Rev. 237 (1984) 2,3,10,22

INTEREST OF AMICI

Doctors for Life is a not-for-profit Missouri corporation incorporated in 1979 with approximately 1,700 members nationwide, all of whom are physicians or who possess equivalent doctoral degrees. Doctors for Life's purpose is essentially educational and informational aimed at the medical profession nationally and promotes, in part, the traditional medical ethic of respect for all human life at all stages of biological development from conception to death.

Missouri Doctors for Life is a not-for-profit Missouri corporation incorporated in 1973 with approximately 600 members, all of whom are physicians or who possess equivalent doctoral degrees. Missouri Doctors for Life's purpose is essentially educational and informational aimed at the medical profession in Missouri and promotes, in part, the traditional medical attitude of respect for all human life regardless of race, creed, color, religion or stage of biological development.

Missouri Citizens for Life is a not-for-profit Missouri corporation incorporated in 1974 with approximately 25,000 members whose purpose is, in part, to inform and educate its members and the public, in particular, citizens and residents of the State of Missouri, on the basic right to life of all human beings and thereby foster a respect for all human life at every stage of development from conception to death.

Missouri Nurses for Life has been in existence since 1973 and was incorporated in 1988 as a not-for-profit Missouri corporation with approximately 700 members, all of whom are registered nurses and health care professionals. Missouri Nurses for Life's purpose is to promote the quality and dignity of all human life and to support the right to life as the fundamental and inalienable right of each and every individual human being.

Lawyers for Life, Inc. is a not-for-profit Missouri corporation incorporated in 1974. It has approximately 260 members, the majority of whom are St. Louis metropolitan area attorneys. Lawyers for Life, Inc. engages in litigation at all levels to protect the unborn and to foster respect for human life at every stage of biological development.

Counsel of record for Amici has filed Amicus Curiae Briefs in this case before both the District Court and the Eighth Circuit. Counsel also co-authoried the article which proposed the enactment of Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205. See Walker and Puzder, State Protection of the Unborn After Roe v. Wade: A Legislative Proposal, 13 Stetson L.Rev. 237 (1984).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENTS

Amici submit that Roe v. Wade should be reversed. The evidence that human life begins at conception is compelling and voluminous. As such, unborn children should be afforded full personhood under the Constitution. Alternatively, the protection to be afforded the unborn is a matter properly determined by State legislatures. To the extent Roe prevents State legislative action in this area, it should be reversed.

However, even if Roe should stand, Amici submit that Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 and all subparts thereof (hereinafter the "Statute") are constitutional. The Statute itself has been in effect since January 1, 1988 without impinging upon anyone's constitutional rights. Appellees have challenged only the Statute's preamble which recognizes the medical/scientific fact that human life begins at conception, but has no legal effect. A statutory preamble without legal effect can hardly violate anyone's constitutional rights, especially where the Statute itself (which is unchallenged) fails to violate anyone's constitutional rights.

The Statute is abortion neutral and was neither designed nor intended to regulate abortion in any way. The Statute simply expands protection for unborn children in the areas of tort, criminal, and probate law consistent with modern medical knowledge. The States have acted in these areas without violating anyone's constitutional rights for as long as we have had a Constitution. This is a proper area for State legislative action, and such legislative action is entitled to great deference from this Honorable Court.

As such, the Statute and its preamble are patently constitutional and should be upheld.

ARGUMENT

I. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT INCORRECTLY HELD THAT MO.REV.STAT. §1.205 IS A PART OF MISSOURI'S "ABORTION REGULATION STATUTE."

At the very outset of its opinion, the Eighth Circuit states that Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 (hereinafter "the Statute") is a section of "Missouri's 1986 Abortion Regulation Statute." 851 F.2d at 1073. This statement is simply wrong.

The Statute was originally proposed in a law review article which suggested state legislation designed to protect unborn children "in areas other than abortion." Walker and Puzder, State Protection of The Unborn After Roe v. Wade: A Legislative Proposal, 13 Stetson L.Rev. 237, 239 (1984) (emphasis supplied). The legislation proposed by this article was introduced in the Missouri House of Representatives in its 1985 session, but died in committee. House Bill No. 315.

In 1986 the Statute was reintroduced as part of the Senate Committee substitute for House Bill No. 1596, the subject of which was "unborn children and abortion." In addition to the Statute and certain revisions to Missouri law on abortion regulation, the bill also contained a section revising Missouri's criminal law concerning the definition of involuntary manslaughter with respect to an unborn child.[1]

The fact that the Statute was passed as part of the bill on the subject of unborn children which, among other things, contained certain provisions concerning abortion does not make the Statue part of Missouri's Abortion Regulation Statute.

---

[1] The involuntary manslaughter portion of House Bill No. 1596 amended Mo.Rev.Stat. §565.024 by deleting subsection 1(3), which provided that: "A person commits the crime of involuntary manslaughter if he: Causes the death of an unborn quick child by any injury to the mother of such child which would be murder if it resulted in the death of such mother." Mo.Rev.Stat. §565.024.1(3) (repealed 1986). Such deletion was necessary to afford unborn children full rights, privileges, and immunities in the area of homicide law consistent with the Statute. However, this provision of the Bill obviously had nothing to do with abortion.

Missouri's abortion statutes are contained in Title XII (entitled "Public Health and Welfare"), Chapter 188 of The Missouri Revised Statutes. However, the Statute is contained in Title I (entitled "Law in Force and Construction of Statutes"), Chapter 1 of The Missouri Revised Statutes. Far from being part of the same chapter or statute, the Statute and Missouri's Abortion Regulation Statutes are 11 titles and 187 chapters apart.

Moreover, the Statute does not affect any laws relating to abortion. Its very language precludes its applicability in the abortion context. In fact, the substantive portions of the Statute have been in effect since January 1, 1988 and no one has even attempted to argue that any provision of the Statute applies in the abortion context.

Appellees readily admit this in their Motion to Affirm filed in this Court by stating that "[i]ndeed the provisions of the [Statute] requiring Missouri's laws to be construed to protect the unborn remain in place and effect." (Motion to Affirm, p.6 n.8). Appellees go well beyond this simple admission, however, and actually recognize the constitutional validity of the Statute. Appellees specifically admit that the Statute states when human life begins "as a basis for legislation in certain [areas other than abortion], such as inheritance rights" and that this would be permissible if done "in a separate statute" (Motion to Affirm, p.6). Appellees go on to state that the whole issue "boils down to one of statutory location...." Id.

Amici Curiae submit that if the issue is simply one of statutory location, Appellees should have reviewed Missouri's statute books before proceeding with their lawsuit. As noted above, the Statute is 11 titles and 187 chapters away from Missouri's Abortion Regulation Statutes, was never intended to have any impact on abortion regulation and is currently in effect without having any such impact on abortion.

As such, Amici Curiae submit that the Eighth Circuit erred in holding the Statute's preamble an unconstitutional abortion regulation statute. As admitted by Appellees, its location alone demonstrates the Eighth Circuit's error.

II. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT ERRED IN HOLDING THAT THE STATUTE WAS AN INVALID EXERCISE OF MISSOURI'S LEGISLATIVE POWER. JUDGE ARNOLD CORRECTLY STATED IN HIS DISSENT THAT THE STATUTE SHOULD BE "UPHELD INSOFAR AS IT RELATES TO SUBJECTS OTHER THAN ABORTION."

In 1986, Missouri's General Assembly enacted Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 (hereinafter "the Statute") as a part of Title I (Laws and Statutes), Chapter I (Laws in Force and Construction of Statutes) of the Missouri Revised Statutes. The Statute provides as follows:

1. The general assembly of this state finds that:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;
(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being;
(3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health and well-being of their unborn child.

2. Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of the state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every stage of biological development.

4. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.[2]

Thus, the Statute defines when human life begins for purposes of Missouri law (such as tort law, property law, and criminal law). Substantively, the Statute expands existing state tort, property, and criminal law protection for unborn children. Prior to the Statute, Missouri law provided differing degrees of protection for unborn children. The Statute updates Missouri law in the aforesaid areas in a manner consistent with modern medical and scientific knowledge and provides for consistent treatment of unborn children. However, the Statute specifically excludes abortion from its ambit by providing unborn children only those rights, privileges and immunities permitted by "the Constitution of the United States and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court" (Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.2), and by specifically providing that it does not create any cause of action against pregnant women with respect to the care of their unborn children. Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.4.

The Statute was not intended to affect, and does not in any way affect, any woman's constitutional right to choose abortion over child birth. It simply defines the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of Missouri law in circumstances other than those involving abortion.

---

[2] Notably, in erroneously holding that the Statute's intention was to regulate abortion, the Eighth Circuit wholly failed to set forth or consider section 4 of the Statute. 851 F.2d at 1075. Judge Arnold noted this unusual omission in his dissent stating that the omitted section's "implication is that the section may properly be interpreted as creating causes of action against persons other than the mother." 851 F.2d at 1085 (emphasis supplied).

Nonetheless, Appellees herein challenged the constitutionality of portions of this statute. In particular, Appellees challenged and the lower courts held unconstitutional §1.205.1(1) and §1.205.1(2) which provide that for purposes of Missouri law (excluding its law relating to abortion), "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well being." These provisions are a part of the Statute's preamble and serve as an explanation and justification for the remainder of the Statute. However, the challenged provisions are not operative portions of the Statute.[3] As noted by one Court, "[a] preamble no doubt contributes to a general understanding of a statute, but it is not an operative part of the statute...." Association of America Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310, 1316 (D.C. Cir. 1977). See also, National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767, 773 (11th Cir. 1983) ("[p]reambles to statutes do not impose substantive rights, duties or obligations").

Thus, the Statute itself is currently in effect providing rights to unborn children. The scope of the Statute's impact on state law was undiminished by the lower courts' holdings. In essence, Appellees challenged as violative of individual constitutional rights and the lower courts held unconstitutional statutory provisions which have no substantive effect and were intended only to aid in the understanding of the substantive provisions of the Statute, which provisions stand unchallenged and are in effect. Amici Curiae submit that if the substantive provisions of the Statute fail to violate anyone's individual constitutional rights (as is clearly the case), the non-operative provisions of the Statute obviously do not violate such rights.

Amici Curiae submit herein below that the Eighth Circuit's holding concerning the constitutionality of the Statute is clearly incorrect, both factually and legally, because: (1) This

---

[3] Preliminarily, Amici Curiae agree with Appellants that Appellees lack standing to challenge any provision of Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 since it will have no impact on Plaintiffs or any of Plaintiffs' patients.—

Court has never placed any limitation on state legislative authority to determine when human life beings in non-abortion contexts; (2) since the Statute is abortion neutral, it is in no way inconsistent with Roe; and (3) the Statute in no way inhibits any woman from having an abortion, but merely provides protection for the unborn children of women who choose childbirth over abortion. As such, Amici Curiae respectfully submit that the Eighth Circuit was constitutionally bound to uphold Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 and the challenged provisions thereof.

A. The Passage of the Statute Was a Legitimate and Constitutional Exercise of Missouri's Legislative Powers.

In Missouri, "the legislative power...is vested in the General Assembly..." State v. Green, 470 S.W.2d 571, 573 (Mo.banc 1971). See Mo. Const. art.III, §1. This "legislative power is plenary and residual, subject only to the limits of the federal and state constitutions." Penner v. King, 695 S.W.2d 887, 889 (Mo.banc 1985). Thus, it is clear that the Missouri General Assembly is the proper governmental body to make legislative policy decisions for the State of Missouri.

It is also clear that states have always determined the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protections of state law. For example, most states provide children a cause of action in tort for prenatal injuries inflicted by a person other than the child's mother. See W. Prosser, Handbook on The Law of Torts, 337 §55 (4th ed. 1971) ("when actually faced with the issue for decision, almost all of the jurisdictions have allowed recovery even though injury occurred during the early weeks of pregnancy, when the child was neither viable nor quick"). See also, e.g., Bonbrest v. Kotz, 65 F.Supp. 138, 140-42 (D.C. 1946) (child could maintain a cause of action for injuries sustained while in utero in part because "a child en ventre sa mere is not only regarded as [a] human being, but as such from the moment of conception — which it is in fact"); Kelly v. Gregory, 282 App. Div. 542, 543-44, 125 N.Y.S. 2d 696, 697 (1953) (child may recover for previability injuries in part because "what we now know makes it possible to demonstrate clearly that separability begins at conception").

Many states also provide a cause of action to parents for the wrongful death of their unborn children. For example, the Rhode Island Supreme Court held in Presley v. Newport Hospital, 117 R.I. 179, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) that the word "person" as used in the Rhode Island Wrongful Death Act includes unborn children. 117 R.I. at 188, 365 A.2d at 754. As recently as 1983, the Missouri Supreme Court similarly held that the term "person" as used in Missouri's Wrongful Death Statute "includes the human fetus en ventre sa mere" stating that its conclusion was "supported by a strong positive trend among other jurisdictions holding that the fetus is a 'person,' 'minor' or 'minor child' within the meaning of their particular wrongful death statutes." O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904, 910 (Mo.banc 1983).

Most states also provide to or recognize in unborn children certain rights under property law. These rights date back to English common law which acknowledged that an unborn child was "entitled to all the privileges of other persons." Thellusson v. Woodford, 31 Eng. Rep. 117, 164 (Ch. 1798). The American states adopted the English common law and recognized the unborn child from the moment of conception with respect to numerous property rights. For example, an unborn child may receive an income interest prior to birth. Industrial Trust Co. v. Wilson, 61 R.I. 169, 200 A. 467 (1938). He or she may be a tenant in common with his or her mother. Biggs v. McCarty, 86 Ind. 352 (1882). He or she is entitled to participate in damages received from the wrongful death of his or her father. Boise Payette Lumber Co. v. Larsen, 214 F.2d 373 (9th Cir. 1954); Herndon v. St. Louis & S.F.R. Co., 37 Okla. 256, 128 P. 727 (1912). Unborn children are also recognized from the moment of conception as heirs of an estate, whether by devise or intestate succession. Biggs v. McCarty, 86 Ind. 352 (1882); Deal v. Sexton, 144 N.C. 157, 56 S.E. 691 (1907). Certain of these common law rules have been codified. For example, the Uniform Probate Code provides that unborn children are to be treated as though born within the lifetime of the decedent. Uniform Probate Code, §2-108; Uniform Probate Code Practice Manual, p.11, §1.11.

Finally, many states provide criminal sanctions for the intentional or criminally negligent killing of an unborn child. For example, a number of states impose criminal sanctions in the nature of manslaughter for the killing of a viable fetus or unborn quick child. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. §41-2553 (1947); Cal. Penal Code §187 (West 1970); Fla. Stat. Ann. §782.09 (West Supp. 1983); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §750-322 (West Supp. 1983); Nev. Rev. Stat. §§200.210, 200.220 (Supp. 1983); N.Y. Penal Law §§125.00, 125.05 (McKinney Supp. 1983); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 21 §§713, 714 (West Supp. 1983). In fact, until Missouri's General Assembly enacted the Statute, and accorded full protection to the unborn, Missouri also had such a law. Mo.Rev.Stat. §565.024.1(3) (Amended by L. 1986, H.B. No. 1596, §A).

Amici Curiae have set forth the foregoing examples of statutory and common law regulation of the rights of unborn children for the purpose of demonstrating that the matters dealt with in the Statute have long been recognized as within the proper purview of state regulation and proper subjects for legislative enactments. (For further case law and a more detailed discussion, see Walker and Puzder, State Protection of the Unborn After Roe v. Wade: A Legislative Proposal, 13 Stetson L.Rev. 237, 253-64 (1984)). Moreover, it is clear that, as stated in the provisions of the Statute challenged herein, "[u]nborn children have [and always have had] protectable interests in life, health and well being." Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.1(2). In this respect, the Statute is merely a proper exercise of legislative authority which recognizes what is now and has long been a fact. Given the states' traditional role in this area, Amici Curiae submit that the challenged statutory provisions are entitled to a strong presumption of validity.

State "legislatures are presumed to have acted constitutionally..." Schilb v. Kuebel, 404 U.S. 357, 364 (1971). See also, Fitz v. Dolyak, 712 F.2d 330, 333 (8th Cir. 1983) ("a presumption of constitutionality attaches to state legislative enactments"). The burden is upon the person claiming a constitutional violation to prove the challenged Statute's invalidity. Fitz v. Dolyak, supra, 712 F.2d at 333 (party challenging a statute "bears a heavy burden"); Wilson v. Robinson, 668 F.2d 380, 383 (8th Cir. 1981) ("burden is upon party asserting unconstitutionality to establish the invalidity"). Federal Courts "are obligated to presume a legislative intent to act within constitutional bounds." Casbah, Inc. v. Thone, 651 F.2d 551, 564 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1005 (1982). See also, Turchick v. United States, 561 F.2d 719, 724 (8th Cir. 1977) ("general principle that courts should construe statutes to avoid a finding of unconstitutionality...presumes a legislative intent to act only within constitutional bounds").

The presumption of validity to which state legislative acts are entitled is even stronger when the area in which the legislature is acting involves consideration of controversial medical, scientific, and social issues. This Court has specifically recognized that when a legislative body "undertakes to act in areas fraught with medical and scientific uncertainties, legislative options must be especially broad, and courts should be cautious to rewrite legislation...." Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417, 427 (1974). The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has similarly stated that "judicial self-restraint is especially appropriate where as here the challenged classification entails legislative judgments on a whole host of controversial medical, scientific, and social issues." United States v. Fogarty, 692 F.2d 542, 547 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1040 (1983). See also, United States v. Kiffler, 477 F.2d 349, 352 (2nd Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 831 (1973) (where "challenged legislation incorporates conclusions or assumptions concerning an array of medical, psychological and moral issues of considerable controversy in contemporary America...the resolution of such sensitive issues is best left to" branches of government other than the judiciary).

> As this Court has aptly stated:
>
> [W]e do not sit as a super legislature to weigh the wisdom of legislation nor to decide whether the policy which it expresses offends the public welfare. The legislative power has limits.... But the state legislatures have constitutional authority to experiment with new techniques; they are entitled to their own standard of the public welfare; they may within extremely broad limits control practices in [certain fields], so long as specific constitutional prohibitions are not violated and so long as conflicts with valid and controlling federal laws are avoided.

Day-Brite Lighting v. Missouri, 342 U.S. 421, 423 (1952). See also, Murphy v. Matheson, 742 F.2d 564, 575 (10th Cir. 1984) ("[u]nless a state law trammels fundamental personal rights, [federal courts] are to presume that state legislatures have acted within their constitutional power and are to require only that the law 'bear a reasonable relation to the State's legitimate purpose'"); Price v. Heckler, 733 F.2d 699, 701 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1224 (1985) ("[t]he court does not sit as a 'super legislature' to weigh the widsom of legislation nor to decide whether the policy which it expresses offends the public welfare").

In enacting the Statute, Missouri's General Assembly was clearly acting in an area where it has traditionally and properly had authority. Moreover, the legislature was the appropriate branch of government to investigate and weigh the evidence on the issues involved which arguably raise "medical and scientific uncertainties." Marshall v. United States, supra, 414 U.S. at 427. Thus, "judicial self-restraint is especially appropriate...." United States v. Fogarty, supra, 692 F.2d at 547.

The only question legitimately before this Court is whether the challenged provisions of the Statute (which are not even the operative provisions of the Statute) violate "specific constitutional prohibitions." Day-Brite Lighting v. Missouri, supra, 342 U.S. at 423. Absent such a violation, the Statute is clearly constitutional. As set forth below, Amici Curiae submit that the Statute is abortion neutral and in no way violates anyone's constitutional rights.

B. The Statute in No Way Violates Anyone's Constitutional Rights and Is Wholly Consistent with the Supreme Court's Decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

Amici Curiae respectfully submit that the Statute by its very terms is wholly abortion neutral and makes no effort in any way to affect any woman's right to choose abortion over child birth. The Statute's very terms specifically and clearly exclude any possible conflict with Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) by stating that the Statute's provisions are subject to the Constitution of the United States and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and that the Statute and its provisions were not intended to create any cause of action pregnant women. The Statute simply provides protections for the children of women who choose birth over abortion.

Thus, the Statute and the challenged provisions are clearly consistent with Roe. In Roe, this Court decided that women have a constitutionally protected right to choose abortion. However, the Court placed no limit on state legislation concerning unborn children where such legislation leaves unimpaired a woman's right to choose abortion.

In fact, in Roe this Court acknowledged that states have a valid and important interest in encouraging childbirth. It stated that states have an "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life." 410 U.S. at 162. The Court repeated its Roe language in Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977), adding that a state's "strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth" exists "throughout the course of the woman's pregnancy." 432 U.S. at 445-46.

In Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), the Supreme Court faced the question of whether a woman's "freedom of choice" included an entitlement to medicaid payments for abortions that are not medically necessary. At issue was a Connecticut Welfare Department regulation providing medicaid benefits for medical services incident to childbirth but not for non-therapeutic abortions. The district court had ruled that the regulation violated the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment and was, therefore, unconstitutional. It held that the unequal subsidization of childbirth and abortion impinged on the "fundamental right to abortion."

This Court disagreed, and stated that the district court failed to understand the scope of the right recognized in Roe. The Roe Court did not create an absolute right to abortion, rather it protects a woman from "unduly burdensome interference" with her right to obtain an abortion. The Court emphasized that Roe "implies no limitation on the authority of a state to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion...." 432 U.S. at 471, 473-74. In upholding the constitutionality of the Connecticut regulation, the Court distinguished between state interference with protected activity — i.e. abortion — and state encouragement of an alternate activity in accordance with legislative policy. The state is permitted to make childbirth a more desirable alternative and thereby influence a woman's decision, as long as it does not impose any restrictions upon abortions that were not already present. Thus, a state does not violate equal protection by financing childbirth but not abortions, since financial restrictions limit access to abortion whether or not the state finances childbirth. 432 U.S. at 474-75.

The Maher Court emphasized that a state need not show a compelling interest for its policy choice favoring normal childbirth. 432 U.S. at 477. A state statute need only comply with the less demanding test that the statute be rationally related to a "constitutionally permissible purpose." 432 U.S. at 478. The Court acknowledged the state's "'strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth'...an interest honored over the centuries" and held that the regulation rationally furthered that interest. 432 U.S. at 478. The Court then noted that:

> The decision whether to expend state funds for non-therapeutic abortion is fraught with judgments of policy and value over which opinions are sharply divided. Our conclusion that the Connecticut regulation is constitutional is not based on a weighing of its wisdom or social desirability, for this court does not strike down state laws "because they may be unwise, improvident, or out of harmony with a particular school of thought"...Indeed, when an issue involves policy choices as sensitive as those implicated by public funding of non-therapeutic abortions, the appropriate forum for their resolution in a democracy is the legislature. We should not forget that 'legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the court.'

432 U.S. at 479-80.

Three years after Maher, this Court decided Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). In Harris, the Court had to resolve the constitutionality of the Hyde Amendment to Title XIX of the Social Security Act, which severely limits the use of federal funds for "medically necessary" abortions. The Court upheld the statute against the argument that it violated the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, which purportedly guarantees the right to abortion. The Court cited Maher and quoted its language extensively for the proposition that federal legislation may encourage childbirth over abortion so long as the government does not create any obstacles to abortion that did not previously exist. Since financing childbirth does not create a financial obstacle to abortion that does not already exist, the Hyde Amendment needed only to be rationally related to a legitimate government interest. The Court held that, by encouraging childbirth, the Hyde Amendment is rationally related to the legitimate government objective of protecting "potential life." 448 U.S. at 325.

The Statute under consideration herein clearly complies in its entirety with the pronouncements and guidelines of Maher and McRae. It in no way conflicts with or impairs a woman's right to choose abortion over childbirth. At most, the Statute may be construed to promote legislative policies favoring protecting childbirth and unborn children at all stages of fetal development to an extent constitutionally permissible.

As noted above, the Statute expands (it does not create) tort, criminal and property law protections for unborn children. It is hardly novel in expanding these protections. Unborn children have enjoyed extensive rights in America Jurisprudence both before and after Roe, in areas which in no way conflict with any right to privacy or any woman's right to choose an abortion.

As long as the Statute's declarations that, for purposes of state law, life begins at conception and unborn children have rights avoid any conflict with a woman's right to choose an abortion (as they clearly do), there is no constitutional basis upon which to strike down the Statute. In reality, the Statute's statement that unborn children have rights for purposes of Missouri law (excluding abortion) is merely a statement of existing fact. As noted above, even before the Statute, unborn children had such rights and this has never been interpreted as creating an unduly burdensome interference with the right to choose abortion.

Amici Curiae thus submit that the Statute (which specifically excludes abortion) clearly does not create any "unduly burdensome interference" with the right to choose abortion but, at most, indicates a "value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion...." Maher v. Roe, supra, 432 U.S. at 471, 473-74. Obviously, if the Statute itself fails to create an unduly burdensome interference with abortion, the challenged non-operative provisions of the Statute do not create such interference. As such, the Statute and each of its provisions is clearly consistent with Roe and constitutional.

C. The Supreme Court Has Not Precluded States from Declaring that, in Non-Abortion Contexts, Human Life Begins at Conception.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), this Court stated that given the then current knowledge available, the judiciary was "not in a position to speculate" as to when human life begins. 410 U.S. at 159. The District Court below correctly noted that it was "inappropriate" for it to conduct an inquiry on this issue and granted Appellees' Motion in Limine precluding Appellants from offering evidence on this issue. Amici Curiae do not dispute that the District Court was an inappropriate body to consider the evidence on this issue. 662 F.Supp. at 413. However, Roe's holding does not mean that a state legislature is unable to consider such evidence or to act in this area, so long as its actions avoid a conflict with individual constitutional rights. In fact, the Roe Court's reluctance to act on this issue, because of the medical and scientific issues involved, suggests that the legislative branch of government is the appropriate branch to act. The Court has often recognized that in certain areas, particularly those involving scientific and medical uncertainties, the legislature, not the judiciary, is the appropriate body to act.

For example, in Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417 (1974), the Court interpreted one of its holdings in a prior case (Powell v. Texas, 392 U.S. 514 (1968)), as "a candid acknowledgment that the medical uncertainties [in certain cases] afford little basis for judicial responses in absolute terms." 414 U.S. at 427. The Court went on to state that:

> When [a legislature] undertakes to act in areas fraught with medical and scientific uncertainties, legislative options must be especially broad and courts should be cautious not to rewrite legislation, even assuming, arguendo, that judges with more direct exposure to the problem might make wiser choices.

414 U.S. at 427 (emphasis supplied). See also, United States v. Fogarty, supra, 692 F.2d at 547 ("judicial self-restraint is espcially appropriate where as here the challenged classifications entail legislative judgments on a whole host of controversial medical, scientific, and social issues"); United States v. Kiffler, supra, 477 F.2d at 352 (where "challenged legislation incorporates conclusions or assumptions concerning an array of medical, psychological and moral issues of considerable controversy in contemporary America...the resolution of such sensitive issues is best left to" branches of government other than the judiciary).

Thus, the fact that the Court in Roe felt it was not in a position to reach a determination as to when human life begins indicates, if anything, that the legislature may be the appropriate body to act on this issue. However, this does not mean that state legislatures can exercise their "extremely broad" options so as to unduly interfere with a woman's right to choose abortion. States are constitutionally precluded from legislatively expressing their attitudes about abortion or the beginning of human life when, and only when, such legislation constitutes an unduly burdensome interference with a woman's right to choose abortion. Maher v. Roe, supra 432 U.S. at 471. However, this is not the case with the Statute under consideration herein which specifically excludes abortion from its ambit and merely codifies and updates the traditional recognition of rights in unborn children under state law in non-abortion contexts. Constitutional prohibitions only come into effect when a state attempts to justify its regulation of abortion by adopting a particular theory of when life begins.

For example, Rhode Island enacted legislation in reaction to Roe in which the legislature made the express finding of fact that human life and a "person" commence at conception. The statute then proceeded to make all abortions illegal except when necessary to preserve the life of the mother. This obviously created an unduly burdensome interference with a woman's right to choose abortion, and the courts invalidated it. Doe v. Israel, 482 F.2d 156, 159 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 993 (1974).

Similarly, in Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983), this Court considered a municipal regulation which required a physician to inform his patient seeking an abortion that "the unborn child is a human life from the moment of conception." 462 U.S. at 444. The Court invalidated this provision stating that "a state may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." 462 U.S. at 444 (emphasis supplied).

These cases are obviously distinguishable from the instant case. The Statute herein is not a part of Missouri's abortion laws (under which abortion is clearly still legal and unaffected by the Statute). The Statute in no way even attempts to interfere with anyone's right to choose abortion and in no way attempts to justify Missouri's regulation of abortion. In fact, the Statute has nothing to do with regulation of abortion and deals solely and only with unrelated areas of law which have no affect on abortion, and which have always been within the province of the state legislatures.

Having acted in an area which is wholly proper and having avoided any conflict with anyone's constitutional rights, Amici Curiae submit that the General Assembly properly weighed the relevant medical/scientific evidence involved and acted within the proper scope of its authority. As such, the Statute and the declarations contained therein are wholly constitutional.

D. Conclusion to Argument II.

For the reasons set forth above, Amici Curiae respectfully submit that this Honorable Court should reverse the lower courts and uphold the constitutionality of the Statute and each of its provisions.

III. HOUSE BILL NO. 1596 CONTAINED ONE SUBJECT (UNBORN CHILDREN) AND WAS WHOLLY CONSISTENT WITH MISSOURI'S CONSTITUTION.

Appellees argue the Statute may be invalidated on separate and independent state grounds. Appellees cite a section of the Missouri Constitution which provides that "[n]o bill should contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title." Mo. Const. art.III, §23. The argument appears to be that House Bill No. 1596, in which the Statute originated, contained more than one subject.

On the face of House Bill No. 1596, such an argument is completely erroneous because House Bill No. 1596 concerns unborn children, as the title to House Bill No. 1596 clearly states: "An Act...relating to unborn children and abortion." The Missouri Supreme Court's test for determining if a bill contains more than one subject is "whether all provisions of the bill fairly relate to the same subject, have natural connection therewith or are incidents or means to accomplish its purpose." Westin Crown Plaza Hotel Co. v. King, 664 S.W.2d 2, 6 (Mo.banc 1984).

Examination of House Bill No. 1596 reveals that in fact its provisions all fairly relate to the subject of unborn children. House Bill No. 1596 contained the Statute, certain revisions to Missouri law on abortion regulations (§§188.010 et seq.), and a provision concerning involuntary manslaughter (§565.024). Each of these subjects concerns unborn children.

The Statute fairly relates to the subject of unborn children; for it concerns the rights, privileges, and immunities of unborn children. Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205.2. To support this substantive provision, the section defines "unborn children" (§1.205.3), and makes prefatory findings as to the beginning of life (§1.205.1(1)), the protectable interests of unborn children (§1.205.1(2)), and the protectable interests of natural parents in their unborn children (§1.205.1(3)).

Furthermore, the revisions to the Missouri law on abortion regulation also fairly relate to the subject of unborn children. Abortion directly affects unborn children and the revisions themselves contain (as did the law revised) a definition of "unborn child." Mo.Rev.Stat. §188.015(6). Therefore, it is obvious that the revisions to the Missouri law on abortion relate to the subject of unborn children.

Finally, the involuntary manslaughter portion of House Bill No. 1596 also fairly relates to the subject of unborn children. This portion amended §565.024 by deleting subsection 1(3), which provided that: "A person commits the crime of involuntary manslaughter if he: Causes the death of an unborn quick child by any injury to the mother of such child which would be murder if it resulted in the death of such mother." Mo.Rev.Stat. §565.024.1(3) (repealed 1986). Such deletion was necessary to afford unborn children full rights, privileges and immunities in the area of homicide law. Clearly, this provision was related to the subect of unborn children.

Therefore, House Bill No. 1596 contained only one subject because each of the three provisions contained in House Bill No. 1596 relates to the subject of unborn children. Thus, House Bill No. 1596 is wholly consistent with Article III, Section 23 of the Missouri Constitution and no separate and independent state grounds exist for the invalidation of the Statute.

IV. IF, UNDER ROE V. WADE, THE STATUTE IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL, THEN ROE SHOULD BE REVERSED AS IMPERMISSIBLY INTERFERING WITH LEGITIMATE STATE ACTION.

As noted above, Amici Curiae clearly submit that the Statute is constitutional even if Roe v. Wade should stand as a precedent. However, if Roe requires a holding that the Statute is invalid then this Court should reverse Roe as impermissibly interfering with legitimate state action.

The fact that human life begins at conception is beyond dispute. As stated by a Senate subcommittee which conducted extensive hearings on this issue:

> During the course of eight days of hearing, fifty-seven witnesses testified on §.158 before the subcommittee. Of these witnesses, twenty-two including world-renowned geneticists, biologists and practicing physicians addressed the medical and biological questions raised by the bill. Eleven testified in support of the bill and eleven in opposition.

> The testimony of these witnesses and the voluminous submissions received by the subcommittee demonstrate that contemporary scientific evidence points to a clear conclusion: the life of a human being begins at conception, the time when the process of fertilization is complete. Until the early nineteenth century science had not advanced sufficiently to be able to know that conception is the beginning of a human life; but today the facts are beyond dispute.
>
> Physicians, biologists and other scientists agree that conception marks the beginning of the life of a human being — of a being that is alive and is a member of the human species. There is overwhelming agreement on this point in countless medical, biological and scientific writings.

Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of The Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, Human Life Bill §158, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 7, 13 (1981).[4]

The authorities in support of the medical/scientific fact that human life begins at conception are virtually endless. See e.g., Nelson, Textbook of Pediatrics 234 (7th ed. 1959) ("[t]he child's life begins with fertilization of the ovum"). See also, authorities cited in Walker and Puzder, State Protection of the Unborn After Roe v. Wade: A Legislative Proposal, 13 Stetson L. Rev. 237, 243-44, n.17 (1984). As such, Amici submit that the unborn should be afforded full personhood under the Constitution. However, the question as concerns the Statute is whether a State legislature is constitutionally permitted to acknowledge the medical/scientific fact that human life begins at conception. If Roe prohibits such recognition even in non-abortion contexts (as the lower courts both held), or if Roe was based on the presumption that human life does not begin at conception, then clearly Roe was erroneously decided and should be reversed. A decision which precludes the law from recognizing a relevant truth can only serve as a veil for injustice.

[4] By Presidential Proclamation on January 14, 1988, the President of the United States "proclaim[ed] and declare[d] the inalienable personhood of every American from the moment of conception...." Proclamation No. 5761, 53 Fed. Reg. 1464 (1988).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Amici Curiae respectfully submit that Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 is wholly constitutional and that Roe v. Wade should be reversed in its entirety.

Respectfully submitted,

ANDREW F. PUZDER*
KENNETH C. JONES
911 Washington Avenue
7th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63101
(314) 231-2800

MARLAN C. WALKER
3101 North Central Avenue
Suite 1500
Phoenix, Arizona 85012
(602) 280-1000
Counsel for Amici Curiae

*Counsel of Record

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

(9)

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 22 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

ROBERT J. CYNKAR
(Counsel of Record)
SHAW, PITTMAN, POTTS & TROWBRIDGE
2300 N Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 663-9178

Of Counsel:

BRENDAN V. SULLIVAN, JR.
KEVIN J. HASSON
910 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

W. PATRICK DONLIN
Supreme Advocate

CARL A. ANDERSON
Vice President for Public Policy
Knights of Columbus

Dated: February 22, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

26 P

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	4
I. THIS CASE IS AN APPROPRIATE VEHICLE FOR OVERRULING ROE, EVEN IF THE MISSOURI STATUTE AT ISSUE COULD ITSELF BE UPHELD UNDER ROE'S ANALYSIS	4
II. ROE'S ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK IS FLAWED BEYOND REPAIR	6
A. There Is No Principled Basis By Which to Exclude the Unborn From the Protections Given to Persons By the Fourteenth Amendment	8
1. The Constitutional Text Does Not Exclude the Unborn	11
2. Pre-Roe Abortion Statutes Are Not Inconsistent With the Status of the Unborn as Persons Protected By the Fourteenth Amendment	12
3. Throughout Most of the 19th Century Abortion Was a Crime and Subject to Penal Sanctions	14
B. The Letter and Intent of the Fourteenth Amendment Mandate Protection of the Unborn as Persons	17
CONCLUSION	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES — Page

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6
Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886) 17
Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 303 U.S. 77 (1938) 12
Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) 5
First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765 (1978) 12
Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972) 17
Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 4, 5
Glona v. American Guar. & Liab. Ins. Co., 391 U.S. 73 (1968) 18
Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968) 17
Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630 (1850) 15
National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976) 1, 5
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Rosen v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 318 F. Supp. 1217 (E.D. La. 1970), vacated for reconsideration in light of Roe v. Wade, 412 U.S. 902 (1973) 13
Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886) 12
Smith v. State, 33 Me. 46 (1851) 19
State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380 (1859) 19
State v. Jones, 2 Miss. (1 Walker) 39 (1820) 15
State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 630 (1880) 16
Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741 (N.D. Ohio 1970) 13
Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1 (1842) 5
Thellusson v. Woodford, 31 Eng. Rep. 117 (Ch. 1798) 9
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 7
Union Pacific R.R. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891) 19

U.S. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS:

Amendment XIV ..... passim
Amendment XXII 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

STATUTES: — Page

Act for the Suppression of Trade In, and Circulation of . . . Articles of immoral Use, 17 Stat. 598 (1873) 19
Assimilative Crimes Act, 14 Stat. 13 (1866) 19

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS:

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089 (1866) 18
Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2766 (1866) 18
Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 542 (1867) 18
Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 514 (1868) 18
Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., Vol. 1 (1982) 16, 18, 19, 20
Staff of Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., Report on the Human Life Bill—S. 158 (Comm. Print 1981) 20

MISCELLANEOUS:

42 Am. Jur. 2d Infants (1969) 10
W. Blackstone, Commentaries 15
Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973) ..... passim
E. Coke, Third Institute (1644) 15
Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979) 14, 15, 16, 17
Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250 (1975) ..... passim
East & Valentine, Reconciling Santa Clara and Roe v. Wade: A Route to Supreme Court Recognition of Unborn Children as Constitutional Persons in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant, P. Cunningham eds. 1987) 12
Editorial, A New Ethic for Medicine and Society, California Medicine, Sept. 1970 16
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 9, 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Epstein, Substantive Due Process By Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159	13
Gorby, The "Right" to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment "Personhood," and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 S. Ill. L. Rev. 1	11, 16
M. Hale, History of Pleas of the Crown (1736)	15
J. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law (2d ed. 1960)	13, 14
W. Hawkins, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown (7th ed. 1795)	15
Horan & Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution, (D. Horan, E. Grant, P Cunningham eds. 1987)	13
Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639 (1980)	8, 9, 10
Krimmel and Foley, Abortion: An Inspection Into the Nature of Human Life and Potential Consequences of Legalizing Its Destruction, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 725 (1977)	7
W. LaFave and A. Scott, Handbook on Criminal Law (1972)	13
J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 (1978)	16
J. Noonan, A Private Choice (1979)	16, 17, 19
Note, The Law and the Unborn Child: The Legal and Logical Inconsistences, 46 Notre Dame Law. 349 (1971)	9, 10
R. Perkins and R. Boyce, Criminal Law (3d ed. 1982)	13, 14
W. Prosser, The Law of Torts (4th ed. 1971)	7, 9, 10
Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1976)	13
Sauer, Attitudes to Abortion in America, 1800-1973, 28 Population Studies 53 (1974)	20

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Knights of Columbus files this brief amicus curiae with the consent of the parties.

The Knights of Columbus is an international Catholic fraternal organization of 1.4 million members dedicated to advancing the ideals of charity, unity, fraternity, and patriotism through its activities around the world. While the Knights of Columbus engages in a broad range of social action programs aiding the sick, the handicapped, and the less fortunate, it devotes a considerable portion of its resources and volunteer effort to protect and strengthen the family and to promote pro-life values. Thus, the Knights have a long-standing, substantial interest in the issues presented in this case, and their participation as amicus curiae will bring an important, and broader, perspective to bear.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present case is an appropriate vehicle for overruling Roe v. Wade even if the case could be decided under the Roe framework. As precedents like Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority and Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins illustrate, when this Court has found an analytical framework, of short or long duration, to be flawed, it has not hesitated to abandon that framework —even if the case before the Court could be decided under its prior analysis, and even if the parties to the case have not argued that earlier precedent must be overruled.

As a practical matter, Roe's analytical framework is flawed beyond repair because it rests on "viability"—the point at which an unborn child can survive outside of the womb with artificial aid—to determine when a state may protect the life of "the developing young in the human uterus." As Justice O'Connor has pointed out, because viability is almost solely defined by ever-progressing technology, it is a constantly moving point that cannot be a neutral and stable basis for long-term constitutional adjudication.

More fundamentally, viability is an invalid benchmark for construing the meaning of "person" in the Fourteenth Amendment because it has nothing to do with attributes of personhood, or a particularized state of being, but only the state of medical technology. Viability's true utility lies in its insight that a viable infant is certainly a person and that only limitations on technology prevent all unborn children from being viable. If a "viable" unborn child is a person, then so are all unborn children, viable or not.

Roe's justifications for excluding the unborn from the Fourteenth Amendment are unpersuasive. Before Roe, in equity, property, crime, and tort, the law recognized the unborn as persons of legal consequence, reckoning that consequence in terms of the particular circumstances of the unborn. Upon examination, neither the Constitution's other uses of the word "person," the punishment provided for abortion, the traditional status of the mother of the aborted child as a victim, not an accomplice, nor 19th century abortion practices provides any principled basis on which to exclude the unborn from the protections of the Fourteenth Amendment.

In view of the logic and history of the Amendment, and this Court's traditional liberal construction of constitutional protections for personal rights, the only reasonable reading of the word "person" is one that includes an unborn child. The framers of the Amendment explicitly intended to extend its protections to "every human being." Their expansive design for the Amendment, combined with the predominant anti-abortion sentiment and legislation of the time in which it was proposed and ratified, inexorably leads to inclusion of the unborn as "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment.

Indeed, this Court's understanding of the word "person" has been flexible enough to hold business corporations to be Fourteenth Amendment "persons." If the word can extend the fundamental protections of law to "beings" that are mere legal constructs, no rule of interpretation or principle of law can justify excluding unborn human beings.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS CASE IS AN APPROPRIATE VEHICLE FOR OVERRULING ROE, EVEN IF THE MISSOURI STATUTE AT ISSUE COULD ITSELF BE UPHELD UNDER ROE'S ANALYSIS.

This case provides the Court with an appropriate vehicle for overruling Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Indeed, the present case would provide the Court with such a vehicle even if appellants did not ask the Court to overrule Roe, and even if the case could be decided under the framework of Roe itself. When faced with similar circumstances in the past, the Court has overruled similar precedents.

In Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985), the Court overruled National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976), which held that the Tenth Amendment prohibited Congress from intruding upon "traditional government functions" of the States. Neither of the parties in Garcia had asked the Court to reconsider National League of Cities; they simply debated whether or not setting the pay scale of municipal transit employees was a "traditional government function." Nevertheless, while considering that question, a majority of this Court apparently concluded that the entire National League of Cities framework was suspect. Consequently, the Court set the case for reargument, specifying as a new question presented whether National League of Cities should be overruled. 468 U.S. 1213 (1984) (mem.) Then, after rehearing, the Court voted 5-4 to overrule National League of Cities. Writing for the Court, Justice Blackmun explained that:

> Our examination of this "function" standard applied in . . . cases over the last eight years now persuades us that the attempt to draw the boundaries of state regulatory immunity in terms of "traditional government function" is not only unworkable but is also inconsistent with . . . [the] principles on which National League of Cities purported to rest.

Garcia, 469 U.S. at 531. Garcia, therefore, demonstrates the willingness of the Court to overrule precedent even when it has not been asked to do so, and even when only a bare majority of the Court considers the precedent unsound.

The Court has not hesitated to abandon even long-standing precedents, and even at the cost of great resulting turmoil. Thus, in Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938), the Court overruled Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1 (1842), which held that federal courts, sitting in diversity cases, should apply federal "general" common law, but state "local" common law. There was nearly a century of judicial precedent elaborating and refining Swift's distinction between "local" and "general" law. The Court could have decided Erie simply by further refining that standard and holding that certain state tort law was "local," not "general." Nevertheless, the Court completely overruled Swift. Justice Brandeis explained that:

> Experience in applying the doctrine of Swift v. Tyson has revealed its defects, political and social; . . . [T]he impossibility of discovering a satisfactory line of demarcation between the province of general law and that of local law developed a new well of uncertainties.

Erie, 304 U.S. at 74.

In sum, when the Court has found an analytical framework, of short or long duration, to be flawed, it has not hesitated to abandon that framework—even if the case before the Court could be decided under its prior analysis, and even if the parties to that case have asked the Court to so decide it. So too here.

II. ROE'S ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK IS FLAWED BEYOND REPAIR.

Roe v. Wade is both inherently unworkable, and inherently wrong. Its analytical framework rests on two judgments. First, that beginning "at approximately the end of the first trimester," a state may reasonably regulate abortion in the interest of motherhood health. Id. at 163. This is so, Roe explains, because in 1973 "until the end of the first trimester mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth." Ibid. Roe's second judgment is that, for "the stage subsequent to viability," the State may proscribe all abortions, except those necessary for the life or health of the mother. Id. at 164-65. Viability is the demarcation, Roe announces, because "the fetus then presumably has the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Id. at 163.

That analytical system, even if it were otherwise valid, could never serve as the basis for long-term constitutional analysis.

> The Roe framework . . . is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception. Moreover, it is clear that the trimester approach violates the fundamental aspiration of judicial decisionmaking through the application of neutral principles "sufficiently absolute to give them roots throughout the community and continuity over significant periods of time . . . ."

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 458 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (citation omitted).

More fundamentally, however, Roe's use of viability as a constitutional benchmark could never be valid. As Justice White has noted, a viability standard has almost nothing to do with attributes of personhood, or a particularized state of being, and everything to do with the "state of medical practice and technology" that allows an unborn child to survive at an ever earlier point in gestation. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 795 (1986) (White, J., dissenting).[1]

Moreover, the quality of medical technology varies not only with time, but also with locale. Many unborn children who are "viable" on any given day in a major metropolitan center would not be viable in a more rural setting. If constitutional personhood were pegged to the quality of medical technology in a given state, it would lead to the absurd result of the same unborn child being a "person" in some states, but not in others. Such an unborn child would then periodically gain, lose, and regain constitutional "personhood" whenever his or her mother traveled across state boundaries.

To be sure, the idea of "viability" does have some analytical utility, but a utility completely at odds with the result in Roe. Referring to the point at which an unborn child could survive outside the womb, "albeit with artificial aid," Roe, 410 U.S. at 160, viability provides a standard by which to find when an unborn child

---

[1] See Krimmel and Foley, Abortion: An Inspection Into the Nature of Human Life and Potential Consequences of Legalizing Its Destruction, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 725, 740 (1977) (a seven month old fetus 100 years ago was not viable, while it generally is today); W. Prosser, The Law of Torts 369 (5th ed. 1984) (viability is "a most unsatisfactory criterion [for the legal existence of the fetus], since it is a relative matter, depending on the health of mother and child and many other matters in addition to the stage of development"). See also Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250, 1312 (1975).

becomes "equal" to a child already born. And no one would seriously argue that an infant—even one born prematurely—was not a "person" whose right to life was protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Viability's value, however, lies not in its ability to draw the line at when one "becomes" a person, but rather in its insight that a viable infant is certainly a person, and that only limitations on technology prevent all unborn children from being viable. In short, if a "viable" unborn child is a person then so are all unborn children, viable or not.[2]

A. There Is No Principled Basis by Which to Exclude the Unborn From the Protections Given to Persons By the Fourteenth Amendment.

Nevertheless, "the unborn," Roe announced, "have never been recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense." Roe, 410 U.S. at 162. This point is, at the same time, both mistaken and irrelevant. Women and blacks were not treated as persons "in the whole sense" for significant periods of Anglo-American legal history, yet that fact hardly disqualifies them from personhood. Minors are not legally capable "in the whole sense" and often have legal interests that are contingent on future events, notably coming of age. Yet they most assuredly are persons.

Roe is, moreover, simply mistaken. Contrary to the Roe majority's belief otherwise, "[i]n equity, property, crime, and tort the unborn has received and continues to receive a legal personality."[3] And as Dean Ely has observed, even "[t]o the extent they are not entirely conclusive, the bodies of doctrine to which the Court adverts respecting the protection of fetuses under general legal doctrine tend to undercut rather than support its conclusion."[4] In the law of property, for example, an unborn child is considered a person in being for all purposes that are to his or her benefit, including taking by will or descent.[5] Equally noteworthy is the extension in equity of parens patriae protection to unborn children regardless of gestational age, illustrated by cases compelling blood transfusions for pregnant women to protect their unborn children.[6]

Roe's discussion of tort law, Roe, 410 U.S. at 161-62, is also "largely inaccurate."[7] Far from exhibiting Roe's skepticism, the "ideological history of prenatal injury law, and the more recent development of prenatal death law has consistently moved toward the affirmation of the unborn as a 'person' in the law . . . ."[8] Even in 1973,

---

[2] Indeed, it is doubtful whether there is any such thing as a "viable" infant at all. Born or unborn, every infant is utterly dependent upon its parents and society. So are many other "non-viable" persons—the elderly and the handicapped, for example.

[3] Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639 (1980).

[4] Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 925 (1973).

[5] Prosser, supra note 1, at 368; Note, The Law and the Unborn Child: The Legal and Logical Inconsistencies, 46 Notre Dame Law. 349, 351-54 (1971) ("The property rights of the unborn child are as old as the common law itself."). For example, an 18th century English court, replying to the contention that a devise for the life of a child en ventre sa mere was void because the child was a nonentity, wrote this succinct rejoinder to the Roe Court's notion:

> Let us see what this non-entity can do. He may be vouched in recovery, though it is for the purpose of making him answer over in value. He may be an executor. He may take under the Statute of Distributions . . . . He may take by devise. He may be entitled under a charge for raising portions. He may have an injunction, and he may have a guardian.

Thellusson v. Woodford, 311 Eng.Rep. 117, 163 (Ch. 1798).

[6] See Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807, 844-48 (1973); Note, supra note 5, at 360-62.

[7] Kader, supra note 3, at 652.

[8] Id. at 640. Before Roe, common legal authorities did not shrink from acknowledging the personhood of the unborn. Dean Prosser, for example, observed that "medical authority has recognized long it was well established that a child born alive could recover for prenatal injury.[9] Moreover, the trend in tort is towards permitting recovery for prenatal injury when the child is stillborn. Again, at the time of Roe, of the jurisdictions that had addressed the issue, 17 allowed such recovery, while 12 did not.[10]

In short, the "sense" in which the law has recognized the unborn outside of the abortion context is as persons of legal consequence, reckoning that consequence in terms of the particular circumstances of the unborn. That sense is not only consistent with the status of persons under the Fourteenth Amendment, but, given the broad scope of the Amendment, requires inclusion of the unborn within its protections.

Ultimately, however, Roe's conclusion that "the word 'person,' as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not include the unborn," 410 U.S. at 158, was premised on three more precise notions: first, that no other use of the word "person" in the Constitution has a "prenatal application," id. at 157; second, that aspects of "the typical abortion statute," such as permitting abortion to save the since that the child is in existence from the moment of conception. . . ." Prosser, supra note 1, at 367. See also 42 Am. Jur. 2d Infants § 2, at 9 (1969) ("Biologically speaking, the life of a human being begins at the moment of conception in the mother's womb . . . .").

---

[9] Id. at 642; Prosser, supra note 1, at 367-68; Note, supra note 5, at 354-60.

[10] Kader, supra note 3, at 654. Though Prosser noted the practical "difficulties of proof of causation and damages" by allowing such recovery, Prosser, supra note 1, at 369, neither he nor the other authority cited by Roe as examples of commentators who opposed this development, Roe, 410 U.S. at 163, were in fact critics of this trend in the law. See Kader, supra note 3, at 652-53. Indeed, Prosser generally was critical of arbitrary distinctions that might circumscribe the duty owed to the unborn. E.g. Prosser, supra note 1, at 369 ("Viability . . . does not affect the question of the legal existence of the unborn, and therefore of the defendant's duty . . . .").

life of the mother, are inconsistent with "Fourteenth Amendment status," id. at 157 n.54; and third, that "throughout major portion of the 19th century prevailing legal abortion practices were far freer than they are today," id. at 158. None of these propositions compels Roe's conclusion. The first is irrelevant; the second and third, simply mistaken.

1. The Constitutional Text Does Not Exclude the Unborn.

As Roe noted, neither the Constitution as a whole nor the Fourteenth Amendment in particular defines the word "person." Id. at 157. Reviewing the uses of that word elsewhere in the Constitution, however, the Roe majority pronounced that the word nowhere else admitted of any prenatal application. And that, the majority inferred, meant that the word "person" did not embrace the unborn within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. That inference is transparently unwarranted.

It is now a common criticism of this analysis that most of the provisions of the Constitution noted by the Court plainly had adults in mind when employing the word "person."[11] This does not mean that children are not persons under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Twenty-Second Amendment, for another example, prohibits any "person" from being elected to the Office of President more than twice. Such a use of the word hardly precludes application of "person" in the Fourteenth Amendment to a human being who is not a natural-born citizen and not yet 35. Clearly, "[i]n the clauses mentioned by the Court, the concept of 'person' was broad and undefined and the function of the specific constitutional clause was to limit the broader class of persons for a particular purpose."[12] [11] E.g., Ely, supra note 4, at 925-6.

---

[12] Gorby, The "Right" to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment "Personhood," and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 S. Ill. L. Rev. 1, 11-12.

Perhaps more strikingly, few of the usages cited by the Roe Court have any application to corporations. Yet the Fourteenth Amendment's "person" is expansive enough to encompass the business corporation, an entity that exists solely in the imagination of the law. See Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886).[13] And in the words of two commentators, when Roe is considered in light of Santa Clara, it takes on a "hauntingly Orwellian" character: "something can be a person without being human, and can be human without being a person."[14] If the word "person" can be extended to embrace a corporation, it surely must include living human beings, like the unborn, whom it meets along the way.

2. Pre-Roe Abortion Statutes Are Not Inconsistent With the Status of the Unborn as Persons Protected By the Fourteenth Amendment.

None of the aspects of statutes regulating abortion, thought by the Roe majority to be inconsistent with "Fourteenth Amendment status" for the unborn, Roe, 410 U.S. at 157 n.54, is in fact at loggerheads with such status. One "inconsistency" Roe identified was an exception for abortions done to save the life of the mother.

---

[13] As critics of Santa Clara have noted, the Court so stretched the term "person" in establishing corporate personhood that it went far beyond the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment. Justice Black, for example, emphasized that "the amendment was intended to protect the life, liberty, and property of human beings." Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 303 U.S. 77, 87 (1938) (Black, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original). Nevertheless, the Court subsequently found constitutional categories to be so flexible that it has held the corporation to have First Amendment rights to freedom of speech. First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765 (1978).

[14] East and Valentine, Reconciling Santa Clara and Roe v. Wade: A Route to Supreme Court Recognition of Unborn Children as Constitutional Persons in Abortion and the Constitution 90 (D. Horan, E. Grant, P. Cunningham eds. 1987).

But that exception is no more inconsistent with the personhood of the unborn than an exception from murder for homicides committed in self-defense[15] or out of legal necessity[16] is inconsistent with the personhood of the victim.[17] Indeed, it is hornbook law that "[o]ne human life may legally be terminated when doing so is necessary to preserve or protect another or others." Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F.Supp. 741, 747 (N.D. Ohio 1970).

The Roe majority also noted that the criminal penalty for abortion in the statute before the Court was less than the penalty for murder. Roe, 410 U.S. at 157 n.54. But that is hardly startling. The law has always distinguished among types of homicide and degrees of culpability of the actor.[18] Manslaughter, for example, is a distinct offense, and not a degree of murder. Yet a victim of manslaughter is no less a person because his killer ultimately is convicted of manslaughter instead of murder. Indeed such distinctions continue to develop with respect to "new" crimes, such as vehicular manslaughter, which is generally punished less severely than traditional manslaughter.[19]

---

[15] See Epstein, Substantive Due Process By Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159, 180. See also Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059, 1081-82 (1976); Destro, supra note 1, at 1256 n.30.

[16] See J. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law 426 (2d ed. 1960). See also Byrn, supra note 6, at 853-54.

[17] Most abortion statutes, including the one at issue here, do not distinguish between direct abortion and indirect abortion resulting from, say, treatment of ectopic pregnancies.

[18] R. Perkins and R. Boyce, Criminal Law 46-139 (3d ed. 1982).

[19] W. LaFave and A. Scott, Handbook on Criminal Law at 593 (1972). See also Horan & Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution, supra note 14, at 73; Byrn, supra note 6, at 855; Rosen v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 318 F.Supp. 1217, 1227 n.8 (E.D. La. 1970), vacated for reconsideration in light of Roe v. Wade, 412 U.S. 902 (1973) (the fact that murder and abortion are distinct offenses in Louisiana does not mean the legislature considered the unborn not to be "forms of human life").

The fact that, traditionally, the mother has rarely been considered a principal or accomplice in the crime of abortion, Roe, 410 U.S. at 157 n.54, is likewise beside the point. Not holding the mother as a principal of, or accomplice in, abortion has pragmatic, evidentiary roots. Working with only a primitive understanding of gestation, common law judges had difficulty determining if the child was alive before the abortion, or if the abortion caused the miscarriage. Obviously, if the mother was the defendant, rather than a witness, it could be very hard to prove that point.[20] And, in any event, the law has long tolerated "accomplices" who act under duress.[21] In sum, the status of the woman in criminal law hardly provides a reasoned basis for Roe's conclusion that the Fourteenth Amendment cannot be read to embrace the unborn.

3. Throughout Most of the 19th Century Abortion Was a Crime and Subject to Penal Sanctions.

The Roe majority also believed that "throughout the major portion of the 19th century prevailing legal abortion practices were far freer than they are today." Roe, 410 U.S. at 158. That conclusion, however, misapprehends the state of 19th century abortion law and its relationship to scientific knowledge and technology.[22]

At the outset of the 19th century, abortion law was based entirely on the received English common law, under which abortion of a woman "quick with child" was a common law crime.[23] The underlying principle was clear: "Life is . . . a right inherent by nature in every individual; and it begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb." 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries 129.

[20] Byrn, supra note 6, at 845-55; Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Mortality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359, 379 (1979).

[21] See e.g., R. Perkins and R. Boyce, supra note 18, at 1054-72 (3d ed. 1982); J. Hall, supra note 16, at 415-552.

[22] See Dellapenna, supra note 20, at 363-64 (noting the failure of the Court to discuss the levels of technology at relevant stages of history). The ovum would not even be discovered until 1827. Id. at 370.

Early 19th century American case law, faithful to Blackstone's precept, considered abortion of a quickened fetus to be a common law crime. For example, in a Mississippi case holding that a slaveowner could be prosecuted for the murder of a slave, the court observed:

> The taking away of the life of a reasonable creature under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, express or implied, is murder at common law. Is not the slave a reasonable creature, is he not a human being, and the meaning of this phrase reasonable creature is a human being, for the killing of a lunatic, an idiot, or even a child unborn, is murder, as much as killing a philosopher, and has not the slave as much reason as a lunatic, an idiot or an unborn child.

State v. Jones, 2 Miss. (1 Walker) 39 (1820) (emphasis added).[24]

[23] See E. Coke, Third Institute 50 (1644) (abortion of a woman "quick with child" is a "great misprison"); 1 M. Hale, History of Pleas of the Crown 433 (1736) (abortion, though not murder or manslaughter, is a "great crime"); 1 W. Hawkins, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown, ch. 31, § 16 (7th ed. 1795) (agreeing with Coke); 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries 198. See generally Byrn, supra note 6, at 819-24.

Relying on an article by Prof. Cyril Means analyzing the fragmentary record of two 14th century cases, the Roe majority doubted that post-quickening abortion was "firmly established as a common law crime" even in the face of this historical record. Roe, 410 U.S. at 135-37. Prof. Means' analysis has since been discredited. See Byrn, supra note 6, at 817-19; Dellapenna, supra note 20, at 366-67, 369-71, 387-89; Destro, supra note 1, at 1268-71.

[24] See also Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630, 633-34 (1850) ("The moment the womb is instinct with embryo life, and gestation has begun, the crime [of abortion] may be perpetrated . . . . There was therefore a crime at common law sufficiently set forth and

Subsequent scientific developments, notably the discovery of the ovum in 1827, convinced the medical profession that a distinct human life was formed at conception.[25] These physicians quickly mounted a highly-successful campaign to tighten abortion laws to protect the unborn. Thus, "[t]he anti-abortion policies sustained in the United States through the first two-thirds of the twentieth century had their formal legislative origins, for the most part, in the wave of tough laws passed in the wake of the doctors' crusade and the public response their campaign evoked."[26] Consequently, most states enacted strict abortion laws,[27] with the preservation of unborn life as one of their major purposes.[28] charged in the indictment."); State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 630, 632 (1880). For a review of the 19th century case law, see Gorby, supra note 12, at 15.

---

[25] Dellapenna, supra note 20, at 404. Indeed, more modern technological developments appear only to have confirmed this judgment. See Editorial, A New Ethnic for Medicine and Society, California Medicine, Sept. 1970, at 68, quoted in Destro, supra note 1, at 1255 (pointing out that the argument over abortion smacks of "a curious avoidance of the scientific fact, which everyone really knows, that human life begins at conception and is continuous, whether intra- or extra-uterine until death.").

[26] J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 200 (1978). See also Bryn, supra note 6, at 832 (1867 condemnation by the Medical Society of New York of abortion at every stage of gestation as murder); Hearings on S.158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., Vol. 1, at 679-84 (1982); Roe, 410 U.S. at 141-42.

[27] For a list of the statutes enacted at the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, see Roe, 410 U.S. at 175 n.1 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). See also J. Mohr, supra note 26, at 200 ("[M]ost of the legislation passed between 1860 and 1880 explicitly accepted the [regular physicians'] assertions that the interruption of gestation at any point in a pregnancy should be a crime and that the state itself should try actively to restrict the practice of abortion.").

[28] J. Noonan, A Private Choice 51-52 (1979); Gorby, supra note 12, at 15-19 (reviewing abortion caselaw, including cases applying statutes, and concluding that concern for the unborn was at least one motivating factor in each case); Dellapenna, supra note 20, at 400 (observing that surgical procedures other than abortion had comparable mortality rates from the same causes as abortion, infection and shock, but were not banned).

Properly understood, history provides no basis for Roe's belief that 19th century abortion practices were "far freer" than those of the early 1970's. To be sure, the 19th century saw significant change in abortion laws, but that change, spurred by scientific discovery, was in the direction of protecting the unborn at every stage of gestation.

B. The Letter and Intent of the Fourteenth Amendment Mandate Protection of the Unborn as Persons.

The text of the Fourteenth Amendment itself sets out only two classes of individual: "citizens," who must be born or naturalized in the United States and for whom the privileges and immunities of citizenship are assured, and "persons," a broader class not circumscribed by any specified criteria and for whom the fundamental rights of life, liberty, and property are guaranteed. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. Lacking any affirmative command to exclude unborn human children from the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of the right to life, the Court should apply "the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed," Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 635 (1886), and give the word "person" in the Fourteenth Amendment the broadest possible reading.[29] Cf. Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68, 70 (1968) ("We start from the premise that illegitimate children are not 'nonpersons.' They are humans, live, and have their being. They are clearly 'persons' within the meaning of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."); Glona v. American Guar. & Liab. Ins. Co., 391 U.S. 73, 75-76 (1968) ("To say that the test of equal protection should be the 'legal' rather than the biological relationship [of illegitimate children to their parents] is to avoid the issue. For the Equal Protection Clause necessarily limits the authority of a State to draw such 'legal' lines as it chooses.").

---

[29] Such a construction seems most fitting in a case involving the right to life, that most fundamental "right to have rights." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 272 (1972) (Brennan, J., concurring). See also J. Noonan, supra note 28, at 18 (All rights are premised on humanity, and so "[n]o discrete and insular minority is safe if all its liberties can be removed by defining it as subhuman.").

Moreover, such a construction of the word "person" in Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment is consistent with the intent of the Amendment's framers and ratifiers. Congressman John Bingham, the sponsor of Section 1 in the House of Representatives, intended it to have "universal" application, Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089 (1866), guaranteeing the rights of "any human being." Id. The Amendment would thus extend the protections of the law to "common humanity." Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 514 (1868). Bingham's test for the law's coverage was straightforward: "the only question to be asked of the creature claiming its protection is this: Is he a man?" Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 542 (1867). Similarly, the Amendment's Senate sponsor, Senator Jacob Howard, felt that it would apply to the "humblest, the poorest, the most despised of the human race." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2766 (1866). Congress contemplated the broadest scope for the word "person" in the due process and equal protection clauses, postulating neither a class of humans that could be excluded nor any governmental power to make such exclusions.[30]

To be sure, the legislative history of the Amendment makes no explicit reference to the unborn or to abortion.

[30] See Hearings on S.158, supra note 26, at 479 (statement of Prof. Victor Rosenblum), 663-67; Destro, supra note 1, at 1286-91.

Yet by its adoption in 1868, every state used its criminal law to regulate abortion, and generally regarded the unborn as legal persons.[31] In that legal milieu, the Amendment's authors, if asked, would almost certainly have considered the word "person" to include an unborn child.[32] At a minimum, the expansive language its framers used both in the Amendment and in their explanations of what they were trying to accomplish suggests the opposite of an intent to exclude any particular class of persons from coverage, much less to overturn in one stroke newly-tightened state abortion laws.[33] On the [31] The courts recognized this strong anti-abortion attitude. See, e.g., Smith v. State, 33 Me. 46 (1851); State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380 (1859). See generally, Destro, supra note 1, at 1289-91. Even a 19th century case cited by Roe as an early right of privacy precedent, Union Pacific R.R. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891), is consistent with the 19th century concern for the unborn child. Botsford held that the privacy of a female plaintiff in a personal injury action precluded a court from ordering a medical examination of her without statutory authority. The Court pointed to two exceptions in which a court has inherent authority to order such an examination, one of which is relevant here. "The writ de ventre inspiciendo, to ascertain whether a woman convicted of a capital crime was quick with child, was allowed by the common law, in order to guard against the taking of the life of an unborn child for the crime of the mother." Id. at 253.

[32] J. Noonan, supra note 28, at 6-7. Other legislation passed by the Congress in the 1860's and 1870's, when many of the leading proponents of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments were still serving, suggests affirmative congressional participation in the anti-abortion mood and legislation so common in the 19th century. Particular examples are the 1866 Assimilative Crimes Act, 14 Stat. 13 (1866), which made state law, including abortion statutes, applicable in federal enclaves, and the 1873 "Act for the Suppression of Trade in, and Circulation of . . . Articles of immoral Use," 17 Stat. 598 (1873), which made it a misdemeanor to sell in those enclaves, federal territories, and the District of Columbia drugs or articles "for causing unlawful abortion." Hearing on S.158, supra note 26, at 686-90.

[33] See Destro, supra note 1, at 1289-90 ("In light of the contemporary feeling that abortion involved the taking of human life, contrary, the anti-abortion feeling of the period in which the Fourteenth Amendment was proposed and ratified is hard to overstate. "[N]ot one statement by any nineteenth-century commentator can be found which was in any way sympathetic to women desiring abortions."[34]

Ultimately, then, Roe's effort to build an analytical framework on an unborn child's "capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb," Roe, 410 U.S. at 163, injects into judicial decisionmaking an analysis alien to the Fourteenth Amendment. When a human life becomes "meaningful," or when it loses its "meaning,"[35] are subjective questions of value that look beyond the physical existence of a human being.[36] However illuminating such philosophical inquiry may be, the framers embodied in the Fourteenth Amendment a more fundamental threshold of value that must be applied by the courts and that is not subject to ad hoc modification under the influence of such extrinsic value systems.

---

it would be incongruous to claim that the authors of the fourteenth amendment intended to exclude the unborn, and that they considered abortion to be part of the liberty protected by the amendment.").

[34] Sauer, Attitudes to Abortion in America, 1800-1973, 28 Population Studies 53, 56 (1974). See also Hearings on S.158, supra note 26, at 478 (statement of Prof. Rosenblum) (there was no organized opposition to the physicians' crusade to tighten abortion laws).

[35] For an example of such a discussion of the "meaningfulness" of human life, see Destro, supra note 1, at 1330 (summarizing the Senate testimony of a state legislator, supporting legalization of euthanasia, who questioned the "benefit" of the lives of 1500 retarded individuals in his state's mental institutions, individuals "who never had a rational thought").

[36] For a discussion of the distinction between the "scientific question" and the "value question," see Staff of Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., Report on the Human Life Bill—S.158 at 3-5 (Comm. Print 1981).

Securing the interest of the unborn in life on the same Fourteenth Amendment foundation as the right to life of all human beings would return this Court to the neutral and balanced framework of adjudication provided by the Constitution. It would harmonize this Court's understanding of human beings and of Fourteenth Amendment "persons." And it would do so on the strength of a simple insight: if a being is human, as an unborn child is, he is a person protected by the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Eighth Circuit should be reversed, and Roe v. Wade should be overruled.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT J. CYNKAR
(Counsel of Record)
SHAW, PITTMAN, POTTS & TROWBRIDGE
2300 N Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 663-9178

Of Counsel:

BRENDAN V. SULLIVAN, JR.
KEVIN J. HASSON
910 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

W. PATRICK DONLIN
Supreme Advocate

CARL A. ANDERSON
Vice President for Public Policy
Knights of Columbus

Dated: February 22, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

MOTION FILED
FEB 22 1989

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, State of Missouri,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE: Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W.;
Appellees,

ON APPEAL FROM THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF THE NATIONAL LEGAL FOUNDATION AMICUS CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

ROBERT K. SKOLROOD DOUGLAS W. DAVIS

THE NATIONAL LEGAL FOUNDATION
6477 College Park Square
Suite 306
P. O. Box 64845
Virginia Beach, Virginia 23464
(804) 424-4242

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

William C. Wood, Jr.
Dennis V. Carmen
On brief with Amicus Curiae

43p

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Contents	i
Motion For Leave To File Amicus Curiae	ii
Certificate of Service	v
Statement Concerning First Class Mailing	vii
Table of Authorities	viii
Interest of Amicus Curiae	x
Issues Presented	xi
Summary of Argument	xii
Argument	1
I. Introduction	1
II. The Eighth Circuit Court Erred In Holding That The Missouri Statute Is Void For Vagueness	3
III. The Eighth Circuit Erred In Holding That The State Has Created Obstacles By Refusing To Make Its Facilities, Employees, Or Funds Available To Procure Abortions	13
IV. This Court Must Reconsider And Discard The Trimester Approach Of Roe v. Wade .	20

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
October Term, 1988
No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, State of Missouri,

Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE; Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City; Howard I. Schwartz, M.D.; Robert L. Blake, M.D.; Carl C. Pearman, M.D.; Carroll Metzger, R.N.C.; Mary L. Pemberton, B.S.W.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

MOTION OF THE NATIONAL LEGAL FOUNDATION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE

Pursuant to Rule 42(3) of the Rules of this Court, The National Legal Foundation respectfully moves the Court for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the above entitled case. It is our understanding that Counsel for Appellees have consented to this filing, but no written confirmation has been received. Counsel for Appellants have given consent.

The National Legal Foundation is an organization devoted to advocacy and support of Constitutional Rights and Liberties. The Foundation is gravely concerned about attempts to restrict states in the exercise of their duty to protect the life and liberty of all persons within their jurisdiction, including the unborn. The Court's disposition of this case could dramatically affect the exercise of that duty.

The Missouri statute attempts to regulate abortions in the state and assure that state resources are not utilized to further such procedure. In particular, the enactment prevents public employees from counseling and encouraging abortions except where the mother's life is in danger and restricts the use of public facilities to perform abortions.

The Court of Appeals struck down both provisions; the counseling provision on vagueness grounds and the restriction on public facilities as an obstacle to a woman's freedom to choose abortion. Both holdings are in error.

The counseling provision is not unconstitutionally vague. It applies only to public employees in the scope of their employment and has been given a precise interpretation by the Attorney General that should be respected by the Court. No penalty attaches for violation of the statute, only a taxpayer proceeding to more clearly define the statute's application.

The withholding of public facilities is no different from withholding public funds for abortions which this Court has previously upheld as valid. The allocation of public resources is a decision best left to the state legislative process and not the federal courts.

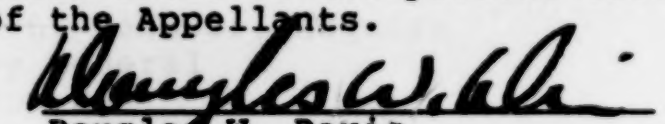
Lastly, the Court should reconsider its decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). The arbitrarily established trimester approach of that case conflicts with the self evident truth that the unborn child is human and entitled to the rights to life and liberty guaranteed in the Declaration of Independence.

Counsel of Record for amicus curiae Robert K. Skolrood is Executive Director for The National Legal Foundation and Douglas W. Davis is General Counsel for that organization. Counsel for amicus curiae specialize in Constitutional litigation and have participated in significant cases relating to First Amendment and other constitutional freedoms.

CONCLUSION

For the above stated reasons we respectfully urge the Court to grant this motion for leave to file the accompanying amicus curiae brief in the present case in support of the Appellants.



Douglas W. Davis
The National Legal Foundation

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

NO. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER

Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE

Appellees

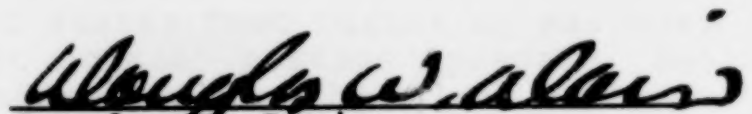
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I HEREBY CERTIFY that on this 22nd day of February, 1989, three copies of the Motion and Brief of Amicus Curiae, and a copy of the Statement Concerning First Class Mailing, were sent by first class mail with postage prepaid to each of the following pursuant to S. Ct. Rule 28.5 (b):

William L. Webster, Esquire
Attorney General
P. O. Box 899
Jefferson City, MO 65102

Roger K. Evans, Esquire
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 7th Avenue
New York, NY 10019

I further certify that service is not required on any other persons, and that all parties required to be served have been served as required under S. CT. Rule 28.



Douglas W. Davis
Attorney for Amicus Curiae
The National Legal Foundation

STATEMENT CONCERNING FIRST CLASS MAILING
(Pursuant to Rules 28.2 and 28.5)

I hereby affirm that the enclosed Motion and Brief of Amicus Curiae was deposited in a United States Post Office or mailbox, with first class postage prepaid and properly addressed to the Clerk of this Court, on February 22, 1989, which was within the time allowed for filing; and that I am a member of the Bar of this Court.

Subscribed this 22nd day of February 1989.

The National Legal Foundation

By: Douglas W. Davis
Douglas W. Davis
Attorney for Amicus Curiae
The National Legal Foundation

Subscribed and Sworn before me this 22nd day of February, 1989.

Jennifer G. Spell
Notary Public

My Commission Expires: September 1, 1992.

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES	Page
Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964)	11
Broderick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973)	4,5,12
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)	11
Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385 (1926) . .	5
Connick v. Meyers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983)	9
CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973)	5,12
Franklin v. Fitzpatrick, 428 U.S. 901 (1976)	8
Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. ___, 101 L.Ed.2d 430 (1988)	7
Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972)	3,11
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	passim
Inglis v. The Trustees of the Sailor's Snug Harbor, 27 U.S. (3 Peters) 121, 7 L.Ed. 617 (1830) .	24
Law Students Research Council v. Wadmond, 401 U.S. 154 (1971) . . .	6
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	passim

Planned Parenthood Association v. Fitzpatrick, 401 F.Supp. 545 (E.D. Pa. 1975) 7,8

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 18

Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (1988) . . passim

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) . passim

Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) . . . . . passim

Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969) 17

Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489 (1982) 10,11

Ware v. Hylton, 3 U.S. (3 Dallas) 199, 1 L.Ed. 568 (1796) 24

STATUTES & CONSTITUTIONS

Declaration of Independence . . . 24

Missouri Statute §§ 188.200-188.215 . . . . . passim

OTHER AUTHORITIES

A. Lincoln, Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln (R. Basler ed. 1953) . . . . . passim

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The National Legal Foundation is constituted for the purpose of advocacy in support First Amendment freedoms and other inalienable rights. While typically this involves the Foundation on the side of individual plaintiffs, in this instance, it argues in support of legitimate and historically acceptable governmental efforts to protect the lives of unborn children. The Court's decision in this case will dramatically affect the ability of our state elected officials to extend the guarantees of life and liberty found in the Declaration of Independence to all men and women regardless of their vulnerability or stage in life. When such protection is denied to the unborn, it opens the door for arbitrary withdrawal of such guarantees to all men and women.

The National Legal Foundation is a non-profit corporation organized to defend, restore, and preserve constitutional liberties, family rights and other inalienable freedoms.

Counsel of record for Amicus Curiae, Robert K. Skolrood is Executive Director and Douglas W. Davis is General Counsel for The National Legal Foundation. Counsel for Amicus Curiae specialize in constitutional litigation and have participated in significant cases relating to First Amendment and other constitutional freedoms.

The National Legal Foundation believes the experience of its attorneys will be of assistance to the court in evaluating this case.

ISSUES PRESENTED

Is the Missouri Statute prohibiting public employees, in the scope of their employment, to "encourage or counsel" a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life, unconstitutionally vague?

Is the Missouri Statute forbidding all public funding and use of public facilities for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother, unconstitutional?

Should the Court reconsider the Roe v. Wade decision?

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Missouri Statute's prohibition against public employees, within the scope of their employment, encouraging or counselling a woman to have an abortion except to preserve her life is not unconstitutionally vague. The statute does not apply generally, but only in the public employment context. The words "encourage" and "counsel" are sufficiently clear that a reasonable person, using reasonable common sense, could understand what activity is prohibited. The Attorney General, the only state official with opportunity to interpret the statute, has further clarified the meaning of these terms. His interpretation should be duly regarded and places all effected state employees on notice as to what activities are prohibited.

The prohibition of public funding and utilization of public facilities for abortions is also constitutional. It conforms with this Court's holdings that a state is under no obligation to utilize its resources to remove obstacles, not of its own making, to a woman's freedom to choose an abortion. The Court of Appeals unduly narrowed the application of the state funding cases and its opinion should be reversed.

Lastly, the Court should reconsider and discard the trimester approach of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). That opinion denies the self evident truth that the unborn child is human and therefore possesses the rights to life and liberty found in the Declaration of Independence. This same rationale was applied in the Dred Scott case to arbitrarily deny the self evident humanity of the African-American.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER

Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE

Appellees

ARGUMENT

I.

Introduction.

It is vital that this Court begin its analysis of the constitutionality of Missouri's Statute §§188.200-188.215 by recognizing its limited scope. This case must be analyzed in light of the following facts:

1. The statute's proscriptions extend only to public employees within the scope of their employment, public facilities, and public funding. The statute has no application to conduct or speech outside the public employment context.

2. The only remedy authorized by the statute for its violation is a civil taxpayer enforcement proceeding.

3. The state of Missouri stands in the position of an employer in relation to public employees. The state, through the Attorney General, has declared the terms "encourage" and "counsel" to be limited to "affirmative advocacy."

Less than one month after the Missouri statute was signed into law by Governor Ashcroft and before it became effective, the Plaintiffs filed suit to restrain its enforcement and mount a void for vagueness challenge against the terms "counsel" and "encourage". The state administrative and judicial machinery has not been afforded the opportunity to construe the enactment. The Plaintiffs have asked this Court to examine statutory terms in the abstract. It is against this backdrop that the Court is asked to analyze whether the terms "counsel" and "encourage" are void for vagueness.

II.

The Eighth Circuit Court Erred In Holding That The Missouri Statute Is Void For Vagueness.

This Court has long recognized the fundamental principle that an enactment is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined. The dangers inherent in a vague law are threefold:

1. a lack of a "reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited" may "trap the innocent by not providing fair warning;"

2. vague laws permit arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement on an "ad hoc" basis;

3. and vague laws may lead citizens to "steer far wider than necessary in the exercise of free speech.

Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108-109 (1972). None of these concerns are applicable in this case.

The Missouri statute does not apply to public at large but only to public employees, public facilities, and public funds. This Court has expressed a willingness to sustain statutes that regulate federal and state employees in the face of void for vagueness challenges.

In Broderick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973), governmental employees mounted a void for vagueness challenge against a statute modeled after the Hatch Act which prohibited them from "taking part 'in the management or affairs of any political party ....'" Id. at 608. In that case, this Court rejected the notion that the term "taking part in" rendered the statute facially vague:

> There are limitations in the English language with respect to being both specific and manageably brief, and it seems to us that although the prohibitions may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, they are set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with ....

Broderick, 413 U.S. at 608, quoting CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 578, 579 (1973).

If the term "take part in" was sufficiently precise to place state employees on notice of the type of conduct that the statute prohibited, it would be an anomaly to hold that the terms "encourage" and "counsel" are so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at [their] meaning." Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 381 (1926).

Unlike the public employees in Broderick, the Missouri public employees in this case have the advantage of an advance ruling by their employer which declares that the words "counsel" and "encourage" are limited only to "affirmative advocacy." The Attorney General's Opinion satisfies Due Process requirements by providing fair warning of prohibited activity.

The Eighth Circuit's refusal to accept the Attorney General's narrowing construction of the statute ignores controlling Supreme Court precedent. When a federal court is presented with the Attorney General's interpretation of a state statute, it must give that opinion "respectful consideration." Law Students Research Council v. Wadmond, 401 U.S. 154, 163 (1971). A federal court cannot be expected to ignore an authoritative pronouncement when analyzing a state statute to determine whether it will meet a vagueness challenge.

The Attorney General's construction is consistent with a reasonable interpretation of the words "encourage" and "counsel." It is even more appropriate for the court to defer to the state's construction of the terms when there has been no other state judicial or administrative interpretation.

This Court recently reaffirmed the "well established principle that statutes will be interpreted to avoid constitutional difficulties." Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. ___, 101 L.Ed.2d 420, 430 (1988). In Frisby, this Court narrowly read a statute that prohibited "picketing before or about the residence or dwelling of any individual" to prohibit only "focused picketing taking place solely in front of a particular residence ...." Frisby, 101 L.Ed.2d at 431. The Court justified its narrow reading on representations made during Oral Argument by counsel for the town of Brookfield who stated, that the town itself "takes, and will enforce, a limited view of the 'picketing' proscribed ...." Id., at 431.

In Planned Parenthood Association v. Fitzpatrick, 401 F.Supp. 554, (E.D. PA. 1975), aff'd., sub nom. Franklin v.

Fitzpatrick, 428 U.S. 901 (1976), this Court affirmed a district court opinion which relied upon representation by counsel for Pennsylvania, that requiring "humane disposal" of a fetus was designed to prohibit only the "mindless dumping of aborted fetuses on to garbage piles." Planned Parenthood, 401 F.Supp. at 573. Based upon this representation, that provision of the statute was held to be constitutional on its face.

The Court of Appeals erred by failing to consider the narrowing construction applied to the statute by the Attorney General for the state of Missouri. That construction controls in the face of a vagueness challenge as the Missouri statute imposes no criminal penalty and is reasonable and consistent with the common understanding of the terms, "encouraging" or "counseling" a person to have an abortion. The statute does not prohibit a public employee from educating women about abortion but only prohibits encouraging or advising a woman to have an abortion. The Attorney General's construction is consistent with this limitation.

Public employees stand in a different position in relation to the state than citizens in general. "[T]he state's interest as an employer in regulating the speech of its employees differs significantly from those it possesses in connection with regulation of the speech of citizens in general." Connick v. Meyers, 461 U.S. 138, 140 (1983).

Unlike citizens in general, state employees have administrative procedures that are provided to obtain advance clarification of prohibited conduct. Public employees are expected and required to consult relevant employment regulations much like "businesses, which face economic demands to plan behavior carefully, can be expected to consult relevant legislation in advance of action." Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, 455 U.S. 489, 498 (1982). The question of when a public employee crosses the line from informing a woman of her alternatives, to encouraging and counseling a woman to have an abortion is readily apparent. Any doubt can be resolved in advance by consulting employment manuals, personnel policies, or through the Attorney General's office.

Finally, a public employee who does "counsel" or "encourage" a woman to obtain an abortion is not subject to criminal penalty or any punitive civil action. The remedy provided for violation of the statute is a provision for taxpayer proceedings in civil court. This limited remedy does not subject an employee to criminal charges or immediate dismissal and will only operate to clarify the type of speech and conduct prohibited by the statute.

The Eighth Circuit erred in discounting the civil nature of the statute. Once the court determined that the statute implicated conduct associated with speech, it failed to consider other aspects that would justify a less stringent standard of review. The statute must be viewed as a whole. It carries civil enforcement remedies and is only applicable to public employees who are operating within the scope of their employment. Furthermore, the cases that the Court of Appeals relied upon, Village of Hoffman Estates, Grayned, and Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), all involve state statutes imposed upon the general populace and not solely upon governmental employees.

The court's reliance upon Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360 (1964) which involved a statute requiring state employees, upon pain of perjury to swear a loyalty oath or be precluded from employment is also misplaced. The Missouri statute imposes no sanction upon any employee, precludes no employee from continued employment nor does it infringe upon the personal conscience of any individual.

This case falls squarely within the parameters of Letter Carriers and Broderick, both of which implicated First Amendment freedoms of speech and imposed civil penalties requiring dismissal of public employees. Both cases withstood void for vagueness challenges.

The Missouri statute is aimed exclusively at state employees who are operating within the scope of their employment and who affirmatively advocate an abortion. In light of all these factors any person of common sense would be able to ascertain what conduct the state is attempting to proscribe. The Eighth Circuit erred in its determination that the Missouri statute was void for vagueness.

III.

The Eighth Circuit Erred In Holding That The State Has Created Obstacles By Refusing To Make Its Facilities, Employees, Or Funds Available To Procure Abortions.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Supreme Court concluded that the right of privacy, whether founded in the Fourteenth Amendment or the Ninth Amendment is "broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Id., at 153. The right declared in Roe does not confer the constitutional right of access, or a consitutional right of entitlement to funds, services, or facilities:

Roe did not declare an unqualified

> "constitutional right to an abortion," as the District Court seemed to think. Rather, the right protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy. It implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds.

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473-474 (1977) (emphasis added). A woman's right to decide protects her from state created obstacles, but it "need not remove those not of its own creation." Harris v. McCrae, 448 U.S. 297, 316 (1980). In Harris, the court made clear that a woman's right to decide does not include "a constitutional entitlement to the financial resources to avail herself of the full range of protected choices." Id., at 316.

In striking down the Missouri statute, the Court of Appeals stated that prohibiting public employees from encouraging or counseling abortion "is an unacceptable infringement of the woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose an abortion after receiving the medical information necessary to exercise the right knowingly and intelligently." Webster, 851 F.2d at 1079.

This case however, is no different from either Harris or Maher. The Court of Appeals assumed that a woman has a constitutional entitlement to receive advice by a doctor in order to make her decision knowingly and intelligently. This rationale is no different than saying that an indigent woman has a right to receive public funds in order that she may exercise her right to decide. Whether the woman's lack is a lack of funds or a lack of information is irrelevant. Both are a form of difficulty but neither has been created by the state.

The Eighth Circuit determined that the state's "choice of childbirth over abortion" was exercised in a manner that "prevents the patient from making a fully informed and intelligent choice." Webster, 851 F.2d at 1080. The court also characterized the Missouri statute as a "state imposed blackout on the information necessary to make a decision." Id., at 1080. These statements missed the mark. Both Maher and Harris involved a state imposed withholding of funds that certainly burdened, and often prevented, an indigent woman from procurring an abortion. The withholding of information by public employees in this case may ultimately prevent a woman from making a fully informed choice, but the lack was not created by the state, the state has merely refused to alleviate a pre-existing condition.

To illustrate this point, the Supreme Court has declared that the Constitution guarantees the right to travel from one state to another and that this fundamental right can only be outweighed by a compelling state interest. Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969). But by no stretch of the imagination does it follow that citizens now have a constitutional right to compel a state to provide them with the information and equipment necessary to effect this constitutional right, e. g. maps and transportation. Likewise, citizens of a state have no constitutionally guaranteed right to compel their state to provide them with information necessary to carry out a decision to have an abortion.

The Eighth Circuit's decision overturning the statutory provisions which forbid the performance or assistance of nontheraputic abortions in public facilities or by public employees is tainted by the same flawed reading of Harris, Maher, and Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) (per curiam). The Court of Appeals held that so long as the state recovered all funding expended for use of public facilities and the costs of employees services in providing an abortion, no state funding issue exists. Thus, the withholding of public facilities and employees could be "for no other expressed reason than the state's desire to discourage abortions." This desire, according to the Court of Appeals, was not a "sufficient justification" to withstand a "compelling state interest" requirement. Webster, 851 F.2d at 1083. Such a holding ignores precedent established by this Court in Harris and Maher. A woman's right to decide whether to have an abortion "implies no limitation on the authority of a state to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion ...." Maher, 432 U.S. at 474.

[emphasis added]. There exists no principled distinction between the Missouri legislature exercising its value judgments by withholding funds, or by withholding the services of its employees and the use of its facilities. The Eighth Circuit made no attempt to expound upon the distinction it attempts to draw, except to say that such a value judgment "narrows and in some cases forecloses the availability of abortion to women." Webster, 851 F.2d at 1081.

This Supreme Court has held that a state has unlimited authority to make value judgments in the allocation of its resources. Maher, 432 U.S. at 474. The Eighth Circuit limited the exercise of the state's judgment to the withholding of state finances. It is not for the federal judiciary to make such value determinations. Those decisions must be left to the legislature.

IV.

This Court Must Reconsider And Discard The Trimester Approach Of Roe V. Wade.

The underlying rationale of the Court's Opinion in Roe v. Wade, which has permitted abortion on demand under a trimester approach, is based upon an erroneous perception of life and liberty found in the case of Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1957) (hereafter Dred Scott).

Central to Chief Justice Taney's rationale in Dred Scott was the Court's assertion that the black slave was merely, "an ordinary article of merchandize and property." Dred Scott, 60 U.S. at 451. By so holding, the Court dehumanized African-Americans, equating them, in Abraham Lincoln's words, with "the beasts of the field." A. Lincoln, "Speech at Edwardsville, Illinois, Sept. 11, 1858," in 3 Collected Work of Abraham Lincoln 95 (R. Basler ed. 1953). The Dred Scott Court was able to assert that the slaveholder had absolute authority to do whatever he wished with his "property" and that any attempt by Congress to prohibit the expansion of slavery into the territiories was forbidden. In fact the Court asserted that there was nothing "which entitles property of that kind [slaves] to less protection than property of any other description. The only power conferred is the power coupled with the duty of guarding and protecting the owner in his rights." Dred Scott, 60 U.S. at 452.

The Court in Roe proceeded upon the same basis as Dred Scott, the only distinction being that Dred Scott classified men as "property" based on their race, while Roe classified them as "property" based on their stage of development.

The Court in Roe disclaimed any intent to "resolve the difficult question of when life begins," Roe, 410 U.S. at 160, as did the court below, Webster, 851 F.2d at 1076 n.7. Yet implicit in the Roe Opinion is the assumption that the child in the womb is something less than human; that the child in the womb is in fact "property". The implication is more readily apparent where the Court freely conceded that if the "suggestion of personhood is established, the appellant's [Roe's] case, of course collapses, for the fetus' right to life is then guaranteed specifically by the [Fourteenth] Amendment." Roe, 410 U.S. at 156-57. For the Roe Opinion to withstand scrutiny, the unborn child had to be "dehumanized" in the same manner as the slaves of Dred Scott.

The assumption has been completely established since Roe v. Wade. Roe and its progeny have created abortion on demand. A woman may freely destroy her fetal "property" as she chooses. In language strikingly similar to Dred Scott's assertion that the government had only "the power coupled with the duty of guarding and protecting the owner in his rights," 60 U.S. at 452, with respect to slaves, and could not, therefore block their ownership in the territories previously free from slavery by law, the Court has interpreted Roe to stand for the proposition that "government may not place obstacles in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice." Harris, 448 U.S. at 316.

The most effective opponent of slavery was Abraham Lincoln. In his debates with Stephen Douglas, Lincoln vigorously attacked the underlying presumption of Dred Scott that man as man should ever be classified as something less than human before the law. His arguments apply with equal force to the Roe rationale.

In opposition to the Dred Scott opinion, Lincoln relied upon the Declaration of Independence.[1] That document states:

> We hold these truths to be self evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed, by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Looking to the "plain unmistakable language of the Declaration," Lincoln asserted that "the authors of that notable instrument intended to include all men ...." when they asserted the self-evident truth that "all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights." A. Lincoln, Speech at Springfield, Illinois, June 26, 1857, 2 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 405 (R. Basler ed. 1953) (emphasis in original). Lincoln defined his assertion in rebutting Douglas and Chief Justice Taney's phrase that "all men" did not include African-Americans.

---

[1]Some might argue that the Declaration of Independence is not a legal document and has no legal significance. Lincoln thought otherwise, specifically dating the founding of the nation to the Declaration of Independence in his Gettsburg Address. The Supreme Court has recognized the binding legal effect of the Declaration of Independence in at least two cases, Inglis v. The Trustees of the Sailor's Snug Harbor, 27 U.S. (3 Peters) 121, 7 L.Ed. 617 (1830) (citizenship determination) Ware v. Hylton, 3 U.S. (3 Dallas) 199, 1 L.Ed. 568 (1796) (application of international law).

> I think the authors of that notable instrument intended to include all men, but they did not intend to declare all men equal in all respects. They did not mean to say all were equal in color, size, intellect, moral developments, or social capacity. They defined with tolerable distinctness, in what respects they did consider all men created equal - equal in "certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This they said, and this meant .... They meant to set up a standard maxim for free society, which should be familiar to all, and revered by all; constantly looked to, constantly labored for, and even > though never perfectly attained, constantly approximated, and thereby constantly spreading and deepening its influence, and augmenting the happiness and value of life to all people of all colors everywhere.

Id., 405-406.

The Declaration of Independence established that "all men" enjoy "inalienable rights" including the right to life and liberty. As Lincoln stated, the principle upon which our government was founded admits of no exception. As Lincoln noted in a speech in Chicago on July 10, 1858:

> I should like to know if taking this old Declaration of Independence, which declares that all men are equal upon principle and making exceptions to it where will it stop. If one man says it does not mean a negro, why not another say it does not mean some other man? If that declaration is not the truth, let us get the Statute book, in which we find it and tear it out!

Collected Works 2: 500-501.

Lincoln did not need the latest scientific data to proclaim what was self-evident. The African-American was a human being - not a stone, not a beast or other animal - and therefore the claims of the Declaration of Independence were rightfully his. The unborn child stands in the same posture today. It is equally self evident that the unborn child is a human being - not a stone, not a beast or other animal: science only confirms this truth, it does not create it. All attempts to classify the unborn as more or or less of a person by an arbitrary trimester approach are no different than classifying persons as more or less human based on the color of their skin. Roe stands in the same place of opposition to the equality of man and the inalienable rights of life and liberty as Dred Scott and should likewise be repudiated.

In a speech at Edwardsville, Illinois, Lincoln reiterated that treating African-Americans as less than human had consequences beyond the immediate issue of slavery:

> Now, when by all these means you have succeeded in dehumanizing the negro; when you have put him down, and made it forever impossible for him to be but as the beasts of the field; when you have extinguished his soul, and placed him where the ray of hope is blown out in darkness like that which broods over the spirits of the damned; are you quite sure the demon which you have roused will not turn and rend you? .... Our defense is in the preservation of the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands, everywhere. Destroy this spirit, and you have planted the seeds of despotism around your own doors. Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage, and you are preparing you own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of those around you, you have lost the genius of your own independence, and become the fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who rises.

Collected Works, 3:95.

Roe, applying the rationale of Dred Scott against the unborn child, is no less of a threat to liberty. When once we exclude any human because of race or stage of development from the guarantees of life and liberty found in the Declaration of Independence and thereby treat them as "property" or "potential life," we abandon the rule of law which protects men and women equally and substitute the rule of men, which picks and chooses among persons arbitrarily in deciding who will and who will not receive the protection of the law.

To overturn the rationale of Dred Scott required Constitutional Amendments and a Civil War. Even now, our nation struggles with the effects of discrimination against African Americans. To stamp out this injustice once again as it has appeared in Roe v. Wade against unborn men and women does not, as yet, require such measures. This Court must recognize the authority, indeed the duty, of the states to enact laws in support of a Declaration of Independence that guarantees life and liberty to all men. The Missouri statute begins this process. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has erred in its analysis of the Missouri statute and must be reversed.

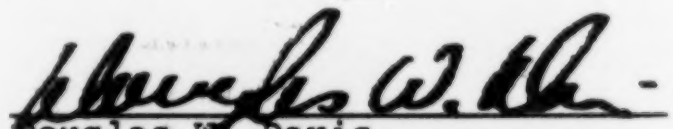
Respectfully submitted,



Douglas W. Davis
Attorney Amicus Curiae
The National Legal Foundation

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al., - - Appellants,

versus

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al., - - - - - - - - - - - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF CATHOLICS UNITED FOR LIFE, NATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF EPISCOPALIANS FOR LIFE, PRESBYTERIANS PRO-LIFE, AMERICAN BAPTIST FRIENDS OF LIFE, BAPTISTS FOR LIFE, SOUTHERN BAPTISTS FOR LIFE, LUTHERANS FOR LIFE, MORAVIANS FOR LIFE, UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST FRIENDS FOR LIFE, TASK FORCE OF UNITED METHODISTS ON ABORTION AND SEXUALITY, AND THE CHRISTIAN ACTION COUNCIL AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

Of Counsel:
CHARLES E. RICE
Notre Dame Law School
Notre Dame, IN 46556
(219) 239-5667
MICHAEL J. LAIRD
608 S. Walnut Street
Arlington, IL 60608
(312) 392-9596

WALTER M. WEBER*
C. PETER THOMAS S. CORNELL
3050 Gap Knob Road
New Hope, KY 40052
(502) 325-3061
MICHAEL J. WOODRUFF
5923 Oakland Park Drive
Burke, VA 22015
Attorneys for Amici Curiae
Counsel of record*

WESTERFIELD-BONTE CO., 619 W. KENTUCKY–P.O. BOX 3251, LOUISVILLE, KY.

39p

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

TABLE OF CONTENTS i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

INTEREST OF AMICI v

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 1

ARGUMENT 4

I. The Burden of Proof Rests Upon Those Who Would Exclude Unborn Children From the Meaning of the Term "Person" Under the Fourteenth Amendment. 4

II. There Is No Justification for Excluding From the Term "Person" the Class of Human Beings Conceived But Not Yet Born. 6

A. Roe v. Wade Gave No Valid Basis for Creating an Exception for Unborn Children. 6

1. Alleged absence of precedent 6
2. Postnatal application of other constitutional provisions 7
3. Apparent inconsistency of state anti-abortion laws with personhood of unborn children 8
4. Alleged laxity of nineteenth century abortion laws 10

B. No Other Basis Exists For Creating an Exception for Unborn Children. 12

1. The framers of the fourteenth amendment did not distinguish between "human beings" and "persons." 12
2. Science rejects the exclusion of unborn children from the class of human beings. 15
3. Logic militates against the creation of an exception for unborn children in the term "person." 17
4. Legal consistency would not be served by the exclusion of unborn children from the protection of the fourteenth amendment. 21
5. Justice demands the inclusion of unborn children within the term "person." 25

III. The Personhood of the Unborn Requires the Rejection of Appellees' Attack Upon the Missouri Statutes. 27

CONCLUSION 30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Betts v. Brady, 316 U.S. 455 (1942) 26
Bonbrest v. Kotz, 65 F. Supp. 138 (D.D.C. 1946) 23
Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886) 5
Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) (Brown I) 10, 29
Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955) (Brown II) 10, 30
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod. Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 20
Corkey v. Edwards, 322 F. Supp. 1248 (W.D.N.C. 1971), vacated, 410 U.S. 950 (1973) 17
Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972) 26
Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963) 26
Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774 (Tenn. 1977) 24
Keeler v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 3d 619, 470 P.2d 617, 87 Cal. Rptr. 481 (1970) (en banc) 22
Legal Tender Cases, 79 U.S. (12 Wall.) 457 (1870) 4-5
Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968) 6
Michael M. v. Superior Court, 450 U.S. 464 (1981) 9
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 18
Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 26
Presley v. Newport Hosp., 117 R.I. 177, 365 A.2d 748 (1976) 17, 20, 24
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... 1, passim
Rosen v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 318 F. Supp. 1217 (E.D. La. 1970), vacated, 412 U.S. 902 (1973) 17, 25
Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741 (N.D. Ohio 1970) ... 7, 17
Thellusson v. Woodford, 31 Eng. Rep. 117 (Ch. 1798) 8
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 15, 18, 20-21, 28
United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095 (1987) 29
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 27

Constitutional & Statutory Provisions:

Cal. Penal Code § 187 (West 1988) 23
Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 38, paras. 9-1.2, 9-2.1, 9-3.2 (Smith-Hurd Supp. 1988) 23
La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14:2(7) (West 1986) 23
Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 609.2661-609.2665 23
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1(1)-(2) (1986) 29
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.010 (1986) 29
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) 29
Mo. Rev. Stat §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 (1986) 29
N.D. Cent. Code § 12.1-17.1-02 to 12.1-17.1-04 (Supp. 1987) 23
Tenn. Code Ann. § 20-5-106 (1980) 24
U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 2 8
U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 3 8
U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 1 8
U.S. Const. amend. IV 8
U.S. Const. amend. V 7, 8
U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 ..... 1, passim

Other Authorities:

Annotation, Homicide Based on Killing of Unborn Child, 40 A.L.R.3d 444 (1971) 22
Annotation, Liability for Prenatal Injuries, 40 A.L.R.3d 1222 (1971) 23
Annotation, Right to Maintain Action or to Recover Damages for Death of Unborn Child, 84 A.L.R.3d 411 (1978) 23
L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy 55 (7th ed. 1974) 16
Cong. Globe, 35th Cong., 1st Sess. App. 65-66 (1858) 15
Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess. 1449 (1862) 14
Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess. 1640 (1862) 27
Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 1753 (1864). 14
Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 74 (1865) 13
Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. (1866) 14
Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 542 (1867) 14
Cong. Globe, 42nd Cong., 1st Sess. App. 229 (1871) 19

Other Authorities (Continued):

3 Cong. Rec. 1794 (1875) 14
Declaration of Independence para. 2 (U.S. 1776). 26
Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," in Abortion and the Constitution 137 (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) 11-12
W. Hamilton & H. Mossman, Human Embryology (4th ed. 1972) 16
K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology (2d ed. 1977) 17
The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S.158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 14, 16, 17 (1982) 16
H. Storer, Criminal Abortion in America (1860) 8, 23
13 Transactions of the American Medical Association 41-42 (1860) 23

INTEREST OF AMICI

Catholics United for Life

Catholics United for Life (CUL) is the pro-life apostolate of the St. Martin de Porres Dominican Community. Formed in 1974, CUL has twenty-three affiliates across the country, and promotes sidewalk counseling, a technique it developed for saving babies from abortion. Sidewalk counselors work to save each individual baby threatened by abortion—through prayer, persuasion, offers of assistance, and distribution of literature. CUL also supplies literature on a national level to promote respect for all human life.

National Organization of Episcopalians for Life

National Organization of Episcopalians for Life Research and Education Foundation, Inc. (NOEL), a nonprofit Maryland corporation with national offices in Fairfax, Virginia, is a general organization of the Episcopal Church. NOEL's purposes affirm the sacredness and the right to life of all human beings from conception to natural death. NOEL supports the 1988 General Convention Resolution of the Episcopal Church which "emphatically oppose[s] abortion as a means of birth control, family planning, sex selection or any reason of mere convenience," promotes alternatives to abortion, including adoption, and assists those faced with problem pregnancies through its 92 chapters in 27 states.

Presbyterians Pro-Life

Presbyterians Pro-Life is organized under the rules of the Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (USA), a denomination with three million members. Its objectives are to proclaim the Church's obligation to protect all innocent human life from conception to natural death and to support women in crisis pregnancies by offering alternatives to abortion. It is governed by a board of directors of thirty lay men and women and pastors, all members of the Presbysterian Church (USA). It has a network of local chapters throughout the denomination and publishes a quarterly newsletter that reaches 15,000 individuals and churches.

Southern Baptists for Life

Southern Baptists for Life (SBL) is a pro-life advocacy organization, incorporated in the State of Missouri as a non-profit corporation. SBL was established for the purpose of helping Southern Baptists take a firm, visible, and active stand against abortion, infanticide, and euthanasia. SBL concurs fully with the resolution on abortion passed at the 1982 Southern Baptist Convention, ". . . that all human life, both born and preborn, is sacred." SBL is governed by a six member board of directors and a fifteen member advisory board and provides pro-life resources to thirty-seven thousand Southern Baptist churches.

American Baptist Friends of Life

American Baptist Friends of Life is a pro-life advocacy organization within the American Baptist Churches/USA, representing the pro-life position of a large percentage of American Baptists. Directed by an eight member executive committee, it publishes a regular newsletter and is taking leadership in the implementation of its new denominational resolution on abortion passed in June of 1988 which states, "as American Baptists, we oppose abortion as a means of avoiding responsibility for conception."

Baptists for Life

Baptists for Life is a Christian pro-life organization representing independent Baptist Churches throughout the United States with main offices in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Baptists for Life believes in the sacredness of human life at every stage of biological development and in its value throughout the life continuum. It exists to provide alternatives to abortion through the over 2,000 church congregations which it represents.

Lutherans for Life

Lutherans for Life (LFL) is a volunteer pan-Lutheran educational organization seeking to restore respect for life at all its stages and legal protection for unborn children, the handicapped, and the medically dependent. Headquartered in St. Paul, Minnesota, LFL is a Minnesota non-profit corporation with federations in 10 states and over 200 chapters throughout the country.

Moravians for Life

Moravians for Life, also known as MOR'LIFE, is an association of individual members of the North American Moravian Church who are committed to pro-life education and advocacy.

United Church of Christ Friends for Life

United Church of Christ Friends for Life is a duly constituted special interest group within the United Church of Christ. It upholds the sanctity of human life from conception to natural death and speaks to this issue at every opportunity within the denomination. It produces a quarterly newsletter and is in the process of establishing chapters throughout the denomination.

Task Force of United Methodists on Abortion and Sexuality

The Task Force of United Methodists on Abortion and Sexuality is a national network of over 200 United Methodist pastors, theologians, and organizations begun in 1987 to minister to the problems of abortion in society. The view that life does not begin until live birth does not represent the position of a large segment of the United Methodist Church. According to our Discipline, only our General Conference, not our agencies, speaks for the Church. In 1988, General Conference stated in paragraph 71, section G of our Social Principles that "We recognize tragic conflicts of life with life may justify abortion and in such cases support the legal option of abortion under proper medical procedures. We cannot affirm abortion as an acceptable means of birth control and we unconditionally reject it as a means of gender selection." That abortion involves human life before birth is signified by the phrase "conflicts of life with life" (emphasis added). That abortion should be restricted to minimize indiscriminate practice is signified by the General Conference saying "we cannot affirm abortion as an acceptable means of birth control and we unconditionally reject it as a means of gender selection."

Christian Action Council

The Christian Action Council (CAC), founded in 1975 as a Protestant evangelical pro-life organization, is incorporated in the District of Columbia. Since its founding, the CAC has established 400 crisis pregnancy centers around the country. These crisis pregnancy centers serviced more than 150,000 women in 1987, providing them with support, encouragement, and necessary services to enable them to carry their babies to term. The CAC also counsels and supports women who suffer from the aftermath of abortion. CAC has 120 local affiliate chapters that are activist-oriented and involved politically in promoting pro-life legislation and seeking a reversal of Roe v. Wade.

The parties to the present case have consented to the filing of this brief; letters granting consent are being submitted with this brief.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., - - - Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL., - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This case presents a facial challenge to certain Missouri statutes alleged to violate the principles set forth in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and its progeny. The state of Missouri has responded both by defending its statutes under Roe, and by questioning Roe itself.

In Roe v. Wade, this Court erroneously held that unborn children are not "persons" with rights under the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, and that the fourteenth amendment includes a right to abortion. This Court should now repudiate the exclusion of unborn children from constitutional protection, and overrule Roe v. Wade.

The fourteenth amendment secures protection for the minimum human rights a state must respect: the rights to life, liberty, and property. This amendment would be of little value, however, if those invoking its guarantees had to bear the burden of proving their entitlement to protection under the amendment. Thus the Court must presume that the amendment applies to all living human beings. Those who assert that a particular class of individuals is outside the scope of the amendment must bear the burden of justifying such an exclusion.

No valid basis exists for excluding human beings conceived but not yet born from the protection afforded "persons" under the fourteenth amendment.

The Roe Court offered no defensible justification for such an exception. The alleged absence of precedents for the personhood of unborn children is not only incorrect, but also irrelevant in view of the similar dearth of such precedents for any other class of humans. The postnatal applicability of some provisions of the Constitution referring to "persons" does not imply that those excluded, e.g., from eligibility for Congress or for citizenship, are not persons; moreover, the assertedly ambiguous scope of other consitutional provisions referring to persons provides no basis for anything but circular arguments as to their scope. The alleged inconsistency of exceptions in state anti-abortion laws with the personhood of unborn children merely identifies possible constitutional defects in those laws; such defects do not justify the categorical exclusion, from all constitutional protection, of the class suffering discrimination. The supposed laxity of state abortion legislation in much of the nineteenth century is historically misleading because it ignores the fact that stringent anti-abortion legislation, largely representing a response to the scientific discovery of the humanity of unborn children from the moment of fertilization, preceded and accompanied passage of the fourteenth amendment. Furthermore, even prior to this legislation, abortion was illegal at common law and, until after the technical developments of the late eighteenth century, practically unavailable and virtually suicidal.

Contrary to Roe, history, science, logic, law, and justice all weigh in favor of including unborn children within the protection of the fourteenth amendment. The framers of that amendment clearly drew no distinction between "persons" and biological "human beings." Science demonstrates that each individual member of the human race begins life at the moment of fertilization. Logic supports no essential distinction between human beings on the basis of their dwelling inside or outside the maternal womb, or on the basis of their status as "viable" or "nonviable" individuals. Legal consistency supports the rejection of distinctions, in matters of basic rights, between born and unborn children, as well as between "viable" and "nonviable" unborn children. Finally, the intrinsic sanctity of every human life compels the rejection of any arbitrary exclusion of unborn children from entitlement to the most basic of human rights.

This Court should overrule Roe v. Wade. Any challenge to the Missouri laws predicated upon a supposed right to abortion, as in the present appeal, must accordingly fail.

A challenge to the Missouri legislation might rest on the basis that it insufficiently respects the personhood of the unborn. The appellees have not raised or indicated any wish to raise such constitutional objections; nor would these parties likely have standing to do so. The attorney general, however, who is an appellant in this case, is a proper party to vindicate the rights of unborn children. This Court should therefore uphold the personhood of children conceived but not yet born, and set this case for further briefing and reargument on the question of the proper disposition of this appeal.

ARGUMENT

The decision of the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), rests upon two central holdings: first, that the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution provides for a right to abortion; and second, that unborn children are not "persons" possessing a right to life and equal protection of law under the fourteenth amendment.

The present case has called into question the validity of the Roe decision. This brief addresses the personhood, under the fourteenth amendment, of human beings conceived but not yet born.

I. THE BURDEN OF PROOF RESTS UPON THOSE WHO WOULD EXCLUDE UNBORN CHILDREN FROM THE MEANING OF THE TERM "PERSON" UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that "[n]o State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. This amendment secures protection for the basic, minimum human rights any state must respect. It is imperative that categories of human beings not be read out of the terms of this amendment without the clearest demonstration of justification for such exceptions.

The Constitution is not a legislative code designed to specify its application in every conceivable situation. "We do not expect to find in a constitution minute details. It is necessarily brief and comprehensive. It prescribes outlines, leaving the filling up to be deduced from the outlines." Legal Tender Cases, 79 U.S. (12 Wall.) 457, 532 (1870). Thus, the vitality of constitutional principles depends upon their being presumed to apply. "A close and literal construction deprives them of half their efficacy, and leads to gradual depreciation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than in substance." Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 635 (1886).

If there were ever a term whose scope must be presumed to be broad, it is the term "person." For whoever is not a person lacks not only the privileges of citizenship, but even the barest minimum of human rights. A person need not have every right — prisoners, minors, and aliens, for example, do not possess the full panoply of rights and privileges afforded under the Constitution — but a nonperson has no rights whatsoever. A nonperson is no better off than property, entirely subject to the whim of the owner and whatever permissible regulation the state may deign to impose.

The constitutional protection for "persons" simply cannot function if each individual or class of human beings must prove inclusion in the roll of "persons." Does the term "person" include mentally disabled individuals? There is not likely much, if any, explicit support for that particular proposition in the text, history, or early application of the fourteenth amendment. Yet these are certainly persons. Does "person" include citizens of hostile nations? Children under the age of eighteen? Convicted misdemeanants or felons? Comatose individuals? Each of these classes of human beings lacks either the legal or physical ability to exercise certain rights, yet each is unquestionably a class of persons. This is so, not because members of each class can prove their inclusion under the fourteenth amendment, but because they are pre- sumed included absent decisive contrary proof. "They are humans, live, and have their being." Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68, 70 (1968) (discussing illegitimate children). Therefore, "[t]hey are clearly 'persons' within the meaning of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." Id.

Human offspring conceived but not yet born are likewise "humans, live, and have their being." They do not need to overcome any additional hurdles in order to establish their right to presumptive inclusion within the term "person" as used in the fourteenth amendment. If unborn children are not persons, it must be because some further evidence authoritatively rebuts this presumption. No such evidence, however, exists.

II. THERE IS NO JUSTIFICATION FOR EXCLUDING FROM THE TERM "PERSON" THE CLASS OF HUMAN BEINGS CONCEIVED BUT NOT YET BORN.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 158 (1973), the Court read into the term "person" in the fourteenth amendment an exception for unborn children. There is no valid justification for the creation of such an exception.

A. Roe v. Wade Gave No Valid Basis for Creating an Exception for Unborn Children.

The Roe Court made several arguments to support its conclusion that the word "person" does not include the unborn. None of these arguments withstands analysis.

1. Alleged absence of precedent

First, the Court observed that "no case could be cited that holds that a fetus is a person within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment." 410 U.S. at 157.

This observation is incorrect as a matter of fact. In Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741 (N.D. Ohio 1970) (three-judge court), the court rejected a challenge to Ohio's abortion laws, holding that the implied right to privacy > must inevitably fall in conflict with the express provisions of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law. The difference between this case and Griswold [overturning a ban on the use of contraceptives] is clearly apparent, for here there is an embryo or fetus incapable of protecting itself.

Id. at 745-46 (emphasis added). As the court in Steinberg explained, "a new life comes into being with the union of human egg and sperm cells," id. at 746, and "[o]nce human life has commenced, the constitutional protections found in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments impose upon the state a duty of safeguarding it," id. at 746-47.

Moreover, as a legal matter, an absence or dearth of case support for unborn personhood is irrelevant. There may well not be any cases, for example, holding newborn infants to be persons. This obviously does not mean, however, that such children are beyond the scope of the fourteenth amendment. As discussed above, such a cramped construction of the text would largely negate the effect of the amendment.

2. Postnatal application of other constitutional provisions

Second, the Roe Court noted that the use of the word "person" in "nearly all" other parts of the Constitution "is such that it has application only postnatally. None [of these uses] indicates, with any assurance, that it has any possible prenatal application." 410 U.S. at 157 (footnote omitted). But this simply begs the question. Those provisions that cannot apply prenatally explicitly limit the class of human beings to which they apply, e.g., U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 2 (person must be at least age twenty-five to be a Representative); id. art. I, § 3, cl. 3 (person must be at least age thirty to be a Senator); id. amend. XIV, § 1 (person who is born, if born in the United States, is a citizen). Such exclusions obviously do not imply that those excluded (e.g., with respect to Representatives, those under age twenty-five) are not persons. Moreover, those provisions that can apply to unborn children,[1] e.g., id. art. I, § 9, cl. 1 (tax on importation of "persons"); id. amend. IV (security of the person against unreasonable searches and seizures); id. amend. V (due process requirement for deprivation of life), contain no exclusion for any particular class of children, born or unborn. Again, the burden is on those who would create an exception, not those who claim inclusion.

3. Apparent inconsistency of state anti-abortion laws with personhood of unborn children

Third, the Court pointed to allegedly fatal inconsistencies in the abortion laws of Texas and other states.

> [I]f the fetus is a person who is not to be deprived of life without due process of law, . . . does not the Texas exception [for abortion necessary to save the life of the mother] appear to be out of line with the Amendment's command? . . .

[1] It bears mention that the holding of an office need not, in theory, be limited to competent adults. History, for example, has seen numerous infants wear the royal crown. Furthermore, unborn children have been explicitly recognized as capable of serving as the executor of an estate. H. Storer, Criminal Abortion in America 92 (1860) ("an infant in utero . . . at every stage of [gestation], no matter how early, . . . may be appointed executor. . ."). Accord Thellusson v. Woodford, 31 Eng. Rep. 117, 163 (Ch. 1798).

> . . . If the fetus is a person, why is the woman not a principal or an accomplice [to an unlawful abortion]? . . . If the fetus is a person, may the penalties be different [for abortion and first degree murder]

Roe, 410 U.S. at 157 n.54.

Here the Roe Court confused two distinct issues: the constitutionality of the Texas abortion laws, and the constitutional personhood of unborn children.

A state, of course, may not exclude from the general protection of the criminal law a particular class of innocent persons.[2] This fundamental obligation does not disappear, however, simply because a state fails

[2] Whether an exception for the life of the mother would entail a denial of equal protection would depend upon the scope of that exception. There is a grave moral and legal difference between, on the one hand, allowing a physician to remove an ectopic pregnancy or cancerous uterus from a pregnant woman, with the death of her unborn child occurring as an unintended effect of that necessary operation, and, on the other hand, giving permission for the direct, intentional killing of the unborn child whenever such is claimed to be necessary to save the mother's life.

The total exemption of the pregnant woman herself from the scope of criminal prohibitions against abortion would, like total parental immunity from prosecution for serious child abuse, be unconstitutional. But cf. Michael M. v. Superior Court, 450 U. S. 464 (1981) (sustaining, against equal protection challenge, statutory rape law that only applied to male offenders). Prosecutorial discretion, of course, is fully capable of handling situations in which the mother is more accurately considered a victim instead of an offender.

The primary effect of holding the unborn child to be a person would be that the child could no longer be regarded as beyond the equal protection of the criminal law. In other words, if all of the elements of a statute defining an offense against a person were satisfied, the statute could not be held inapplicable simply because the victim was not yet born.

The state may properly create a separate and additional offense of abortion which could apply without proof of pregnancy or causation of fetal death.

to comply with it. In Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) (Brown I), for example, it would have been outrageous to suggest that the long history and widespread practice of segregated public education meant that black people were not persons. On the contrary, this segregation represented a constitutional violation.

Similarly, the denial of equal statutory treatment to unborn children does not support a categorical denial of constitutional protection to such children. As the Court emphasized in Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294, 300 (1955) (Brown II), "the vitality of these constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them." If the state in fact is denying due process or equal protection to a class of humans, the remedy is to declare the discrimination unconstitutional, not to deny the personhood of the victimized class. To hold otherwise would be to deny the possibility of unconstitutional action by states, and to turn civil rights litigation upside down.

4. Alleged laxity of nineteenth century abortion laws

Fourth, the Court cited its "observation" that "throughout the major portion of the 19th century prevailing legal abortion practices were far freer" than in 1973, Roe, 410 U.S. at 158, presumably as evidence that the framers and those who ratified the fourteenth amendment did not regard unborn children as human persons.

On this point the Roe opinion refutes itself. The fourteenth amendment was adopted in 1868, precisely the time when the scientific discovery of the humanity of the unborn had become widely known, and precisely at the time when this discovery prompted vigorous opposition to abortion by means of numerous statutory bans. See 410 U.S. at 129 (observing that abortion laws in effect in 1973 "derive from statutory changes effected, for the most part, in the latter half of the 19th century"); id. at 141 (noting the "anti-abortion mood prevalent in this country in the late 19th century"); id. at 141-42 (noting that the concern of the medical profession for prenatal human life destroyed by abortion "may have played a significant role in the enactment of stringent criminal abortion legislation during that period"); see also id. at 174-77 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (noting the multiplicity of state and territorial anti-abortion laws at the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment).

Furthermore, the assumption by the Roe Court that abortion was freely and legally available, even in the early part of the nineteenth century, simply ignores reality. As Professor Joseph W. Dellapenna has demonstrated, the primitive state of medical technology made abortion prior to 1780 "tantamount to suicide." Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," in Abortion and the Constitution 137, 148 (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987). Thus, while abortion was indeed unlawful at common law, prosecutions were infrequent because they were unnecessary. Id. at 146.

> During this period, techniques to induce abortions were either magical, and hence punishable as witchcraft (whether they were successful or not), or extremely crude invasions of the woman's body, likely to be fatal to the woman as well as to the fetus. In the few cases where an abortionist was punished, it was for killing the mother. In fact, there is no evidence of voluntary abortion during this time. Abortions, if they occurred, seem to have resulted from assaults upon women rather than by their choice. Even then, abortion prose> cutions were hampered by ignorance of medical knowledge about the gestation process. The net result of these circumstances was that abortion was rare and the law did not have to deal with it because hanging the abortionist for killing the mother was sufficient punishment for the few cases that did arise.

Id. at 145 (footnotes omitted). The disposal of "unwanted" children was effectuated instead by infanticide. Id. (citing numerous authorities). When new abortion techniques finally became available in the late eighteenth century, the result was the initiation of anti-abortion legislation. Id. at 146. This legislative movement subsequently expanded in response to embryological discoveries that identified fertilization as the beginning of human life. Id. at 147.

B. No Other Basis Exists For Creating an Exception for Unborn Children.

Roe failed to give any justification for reading an exception for unborn children into the scope of the term "person" as used in the fourteenth amendment. Nor does any valid justification appear from other sources. On the contrary, history, science, logic, law, and justice all militate against the imposition of any such arbitrary limitation on personhood as birth or viability.

1. The framers of the fourteenth amendment did not distinguish between "human beings" and "persons."

Roe v. Wade distinguished between human beings and persons, holding that unborn children were not persons even if they were human beings. 410 U.S. at 159 ("We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins"). Such a distinction, however, was foreign to the men who proposed and adopted the fourteenth amendment.

If one thing is overwhelmingly clear from the record of the debates leading up to and surrounding the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments and the postwar civil rights legislation, it is that the legislators considered personhood and biological humanity to be interchangeable terms.

Thus Representative Thaddeus Stevens, on the day the thirteenth amendment was declared ratified, proclaimed:

> This is man's Government; the Government of all men alike; not that all men will have equal power and sway within it. Accidental circumstances, natural and acquired endowment and ability, will vary their fortunes. But equal rights to all the privileges of Government is innate in every immortal being, no matter what the shape or color of the tabernacle which it inhabits.

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 74 (1865) (emphasis added).

Likewise Representative John A. Bingham, author of section one of the fourteenth amendment, declared in reference to the fifth amendment the principle he viewed as fundamental:

> [T]he Constitution of the United States . . . declared that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." By that great law of ours it is not inquired whether a man is "free" by the laws of England; it is only to be inquired is he a man, and therefore free by the law of that creative energy which breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul, endowed with the rights of life and liberty. . . . Before that great law the only question to be asked of a creature claiming its protection is this: Is he a man? Every man is entitled to the protection of American law, because its divine spirit of equality declares that all men are created equal.

Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 1st Sess. 542 (1867) (emphasis added).

Representative James S. Brown, similarly, denied the notion that personhood required something more than human life.

> [D]oes the term "person" carry with it anything further than a simple allusion to the existence of the individual? It certainly cannot be strained into any recognition of slavery, since the very recognition of personality excludes [an institution which] does not regard its victims as persons but as chattels.

Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 1753 (1864).

Indeed, examples are legion to demonstrate the basic assumption of the framers and their contemporaries that "in the eyes of the Constitution, every human being within its sphere . . . from the President to the slave, is a person." Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess. 1449 (1862) (Sen. Sumner) (first emphasis added).[3]

There is, therefore, no warrant for the conclusion that a class of human beings might be excluded from the persons protected under the fourteenth amendment. As forcefully stated by Representative Joshua R. Giddings, [3] E.g., Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 7[illegible] (1866) (Sen. Trumbull) ("any legislation or any public sentiment which deprives any human being in the land of those great rights of liberty will be in defiance of the constitution"); id. at 322-23 (1866) (Sen. Trumbull) ("great object of securing to every human being within the jurisdiction of the Republic equal rights before the law"); id. at 1159 (1866) (Rep. Windom) (rights to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness are "rights of human nature," and the most basic "right of human nature [is] the right to exist"); id. at 1151 (1866) (Rep. Thayer) ("relief of human nature" secured in thirteenth amendment); 3 Cong. Rec. 1794 (1875) (Senator Allen G. Thurman) (may not deny equal protection to "any person" in the jurisdiction, "be he sane or be he insane, be he old or be he young, be he innocent or he criminal, be he learned or be he ignorant") (emphasis added).

> Our fathers, recognizing God as the author of human life, proclaimed it a "self-evident" truth that every human being holds from the Creator an inalienable right to live . . . .
>
> . . . If this right be denied, no other can be acknowledged. If there be exceptions to this central, this universal proposition, that all men, without respect to complexion or condition, hold from the Creator the right to live, who shall determine what portion of the community shall be slain? And who may perpetrate the murders?

Cong. Globe, 35th Cong., 1st Sess. App. 65-66 (1858) (emphasis in original).

2. Science rejects the exclusion of unborn children from the class of human beings.

Science does not purport to identify the value society should place upon human life. Science does indisputably show, however, that each individual human organism begins life at the moment of fertilization. Thus science offers no valid basis for excluding prenatal human life from the category of "persons" protected under the fourteenth amendment.

> However one answers the metaphysical or theological question whether the fetus is a "human being" or the legal question whether it is a "person" as that term is used in the Constitution, one must at least recognize, first, that the fetus is an entity that bears in its cells all the genetic information that characterizes a member of the species homo sapiens and distinguishes an individual member of that species from all others, and second, that there is no nonarbitrary line separating a fetus from a child or, indeed, an adult human being.

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747, 792 (1986) (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

This principle of continuous development is not unique to human beings.

> In biology and in medicine, it is an accepted fact that the life of any individual organism reproducing by sexual reproduction begins at conception, or fertilization — the time when the egg cell from the female and sperm cell from the male join to form a single new cell, the zygote. The zygote is the starting cell of the new organism.
>
> . . . It is important to also remember . . . that like begets like. In other words, the zygote is always a member of the biological species of its parents from the time of fertilization throughout all of its life, before as well as after birth. No study or experiment has ever refuted these scientific facts, and no competent scientist denies them.

The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S.158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 14, 16 (1982) (testimony of Dr. Micheline Mathews-Roth, principal research associate, Dept. of Medicine, Harvard Medical School) (emphasis added). The conclusion in the case of human life rests, therefore, not only upon human embryological research, but upon the findings of a broad area of biological study.

> So, therefore, it is scientifically correct to say that an individual human life begins at conception, when egg and sperm join to form the zygote, and that this developing human always is a member of our species in all stages of its life.

Id. at 17. Accord W. Hamilton & H. Mossman, Human Embryology 14 (4th ed. 1972) ("the fusion of two germ cells . . . one, the spermatozoan from the male parent; the other, the ovum from the female parent . . . is the formation of the first cell of the new individual, the zygote"); L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy 55 (7th ed. 1974) (union "of a male and female sex cell . . . definitely marks the beginning of a new individual"); K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology 1 (2d ed. 1977) (a zygote "results from fertilization of an oocyte by a sperm and is the beginning of human life").[4]

Science cannot identify a spiritual soul or assign a moral value to a given creature. Science does identify individual members of a particular species, such as homo sapiens. Unborn children are unquestionably individual members of this species, and thus the conclusions of science utterly reject the arbitrary exclusion of prenatal humans from the term "person."

3. Logic militates against the creation of an exception for unborn children in the term "person."

According to Roe v. Wade, unborn children are non-persons, and abortion of such children is a constitutional right. But it is plainly absurd to draw so tenuous a border as birth (or, for that matter, viability) between what is a constitutional liberty and what is homicide.

First of all, the act of abortion itself cannot sensibly be what distinguishes between persons and non-persons. Presumably no member of this Court would deny that "a newborn infant, whether the prod-

---

[4] See also Corkey v. Edwards, 322 F. Supp. 1248 (W.D.N.C. 1971), vacated, 410 U.S. 950 (1973):

> During fertilization, sperm and egg pool their nuclei and chromosomes. Biologically, a living organism belonging to the species homo sapiens is created out of this organization. Genetically, the adult man was from such a beginning all that he essentially has become in every cell and human attribute.

322 F. Supp. at 1252 (citations omitted). Accord Rosen v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 318 F. Supp. 1217, 1223 (E.D. La. 1970), vacated, 412 U.S. 902 (1973); Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741, 746-47 (N.D. Ohio 1970) (three-judge court); Presley v. Newport Hosp., 117 R.I. 177, ___, 365 A.2d 748, 751 (1976).

uct of a normal birth or an abortion," Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 503 n.10 (1983) (Blackmun, J., joined by Brennan, Marshall, and Stevens, JJ., dissenting), is a person under the fourteenth amendment.

The point of detachment from the mother — whether by normal birth, induced delivery, or abortion — likewise fails as a logical point for creating an exception to personhood. For a considerable period prior to birth, the unborn child is viable, and thus capable of surviving premature delivery. The child of seven or eight months' gestation who still resides in the maternal womb is essentially indistinguishable from the child of identical age who has been born prematurely.

The fourteenth amendment does distinguish between born and unborn children of the same age for purposes of citizenship. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 ("persons born . . . in the United States . . . are citizens"). But citizenship is a political classification the boundaries of which are necessarily arbitrary.

Personhood, in contrast, entitles an individual to the basic, minimal protections accorded to humanity. Whether the mother in labor while traveling interstate gives birth in Texas today or Mexico tomorrow is a question with political ramifications for the child; such incidental details, however, cannot reasonably determine whether the child may be slain. "No governmental power exists to say that a viable fetus should not have every protection required to preserve its life." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 784 (Burger, C.J., dissenting). As Senator Arthur S. Boreman explained in regard to the then recently enacted protections of the fourteenth amendment:

> This . . . is not confined to citizens of the United States, but it includes every person that is found within these States, and guarantying to all life, liberty, and property, and equal protection of the laws. . . . It is not restricted to guarantying the right of a "citizen" . . . but it extends to every "person," whether he has come from another State or not, to every person residing anywhere, everywhere, within the United States. So that while, before this amendment, if there was any question whether there were any class of persons in this country over whom the protection of the Constitution of the United States was not extended, there cannot now be any longer any question on that subject.

Cong. Globe, 42nd Cong., 1st Sess. App. 229 (1871) (emphasis added).

The total meaninglessness of birth as a criterion for personhood is more apparent today than ever, when induced, "scheduled" deliveries are commonplace, when babies are removed from the womb for surgery and then replaced within their mothers, and when irremediably harmed mothers are sustained on life support systems solely to await the delivery of the uninjured child within the womb.[5] Birth changes where the person is, not what the person is.

Nor does the concept of viability supply a logical alternative to birth as a boundary for excluding some unborn children from personhood.

---

[5] Already in vitro fertilization and embryonic transfer have demonstrated beyond all doubt the fundamental biological independence of the newly conceived child from any particular woman, genetic mother or not, and the capacity of an unborn child to live outside of the womb altogether, if only for the initial stages of development. It is now clear, in other words, that intrauterine gestation is not even the first stage of life, but is merely an intermediate stage subject to technical manipulation regarding both its duration and the identity of the woman who bears the child.

> If we profess allegiance to reason, it would be seditious to adopt so arbitrary and uncertain a concept as viability as a dividing line between those persons who shall enjoy the protection of our remedial laws and those who shall become, for most intents and purposes, nonentities. It seems that if live birth is to be characterized, as it so frequently has been, as an arbitrary line of demarcation, then viability, when enlisted to serve that same purpose, is a veritable non sequitur.

Presley v. Newport Hosp., 117 R.I. 177, ___, 365 A.2d 748, 754 (1976).

Members of this Court have already strongly criticized reliance upon the concept of viability for drawing constitutional lines. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod. Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 456-58 (1983) (O'Connor, J., joined by White and Rehnquist JJ., dissenting) (point of viability is unstable because tied to contemporaneous state of medical technology, and is therefore unsuitable as a basis for judicial decision making). Justice White, in his dissent in Thornburgh, elaborated upon this point with regard to the state interest in protecting human life:

> The government interest at issue is in protecting those who will be citizens if their lives are not ended in the womb. The substantiality of this interest is in no way dependent on the probability that the fetus may be capable of surviving outside the womb at any given point in its development, as the possibility of fetal survival is contingent on the state of medical practice and technology, factors that are in essence morally and constitutionally irrelevant. The State's interest is in the fetus as an entity in itself, and the character of this entity does not change at the point of viability under conventional medical wisdom. Accordingly, the State's interest, if compelling after viability, is equally compelling before viability.

476 U.S. at 795 (White, J., joined by Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (footnote omitted). The same rationale applies to constitutional personhood, i.e., the claim to minimal protection of basic human rights. One's capacity for survival is "constitutionally irrelevant" because "the character of the entity does not change at the point of viability."

The very notion of viability as a criterion for denying legal protection is gravely flawed. Viability is not a transcendent concept — it refers to conditional circumstances. The Arctic explorer is viable if sufficiently clothed. The serious diabetic is viable if properly treated. The newborn, full-term infant is viable if fed and nurtured. And the unborn child is viable if not prematurely expelled from the necessary environment, be it a petri dish or a womb. To deny protection on the basis of one's need for protection is no more sensible than to deny those who cannot swim the right to stay on board a ship. Roe stripped protection from precisely those who most need the minimum safeguards of the fourteenth amendment. This is topsy-turvy jurisprudence.

4. Legal consistency would not be served by the exclusion of unborn children from the protection of the fourteenth amendment.

The integrity of the law is not served, but rather is harmed, by the arbitrary exclusion of unborn children from constitutional protection. The history of legal developments of the past century and a half regarding prenatal human life has been a history of increasing recognition and protection of unborn children. The creation of an exception to the fourteenth amendment which would deny protection to such children represents a reversion to outmoded and unworkable legal fictions, and leads to disrespect for the law.

The ordinary legal guardians of the civil rights to life, liberty, and property are the criminal law and the law of torts. In both of these areas of law, courts and litigants have struggled with, and to a certain extent overcome, the absurdity and injustice of arbitrary distinctions between born and unborn children, and between viable and nonviable unborn children.

The common law is considerably older than contemporary knowledge of prenatal human development. Ignorance of fertilization and the nature of the human embryo consequently left its mark on the common law. In particular, the considerable problems of proof facing those alleging the perpetration of wrongs against unborn children led to the recognition of various arbitrary rules. These rules, for want of better guides, tied civil and criminal liability to observable phenomena such as quickening (the detection of the child moving in the womb) and live birth.

The criminal law has found it difficult to "outgrow" these arbitrary rules, presumably because of a combination of stare decisis, concern for advance notice to defendants of the criminality of particular conduct, and the rule of strict construction in favor of the defendant. E.g., Keeler v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 3d 619, 470 P.2d 617, 87 Cal. Rptr. 481 (1970) (en banc). As a result, the general rule today remains that the homicide of an unborn child cannot be established without proof that the mortally wounded infant survived, even if only momentarily, outside the womb. See Annotation, Homicide Based on Killing of Unborn Child, 40 A.L.R.3d 444 (1971). States have responded to this archaic requirement, however, by amending their criminal codes and specifying that the destruction of an unborn child is a crime.[6]

The law of torts has demonstrated a greater ability to "keep pace with the sciences," Bonbrest v. Kotz, 65 F. Supp. 138, 143 (D.D.C. 1946) (allowing action for prenatal injuries), and to adjust its rules of liability in the face of increased scientific knowledge. Thus, for example, the courts have overwhelmingly recognized the right of a live child to recover for prenatal injuries, even if inflicted prior to viability. Annotation, Liability for Prenatal Injuries, 40 A.L.R.3d 1222 (1971). Likewise, the courts universally allow recovery for the wrongful death of a child born alive whose injuries were inflicted before birth. Annotation, Right to Maintain Action or to Recover Damages for Death of Unborn Child, 84 A.L.R.3d 411 (1978). Similarly, after a protracted struggle over the issue, the courts of a clear majority of jurisdictions — thirty-four states including the District of Columbia, with eleven opposed, and five undetermined — now allow recovery for the wrongful death of a viable unborn child who dies while still [6] E.g., Cal. Penal Code § 187 (West 1988) (murder); Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 38, paras. 9-1.2, 9-2.1, 9-3.2 (Smith-Hurd Supp. 1988) (homicide and manslaughter of unborn child); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14:2(7) (West 1986) (defining "person" in criminal code as including "a human being from the moment of fertilization and implantation"); Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 609.2661-609.2665 (murder and manslaughter of unborn child); N.D. Cent. Code § 12.1-17.1-02 to 12.1-17.1-04 (Supp. 1987) (murder, manslaughter, and negligent homicide of unborn child).

---

One of the curious consequences of the difficulties in proving destruction of unborn children was that the lives of such children could better be protected by laws prohibiting abortion without proof of pregnancy, destruction of the unborn child, or intent to destroy such child. The American Medical Association incorporated precisely these features in its model anti-abortion statutes in the nineteenth century. See 13 Transactions of the American Medical Association 41-42 (1860); H. Storer, Criminal Abortion in America 94, 97-100 (1860).

in the womb. Id.[7] And while few courts have addressed the issue, already one state supreme court has convincingly argued that wrongful death liability cannot sensibly be limited to wrongs inflicted upon viable unborn children. Presley v. Newport Hosp., 117 R.I. 177, 365 A.2d 748 (1976).

Roe's imposition of birth and viability requirements (as predicates for personhood and a compelling state interest in protecting prenatal life, respectively) therefore represented a major setback in the law. Roe embraced the very same distinctions that the law of torts (and, to a lesser extent, crime) was in the process of finally and completely repudiating.

The consequences in terms of respect for the law are all too obvious. The jealous ex-husband who forcibly aborts his pregnant ex-wife's child may be convicted of homicide, but the professional abortionist cannot be. A woman who is hit by a car and miscarries on the way to an abortion business may sue for the loss of the child she planned to destroy. A disabled child may recover large sums to compensate for harm suffered in the womb, but the mother could have had that same child killed because she did not want a handicapped baby.

Such contrasts make a mockery of the law. The malleable and uncertain lines separating viability from nonviability, or prematurity from pregnancy, simply cannot support the difference between constitutional rights and crimes. The shifting sands of consent to abortion cannot support the distinction between homicidal torts and constitutional liberties.

---

[7] One additional state, Tennessee, has legislated this result. See Tenn. Code Ann. § 20-5-106 (1980) (legislatively overruling Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774 (Tenn. 1977)). Thus, thirty-five jurisdictions now allow recovery, while ten deny recovery.

Either the unborn child is a person, or he is not. While the law in theory can consider someone a person for some purposes and not for others, in practice such artificiality results in contempt for a legal system full of technicalities that contradict reality. The integrity of the legal system calls for inclusion, not exclusion, of the class of unborn children within the term "person" in the fourteenth amendment.

5. Justice demands the inclusion of unborn children within the term "person."

Finally, considerations of justice call for the renunciation of the arbitrary denial of equal protection to children who happen to reside within their mothers' wombs.

Not everyone has every right. But no one except a person has any rights. Thus Roe v. Wade asked the wrong question when it queried whether unborn children were "recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense," 410 U.S. at 162. The issue is not whether children conceived but not yet born should receive the full range of the rights of citizenship, such as voting rights, but whether they may lay claim to the barest minimum of human rights: "the right to survive on a basis of equality with human beings generally," Rosen v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 318 F. Supp. 1217, 1226 (E.D. La. 1970), vacated, 412 U.S. 902 (1973) (emphasis added). The law prior to Roe had generally accorded that much recognition, and more, to the child in the womb. And in so doing the law recognized a difference in kind between unborn children and tonsils, worms, or trees. This difference is the difference of personhood.

This difference, then, relates to the inherent dignity of man. Personhood is what characterizes the collection of diverse entities that together compose the human race. As Justice Brennan put it in another context,

> At bottom, the battle has been waged on moral grounds. The country has debated whether a society for which the dignity of the individual is the supreme value can, without a fundamental inconsistency, follow the practice of deliberately putting some of its members to death.

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 296 (1972) (Brennan, J., concurring) (overturning Georgia death penalty). If this observation holds true with regard to the life of a convicted felon, it is much more so for the innocent baby growing in the womb.

The answer to the fundamental moral issue, moreover, is clear: society "must treat its members with respect for their intrinsic worth as human beings," for "if the deliberate extinguishment of human life has any effect at all, it more likely tends to lower our respect for life and brutalize our values." Id. at 270, 303 (Brennan, J., concurring).

Justice Harlan, dissenting in Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961), emphasized the central role of tradition and history in the interpretation of the Constitution. "A decision of this Court which radically departs from it could not long survive, while a decision which builds on what has survived is likely to be sound." Id. at 542 (Harlan, J., dissenting).

Roe v. Wade represents precisely such a radical departure from the history, indeed the founding principles, of this nation. Like Betts v. Brady, 316 U.S. 455 (1942), overruled in Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963), Roe "made an abrupt break" with what "seems to us to be an obvious truth," Gideon, 372 U.S. at 344: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." The Declaration of Independence para. 2 (U.S. 1776).

The fourteenth amendment was adopted to secure these rights "not only for the sake of . . . the unfortunate human beings for whose special relief it [was] designed," but "for the purpose as well of giving a new assurance . . . that no man shall ever, in the coming future, as long as the Republic stands . . . be deprived of his life, of his liberty, or his property without due process of law." Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess. 1640 (1862). As this Court explained in West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943), the "very purpose" of a constitutional declaration of rights > was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life . . . and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to a vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

Roe v. Wade created an exception to personhood where none existed or could exist. This Court should now correct this fundamental injustice by overruling Roe v. Wade and upholding the right to life and equal protection of all human beings, regardless of age, size, health, or condition of dependency.

III. The Personhood of the Unborn Requires the Rejection of Appellees' Attack Upon the Missouri Statutes.

The fourteenth amendment personhood of human beings conceived but not yet born dictates the rejection of the appellees' constitutional challenge to the Missouri legislation at issue here.

Appellees predicate their challenge upon an alleged "right to elect abortion," Motion to Affirm at 3 (discussing standard of review). Such a "right," however, is fundamentally inconsistent with the right to life of persons conceived but not yet born. As this Court acknowledged in Roe, "[i]f this suggestion of personhood is established, the [challengers'] case, of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the [Fourteenth] Amendment." 410 U.S. at 156-57.

It is true, of course, that the personhood of unborn children imposes a positive duty upon the state to protect humans conceived but not born. As Justice Stevens observed in the Thornburgh case, unless there is a "fundamental" difference between unborn and born human offspring, "the permissibility of terminating the life of the fetus could scarcely be left to the will of the state legislatures." 476 U.S. at 779 (footnote omitted). Thus, a proper litigant could challenge the constitutionality of laws which did not provide at least the minimum protection demanded by the fourteenth amendment: the outlawing of all abortions.

Appellees have not challenged the Missouri statutes on this basis. Nor have they indicated any desire to do so. Moreover, it is far from clear that appellees, who are not guardians of unborn children, and whose interests are manifestly opposed to those of such children, have standing to raise objections predicated upon the personhood of the unborn. The Attorney General of Missouri, however, who is an appellant in this case, is a proper party to seek vindication of the rights of unborn persons. This Court should therefore hold that the fourteenth amendment protects unborn children as persons, and set this case for further briefing and reargument on the question of the proper disposition of this particular appeal.[8]

This Court followed a similar course in the school desegregation cases. In Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) (Brown I), this Court declared that racial segregation in public education violated the fourteenth amendment. The Court then set further proceedings to consider the implications of Brown I for the resolution of the particular cases before it.

---

[8] Reviewing the challenged provisions of Missouri law in light of the personhood of the unborn, the legislative preamble, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1(1)-(2) (1986), is clearly constitutional. It is a merely declaratory provision wholly consistent with the constitutional rights of unborn persons.

A statute which permits any abortions, as section 188.029 arguably does, violates the fourteenth amendment. However, only the second sentence of this section is technically before this Court. This sentence merely sets forth certain requirements for physicians making a viability determination, and is not, of itself, incompatible with a prohibition on abortions.

The restrictions on state involvement in abortion through funding, facilities, and personnel, Mo.Rev. Stat. §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 (1986), do contain exceptions for abortions "necessary to save the life of the mother." The constitutionality of these provisions depends upon the construction given the exception. Any allowance of intentional destruction of unborn persons would deny due process and equal protection to such persons. Missouri's general statement of intention, however, requires that statutory provisions should be construed "to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.010 (1986). Thus the "life of the mother" exception could be interpreted narrowly so as to exempt only those actions—removal of an ectopic pregnancy or a cancerous uterus, for example—which do not directly destroy the unborn child, which seek to preserve the child if possible, and which result in the death of the child, if at all, only as an unintended consequence of an independently justified operation. Such a permissibly narrow construction would suffice to defeat a facial challenge to the Missouri statutes. United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987) (constitutional challenge must establish that no set of circumstances exist under which statute is valid).

See Brown v. Board of Educ., 349 U.S. 295 (1955) (Brown II). Recognition of the constitutional rights of unborn children would, like the holding in Brown I, represent a very significant vindication of fundamental human rights. Thorough review of the ramifications of this holding, as well as the proper means of upholding these rights in the case at bar, would therefore be wise.

CONCLUSION

There is no valid basis for excluding unborn children from the fundamental protections afforded all persons under the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution. This Court should therefore overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and set this case for further briefing and reargument on the issue of the proper disposition of this appeal.

Respectfully submitted,

Of Counsel:
CHARLES E. RICE
Notre Dame Law School
Notre Dame, IN 46556
(219) 239-5667
MICHAEL J. LAIRD
608 S. Walnut Street
Arlington Heights, IL 60608
(312) 392-9596

WALTER M. WEBER*
C. PETER THOMAS S. CORNELL
3050 Gap Knob Road
New Hope, KY 40052
(502) 325-3061
MICHAEL J. WOODRUFF
5923 Oakland Park Drive
Burke, VA 22015
Attorneys for Amici Curiae
Counsel of record*

Amici gratefully acknowledge the following law students for their assistance in the research and preparation of this brief:

Notre Dame Law School: Warren W. Byrd, Brian D. Hayes, James Aloysius Hogan, Irene P. Loftus, Mark E. Rabogliatti, Keith J. Rothfus, Cathleen M. Schuller, Lester K. Syren, Edward L. White III.

Valparaiso University School of Law: Henry A. De Jong, Karl Hellested.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

(15)

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al., - - - Appellants,

versus

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al., - - - - - - - - - - - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF CHRISTIAN ADVOCATES SERVING EVANGELISM AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

JAY ALAN SEKULOW
THEODORE H. AMSHOFF, JR.*
ERIC A. DALY
JAMES M. HENDERSON, SR.
Christian Advocates Serving Evangelism
Suite 520, Rhodes-Haverty Building
134 Peachtree Street
Atlanta, GA 30303
(404) 584-8040
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Counsel of record*

WESTERFIELD-BONTE CO., 619 W. KENTUCKY–P.O. BOX 3251, LOUISVILLE, KY.

35p

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
TABLE OF CONTENTS	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS	vii
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	3
I. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Adjudication of Abortion Cases in the Supreme Court.	4
A. The Abortion Cases Have Created Inconsistency Antithetical to Stare Decisis and the Rule of Law.	4
1. Inconsistent results	5
2. Inconsistent standards	6
B. The Abortion Cases Have Accorded Abortion a Status Inconsistent with the Jurisprudence of Privacy Rights.	7
C. The Abortion Cases Have Disregarded General Limitations on the Adjudication of the Merits of a Constitutional Challenge.	10
1. Standing	10
2. Mootness	11
3. Finality	12
4. Overbreadth	12
5. Statutory construction	13
II. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Adjudication of Cases That Involve Abortion Directly or Indirectly in the Lower Courts.	14
A. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Law of Free Speech .	14
1. Federal free speech rights	14
2. State constitutional free speech rights	19
B. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted Tort Law.	20
1. Wrongful death	21
2. Wrongful birth and wrongful life	22
C. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Criminal Law.	23
1. Prenatal homicide	24
2. Excessive sentencing of pro-life activists	25
3. Defense of justification	26
CONCLUSION	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

PAGE

Cases:

Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288 (1936) 10

Bering v. SHARE, 106 Wash. 2d 212, 721 P.2d 918 (1986) (en banc), cert. dismissed, 479 U.S. 1050 (1987) 15-17, 18

Berman v. Allen, 80 N.J. 421, 404 A.2d 8 (1979) 23

Blake v. Cruz, 108 Idaho 253, 698 P.2d 315 (1984), aff'd on rehearing, 108 Idaho 253, 698 P.2d 315 (1985) 23

Board of Airport Comm'rs of Los Angeles v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 107 S.Ct. 2568 (1987) 15

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 8

Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972) 8

Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973) 12

Brown v. Davis, 203 N.J. Super. 41, 495 A.2d 900 (Ch. Div. 1984) 20

Buchanan v. Jorgensen, Docket No. 87-Z-213 (D. Colo. 1987) 19

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod. Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) ..... 5, passim

City of St. Louis v. Klocker, 637 S.W.2d 174 (Mo. Ct. App. 1982) 26

Cleveland v. Municipality of Anchorage, 631 P.2d 1073 (Alaska 1981) 26

Cockrum v. Baumgartner, 95 Ill. 2d 193, 447 N.E.2d 385, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 846 (1983) 23

Crozer Chester Medical Center v. May, 352 Pa. Super. 51, 506 A.2d 1377 (1986) 20

Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54 (1986) 11

DiNatale v. Lieberman, 409 So. 2d 512 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982) 23

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 9, 13

Dumer v. St. Michael's Hosp., 69 Wis. 2d 766, 233 N.W.2d 372 (1975) 23

Eisbrenner v. Stanley, 106 Mich. App. 357, 308 N.W.2d 209 (1981), leave denied, 414 Mich. 875 (1982) 23

Fairfield Commons Condo. Ass'n v. Stasa, 30 Ohio App. 3d 11, 506 N.E.2d 237 (1985) 26

Gaetano v. United States, 406 A.2d 1291 (D.C. 1979) 26

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 9

Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774 (Tenn. 1977) 21

Harbeson v. Parke-Davis, Inc., 98 Wash. 2d 460, 656 P.2d 483 (1983) (en banc) 23

Hernandez v. Garwood, 390 So. 2d 357 (Fla. 1980) 21

Hickman v. Group Health Plan, Inc., No. 84-15376 (Minn. Dist. Ct. Aug. 15, 1985), rev'd, 396 N.W.2d 10 (Minn. 1986) (en banc) 23

Hoffart v. State, 686 S.W.2d 259 (Tex. Ct. App. 1985) 26

Hollis v. Commonwealth, 652 S.W.2d 61 (Ky. 1983) 24-25

Jacobs v. Major, 139 Wis. 2d 492, 407 N.W.2d 832 (1987) 20

Jacobs v. Thiemer, 519 S.W.2d 846 (Tex. 1975) 23

Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905) 8

James G. v. Caserta, 332 S.E.2d 872 (W. Va. 1985) 23

Justus v. Atchison, 19 Cal. 3d 564, 565 P.2d 122, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97 (1977) (en banc) 21

Kugler v. Ryan, 682 S.W.2d 47 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984) 20

Markley v. State, 507 So. 2d 1043 (Ala. Crim. App. 1987) 25

Naccash v. Burger, 223 Va. 406, 290 S.E.2d 825 (1982) ... 23

Nelson v. Peterson, 542 P.2d 1075 (Utah 1975) 21

New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982) 8

O.B.G.Y.N. Ass'n v. Birthright of Brooklyn and Queens, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 894, 407 N.Y.S.2d 903 (1973) 18

Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415 (1971) 15, 18

Parkmed Co. v. Pro-Life Counselling, Inc., 91 A.D.2d 551, 457 N.Y.S.2d 27 (1982) 18

People v. Krizka, 92 Ill. App. 3d 288, 416 N.E.2d 36 (1980) 26

People v. Smith, 59 Cal. App. 3d 751, 129 Cal. Rptr. 498 (1976) 24

Perry Educ. Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37 (1983) 15

Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 5

Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 5, 7, 8, 9, 13

Planned Parenthood of Monmouth County v. Cannizzaro, 204 N.J. Super. 531, 499 A.2d 535 (Ch. Div. 1985) 20
Portland Feminist Women's Health Center v. Advocates for Life, 859 F.2d. 681 (9th Cir. 1988) 17-18
Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 8
PruneYard Shopping Center v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74 (1980) 19, 20
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 11
Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center, 23 Cal. 3d 899, 592 P.2d 341, 153 Cal. Rptr. 854 (1979), aff'd, 447 U.S. 74 (1980) 20
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... 1, passim
SHAD Alliance v. Smith Haven Mall, 66 N.Y.2d 496, 488 N.E.2d 1211, 498 N.Y.S.2d 99 (1985) 20
Sigma Reprod. Health Center v. Maryland, 297 Md. 660, 467 A.2d 483 (1983) 26
Smith v. Newsome, 815 F.2d 1386 (11th Cir. 1987) 24
State v. Andrews, No. 86-1663 (Escambia County Cir. Ct. sentence entered Sept. 24, 1986) 25
State v. Brown, 212 N.J. Super. 61, 513 A.2d 974 (App. Div. 1986) 20
State v. Brown, 378 So. 2d 916 (La. 1979) 25
State v. Horn, 126 Wis. 2d 447, 377 N.W.2d 176 (Ct. App. 1985), aff'd, 139 Wis. 2d 473, 407 N.W.2d 854 (1987) 26
State v. Horn, 139 Wis. 2d 473, 407 N.W.2d 854 (1987) .. 20, 26
State v. Kerr, Nos. 59084A, 59084C (Fulton County, Ga. State Ct. Jan. 31, 1989) 25
State v. Roberts, Nos. 59082A, 59082C (Fulton County, Ga. State Ct. Jan. 31, 1989) 26
State v. Schmid, 84 N.J. 535, 423 A.2d 615 (1980), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 100 (1982) 20
Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968) 8
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747 (1986) ..... 3, passim
Toth v. Goree, 65 Mich. App. 296, 237 N.W.2d 297 (1976) 22
Turpin v. Sortini, 31 Cal. 3d 220, 643 P.2d 954, 182 Cal. Rptr. 337 (1982) 23

United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095 (1987) 12
Valenzuela v. Aquino, No. 13-88-184-CV (Tex. Ct. App. Dec. 15, 1988) 18
Wallace v. Wallace, 120 N.H. 675, 421 A.2d 134 (1980) ... 22
Werling v. Sandy, 17 Ohio St. 3d 45, 476 N.E.2d 1053 (1985). 22

Constitutional, Statutory, and Ordinance Provisions:

Boulder City Ordinance No. 4982 (1986) 19
Mo. Rev. Stat. 1.205.1(1)-(2) 11
U.S. Const. amend. I. 14
Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 939.46, 939.47 (West 1980) 27

Other Authorities:

Annotation, Right to Maintain Action or to Recover Damages for Death of Unborn Child, 84 A.L.R.3d 411 (1978) 21
Abortion and the Constitution: Reversing Roe v. Wade Through the Courts (1987) 4
Arnolds & Garland, The Defense of Necessity in Criminal Law: The Right to Choose the Lesser Evil, 65 J. Crim. L. & Criminology 289 (1974). 26
A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 4
Bopp & Coleson, The Right to Abortion: Anomalous, Absolute and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 191 (1989) 3, 10, 24
Brennan, State Constitutions and the Protection of Individual Rights, 90 Harv. L. Rev. 489 (1977) 19
Brown, What the Supreme Court Didn't Know: Ancient and Early Christian Views on Abortion, 1 Hum. Life Rev. 5 (Spring 1975) 4
Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973) 4
A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 4
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 4
Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: the Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 ..... 4, 11

Gorby, The 'Right' to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment 'Personhood,' and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 S. Ill. U.L.J. 1 4

Horan, Forsythe & Grant, Two Ships Passing in the Night: An Interpretavist Review of the White-Stevens Colloquy on Roe v. Wade, 6 St. Louis U. Pub. L. Rev. 229 (1987) 4

S. Krason & W. Hollberg, The Law and History of Abortion: The Supreme Court Refuted (1984) 4

S. Krason, Abortion: Politics, Morality and the Constitution (1984) 4

Morgan, Roe v. Wade and the Lesson of the Pre-Roe Case Law, 77 Mich L. Rev. 1724 (1979) 4

J. Noonan, A Private Choice: Abortion In America in the Seventies (1979) 4

Pollock, State Constitutions as Separate Sources of Fundamental Rights, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 707 (1983) 19

Rice, The Dred Scott of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1973) 4

INTEREST OF AMICUS

Christian Advocates Serving Evangelism (CASE) is a legal defense organization dedicated to protecting, preserving and defending the right to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ in public places.

Counsel for amicus have specialized in litigation in both state and federal courts with regard to various First Amendment issues. Mr. Jay Alan Sekulow serves as counsel with CASE, and has appeared before the Court in Board of Airport Commissioners of Los Angeles v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 107 S.Ct. 2568 (1987). Amicus believes that the experience of its counsel will be of assistance to the Court in this case.

Amicus is particularly concerned by a disturbing tendency to undermine cherished First Amendment freedoms by wrongly using the right of privacy in matters involving abortion.

The parties to the present case have consented to the filing of this brief; letters granting consent are being submitted with this brief.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., - - - Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL., - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), purported to convert the crime of abortion into a constitutional right. This fundamental inversion of the law has led to distortions of substantive and procedural matters in Roe and in subsequent Supreme Court decisions on abortion. Roe has also produced a distortion in lower court cases relating, directly or indirectly, to abortion.

Supreme Court abortion cases have yielded a distorted jurisprudence. The Court has rendered inconsistent decisions and applied inconsistent standards in reviewing abortion legislation. The Court has treated abortion as a virtually absolute right not subject to the limitations placed upon other asserted privacy rights. Furthermore, the Court has repeatedly disregarded or misapplied doctrines of standing, mootness, finality, overbreadth, and statutory construction in an apparent eagerness to reach out and overturn restrictions on abortion.

Lower court cases following the Supreme Court abortion decisions necessarily reflect this distorted jurisprudence. The "abortion distortion factor" has also carried over, however, into areas of the law other than the regulation of abortion. Thus, for example, the warping influence of Roe appears in lower federal and state court decisions involving the right of free speech, the law of torts, and the criminal law.

In free speech cases, courts have regularly subordinated the rights of those engaged in expressive activities opposing abortion to the apparent goal of facilitating abortion.

In the law of torts, Roe has hindered the recognition of a wrongful death cause of action for children who die before birth. Roe has also spawned judicial acceptance of the torts of wrongful birth and wrongful life, in which failure to abort or be aborted is asserted as an injury.

In the criminal law, Roe has impeded the application of homicide laws to offenders who kill unborn children against the will of their mothers. Exaggerated deference to Roe has also prompted courts to issue excessively harsh sentences to those convicted for resisting abortion. Roe, moreover, has led to the frequent denial of the defense of justification for those who technically break the law in order to save unborn children threatened with death by abortion.

Adherence to Roe has produced instability and distortion in the law, both in this Court and in the lower federal and state courts. This destructive influence appears not only in the law of abortion, but also in completely distinct areas of law. This Court should now overrule Roe in order to preserve the rule of law and the integrity of the judiciary.

ARGUMENT

The decisions of this Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and its progeny, purported to convert what had long been a crime — abortion — into a fundamental constitutional right. This radical inversion of the law has warped the legal landscape and corroded the rule of law, not just in the area of substantive state regulation of abortion, but in a wide variety of contexts. Roe is manifestly a destructive and destabilizing force in the law. This Court should therefore overrule Roe v. Wade.

Justice O'Connor has observed that "[t]his Court's abortion decisions have already worked a major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747, 814 (1986) (O'Connor, J., dissenting). This "abortion distortion" has extended to non-constitutional questions as well. Commentators have thoroughly documented the "abortion distortion factor" in Supreme Court jurisprudence in such areas as stare decisis, standing, procedure, privacy, legal protection for unborn children, and the regulation of medical practice,[1] confirming Justice O'Connor's conclusion that "it [is] painfully clear that no legal rule or doctrine is safe from ad hoc nullification by this Court when an occasion for its application arises in a case involving state regulation of abortion." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Furthermore, the distorting influence of Roe v. Wade has also affected the adjudication in the lower courts of a broad range of cases which touch, directly or indirectly, upon the subject of abortion. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 1.

---

[1] See generally Bopp & Coleson, The Right to Abortion: Anomalous, Absolute and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U.J. Pub. L. 191 (1989) (forthcoming).

I. ROE v. WADE HAS DISTORTED THE ADJUDICATION OF ABORTION CASES IN THE SUPREME COURT.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), itself represented a major aberration in constitutional law. Criticism of its reasoning, result, and supposed historical research have been widespread and severe.[2] Subsequent abortion cases, moreover, have multiplied the flaws of this Court's abortion jurisprudence, further illustrating the fundamental defects of the seminal decision in Roe.[3]

A. The Abortion Cases Have Created Inconsistency Antithetical to Stare Decisis and the Rule of Law.

Perhaps the primary hallmark of this Court's abortion jurisprudence has been the failure of the Court to provide consistent, reliable guidance for state legislatures. It has become virtually impossible for states to pass abortion laws that will withstand judicial review

[2] See, e.g., Rice, The Dred Scott of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1973); Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 113-14 (1976); A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent 27-28 (1975); Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159; Morgan, Roe v. Wade and the Lesson of the Pre-Roe Case Law, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1724 (1979); Gorby, The 'Right' to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment 'Personhood,' and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 S. Ill. U.L.J. 1; Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973); Horan, Forsythe & Grant, Two Ships Passing in the Night: An Interpretavist Review of the White-Stevens Colloquy on Roe v. Wade, 6 St. Louis U. Pub. L. Rev. 229 (1987); Abortion and the Constitution: Reversing Roe v. Wade Through the Courts (1987); Brown, What the Supreme Court Didn't Know: Ancient and Early Christian Views on Abortion, 1 Hum. Life Rev. 5 (Spring 1975); S. Krason & W. Hollberg, The Law and History of Abortion: The Supreme Court Refuted (1984); S. Krason, Abortion: Politics, Morality and the Constitution (1984).

[3] See, e.g., J. Noonan, A Private Choice: Abortion In America in the Seventies (1979). See generally Bopp & Coleson, supra note 1.

because this Court repeatedly changes the relevant case law. See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 798 (White, J., dissenting) ("the legislature's willingness to pursue permissible policies through means that go to the limits allowed by existing precedents is no sign of mens rea. The majority, however, seems to find it necessary to respond by changing the rules to invalidate what before would have seemed permissible").

1. Inconsistent Results

Thus, in one case the Court suggested that a hospitalization requirement would be a permissible regulation of abortion after the second trimester, Roe, 410 U.S. at 163, but in a later case the Court overturned just such a requirement, City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod. Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 437-39 (1983). In one case, the Court sustained the requirement that a woman give informed consent to abortion, Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 66-67 (1976), but in subsequent cases the Court struck down statutes geared to ensuring such informed consent, Akron, 462 U.S. at 442-49; Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 759-65. In one case, the Court sustained record-keeping requirements, Danforth, 428 U.S. at 80-81, but in a later case the Court invalidated similar requirements, Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 765-68. In one case, the Court upheld a second-physician requirement for post-viable abortions, Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 485-86, 505 (1983) (plurality and concurring opinions), but just three years later the Court held unconstitutional an effectively identical provision, Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 769-71.

2. Inconsistent Standards

Nor is the inconsistency of the abortion decisions confined to the mere application of the standards set forth in Roe — those standards themselves shift from case to case. Thus the Court established, in Roe, a detailed trimester system for reviewing legislation, 410 U.S. at 164-65, only to invoke a new standard — "accepted medical practice" — in the Akron case, 462 U.S. at 431, and then yet another standard — risk of discouraging abortion — in the Thornburgh case, see 476 U.S. at 759 ("effort to deter"), 762 ("attempt to . . . discourag[e] abortion"), 763 ("discouragement for the abortion decision"), 766 (requirements make woman "more reluctant to choose an abortion"), 768 ("danger of deterring" abortion). In Roe, the Court declared that the State has a "compelling interest" in protecting viable unborn children, 410 U.S. at 163, and may therefore prohibit, after viability, any abortions not necessary to preserve the woman's health, id. at 165; in Thornburgh, however, the Court effectively abolished restrictions on post-viable abortions, when it repudiated limitations that might advance fetal survival while posing any "increased medical risk" to the woman, 476 U.S. at 769. And in Roe the Court emphasized the central role of physician consultation in abortion decisions, 410 U.S. at 163, yet in Akron the Court saw no need "for insisting that the physician performing the abortion, or for that matter any physician, personally counsel the patient . . .," 462 U.S. at 448.

This inconsistent application and distortion of constitutional jurisprudence flows directly from Roe v. Wade: "That the Court's unworkable scheme for constitutionalizing the regulation of abortion has had this institutionally debilitating effect should not be surprising, . . . since the Court is not suited to the expansive role it has claimed for itself in the series of cases that began with Roe v. Wade . . . ." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814-15 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (citation omitted). So long as this Court acts as an " 'ex officio medical board with powers to approve or disapprove medical and operative practices and standards throughout the United States,' " Akron, 462 U.S. at 456 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (quoting Danforth, 428 U.S. at 99 (White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part)), the inevitable results will be endless litigation, legislative frustration, and increasing disrespect for a Court seemingly engaged in result-oriented adjudication.

B. The Abortion Cases Have Accorded Abortion a Status Inconsistent with the Jurisprudence of Privacy Rights.

The Roe Court held that implicit privacy guarantees in the Constitution included a right to abortion. 410 U.S. at 153. The Court cautioned, however, that "[t]he pregnant woman cannot be isolated in her privacy" — she carries her offspring in her womb — and that therefore the abortion context is "inherently different" from past privacy cases involving "marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education," id. at 159 (citations omitted). The consequence of this inherent difference was, in theory, that abortion enjoyed a lesser constitutional status than activities previously recognized as privacy rights: "The woman's privacy is no longer sole and any right of privacy she possesses must be measured accordingly." Id. Yet in practice, the Court has granted greater protection to abortion than to any right of privacy asserted before or after Roe. Abortion, in short, has received an anomalous,

"super-protected" status. Ely, supra note 2, at 935.

No more than a brief survey is necessary to demonstrate the willingness of this Court, in cases not involving abortion, to accept a wide variety of limitations on asserted privacy rights. The Court has upheld a ban on the distribution of child pornography, New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982), has sustained the power of criminal investigators to compel a journalist to reveal his source of information, Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972), has upheld a warrantless police stop and search, Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968), has allowed compulsory vaccination, Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905), has approved a ban on literature distribution by children even where accompanied by parents, Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944), and has sustained a ban on homosexual sodomy, Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). Analogous degrees of restriction on abortion could never pass muster under the line of cases begun with Roe v. Wade. In Danforth, for example, the Court overturned requirements of parental consent for minors, spousal consent, and a ban on the use of saline amniocentesis abortions. The Akron Court overturned a hospitalization requirement for abortions after the first trimester, a parental consent requirement for girls fourteen years old and younger, informed consent provisions, a twenty-four hour waiting period, and a requirement of humane disposition for bodies of aborted babies. Thornburgh overturned informed consent and recordkeeping requirements and a requirement that a second physician attend the abortion of a viable unborn baby. Indeed, this Court has even refused to let competing privacy rights disturb what it apparently has viewed as the constitutional preeminence of abortion. See Danforth, 428 U.S. at 69-71 (rejecting marital privacy interests as justification for spousal consent law); id. at 72-75 (rejecting parental rights as justification for minor consent law).

A comparison with the permissible regulation of marriage, "a right of privacy older than the Bill of Rights . . . and intimate to the degree of being sacred," see Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 486 (1965), is illustrative of the disparity between abortion and general privacy jurisprudence. As commentators have observed, > while states may require marriages to be licensed, [Doe v.] Bolton declared that states could not require hospitals performing abortions to be licensed. [410 U.S. 179, 194 (1973).] Although waiting periods of three to five days from the time of receiving the marriage license to the time of the ceremony are common, Akron held that a twenty-four hour waiting period from the time a woman contacted an abortionist to the abortion was unconstitutional. [462 U.S. at 450-51.] Despite residency requirements for marriage and divorce, Bolton rejected state residency requirements for abortion. [410 U.S. at 200.] Ignoring the requirement of parental consent for minors to marry, Danforth struck down a state statute requiring parental consent for minors to obtain abortions. [428 U.S. at 75.] While extensive recordkeeping is permitted in marriage regulation, Thornburgh declared state recordkeeping regulations for abortion unconstitutional, even though confidentiality was guaranteed in the statute. [476 U.S. at 765-68.] And, despite the medical examinations and > tests required for marriage, Akron struck down a statute requiring a physician to tell a woman "[t]hat according to his best judgment . . . she is pregnant" before performing an abortion procedure on her. [462 U.S. at 423 n.5, 445 n.37.]

Bopp & Coleson, supra note 1, at 61-62 (manuscript pagination) (footnotes omitted) (bracketed citations added).

C. The Abortion Cases Have Disregarded General Limitations on the Adjudication of the Merits of a Constitutional Challenge.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized a number of limitations, whether constitutionally mandatory or merely prudential, on the propriety of federal court adjudication of the merits of a constitutional claim. See Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 345-48 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). In abortion cases, however, these limitations vanish in favor of an apparent eagerness to strike down regulations of abortion.

1. Standing

The plaintiff in Roe v. Wade failed to meet the most basic requirement of standing — that the person challenging a law be somehow injured by that law. Jane Roe alleged that she was pregnant and wanted an abortion. Yet under Texas law, "the pregnant woman herself could not be prosecuted for self-abortion or for cooperating in an abortion performed upon her by another." 410 U.S. at 151 (footnote omitted). Thus, the obstacle Roe faced was not the Texas law, but the unwillingness of an abortionist to challenge that law. The Court nevertheless granted Roe standing to bring suit. Id. at 124-25.[4]

2. Mootness

The mootness doctrine should also have barred Jane Roe from pursuing her claim, at least on appeal. She brought suit in March of 1970; obviously, her pregnancy must have ended no later than the latter part of that year. 410 U.S. at 124. No exception from general mootness principles was necessary because the issue was not necessarily "capable of repetition, yet evading review." An abortionist — who, unlike Jane Roe, actually faced the threat of prosecution — could, and in Roe itself did, id. at 125-26, litigate precisely the same challenge to abortion laws. Yet the Court disregarded the mootness of Roe's case and proceeded to the merits. Id. at 125. See Epstein, supra note 2, at 162-64 (Roe erred in disregarding mootness).

---

[4] The destructive impact of this holding on the doctrine of standing appears vividly in the case now before this Court. The court of appeals struck down a statute, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1(1)-(2), which merely declares the humanity and protectability of unborn children. Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F. 2d 1071, 1075-77 (8th Cir. 1988). The statute has no substantive effect whatsoever. Id. at 1076 (statute is "introductory and foundational comment" and an "adoption of a theory") (emphasis added), and thus plainly could not restrict or injure anyone. The court of appeals nevertheless announced that "the Supreme Court has visibly relaxed its traditional standing principles in deciding abortion cases," id. at 1075 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), and concluded that "[n]o persons are better situated to attack the constitutionality of this [statute]" than those parties who, like plaintiffs, offer or seek abortions, id. at 1076 & n.6. The assumption of the court seems to be that, in abortion cases, someone must always have standing to challenge a statute, and that therefore the only issue for the court is the identification of which parties are best situated to bring suit. In essence, standing no longer has relevance in abortion cases, except perhaps to exclude those seeking to defend abortion laws. See Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54 (1986) (denying standing to appeal to private intervenors defending abortion statutes).

3. Finality

The Thornburgh Court should not have rendered a final determination on the merits of that challenge to abortion regulations. In Thornburgh the Court improperly used a preliminary record and interlocutory appeal as a vehicle for finally adjudicating the constitutionality of the challenged statues. See 476 U.S. at 756-57; see also id. at 815-26 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (criticizing the majority's disregard of the normal standard of review for appeals from preliminary injunctions). The error in Thornburgh was especially egregious because of the fact that the parties had expressly stipulated that the preliminary record was not to be binding on the parties in further proceedings. Id. at 815-16 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

4. Overbreadth

The Court has misapplied overbreadth jurisprudence in abortion cases.

The overbreadth doctrine enables litigants to "challenge a statute, not because their own rights . . . are violated, but because of a judicial prediction or assumption that the statute's very existence may cause others not before the court to refrain" from protected activity. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612 (1973).

This Court has declared, however, that it "ha[s] not recognized an 'overbreadth' doctrine outside the limited scope of the First Amendment." United States v. Salerno, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987) (citation omitted). The fact that a law "might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is insufficient to render it wholly invalid . . . ." Id.

Nevertheless, this Court has employed the overbreadth doctrine in abortion cases. E.g., Roe, 410 U.S. at 164 (anti-abortion statute "sweeps too broadly"); Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 195 (hospitalization requirement "fails to exclude the first trimester of pregnancy"); Danforth, 428 U.S. at 74-75 (parental consent law for minors fails to exclude mature minors).

5. Statutory Construction

This Court has also disregarded, in abortion cases, the rule that a state law should be interpreted so as to avoid constitutional difficulties. In Thornburgh, for example, the Court overturned a requirement that a second physician attend the abortion of a viable child. The Court held that the law contained no emergency exception, even though the statute provided a general defense for abortions necessary for the life or health of the mother. 476 U.S. at 770-71. And in Danforth, the Court overturned a statute requiring the abortionist to exercise care to preserve the life and health of the unborn child, even though the law could have been viewed as applying only when the child had a chance of surviving, i.e., might be viable. See 428 U.S. at 82-83; id. at 99-100 (White, J., dissenting). Rather than seeking constitutionally acceptable interpretations of state law, the Court has employed "an entirely different principle: that in cases involving abortion, a permissible reading of a statute is to be avoided at all costs." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 812 (White, J., dissenting).

In sum, the Court seems to have embraced "the notion that normal rules of law, procedure, and constitutional adjudication suddenly become irrelevant solely because a case touches on the subject of abortion." Danforth, 428 U.S. at 98 (White, J., dissenting). As Justice O'Connor observed in Thornburgh, "[i]f this case did not involve state regulation of abortion, it may be doubted that the Court would entertain, let alone adopt, such a departure from its precedents." 476 U.S. at 826.

II. ROE v. WADE HAS DISTORTED THE ADJUDICATION OF CASES THAT INVOLVE ABORTION DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY IN THE LOWER COURTS.

The "abortion distortion factor" characterizing Roe v. Wade and other Supreme Court abortion cases has necessarily warped the abortion jurisprudence of lower courts following these precedents. The distortion has also spilled over, however, into cases that touch only indirectly upon the subject of abortion. In free speech litigation, tort law, and criminal law, for example, legal doctrines have been bent, ignored, or molded in an apparent effort to reshape the entire legal landscape to accommodate the erroneous principles of Roe.

A. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Law of Free Speech

Roe v. Wade and the cases following it have bestowed increasingly absolute protection upon the practice of abortion. One of the competing rights to give way in the judicial expansion of abortion is the right of free speech under the federal and state constitutions.

1. Federal Free Speech Rights

Lower state and federal courts have discarded established first amendment principles in an effort to restrict the speech of pro-life activists.

The first amendment to the United States Constitution provides explicit protection for "freedom of speech." U.S. Const. amend. I. The Supreme Court has construed this broad provision to provide varying protection for expressive activity depending upon the location of the activity and the scope and nature of the restriction. Maximum protection applies to speech in traditional public forum property. Board of Airport Comm'rs v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 107 S. Ct. 2568, 2569 (1987). The "quintessential" public fora are public streets and sidewalks. Perry Educ. Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37, 45 (1983). The least permissible scope of restriction on speech is either a total ban or a restriction based on the content of the expression. Jews for Jesus, 107 S. Ct. at 2571; id. at 2572 (restriction that "purports to create a virtual 'First Amendment Free Zone' " is unconstitutionally overbroad). And the most disfavored restriction of all is the prior restraint — the injunction or licensing requirement. Prior restraints forbid speech in advance, while the more typical legislative restriction only applies when the government can prove, after the fact, the unlawfulness of the speaker's conduct. Prior restraints must overcome a strong presumption of unconstitutionality. Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415, 419 (1971).

Thus, the least justifiable, most constitionally suspect restriction on expressive activity would be a prior restraint concerning content or creating a "speech-free zone" in a public forum. In cases involving pro-life citizens engaged in expressive activity outside abortion businesses, courts have issued precisely such restrictions.

Perhaps the most flagrant example appears in the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Washington in Bering v. SHARE, 106 Wash. 2d 212, 721 P.2d 918 (1986) (en banc), cert. dismissed, 479 U.S. 1050 (1987). In Bering, the trial court enjoined all picketing, demonstrating, and sidewalk counseling anywhere in front of an office building housing an abortion business. Id. at 219, 721 P.2d at 923. The trial court limited expressive activity to a portion of the sidewalk around the corner and set back from the street running in front of the building. Id. The trial court also forbade the enjoined individuals from speaking the words "murder," "kill," and their derivatives while at the designated picket site. Id. at 219, 721 P.2d at 924.

The state supreme court upheld the creation of a "speech-free zone" along the sidewalk in front of the office building, id. at 221-33, 721 P.2d at 924-31, even though the court acknowledged that "only anti-abortion picketers are bound by the geographic restriction," id. at 223, 721 P.2d at 925, and even though the court conceded that "[a] similar restriction which enjoined all picketers of any persuasion, regardless of their conduct, would have been overly broad," id. (citations omitted).

The state supreme court relied heavily upon Roe v. Wade and its progeny, see Bering, 106 Wash. 2d at 227-30, 721 P.2d at 927-29, to justify these restrictions. The Bering court admitted that private expressive activity "does not constitute State action," id. at 227 n.3, 721 P.2d at 927 n.3, but nonetheless ruled that such activity "can be expected to impinge upon a woman's right to privacy," id. at 228, 721 P.2d at 928. Applying the Thornburgh notion that discouraging abortion is unconstitutional, the Bering court further reasoned that if picketing were allowed in front of the building, physicians "eventually might refuse to participate in a woman's abortion decision." 106 Wash. 2d at 229, 721 P.2d at 929. The court held that the state had "a compelling interest in protecting a woman's ability to effectuate her constitutional right to obtain an abortion by mitigating the harassing effect of anti-abortion picketers," id. at 230, 721 P.2d at 929 (emphasis in original), and concluded that "[a]n injunction which permitted any anti-abortion picketing on the [front] sidewalk would not adequately serve the State's compelling interest in protecting a woman's constitutional right to privacy . . .," id. at 231, 721 P.2d at 930 (emphasis added).[5]

The Bering court also upheld, in principle, the injunctive ban on the spoken use of the words "murder" and "kill," id. at 234-42, 721 P.2d at 932-36, even though it conceded that a similar ban on the printed use of these words on picket signs would be unconstitutional, id. at 237, 721 P.2d at 933. The court held that the trial court's content-based injunction must be narrowed, however, to apply only in the presence of children. Id. at 241-42, 721 P.2d at 935.

A similar, if somewhat less outrageous, distortion of first amendment analysis appeared in a recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. See Portland Feminist Women's Health Center v. Advocates for Life, 859 F.2d 681 (9th Cir. 1988). In Portland Feminist, the district court had issued a preliminary injunction that forbade "demonstrating or distributing literature" in front of the abortion center in a "free zone" extending twenty-five feet along the public sidewalk. Id. at 684, 686. The court of appeals sustained this creation of a speech-free zone. Id. at 686. Disregarding the injunctive nature of the restriction, the court applied the standard for reviewing legislative regulations of the time, place, and manner of speech, id.,[6] and upheld the injunctive provision.

---

[5] The Supreme Court of Washington completely ignored the fact that it was reviewing a court injunction and not a legislative enactment. The furtherance of state interests via substantive regulations is a matter of legislative prerogative, and not a proper judicial function. If this were not so, courts of equity would possess full legislative powers.

The distortion evident in Bering and Portland Feminist has surfaced in other injunction cases as well, particularly in the readiness of trial courts to issue broad prior restraints against pro-life speech. Thus in O.B.G.Y.N. Association v. Birthright of Brooklyn and Queens, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 894, 407 N.Y.S.2d 903 (1973), the trial court had enjoined "the use of the words 'murder,' 'kill' and similar words on placards," 64 A.D.2d at ___, 407 N.Y.S.2d at 906 (quoting trial court order), had enjoined the pro-life defendants from " 'engaging in conversation with anyone at or in front of' " the abortion business, id. at ___, 407 N.Y.S.2d at 906 (quoting trial court order), and had ordered the pro-lifers to "keep[ ] the streets free of their pamphlets or literature," id. at ___, 407 N.Y.S.2d at 907. In another New York case, see Parkmed Co. v. Pro-Life Counselling, Inc., 91 A.D.2d 551, 457 N.Y.S.2d 27 (1982), the trial court had enjoined pro-life activists from all demonstrating and picketing in the "quasi-public area" in front of an abortion business. Id. at ___, 457 N.Y.S.2d at 29. And in a Texas case, see Valenzuela v. Aquino, No. 13-88-184-CV (Tex. Ct. App. Dec. 15, 1988), the trial court had temporarily enjoined pro-life defendants from "engaging in any type of picketing or protest conduct within one-half mile of appellees' home." Slip op. at 1. In these latter three cases, the reviewing courts all modified or overturned the objectionable injunctive provisions. None of these [6] The Supreme Court has never applied the time, place, and manner test to injunctive restrictions, but instead has examined such restrictions under the doctrine of prior restraints. E.g., Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415 (1971).

reviewing courts, however, rejected the authority of the lower courts, in principle, to grant substantive injunctive restrictions on pro-life citizens engaged in expressive activities.[7]

2. State Constitutional Free Speech Rights

The abortion distortion factor has also had a visible impact upon the litigation of free speech rights under state constitutions.

Recent years have witnessed a burst of activity in the state courts regarding the interpretation of state constitutional guarantees of civil liberties. See Brennan, State Constitutions and the Protection of Individual Rights, 90 Harv. L. Rev. 489 (1977); Pollock, State Constitutions as Separate Sources of Fundamental Rights, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 707 (1983). The decision of this Court in PruneYard Shopping Center v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74 (1980), has prompted special at-[7] The distortion of first amendment cases involving pro-life speakers is not confined to the issuance of injunctions. Courts have also sustained legislative enactments geared to suppress pro-life speech. In Colorado, for example, a federal district court refused to grant a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of the following city ordinance.

> Section 1. A new Section 5-3-10 is enacted to read:
>
> 5-3-10 Harassment Near Health Care Facility.
>
> No person seeking to pass a leaflet or handbill to or display a sign to or engage in conversation, protest, counseling, or other verbal exchange with a second person, within one hundred feet of a health care facility, shall approach closer than eight feet of such person, unless such second person gives express oral consent to do so; and upon request of such second person, no such first person shall fail to withdraw to at least eight feet from such second person or in the alternative, to discontinue all efforts at passing such leaflet or handbill or displaying such sign or engaging in such conversation, protest, counseling, or other verbal exchange. For the purposes of this subsection, distance shall be measured from any extension of the first person's body, including without limitation a sign, to any part of the second person's body.

Boulder City Ordinance No. 4982 (1986). See Buchanan v. Jorgensen, Docket No. 87-Z-213 (D. Colo. 1987).

tention to the question whether state constitutional protection of free speech extends to expressive activity on private property.

State courts have divided over the availability of such protection. Compare, e.g., Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center, 23 Cal. 3d 899, 592 P.2d 341, 153 Cal. Rptr. 854 (1979) (state constitution protects speech in private shopping center), aff'd on other grounds, 447 U.S. 74 (1980); State v. Schmid, 84 N.J. 535, 423 A.2d 615 (1980) (state constitution protects speech on private college campus), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 100 (1982), with SHAD Alliance v. Smith Haven Mall, 66 N.Y.2d 496, 488 N.E.2d 1211, 498 N.Y.S.2d 99 (1985) (state constitution does not protect speech against restrictions by private shopping center); Jacobs v. Major, 139 Wis. 2d 492, 407 N.W.2d 832 (1987) (same).

The reported decisions are unanimous, however, in rejecting state constitutional free speech claims brought by pro-life activists. Kugler v. Ryan, 682 S.W.2d 47 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984); State v. Brown, 212 N.J. Super. 61, 513 A.2d 974 (App. Div. 1986); Planned Parenthood of Monmouth County v. Cannizzaro, 204 N.J. Super. 531, 499 A.2d 535 (Ch. Div. 1985); Brown v. Davis, 203 N.J. Super. 41, 495 A.2d 900 (Ch. Div. 1984); Crozer Chester Medical Center v. May, 352 Pa. Super. 51, 506 A.2d 1377 (1986); State v. Horn, 139 Wis. 2d 473, 407 N.W.2d 854 (1987).

B. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted Tort Law.

Roe's denial of unborn personhood and declaration of a right to abort has simultaneously dampened the recognition of torts that result in the death of the unborn and spurred recognition of "torts" that produce life or birth.

1. Wrongful Death

A clear majority of jurisdictions recognize a cause of action for the wrongful death of a viable child killed in the womb. Annotation, Right to Maintain Action or to Recover Damages for Death of Unborn Child, 84 A.L.R.3d 411 (1978). The distorting effect of Roe in this area of the law appears in two ways: first, in the rejection of the wrongful death cause of action for unborn children in a minority of jurisdictions; and second, in the requirement, in most other jurisdictions, of a showing of viability as a prerequisite to recovery.

The issue in a statutory wrongful death action is whether the child killed in the womb is a "person" within the meaning of the statute. Roe dealt with the term "person" under the fourteenth amendment, not state law; hence, Roe does not govern the wrongful death question. Nonetheless, courts denying a cause of action for children wrongfully killed before birth cite Roe in support of their decision. E.g., Justus v. Atchison, 19 Cal. 3d 564, 577, 565 P.2d 122, 130-31, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 105-06 (1977) (en banc); Hernandez v. Garwood, 390 So. 2d 357, 359 (Fla. 1980); Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774, 777-78 (Tenn. 1977); cf. Nelson v. Peterson, 542 P.2d 1075, 1077 (Utah 1975) (reserving question) (evidence of illegitimacy of child relevant to damages for prenatal death of such child because "many women undergo abortions in such a situation").

The viability criterion set forth in Roe as a prerequisite for a compelling state interest in protecting unborn children likewise has no necessary connection with the limitation of third-party torts against unborn children. Yet state court decisions adopting viability as a prerequisite for wrongful death recovery clearly show the marks of Roe. A Michigan appellate court, for example, in denying a cause of action for the death of a nonviable unborn child, asserted that there would be an inherent conflict where someone could be held liable for the death of a child the mother could abort. Toth v. Goree, 65 Mich. App. 296, 303, 304, 237 N.W.2d 297, 301 (1976). The state supreme court in New Hampshire, also denying a cause of action for the death of a nonviable unborn child, said that "it would be incongruous for a mother to have a federal constitutional right to deliberately destroy a nonviable fetus . . . and at the same time for a third person to be subject to liability to the fetus for his unintended but merely negligent acts." Wallace v. Wallace, 120 N.H. 675, 679, 421 A.2d 134, 137 (1980) (citation omitted).[8] And the supreme court in Ohio, in allowing a cause of action for the death of a viable unborn child, cited Roe in support of the viability standard it applied to the tort action. Werling v. Sandy, 17 Ohio St. 3d 45, 49, 476 N.E.2d 1053, 1056 (1985).

2. Wrongful Birth and Wrongful Life

Roe declared the destruction of unborn children to be a constitutional right, and not a crime. This radical inversion of the law has spawned judicial acceptance of the notion that birth, and even life itself, can be compensable harms.

In a wrongful birth suit, parents claim that, but for the negligence of the defendant physician, they would have sought to abort their child. The live birth of this child thus constitutes the injury. Such a cause of action sharply conflicts with common understandings of harm and benefit. The recognition of such a tort, moreover, unless counterbalanced by a strong doctrine of wrongful abortion (i.e., wrongful death of unborn children), creates incentives for physicians to advocate, or at least suggest, abortion as an option for all obstetrical patients. Yet in the wake of Roe v. Wade, many state courts have recognized a wrongful birth cause of action.[9] Indeed, one state trial court went so far as to hold wrongful birth suits to be constitutionally required, and thus actionable despite a contrary statute. Hickman v. Group Health Plan, Inc., No. 84-15376 (Minn. Dist. Ct. Aug. 15, 1985), rev'd, 396 N.W.2d 10 (Minn. 1986) (en banc).

[8] The Toth and Wallace courts both based their reasoning upon the assumption, no longer tenable, that Roe and its progeny only sanctioned abortion prior to viability.

A wrongful life cause of action presents a claim by a child that he should have been aborted. The person bringing suit asserts that his own life is a compensable injury. Despite the plainly bizarre nature of such a theory of tort liability, some courts have, after Roe, upheld wrongful life claims. E.g., Turpin v. Sortini, 31 Cal. 3d 220, 643 P.2d 954, 182 Cal. Rptr. 337 (1982); Harbeson v. Parke-Davis, Inc.

C. Roe v. Wade Has Distorted the Criminal Law.

The principal deleterious effect of Roe has been the virtually total negation of criminal laws against [9] E.g., DiNatale v. Lieberman, 409 So. 2d 512 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982); Blake v. Cruz, 108 Idaho 253, 698 P. 2d 315 (1984), aff'd on rehearing, 108 Idaho 253, 698 P.2d 315 (1985); Cockrum v. Baumgartner, 95 Ill. 2d 193, 447 N.E. 2d 385, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 846 (1983); Eisbrenner v. Stanley, 106 Mich. App. 357, 308 N.W.2d 209 (1981), leave denied, 414 Mich. 875 (1982); Berman v. Allen, 80 N.J. 421, 404 A. 2d 8 (1979); Jacobs v. Thiemer, 519 S.W.2d 846 (Tex. 1975); Naccash v. Burger, 223 Va. 406, 290 S.E. 2d 825 (1982); Harbeson v. Parke-Davis, Inc., 98 Wash. 2d 460, 656 P.2d 483 (1983) (en banc); James G. v. Caserta, 332 S.E. 2d 872 (W. Va. 1985); Dumer v. St. Michael's Hosp., 69 Wis. 29 766, 233 N.W. 2d 372 (1975).

abortion. Roe's impact has also disrupted the law of prenatal homicide outside the abortion context, yielded escalated sentences against those who act in conscientious resistance to abortion, and suppressed the justification defense against those acting to protect unborn children.

1. Prenatal Homicide

The decision in Roe v. Wade, sanctioning abortion with the consent of the mother, theoretically should not bar homicide prosecutions for the nonconsenual destruction of a woman's prenatal child. Smith v. Newsome, 815 F.2d 1386, 1388 (11th Cir. 1987). Nevertheless, Roe's relegation of unborn children to the status of constitutional nonentities has severely deterred state courts from applying homicide statutes to unborn children, even in the final days of pregnancy. Bopp & Coleson, supra note 1, at 99-105, 116 (manuscript pagination). A California appellate court, for example, affirming dismissal of a prosecution for the murder of a nonviable unborn child, declared:

> The underlying rationale of Wade, therefore, is that until viability is reached, human life in the legal sense has not come into existence. Implicit in Wade is the conclusion that as a matter of constitutional law the destruction of a non-viable fetus is not a taking of human life. It follows that such destruction cannot constitute murder or other form of homicide, whether committed by a mother, a father (as here), or a third person.

People v. Smith, 59 Cal. App. 3d 751, 757, 129 Cal. Rptr. 498, 502 (1976). The highest court of Kentucky, disallowing a prosecution for the murder of an unborn child in the third trimester of pregnancy, asserted that "this Court has no authority to disagree with a decision of the United States Supreme Court interpreting the Federal Constitution." Hollis v. Commonwealth, 652 S.W.2d 61, 63 (Ky. 1983). See also State v. Brown, 378 So. 2d 916, 918 (La. 1979) (disallowing prosecution for homicide of unborn child) (citing Roe).

2. Excessive Sentencing of Pro-life Activists

Justice White has noted the Supreme Court's "insecurity over its handiwork in Roe v. Wade and the cases following that decision." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 813 (White, J., dissenting). "Aware that in Roe it essentially created something out of nothing and that there are many in this country who hold that decision to be basically illegitimate, the Court responds defensively." Id. at 813-14. This same insecurity manifests itself in the trial courts which issue excessively harsh sentences to individuals convicted for resisting the practice of abortion.

Thus Joan Andrews, a young woman who nonviolently entered an abortion business during working hours and attempted (and failed) to dismantle an abortion suction machine was convicted of burglary and sentenced to five years in prison. State v. Andrews, No. 86-1663 (Escambia County Cir. Ct. sentence entered Sept. 24, 1986). A priest who smashed another suction machine was convicted of burglary and criminal mischief and given two consecutive five-year sentences. See Markley v. State, 507 So. 2d 1043 (Ala. Crim. App. 1987). Fred Kerr, a Baptist minister convicted of trespass (two counts) and unlawful assembly (two counts) for participation in a single event at an abortion business received a sentence of four years and a fine of $1,760. State v. Kerr, Nos. 59084A, 59084C (Fulton County, Ga. State Ct. Jan. 31, 1989). Brenda Roberts, housewife and grandmother, convicted of two counts of trespass and one count of unlawful assembly, received a three-year sentence and a fine of

$1,320. State v. Roberts, Nos. 59082A, 59082C (Fulton County, Ga. State Ct. Jan. 31, 1989).

3. Defense of Justification

The pro-life activist who blocks the entrance to an abortion business or dismantles an abortion suction machine comes squarely within the terms of the defense of justification. Such a person acts to prevent the imminent destruction of a helpless unborn baby. Yet reported state court decisions uniformly reject the defense in the abortion context.

Justification, or necessity, is an affirmative defense to a criminal prosecution. The defendant asserts that his technical violation of the law was necessary to prevent a greater harm that was both imminent and otherwise unavoidable. Thus, for example, justification exonerates someone who trespasses on private property to rescue a drowning child, or who breaks and enters a burning building to save an infant trapped there. See generally Arnolds & Garland, The Defense of Necessity in Criminal Law: The Right to Choose the Lesser Evil, 65 J. Crim. L. & Criminology 289 (1974).

The defense of justification is the obvious and natural plea of pro-life activists facing trespass, obstruction, or similar charges for their efforts to save children slated for abortion. State appellate courts, however, uniformly reject the defense when the harm threatened is the abortion of an unborn child.[10] This pattern cannot be explained as anything other than the reflexive deference of lower courts to the central ideological presupposition of Roe v. Wade, namely, that unborn human life is not worth legal recognition or protection.[11]

[10] E.g., Cleveland v. Municipality of Anchorage, 631 P.2d 1073 (Alaska 1981); Gaetano v. United States, 406 A.2d 1291 (D.C. 1979); People v. Krizka, 92 Ill. App. 3d 288, 416 N.E.2d 36 (1980); Sigma Reprod. Health Center v. Maryland, 297 Md. 660, 467 A.2d 483 (1983); City of St. Louis v. Klocker, 637 S.W.2d 174 (Mo. Ct. App. 1982); Fairfield Commons Condo. Ass'n v. Stasa, 30 Ohio App. 11, 506 N.E.2d 237 (1985); Hoffart v. State, 686 S.W.2d 259 (Tex. Ct. App. 1985); State v. Horn, 126 Wis. 2d 447, 377 N.W.2d 176 (Ct. App. 1985), aff'd on other grounds, 139 Wis. 2d 473, 407 N.W.2d 854 (1987).

CONCLUSION

The line of abortion cases begun with Roe v. Wade have distorted the law and debilitated the judicial system. This Court should therefore overrule Roe v. Wade.

Respectfully submitted,

JAY ALAN SEKULOW
THEODORE H. AMSHOFF, JR.*
ERIC A. DALY
JAMES M. HENDERSON, SR.
Christian Advocates Serving Evangelism
Suite 520, Rhodes-Haverty Building
134 Peachtree Street
Atlanta, GA 30303
(404) 584-8040
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Counsel of Record*

[11] In some states the defense of justification does not even require objective reasonableness of the defendant's conduct. In Wisconsin, for example, the defendant need only "reasonably... believe" that the conduct in question was necessary to preserve human life. Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 939.46, 939.47 (West 1980). The rejection of the justification defense in such states is tantamount to a holding that pro-life beliefs are unreasonable as a matter of law.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

(16)

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE SOUTHERN CENTER FOR LAW & ETHICS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

ALBERT L. JORDAN*
Wallace, Brooke & Byers
2000 SouthBridge Parkway
Birmingham, Alabama 35209
(205) 870-0555

DAVID M. SMOLIN
Assistant Professor of Law
Cumberland School of Law
Samford University
Birmingham, Alabama 35229

Counsel of Record

36p

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether reconsideration of Roe v. Wade so as to recognize States' authority to protect pre-viable fetal life is needed to alleviate social unrest, and to preserve the Court's institutional legitimacy, as a properly neutral referee in the abortion debate?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Interest of Amicus Curiae 1

Summary of Argument 2

Argument 3

I. THE COURT'S ATTEMPTED SOLUTION TO THE ABORTION CONTROVERSY HAS FAILED BECAUSE ONLY DEMOCRATICALLY ACCOUNTABLE LEGISLATIVE BODIES ADEQUATELY CAN ADDRESS THE INTRACTABLE ABORTION DEBATE 5

A. The Roe Doctrine Is Not Really Neutral, As It Originally Purported to Be, On The Question Of When Human Life Begins 6

1. State governments are the appropriate arenas for the abortion debate 7

2. Roe's viability standard made value assessments which unnecessarily denied legislative power, as if States' action on fetal life could not be rational 9

3. The viability standard is not needed to protect against imposition of religious views or a finding that the fetus is a "person" 13

B. Roe's Refusing States The Option to Protect Fetal Life Is Not Legitimate Even If Deemed A Court Effort To Equalize Men and Women 15

TABLE OF CONTENTS — (Continued)

Page

II. PASSIVE CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE IS AN EXPECTED RESPONSE TO THE CONSISTENT JUDICIAL INTERVENTION AGAINST LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION OF FETAL LIFE AND IS FAIRLY CONSIDERED AS A FACTOR IN RECONSIDERING ROE 18

A. The Large Number Of Pro-Life Civil Disobedients And The Character Of Their Actions Reflect Serious Concerns About This Court's Public Legitimacy 19

B. Reconsideration Of Roe v. Wade Is Needed To Sustain The Court's Legitimacy On Cases Involving Abortion 22

1. Destruction of fetal life evokes too much moral outrage to justify continued denial of the States' interest in protection of fetal life 23

Conclusion 25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: Page

Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 12

Bowers v. Hardwick, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986) 7, 8

Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955) 24

Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. 1980) 18

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6, 9

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 9

Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 27 (1958) 24

Doe v. Israel, 482 F.2d 156 (1st Cir. 1973) 18

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 8

Gober v. City of Birmingham, 373 U.S. 374 (1962), rev'g, 41 Ala. App. 313 (1961) 4

Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339 (1960) 4

H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 12, 14

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 13, 14

Hunter v. Underwood, 471 U.S. 222 (1985) 4

Johnson v. Santa Clara Transportation Agency, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 1442 (1987) 17

Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 4

Lombard v. State of Louisiana, 373 U.S. 267 (1963) 4

Morgentaler v. Her Majesty The Queen,, 1 S.C.B. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (1988) 7

New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262 (1932) 8

Personnel Administrator of Massachusetts v. Feeney, 442 U.S. 256 (1979) 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Cases: Page

Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244 (1963) 4

Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S 476 (1983) 9

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 17

Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983); 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub nom., Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986) 18

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 18

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 373 U.S. 262 (1963) ... 4

Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 382 U.S. 87 (1965) 4

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) ..... passim

United States v. Paradise, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 1053 (1987) 17

Walker v. City of Birmingham, 388 U.S. 307 (1967) 3

Miscellaneous:

Abortion Protestors Arrested in 3 Cities, The Sunday Oklahoman 5A, col. 5 (Jan. 15, 1989) 7

C. Allen, Anti-Abortion Movement's Anti-Establishment Face, Wall St. J. A22, col. 3-6 (Dec. 8, 1988) 22

L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy 55 (Rev. 7th ed. 1974) .. 10

Blake, Abortion and Public Opinion: The 1960-1970 Decade, 171 Science 540 (1971) 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Miscellaneous: Page

E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life, (1977) 10

W. Brennan, State Constitutional Rights and the Protection of Individual Rights, 90 Harv. L. Rev. 489 (1977) 8

The Connecticut Mutual Life Report on American Values in the 80's (1981) 15

C. Corliss, Patten's Human Embryology: Elements of Clinical Development (1976) 10

R. Cowden-Guido, ed., You Reject Them, You Reject Me: The Prison Letters of Joan Andrews (1988) 19, 20, 21

A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 22, 23

A. Dworkin, Right Wing Women (1983) 16

J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust (1980) 4

J. Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 4

G. Gallup, Jr., The Gallup Poll: Public Opinion 1986 49 (1987) 15

Garrison, Anti-Abortion Movements Claim Kinship to Civil Rights, The Birmingham News 6E, col. 1 (Nov. 25, 1988) 22

C. Gilligan, In a Different Voice: Psychological Theory and Women's Development (1982) 16

M. Glendon, Abortion & Divorce in Western Law (1987) 7, 15, 16

M. Glendon, A World Without Roe, New Republic 19 (Feb. 20, 1989) 25

Greenhill & Friedman, Biological Principles and Modern Practice of Obstetrics (1974) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Miscellaneous: Page

Hargrove, Priest in Jail After Taking His Faith to the Streets, The Birmingham News D1, Col. 4 (Nov. 21, 1988) 22

E. Hemingway, "Hills Like White Elephants," in Hemingway, Men Without Women (1927) 16

M. L. King, Why We Can't Wait, Letter from Birmingham Jail (1964) (Mentor) 19

Kleinman, When Abortion Becomes Birth: A Dilemma of Medical Ethics Shaken by New Advances, B1, col. 1 (Feb. 15, 1984) 24

K. Luker, Abortion and the Politics of Motherhood (1984) 15

A. MacIntyre, After Virtue (2d ed. 1984) 5

C. MacKinnon, Feminism Unmodified (1987) 15, 16, 17

M. Meehan, Joan Andrews and Friends, 14 Human Life Review 7 (1988) 21, 22

J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 (1978) 16

K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Orientated Embryology (3rd ed. 1982) 10

J. Noonan, A Private Choice (1979) 16

E. O'Neill, Abortion 1914, in O'Neill, Lost Plays (1958) 16

T. Sadler, Langman's Medical Embryology (5th ed. 1985) 10

A. Sachs, Abortion on the Ropes, Time (Dec. 5, 1988) 22

L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law (1988) 10

L. Tribe, God Save This Honorable Court (1985) 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Miscellaneous: Page

Statement of Prof. William Van Alstyne, The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcom. on Separation of Powers, of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 276 (1981) 14

West's Federal Practice Digest, 2nd ed. 18

West's Federal Practice Digest, 3rd ed. 18

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE SOUTHERN CENTER FOR LAW & ETHICS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae, The Southern Center for Law & Ethics (the "Center") is a non-profit corporation founded in January 1985 and based in Birmingham, Alabama. Written consent of all parties to the Center's filing of this brief accompanies it.

The purpose of the Center is to develop and assist members of the legal and lay communities in understanding how to integrate a world and life philosophy with law and social ethics. Its geographic focus is principally the State of Alabama. Policies are set by a board of directors composed of four lawyers and two laymen. Activities are conducted by Executive Director J. Scott Houser, a well-known figure locally in public affairs. Houser's activities for the Center include public speaking, interaction with interested law students and members of the academic community, publication of articles, and identification and engagement of lawyers for participation in litigation on important public issues related to the Center's purposes.

The Missouri statutes at issue here and potential reconsideration of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), are of particular interest to the Center for two reasons. The executive director of the Center has counseled numerous people in the Birmingham area considering passive civil disobedience in response to inaction by State and local government on the problem of abortion. Nearly three hundred people have been arrested in Birmingham engaging in passive civil disobedience since November 1988. As a result of this experience and review of the Roe doctrine, the Center believes that this Court's involvement in the abortion controversy has created a new set of ethical dilemmas to the rules announced by this Court and the obvious instinctive desire to protect life, albeit life perceived in the womb.

The Center's interest is not to legitimate civil disobedience, but to create new institutional mechanisms for people to express themselves as citizens. The Center therefore is interested in the Roe doctrine to the extent it takes away from the citizenry meaningful opportunities for effective expression in democratic State Governmental institutions.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade has taken the Court far into democratic processes by denying States the authority to entertain theories of when human life begins. As a result, the Court has assumed a vulnerable position in the public mind, as increasing numbers of citizens weigh disloyalty to the Court's rules and choose passive civil disobedience to protect fetal life.

The Court's previous choice of viability as the point at which fetal life is protectible is so subjective and so tied to changing medical technology as to imply disrespect for fetal life. Thus, the Court is hard-pressed to bolster its posture in the controversy with a claim of neutrality.

Retention of the viability standard is not justified as a way to free women from dominance by men. The equal protection standards of this Court provide a less institutionally risky device if State anti-abortion laws become subterfuge for legislative subjugation of women.

Public discontent with Roe v. Wade is widespread. Since 1987, over ten thousand have been arrested and jailed for trespass in nonviolent efforts to block access to abortion facilities. These citizens intend to symbolize and vicariously experience the States' indifference to fetal life. Identified leaders of the civil disobedience movement make appeals to "higher law" in ways reminiscent of similar past movements.

Reconsideration and acceptance of genuinely protectible State interests in fetal life will open the political process to these citizens, and provide a level playing field for the apparently intractable features of the abortion controversy. The necessarily tentative quality of the wins and losses of that process provides the hope and fear of another day for the participants. Even though there will be some dissatisfied with increased democratic opportunities, these people will lose the psychological appeal presented by the Roe doctrine's mandate to ignore fetal life. New democratic opportunities on abortion will enhance the Court's legitimacy and authority as an institution.

ARGUMENT

Introductory Statement

Alabama is no stranger to civil disobedience, or to this Court's role as an agent for the preservation of social order.[1]

---

[1]See, e.g., Walker v. City of Birmingham, 388 U.S. 307, 322-23 (1967) (disobedience of court injunction against parades and "kneel-in" at churches where blacks unwanted).

In this century, many of its citizens have been locked out of the political process by all manner of devices.[2] The decisions of this Court also document some of that history in reasonably good fashion, including a record of the courageous nonviolent citizens willing to step forward and challenge the exclusionary features of State law.[3]

The Court's work plainly opened up the democratic process to operate effectively even as it made that process less homogeneous. But that is the way things should be. Justice Holmes counseled long ago that a constitution "is made for people of fundamentally differing views."[4] Dean Ely has explained that the function of the Supreme Court is to serve as a referee of the combatants in the political process, while leaving the disposition of controversial value choices to that process.[5]

With respect to the abortion controversy, the Court has effectively exchanged its referee's role for that of participant. However well intended in original form, the abortion doctrine in Roe v. Wade and its progeny are regarded as having foreclosed the constitutional processes which the Founders designed to mediate the "fundamentally differing views" of our nation's citizens. This foreclosure of the democratic process has not been without cost to the nation or to the Court itself. The nation has suffered intense social division, which has been compounded both by the sentiment that the abortion issue has not been resolved in accordance with our

---

[2]See, e.g., Hunter v. Underwood, 471 U.S. 222 (1985) (intentional disenfranchisement of blacks by facially neutral 1901 Alabama Constitution provision); Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339 (1960) (drawing municipal boundaries to exclude black residences).

[3]See Gober v. City of Birmingham, 373 U.S. 374 (1962), rev'g, 41 Ala. App. 313 (1961) (trespass convictions for lunch counter sit-ins); Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 382 U.S. 87 (1965); Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 373 U.S. 262 (1963).

For further experience of the Court with civil disobedience, see Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244 (1963), and Lombard v. State of Louisiana, 373 U.S. 267 (1963).

[4]Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 76 (1905) (Holmes, J., dissenting).

[5]J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust (1980). See generally, J. Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973).

democratic heritage, and also by the frustration attendant upon the Court's interposition of itself between the electorate and the democratic process through which volatile issues are usually resolved. Not surprisingly, the Court's intervention has diminished its stature as an institution "above politics," with a corresponding diminution of faith in the rule of law. Finally, large numbers of citizens, frustrated by their inability to participate meaningfully in the formation of national policy, have turned to various forms of civil disobedience in an effort to find a way to effect a change in the law.

The present case offers to the Court an opportunity to reexamine the doctrine, first announced some sixteen years ago in Roe, that a woman's freedom to abort her pregnancy effectively overrides State interests in protecting fetal life. Since that time, the abortion controversy has generated the largest civil disobedience movement since the civil rights movement, a movement which taxes severely the capabilities of local law enforcement officials. Intended as a solution to a vexing problem, Roe instead exacerbated social divisions.

I. The Court's Attempted Solution To The Abortion Controversy Has Failed Because Only Democratically Accountable Legislative Bodies Adequately Can Address The Intractable Abortion Debate.

Numerous respected commentators have noted the apparently intractable nature of the abortion controversy. The pro-life community views legalized abortion on demand as the legalized mass murder of innocent unborn children; the pro-choice community views the abortion right as fundamental, and as essential to the equality and freedom of women. Given such a fundamental value conflict, many have despaired of a solution.[6]

---

[6]See, e.g., A. MacIntyre, After Virtue 6-7 (2d ed. 1984).

A. The Roe Doctrine Is Not Really Neutral, As It Originally Purported To Be, On The Question Of When Human Life Begins.

The Court in Roe purported to take a neutral stance regarding the fundamental issues at stake in abortion; this supposed neutrality was presented in the form of agnosticism regarding the question of when human life begins. The Court's famous passage in Roe stated:

> Texas urges that, apart from the Fourteenth Amendment, life begins at conception and is present throughout pregnancy, and that, therefore, the State has a compelling interest in protecting that life from and after conception. We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer.
>
> . . . .
>
> . . . we do not agree that, by adopting one theory of life, Texas may override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake. . . . "

Roe, 410 U.S. at 159-62. The Court now regards the Roe doctrine as a mandate of legislative agnosticism. See, City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 444 (1983) ("a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins").

Remarkably, the Court acts as if its recognition of a State interest in the protection of fetal life would imply judicial adoption of a theory of life. Thus, in the present case, a declaration by the Missouri legislation on when life begins, is now subject to censorship by the Court. The very presence of this issue reveals that the Court's purported agnosticism and neutrality regarding abortion merely obscured temporarily the effect Roe would have on the democratic process, and citizen ability to recognize the actual role of the Court in the abortion controversy.

Other Western nations have settled their own passionate abortion controversies through the legislative process. See M. Glendon, Abortion & Divorce in Western Law 2, 10-63 (1987). Professor Glendon has documented how compromise legislative solutions to the abortion controversy have diffused national divisions even where the purported compromise is analytically self-contradictory. Id. at 18-19, 40. Indeed, among the twenty Western nations surveyed by Glendon, only two nations had constitutionally invalidated legislative solutions. Id. at 25. Glendon further indicates that the United States has "less regulation of abortion in the interest of the fetus than any other Western nation." Id. at 2. Other nations, even as they adopt compromise legislative solutions, are willing to "[name] the underlying problem as one involving human life, not as a conflict involving a woman's individual liberty or privacy and a non-person." Id. at 19. The United States, concludes Professor Glendon, is unique in the degree to which it has precluded further legislative development in the abortion area. Id. at 25.[7]

1. State governments are the appropriate arenas for the abortion debate.

The institutional inappropriateness of the Roe "solution" is further evidence by the Court's own descriptions of its proper role. In Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2846 (1986), the Court acknowledges that it > is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution.

---

[7]Professor Glendon's survey was completed prior to the recent Canadian decision, which is similar in some respects to Roe. See Morgentaler v. Her Majesty The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. 4th 385 (Canada S. Ct. 1988). Professor Glendon's overall assessments as to the unusual nature of the American approach to abortion law, in comparison to other Western nations, remain accurate. The recent Canadian decision may prove as divisive to Canadian society, as Roe has proven to be to American society. Thus, while the Canadian Courts recently have found Roe worthy of imitation, Canadian citizens recently have found the American civil disobedience movement also to be worthy of imitation. See Abortion Protestors Arrested in 3 Cities, The Sunday Oklahoman 5A, col. 5 (Jan. 15, 1989) (80 arrested in Toronto).

Canadian abortion law remains unsettled. See Comments, 7 Can. J. Fam. L. 131-82 (1988).

Bowers recounts the Court's retraction in the 1930's of the "substantive gloss" placed by the Court on open-ended phrases in the Constitution. In setting out new rights deemed fundamental, "the Judiciary necessarily takes to itself further authority to govern the county. . . ." Id. The legitimacy of the Court's authority is threatened by its appropriation of authority regarded by the citizenry of a democratic society as rightfully their own.

With respect to the abortion controversy now before the Court, the foregoing principles suggest that any judicial scrutiny of State legislative solutions to the controversy will be unsuccessful in diffusing national tensions until States are free again to protect fetal life. Obviously, many States may choose not to respect fetal life, and may even find a State right to abortion. Accord, W. Brennan, State Constitutional Rights and the Protection of Individual Rights, 90 Harv.L.Rev. 489, 495 (1977) (recounts State response to U.S. Supreme Court narrowing rights).

While it is possible that a national consensus may someday emerge which would delegate responsibility for abortion issues to the federal judiciary, such a consensus will not emerge unless and until the controversy is fully debated through the political processes. Indeed

> [t]he essence of our federal system is that within the realm of authority left open to them under the Constitution, the States must be equally free to engage in any activity that their citizens choose for the common weal, no matter how unorthodox or unnecessary anyone else — including the judiciary — deems state involvement to be.

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, 547 (1985) (rejecting ability of judiciary to evaluate State interests, defers to protections of national legislative process). See also, New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262, 311 (1932) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

2. Roe's viability standard made value assessments which unnecessarily denied legislative power, as if States' action on fetal life could not be rational.

In Roe, the Court mixed medical issues with the philosophical and theological issues posed by abortion. As a result, the Court chose viability as the only relevant fetal characteristic for State protection. This high-mindedness obscured the biological facts.

To the Court, viability is not so much an identifiable characteristic of the fetus, but of the relationship of the fetus to developing medical technology and the physician. This Court is quite familiar with the instability caused by tying a constitutional standard to changing medical technology. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. at 453-75 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

Viability must be measured by the subjective discretion of the attending physician hired to relieve parents of an unwanted child-rearing responsibility:

> [N]either the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability — be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor — as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus.

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388 (1979) (vagueness challenge to statute suggesting objective measures are possible).[8]

These features of the viability standard imply a disrespect for fetal life. In a real and practical sense, viability is a purely relational standard with no inherent tie to the objectively measurable physiological characteristics of human fetuses.

Medical texts state clearly, even today, that the development of the individual human organism begins at fertilization. The terms embryo and fetus, like the term neonate, are [8] Cf., Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 482-86 (1983) (States may conclude abortionist not sufficiently concerned with preserving life of fetus born alive and therefore require second physician).

---

merely medical descriptions of stages of development in the individual biological organism. The genetically-unique, biologically-human, organism is formed at fertilization. This organism, whether developmentally an embryo, fetus, neonate, or human adult, is individually and genetically distinct from all other organisms, including the mother; it is clearly alive; it is clearly human. In the simple biological sense, human life does begin at conception.[9]

One need not be anti-abortion to accept this. A noted academic defender of the abortion right has summarized the matter: "Nor can one get anywhere on this issue by debating whether 'fetal life' is 'human life': what other form or species of life could it be?" L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 1348-49 (1988).

Plainly then, there are separate moral, philosophical and theological questions relating to this human organism. These [9]Blechschmidt writes in his text: "A human ovum possesses human characteristics as genetic carriers, not chickens or fish. This is now manifest: the evidence no longer allows a discussion as to if and in what month of ontogenesis a human being is formed. To be a human being is decided for an organism at the moment of fertilization of the ovum." E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life 16-17 (1977). Moore defines zygote as follows: "Zygote. This cell results from fertilization of an oocyte, or ovum, by a sperm, or spermatozoon, and is the beginning of a human being." K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Orientated Embryology 1, 14 (3rd ed. 1982) (emphasis in original). Langman's Medical Embryology states that "[t]he development of a human being begins with fertilization, a process by which the spermatozoon from the male and the oocyte from the female unite to give rise to a new organism, the zygote." T. Sadler, Langman's Medical Embryology 3 (5th ed. 1985). Greenhill and Friedman state that the term "conception refers to the union of the male and female pronuclear elements of procreation from which a new living being develops." Greenhill & Friedman, Biological Principles and Modern Practice of Obstetrics 17 (1974). Patten states that "[i]t is the penetration of the ovum by a sperm and the resultant mingling of the nuclear material each brings to the union that constitutes the culmination of the process of fertilization and marks the initiation of the life of a new individual." C. Corliss, Patten's Human Embryology: Elements of Clinical Development 30 (1976). Finally, Arey writes that "[t]he formation, maturation and meeting of a male and female sex cell are all preliminary to their actual union into a combined cell, or zygote, which definitely marks the beginning of a new individual." L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy 55 (Rev. 7th ed. 1974).

questions relate to the social value we place on various forms of human life, and the legal protection available. Thus, certain philosophers and social commentators may argue that the biologically-human organism lacks moral or legal rights if it lacks certain characteristics, such as consciousness, intelligence, the capacity to feel pain or emotion. This profoundly controversial question of what value to place on biologically-human life is at the heart of the public abortion controversy.

Subsequent defenses of the Roe doctrine recognize verifiable features of fetal life not tied to viability. This recognition implies that the viability standard is premised on the Court's own philosophical evaluation of the value of the fetus. Thus, Justice Stevens, joined by Justices Marshall and Brennan, wrote in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1987), as follows:

> Justice White is also surely wrong in suggesting that the governmental interest in protecting fetal life is equally compelling during the entire period from the moment of conception until the moment of birth. . . . Again, I recognize that a powerful theological argument can be made for that position, but I believe our jurisdiction is limited to the evaluation of secular state interests. I should think it obvious that the state's interest in the protection of an embryo — even if that interest is defined as "protecting those who will be citizens," ibid — increases progressively and dramatically as the organism's capacity to feel pain, to experience pleasure, to survive, and to react to its surroundings increases day by day. The development of a fetus — and pregnancy itself — are not static conditions, and the assertion that the government's interest is static simply ignores this reality.

Id. at 778. (Stevens, J., concurring) (footnote omitted).

This passage clearly asserts a philosophical evaluation of the State's interest in fetal life. It names four fetal characteristics which purportedly affect the nature of the State's interest in the fetus. The Thornburgh majority must rely on certain philosophical evaluations of the characteristics of human fetal life in order to conclude that nonviable fetuses are not protectible by the States. The concurrence correctly restates the abortion question as follows: which human characteristics, if any, will deem the fetus worthy of governmental protection?

It is even more remarkable in that the Thornburgh concurring opinion's choice of protectible interests is at odds with Roe. The Court finds it "obvious" that a State's interest in fetal life varies according to four characteristics, or capacities: the capacity to feel pain, the capacity to feel pleasure, the capacity to react to its surroundings, and the capacity to survive. The Court in Roe, however, held that the State's compelling interest in fetal life depended only upon one isolated factor: the capacity of the fetus to survive outside the mother's body, termed viability. The other three characteristics named as obviously critical are totally ignored in Roe. Moreover, if considered, these characteristics could transform Roe, because the fetus clearly has the capacity to react to its surroundings in profound ways long before viability. Although the matter is controversial, it seems possible that the fetus also possesses the characteristics to feel pain and pleasure prior to viability. Acceptance of these four characteristics would therefore compel the view that the State's compelling interest in fetal life begins prior to viability.

Apparently, already recognizing some inadequacy of the viability standard, the Court has ignored it in cases involving pregnancy in minors. See H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) (parental notice for abortions on minors advances, throughout pregnancy, an interest protecting potential life without regard for viability). There is no good reason to ignore the viability standard for pregnant minors, but not pregnant adults.[10] The State interest in protecting life exists whether the fetus is carried in the womb of an adult or a minor.

[10]Obviously, State interests may be operative when the freedom of minors is restricted, and these would provide additional justification not present when adult freedoms are implicated. See, e.g., Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 640-41 (1979). In other words, the differences between adults and minors are properly accounted for in balancing the freedom implicated with the State interest involved, not in identifying protectible State interests.

In summary, viability is no standard at all, but an announcement of value assessments about fetal life characteristics. Making such assessments is a difficult responsibility, whether for the legislature or the judiciary. But when such decisions are made by the judiciary with little recognition for the existing institutions of representative government, one can expect confusion and unrest among the citizenry about their own relation to their government and its laws.

3. The viability standard is not needed to protect against imposition of religious views or a finding that the fetus is a "person."

Justice Stevens also states in Thornburgh that "unless the religious view that a fetus is a 'person' is adopted . . . there is a fundamental and well-recognized difference between a fetus and a human being." 476 U.S. at 779. However, there is nothing necessarily religious in a State adopting the philosophical position that it considers the biological nature of fetuses to entitle them to the same rights as the human neonate. It is well-established that the coincidence of State interests in protecting fetal life and the interests of certain religious bodies does not make the State interest a religious one. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 319-20 (1980). Indeed, that the nine-month old fetus, and the neonate, differ only in relational and locational characteristics — one is dependent on the mother and in the uterus, the other is dependent on human nurture generally, and is no longer within the mother — suggests that the difference between the fetus and the human being is hardly "fundamental." Certainly, one could disagree with the Thornburgh characterization without resort to theology. The terms "person" and "human being" clearly may be used in different senses in different fields, including philosophy, law, medicine, and theology.

Justice Stevens further strains his argument in Thornburgh by claiming that if there were not a fundamental difference between the fetus and a human being, the Court would have to mandate that States protect the unborn child. See 476 U.S. at 779. Stevens' claim again confuses the medical, legal, philosophical, and theological issues presented by the abortion question. Legal scholars are said to be unified against the view Stevens asserts:

> I suggest to you that there is at least an issue which glues and cements [the scholars] together. It goes to the nonsequitur that if something can be rationally deemed "a human life" from some not irrational perspective, which it surely can . . . , then it may also be defined by Congress as a "person" as that word appears in the 14th Amendment.

The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers, of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97 Cong., 1st Sess. 276 (1981) (Statement of Prof. William Van Alstyne).

At least as early as Roe, States have sought to protect fetal life — which they called human life — even though the Fourteenth Amendment definition of "person" did not include the fetus. The term "person" within the Fourteenth Amendment does not, in other words, exhaust even the legal meaning attributable to terms such as "person," "human being," or "unborn child," as used in other legal contexts. There is nothing to prevent the States from valuing fetal life, based on certain secular, moral, and philosophical judgments. See Harris v. McRae, supra; H.L. v. Matheson, supra.

In summary, the recognition of a State interest in protecting fetal life throughout pregnancy is not unscientific, or necessarily religiously based. Roe's parsimonious deference to this interest thrusts the Court into a broad national political debate that is best addressed by legitimating more individual State legislative choices. Roe is particularly troubling because it gives so little practical value to the strongly-felt views of the citizenry that fetal life should not be relegated to nothingness. Further, despite claims of uncertainty, Roe resolved all doubt against a protection of fetal life.

B. Roe's Refusing States The Option To Protect Fetal Life Is Not Legitimate Even If Deemed A Court Effort To Equalize Men And Women.

Some consider the Roe doctrine an appropriate mechanism for eliminating differences between men and women. Even if the doctrine serves this purpose, it does not justify denying State legislatures the prerogative to respect fetal life. Certainly, there is no consensus that non-recognition of fetal life is needed to accord women their due role in society.

Conceiving the abortion right as assisting women obscures the fact that "for the women who now constitute the great majority of activists in both camps, values central to their lives are at stake." M. Glendon, supra, at 47 (citing K. Luker, Abortion and the Politics of Motherhood, 158-61). Thus, this brief discusses at some length the actions and views of Ms. Joan Andrews, who is probably the most notable practitioner of nonviolent anti-abortion civil disobedience. Abortion divides women just as it divides men: survey data suggest that women are not more supportive of abortion rights than men.[11] While abortion is an issue which affects women differently than men, merely stating that fact does not inevitably lead to any particular conclusion. The desire to equalize men and women through legalized abortion constitutes a radical kind of social engineering which many women find repugnant and demeaning.

Indeed, even acceptance of the feminist view that men dominate women in the areas of sexuality and procreation does not necessarily lead to a pro-choice remedy. If, as some feminists claim, women are not really free in our society to make their own decisions concerning sexual activity and contraception,[12] then we cannot assume that they will be free to make their own decisions concerning abortion. Arguably, the "freedom" the abortion right gives women merely leaves

---

[11] See, e.g., The Connecticut Mutual Life Report on American Values in the '80's 92 (1981); G. Gallup, Jr., The Gallup Poll: Public Opinion 1986 49 (1987).

[12] See C. MacKinnon, Feminism Unmodified 94-96 (1987).

them at the mercy of their male companions, who may have purely selfish reasons to urge an abortion.[13] If men dominate the decision whether to engage in sexual activity to the extent that the decision is not truly consensual, we may expect that men will also dominate the decision to abort to the extent that this decision is not truly consensual. Literature and experience both testify that men urging reluctant women to undergo an abortion is commonplace.[14] In this sense, feminists may perceive elective abortion as a right instigated by men, for men, at the expense of women.[15]

---

[13]Some feminists have noted that abortion makes women more sexually available to men, with less consequent responsibility. See C. MacKinnon, Feminism Unmodified 99 (1987) (citing A. Dworkin, Right Wing Women (1983)). It has also been noted that "the strongest supporters of abortion prior to Roe v. Wade were affluent white men." M. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 51 (1987) (citing Blake, Abortion and Public Opinion: The 1960-70 Decade, 171 Science 540, 544 (1971). Ms. Blake suggested that affluent white men favored abortion because "as a class they are especially vulnerable to being held financially and socially responsible for accidental pregnancies." Blake, supra, at 544.

[14]See, e.g., E. O'Neill, Abortion (1914), in O'Neill, Lost Plays (1958); E. Hemingway, "Hills Like White Elephants," in Hemingway, Men Without Women 72-73 (1927). Professor Glendon speaking of Carol Gilligan's study of women's construction of moral problems, notes: "it is striking how many of Carol Gilligan's subjects in her chapter on the abortion decision stated that one of the reasons they were seeking abortions was because the men in their lives were unwilling to give them moral and material support in continuing with pregnancy and childbirth." M. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 52 (1987) (citing C. Gilligan, In a Different Voice: Psychological Theory and Women's Development 81, 88, 89, 91 (1982)). The abortion right in combination with our nation's lax enforcement of child support, work together with gender inequality to coerce women to abort. Cf. M. Glendon, supra, at 53-58 (discussing abortion and dependency).

[15]Thus, Judge Noonan has noted: "When strong and comprehensive anti-abortion statutes were being enacted in nineteenth-century America, the militant feminists had been outspoken in their scorn and condemnation of abortion. Their journal, Revolution, urged anti-abortion measures upon the New York legislature in 1869. If the practice was resorted to at all, their leader, Elizabeth Cady Stanton said, it was because of 'the degradation of women by men.'" J. Noonan, A Private Choice 48 (1979) (citing J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 111, 113, 114 (1978)).

Contemporary feminists who remain pro-choice nonetheless often state

Further, merely recognizing the legitimacy of State interests in protecting fetal life would not authorize actual and intentional State legislative efforts to harm women. Plainly, irrespective of Roe, such efforts would remain subject to equal protection scrutiny. In the event the State is seeking to subjugate women, it may be argued that the legislature "selected or reaffirmed a particular course of action at least in part 'because of,' not merely 'in spite of,' its adverse effects upon an identifiable group." Personnel Administrator of Massachusetts v. Fenney, 442 U.S. 256, 279 (1979) (quoted in, Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 323 n.26 (1980) (refusal to fund non-therapeutic abortions not evidence of such intent)). See also, Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 66-67 (1976) (singling out abortion is not by itself sufficient to conclude equal protection violated). And, if the State is not genuinely interested in protecting fetal life, it could not rely on this interest to justify restrictions on abortion.

Finally, the Center does not believe that the mere existence of State obstacles to abortion, which cause childbirth and attendant needed recovery time, should be construed as an effort to subjugate women. This is true even though such obstacles may put women at a disadvantage.[16] Generally, our law does not authorize judicially mandated equality of outcome, except in the most dire remedial circumstances.[17] that the abortion right was instigated by men, for men, and that men have been the primary beneficiaries. See, e.g., C. MacKinnon, Feminism Unmodified 97-101 (1987). Ms. MacKinnon concludes: "So long as women do not control access to our sexuality, abortion facilitates women's heterosexual availability. In other words, under conditions of gender inequality, sexual liberation in this sense does not free women; it frees male sexual aggression." Id. at 99.

---

Some contemporary feminists, following these lines of thought, have adopted a pro-life position. Thus, the Court has received an amicus brief in the past sponsored by Feminists for Life.

[16]One might conclude evidence of subjugating intent from the absence of private and public social structures to assist women in need after childbirth.

[17]Compare, United States v. Paradise, 107 S.Ct. 1053 (1987), with Johnson v. Santa Clara Transportation Agency, 107 S.Ct. 1442 (1987) (O'Connor, J., concurring in the judgment) (quotas and affirmative action).

II. Passive Civil Disobedience Is An Expected Response To The Consistent Judicial Intervention Against Legislative Protection Of Fetal Life And Is Fairly Considered As A Factor In Reconsidering Roe.

The opinion of the court below demonstrates the overreach of the Roe doctrine. The Eighth Circuit panel ruled unconstitutional a mere finding that life begins at conception and instruction to courts to interpret State laws in light of that finding and the decisions of this Court. See Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1075-77 (8th Cir. 1988).[18] A similar ruling issued against a legislative directive to physicians to conduct tests to determine viability, see id. at 1074, and against proscriptions against using public facilities to perform abortions, see id. at 1080-82.[19]

These State efforts at protecting fetal life and preventing State involvement with its destruction are a far cry from the rape victim denied an abortion in Roe v. Wade. The Eighth Circuit's treatment is symptomatic of a seemingly endless stream of abortion related litigation in the federal courts since 1973.[20] Plainly the overwhelming consensus of the courts has been that States were involved in efforts to protect fetal life prior to "viability." Injunctions are the norm rather than the exception.

It is no wonder that citizens feel without redress in their desire to protect fetal life; the fruits of their work in the legislature are enjoined at every turn. As Martin Luther King, Jr. said of his experience in Birmingham in 1963, when he was arrested and jailed in protest over segregation:

---

[18]Other courts have issued similar rulings. See Doe v. Israel, 482 F.2d 156 (1st Cir. 1973). But see, Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772, 778-779 (7th Cir. 1980).

[19]Amicus does not address the ruling concerning the use of public funds to engage in speech to a woman encouraging an abortion, as it may raise additional First Amendment concerns. See 851 F.2d at 1077-79; see also, Planned Parenthood v. Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 942-48 (9th Cir. 1983); 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub nom., Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986).

[20]West's Federal Practice Digest 2nd edition and 3rd edition list 264 cases under the heading "Abortion & Birth Control."

> As in so many past experiences, our hopes had been blasted, and the shadow of deep disappointment settled upon us. We had no alternative except to prepare for direct action, whereby we would present our very bodies as a means for laying our case before the conscience of the local and the national community.
>
> ***
>
> One who breaks an unjust law must do so openly, lovingly, and with a willingness to accept the penalty. I submit that an individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the highest respect for law.

M. L. King, Why We Can't Wait, Letter From Birmingham Jail, 78, 83-84 (1964) (Mentor).

A. The Large Number Of Pro-Life Civil Disobedients And The Character Of Their Actions Reflect Serious Concerns About This Court's Public Legitimacy.

Joan Andrews is probably the most exceptional individual of the pro-life civil disobedience movement. As of December 1985, she had been arrested 105 times for such conduct as summary trespassing. In Bridgeton, Missouri, where most of her arrests occurred, she was not considered violent or dangerous. See Presentence Report of the Adult Probation Office of the Court of Common Pleas, County of Allegheny (Dec. 24, 1985) (quoted in R. Cowden-Guido, ed., You Reject Them, You Reject Me: The Prison Letters of Joan Andrews 67-77 (1988)).

Her attitude is most revealing:

> The rougher it gets for us, the more we can rejoice that we are succeeding; no longer are we being treated so much as the privileged born, but as the discriminated against preborn. We must become aligned with them completely and totally or else the double standard separating the preborn from the rest of humanity will never be eliminated. I don't want to be treated any differently than my brother, my sister. You reject them, you reject me.

We do not expect justice in the courts. Furthermore we do not seek it for ourselves when it is being denied our beloved preborn brothers and sisters. Thus I plead a case for complete and total vulnerability in court by refusing self defense and all legal argumentation for self protection. We should in truth tell the court that we, as defenders and friends of the preborn, expect no justice and no compassion, as the true defendants, the preborn children, received none and were killed without due process on the day of the rescue attempt. We only stand here in their stead, being substitute defendants by a compelling and painful logic. They died for the crimes of being preborn and unwanted. We expect no justice from a judicial system which decrees such savagery and a government which allows it. If it is a crime punishable by death to be unwanted, maybe it should be a crime, punishable by death, to love the unwanted and to act to protect them.

R. Cowden-Guido, ed., You Reject Them, You Reject Me at 21. Local police officers apparently fulfilled Andrews' wish:

> . . . when I was arrested at Bridgeton for blocking doors at an abortion chamber, one of the arresting police officers went into a rage when I refused to walk out, and he locked me in a strangle hold by the neck and demanded I walk out. He kept choking me and almost got hysterical. Finally he just dragged me out because I wouldn't submit. He cursed and raged all the way back to the station. I always remain silent in the face of rage unless I am asked a direct question.
>
> My throat and jaw was [sic] bruised for more than a week. Having faced this particular officer and others like him before, I think it is an inability for them to accept a disregard for their authority, which of course they don't have in this area. We are always polite with the police, but we obviously cannot accept or acknowledge their authority to force us to leave a death chamber while we are trying to rescue the victim; and some officers are just not able to accept that.

Id. at 60. Without Roe, the police officers could have been assisting, rather than arresting Ms. Andrews in her efforts to prevent abortion.

In March 1986, Ms. Andrews entered a Pensacola, Florida, abortion clinic, and tried unsuccessfully to remove the cord from an abortion suction machine. She had informed police and the clinic personnel of her intentions; the police therefore were waiting for her. She went limp upon arrest. She was convicted of burglary. The Florida judge gave her a five year sentence, citing her unrepentant attitude, and unwillingness to discontinue her anti-abortion activities. Joan Andrews continued her practice of nonviolent noncooperation after sentencing, with the result that she served a good deal of her sentence in solitary confinement in Broward Correctional Institute, a maximum security prison. Finally, after serving 31 months, Ms. Andrews was granted clemency by the State of Florida, and was released. See, M. Meehan, Joan Andrews and Friends, 14 The Human Life Review 7 (1988); R. Cowden-Guido, ed., You Reject Them, You Reject Me, supra; Abortion foe freed on probation, Tallahassee Democrat, A2 (Oct. 19, 1988).

Jim Pinto is an Episcopal priest in Birmingham. He is noteworthy in part because the church he pastors is genuinely racially integrated, and located in a low income community. Pinto is a leading spokesman on the abortion issue, and is inspired by Martin Luther King. While in jail after being arrested for nonviolent trespass at an abortion clinic in November 1988, Pinto wrote his own letter from a Birmingham jail. A part follows:

> In our city as well as the country, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr and civil rights leaders obeyed God rather than man and paid the price to see that the laws of discrimination against black men and women would fall and that laws which were supportive would be realized and effective in giving opportunity to blacks and all people. . . .

> In the same way, it is the current law of the land through Roe v. Wade that the pre-born children are not human, though it is clear to many of us they are and have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Garrison, Anti-abortion movements claim kinship to civil rights, The Birmingham News, 6E, col. 1 (Nov. 25, 1988). Pinto also said to fellow pastors while in jail: "The question is not why I am in here. The question is why you and the others are out there." Hargrove, Priest in jail after taking his faith to 'the streets,' The Birmingham Post-Herald, D1, Col. 4 (Nov. 21, 1988). Pinto continues in his pastorship at this writing.

Stories like Andrews' and Pinto's could plainly be repeated. Reports are that public unrest is growing. There were approximately 3200 arrests for anti-abortion civil disobedience in the 13 year period from 1975 to 1988.[21] In 1988, there were approximately 10,000 people arrested. See C. Allen, Anti-Abortion Movement's Anti-Establishment Face, Wall St. J. A22, col. 3-6 (Dec. 8, 1988); A. Sachs, Abortion on the Ropes, Time 58-59 (Dec. 5, 1988).

B. Reconsideration Of Roe v. Wade Is Needed To Sustain The Court's Legitimacy On Cases Involving Abortion.

The Court certainly must be aware of these deep divisions within the nation. As recently as 1986, the Court stated:

> Constitutional rights do not always have easily ascertainable boundaries, and controversy over the meaning of our Nation's most majestic guarantees frequently has been turbulent. As judges, however, we are sworn to uphold the law even when its content gives rise to bitter dispute. . . . We recognized at the very beginning of our opinion in Roe, 410 U.S. at 116, that abortion raises moral and spiritual questions over which honorable persons can disagree sincerely and profoundly. But those > disagreements did not then and do not now relieve us of our duty to apply the Constitution faithfully.

[21] M. Meehan, Joan Andrews and Friends, 14 Human Life Review 7, 10 (1988).

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 771-72 (citation omitted). The Court has even gone so far as to suggest that adherence to Roe is necessary to the rule of law. See City of Akron, 462 U.S. 419-20 (stare decisis demands respect in a society governed by the rule of law).

But adherence to stare decisis can occur at a high price to the Court's legitimacy. "The most important quality of law in a free society is the power to command acceptance and support from the community so as to render force unnecessary, or necessary only upon a small scale against a few recalcitrants." A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 103 (1976) (describing the 'power of legitimacy').

It should be obvious even to the Court that Roe will never gain acceptance and support from people such as Andrews and Pinto. Even some supporters of abortion such as Professor Tribe concede that the fetus can plausibly be described as a "genuine baby." See L. Tribe, God Save This Honorable Court 17 (1985). The Court cannot expect the Andrews and Pintos to allow babies to be killed in the name of privacy, even though such arguments may persuade pro-choice supporters.

The rule of law ultimately requires both sanction and persuasion; it cannot operate when large numbers of people are willing to suffer punishment to uphold their beliefs. In this sense, government continually operates, as some famous civil disobedients testified over 200 years ago in Philadelphia, "by consent of the governed." Because of the breadth of the civil disobedience arising out of the Roe doctrine, it is apparent that the Court has lost the most important quality of law.

1. Destruction of fetal life evokes too much moral outrage to justify continued denial of the States' interest in protection of fetal life.

In suggesting that civil disobedience is related to non-recognition of fetal life in Roe and its progeny, and further support reconsideration, the Center is aware that "constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them," Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294, 300 (1955), and certainly not because of violence, see Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 27 (1958). The Center does not perceive passive civil disobedience as violent. Moreover, the Court is hardly of the unanimous views expressed in the civil rights cases, see Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 782-85 (Burger, C. J., dissenting) (time has come to reexamine Roe).

Should then Roe be adhered to just as the landmark civil rights decisions were?

There was, of course, tremendous national and regional turbulence relating to Brown and its progeny. Yet, since at least the mid-1970's Brown has been accepted nationwide as one of the great decisions of the Court. Brown was ultimately successful because whites, particularly in the South, were persuaded over time of its moral correctness. Indeed, although issues such as affirmative action remain quite controversial, and though racism is doubtless still a very significant problem, there is no substantially organized opposition today to the constitutional principles articulated in Brown.

Roe is different because its opposition has, in the past sixteen years, grown in number and moral outrage. One cannot envisage a time in the future when legalized elective abortion through viability will not provoke the moral outrage of large, reputable, and significant segments of our society.[22] The Court simply cannot expect to win against the pro-life position the battle of persuasion that it won against the segregationist position.

There can be no doubt, of course, that the pro-choice community is also large, and also would be upset by genuine legislative competition with pro-life citizens. The outcome for the rule of law, however, would be far different. The pro-choice community has claimed for years that it represents the settled convictions of the vast majority of Americans. If the Roe doctrine were changed, and the abortion question returned to the States, this conviction of the pro-choice community could be tested in the political arena. Present and future turbulence created by the reversal would be suitably channeled into legislative and political activities.

[22]Cf. Kleinman, When Aboriton Becomes Birth: A Dilemma of Medical Ethics Shaken by New Advances, NY Times at B1 Co. 1 (Feb. 15, 1984) (describing revulsion of hospital personnel at later abortions).

Professor Glendon has aptly stated about abortion: "[w]ith a social problem of such complexity, the best way to proceed is not through a showdown in court, where winner takes all, but by keeping dialogue alive in the nation's statehouses, where there is always another day." M. Glendon, A World Without Roe, New Republic 19, 20 (Feb. 20, 1989). The rule of law is served by such an approach because the losers in the state political process are never so totally and permanently defeated as to be completely alienated from the rest of the nation. They can always work and plan for another day, another opportunity to present their side.

At this time in our nation's history, however, the pro-life side has been, like the segregationist side of another generation, banished from the political landscape by creation of an ironclad constitutional rule. It is generally agreed today that the Court was right to banish the segregationist position and hold firm to the principle of racial equality. The question is whether the Court is similarly certain of the total lack of merit of the pro-life position. Is the belief that human fetal life deserves legal protection so morally unrespectable that it must, like the belief in racial segregation and racial superiority, be banished from active political dialogue?

The Court must determine whether it is so certain of the principle of elective abortion that it is willing to relegate the pro-life community to effective banishment.

CONCLUSION

Roe, Akron and Thornburgh amount to an end to any State-sponsored opportunity to even suggest that fetal life can matter in the abortion decision. Complementing the commonly acknowledged analytical flaws of the Roe doctrine, the current wave of civil disobedience is the tip of an iceberg of popular frustration with no effective democratic means to deal with the abortion controversy. Whatever doctrinal path the Court follows with this and future abortion cases — strict scrutiny or rational basis scrutiny or some variant, this Amicus urges it to free the people to act legislatively for more protection of fetal life, and accord more respect for the legislative choice in any judicial review.

In reconsidering Roe as a response to passive civil disobedience, the Court might take comfort in Machiavelli's remarks about unrest in ancient Rome in his Discourses: "[I]f the quarrels were the reason for the creation of the [plebeian] tribunes, these quarrels merit the highest praise; for besides giving to the people its share of control in the administration, the tribunes were set up as caretakers of Roman liberty. . . . " In becoming fair ground in the abortion controversy, American legislatures may be regarded similarly by history.

Reverse the Eighth Circuit and instruct the lower courts not to enjoin State obstacles to abortion merely because they reflect a desire to protect fetal life.

Respectfully submitted,

ALBERT L. JORDAN, Attorney for Southern Center for Law & Ethics

Albert L. Jordan
Wallace, Brooke & Byers
2000 SouthBridge Parkway
Suite 525
Birmingham, Alabama 35209

David M. Smolin
Assistant Professor of Law
Cumberland School of Law
Samford University
Birmingham, Alabama 35229

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on the 23rd day of February, 1989, three copies of this Brief Amicus Curiae in support of Appellants have been served on the parties of record via United States mail, first-class, postage prepaid and properly addressed as follows:

Michael L. Boicourt
Assistant Attorney General
of Missouri
P. O. Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102

Roger K. Evans
Planned Parenthood Federation
of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019

Albert L. Jordan

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.,

Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court Of Appeals For The Eighth Circuit

BRIEF FOR THE CATHOLIC LAWYERS GUILD OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF BOSTON, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

CALUM B. ANDERSON
LEONARD F. ZANDROW, JR.
PARKER, COULTER, DALEY & WHITE
One Beacon Street
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
(617) 723-4500

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO., (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

INTEREST OF THE CATHOLIC LAWYERS GUILD OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF BOSTON, INC..... 1

STATEMENT 2

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT 3

ARGUMENT 5

I. The Trimester Approach Provided in Roe v. Wade Does Not Provide a Conceptually Accurate or Workable Framework for Analyzing Either Society's or Women's Interests Regarding Abortion..... 5

A. Medical Technologies Have Evolved Since Roe and Have Invalidated the Criteria and Rationale Identified in Roe As Supporting the Concept of Finite Trimester "Stages" 5

B. The Concept of Trimesters or Life "Stages" Expressed in Roe Is Itself Inherently Arbitrary 8

C. The Determination in Roe that Life Has Variant Comparative Values at Different Stages of Fetal Development Violates Ultimate Principles of Morality, Philosophy and Natural Law 10

1. Supreme Authority of Natural Law 11

2. Unalienable Right to Life 13

3. Qualified Nature of Privacy Interest 15

II. This Court Has the Obligation to Reexamine Roe v. Wade, Overrule It, and Recognize the Constitutional Rights of Fetuses from the Moment of Conception 17

TABLE OF CONTENTS – Continued

Page

A. Principles Underlying Stare Decisis Compel, Rather than Preclude, a Reexamination of Roe v. Wade in the Circumstances 17

B. The Rationale Underlying Roe v. Wade is Not Valid 20

C. This Court Should Recognize that Fetuses Are Protected Under the Constitution from the Moment of Conception 22

D. The Liberty Interests of the Mother as Promulgated in Roe v. Wade Do Not Warrant the Taking of Innocent Fetal Life .. 25

CONCLUSION 28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Adamson v. People of State of California, 332 U.S. 46 (1947) 12

American Communications Association v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382 (1949) 11, 18

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 22

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)..... 16, 22, 28

Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerk's Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. 235 (1970) 17, 18, 20

Burnett v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393 (1932) 20

Califano v. Goldfarb, 430 U.S. 199 (1977)..... 27

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983)..... passim

Cleveland Board of Education v. LaFleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) 28

Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190 (1976) 27

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 25

Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1975) 12

Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973)..... 27

Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896)..... 11

Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) 20

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965)..... 15

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)..... 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

The Harrisburg, 119 U.S. 199 (1886) 20

Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106 (1940) 18

H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 23

Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905) 16

Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968) 22

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 25

Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600 (1974) 20

Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658 (1978) 17, 19, 20

Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167 (1961) 19

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 26

Moragne v. States Marine Lines, Inc., 398 U.S. 375 (1970) 20

Nashville Gas Co. v. Satty, 434 U.S. 136 (1977) 27

Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928) 28

Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 26

Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, ___ U.S. ___, 108 S.Ct. 1419 (1988) 18

Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 50 S.E. 68 (1905) 15

Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971) 28

Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609 (1984) .16, 27

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) 16

Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7 (1975) 27

Swift & Co. v. Wickham, 382 U.S. 111 (1965) 18

Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975) 28

Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261 (1980) 20

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 8, 26

Turner v. Dept. of Employment Security and Board of Review of Industrial Commission of Utah, 423 U.S. 44 (1975) 27

United States v. Barnett, 376 U.S. 681 (1964) 20

United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 24

Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254 (1986) 17, 20

Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld, 420 U.S. 636 (1975) 27

Welch v. Texas Dept. of Highways and Public Transportation, 479 U.S. 811 (1987) 20

STATUTES

15 U.S.C. §1691(a)(1) 26

20 U.S.C. §1681(a) 27

29 U.S.C. §206(d)(1) 26

42 U.S.C. §402(f)(1)(D) 27

42 U.S.C. §402(g) 28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

42 U.S.C. §703(a)(2) 27

42 U.S.C. §2000e 26

Missouri Statutes Annotated §1.205.1-2 ..... 2, 5

BOOKS AND ARTICLES

Aristotle, Rhetoric, Book 1, Chapter 13 (1373b 4) (d. circa 323 B.C.) 11

Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, Book 5, Chapter 7 (1134b 18) 11

1 Blackstone, Commentaries 13

Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973) 21

Cicero, De Re Publica, III, xxii, 33 fl. 1st Century B.C. 11

Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (New York: Oxford University Press, 1976) 12, 17, 21

Declaration of Independence 11, 13

Douglas, "The Decline of Stare Decisis," An Autobiography of the Supreme Court (New York: MacMillan Co., 1963) 19

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 21, 24

Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 21

Gordon, "Genetical, Social and Medical Aspects of Abortion," South African Medical Journal (July, 1968) 9

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Grisez, Abortion: The Myths, the Realities and the Arguments (New York: Corpus Books, 1970) 15

Gunther, Cases and Materials on Constitutional Law (9th ed. 1975) 21

Hellman & Pritchard, Williams Obstetrics (1971) 6

Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639 (1980) 23

Linsky, By What Right? A Commentary on the Supreme Court's Power to Revise the Constitution (1975) 21

Locke, The Second Treatise of Government (J. Gough rev. ed. 1976) (3d ed. 1698) 11

Medical World News, October 3, 1977 7

Medical World News, September 14, 1981 7

Mill, On Liberty (G. Himmelfarb ed. 1975) 16

Nardone, "The Nexus of Biology and the Abortion Issue," The Jurist (Spring, 1973) 9

Nathanson, Aborting America (New York: Doubleday, 1979) 6

New England Journal of Medicine, January 23, 1975 7

New England Journal of Medicine, November 22, 1979 7

New England Journal of Medicine, March 6, 1986 ..... 6, 7

Pincus, The Control of Fertility (1963) 9

Prosser & Keeton, Torts (5th ed. 1984) 24

Providence Journal, January 10, 1988 7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Reid, Ryan & Benirschke, Principles and Management of Human Reproduction (Philadelphia: Saunders Co., 1972) 7

Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1973)..... 21

Roberts, An Introduction to Medical Genetics (London: Oxford University Press, 1965)..... 8

Robertson, Toward Rational Boundaries of Tort Liability for Injury to the Unborn: Prenatal Injuries, Preconception Injuries and Wrongful Life, 1978 Duke L.J. 1401 (1978)..... 24

Rubenfeld, The Right of Privacy, 102 Harv. L. Rev. 737 (1989)..... 17

Tribe, The Supreme Court, 1972 Term – Forward: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1973) 21

Tribe, The Abortion Funding Conundrum: Inalienable Rights, Affirmative Duties, and the Dilemma of Dependence, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 330 (1985) 23

Woodward, "The Abortion Papers", Washington Post, January 22, 1989 10

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.,

Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court Of Appeals For The Eighth Circuit

BRIEF FOR THE CATHOLIC LAWYERS GUILD OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF BOSTON, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE CATHOLIC LAWYERS GUILD OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF BOSTON, INC.

The Catholic Lawyers Guild of the Archdiocese of Boston, Inc. is an organization of over 400 attorneys. Its members ascribe, inter alia, to promote the science of ethics, particularly the systematic application of ethical principles to concrete legal issues and to seek to protect the legal and moral rights of all people. Owing to these ideals, the membership feels compelled to address certain issues necessarily underlying this appeal, specifically:

(1) the sanctity of human life, (2) the unalienable character of life, and (3) the supremacy of life over all other rights and privileges, constitutional or otherwise, in American legal heritage. As practitioners who, in part, define their identities as well as derive their livelihood from the system of American jurisprudence, the members of the Guild submit that they have a direct and substantial interest in this Court's resolution of the conflicting values presented by this appeal.[1]

STATEMENT

In 1986, the State of Missouri enacted a statute regulating abortions. Among its provisions, the statute contains a declaration that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception," and a requirement that all state laws be construed to confer upon unborn children all the rights provided to other persons "subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court." Mo. Stat. Ann. §1.205. 1-2.

Five doctors and nurses and two corporations brought a class action suit challenging the constitutionality of the Missouri statute. The district court struck down the provisions, J.S. App. A1-A55, and the court of appeals affirmed. Id. at A56-A84.

[1] The written consents of counsel of record have been filed with the clerk of this Court.

The court of appeals concluded that the declaration that life begins at conception was "simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." Id. at A64. The court also rejected Missouri's reliance on the express qualification to the declaration which required compatibility with the Constitution and with Supreme Court decisional law. Id. at A64-A65. The court of appeals reasoned that a mere recitation of the Supremacy Clause "cannot . . . validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the constitution."[2] Id. at A64. In invalidating this and all other provisions of the Missouri statute the court relied on the right to abortion guaranteed by this Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) and its progeny. Id. at A61, A73, A79.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The trimester approach provided in Roe v. Wade, and relied upon by the court of appeals, does not provide a conceptually accurate or workable framework for analyzing either society's or women's interests regarding abortion. (pp. 5-17). The trimester approach is premised on the existence of determinate and definable "stages" of fetal life development which have been invalidated by advances in medical technologies. (pp. 5-8). In addition, the concept of trimesters or life "stages" is itself inherently arbitrary, because fetal development progresses in a continuum and because neither medicine, philosophy, nor law otherwise attribute identifiable, distinguishable or qualitative significance to any particular "stages" of fetal development. (pp. 8-10).

[2] Judge Arnold dissented from this portion of the court's decision. J.S. App. A83-A84. Judge Arnold maintained that Missouri's declaration of when life begins should be upheld "insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion," such as "creating causes of action against persons other than the mother" for wrongful death or bringing fetuses within the protection of criminal law. Id. at A83-A84.

The determination that life has variant comparative values at different stages of fetal development, that variant comparative values may be allocated to life according to temporal criteria, and that innocent life may be deliberately terminated at an early stage of temporal development violates principles of Natural Law. (pp. 10-17). In this regard, the authority of Natural Law is supreme (pp. 11-13), the character of life is unalienable (pp. 13-15), and the nature of the privacy interests implicated are necessarily qualified. (pp. 15-17).

The Court has the obligation to reexamine Roe v. Wade. (pp. 17-28). Principles of stare decisis compel, rather than preclude, the Court from such reexamination. (pp. 17-20). Upon reexamination, the Court should overrule Roe and proclaim that fetuses are protected under the Fourteenth Amendment from the moment of conception because: (1) the rationale underlying Roe is no longer valid (pp. 20-22), (2) the fetuses' unalienable rights to life are paramount (pp. 22-25), and (3) women's basic liberties in areas other than abortion are properly secured by distinct laws and constitutional principles. (pp. 25-28).

ARGUMENT

I. The Trimester Approach Provided in Roe v. Wade Does Not Provide a Conceptually Accurate or Workable Framework for Analyzing Either Society's or Women's Interests Regarding Abortion.

The rationale expressed in Roe v. Wade, supra, assumes the existence of, and is necessarily premised upon, determinate and definable "stages" of fetal life development. 410 U.S. at 732. As the discussion infra reveals, this rationale is not supported by medical consensus, is intrinsically arbitrary, and is morally, philosophically and legally unsound. Accordingly, this Court should overrule Roe v. Wade, reverse the court of appeals in this case, and proclaim that Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception (Mo. Stat. Ann. §1.205. 1-2) is consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment.

A. Medical Technologies Have Evolved Since Roe and Have Invalidated the Criteria and Rationale Identified in Roe As Supporting the Concept of Finite Trimester "Stages."

As Justice O'Connor predicted in City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462' U.S. 416 (1983),

> "[t]he Roe framework . . . is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception."

Id. at 459 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The criteria used by the Court in Roe to estimate fetal viability are especially outdated. Dr. Bernard Nathanson, an obstetrician and gynecologist, a former member of the board of the National Abortion Rights League (which he helped found in 1969), and a former director of the largest abortion clinic in the world, has criticized the viability standards in Roe as being inaccurate and obsolete. "The concept [of viability] is fluid and is constantly being pushed backward." Nathanson, Aborting America (New York: Doubleday, 1979) at 207-208. Developments in medical technology which have advanced the point of viability include > "sophisticated incubators with efficient oxygenators, humidifiers, temperature controls, cardiac-monitoring systems, artificial respirators, ventilators, methods for determining arterial blood gases, complex new intravenous feeding solutions and equipment for administering them, and an infinite variety of new diagnostic techniques such as ultrasonography and computerized X-ray scanning. . . ."

Id. at 280-281.

Medical studies continuously demonstrate increasingly earlier fetal viability. The New England Journal of Medicine has concluded that "[a]dvances in perinatal care have been accompanied by improved survival among infants born in the middle to late second trimester, who were previously considered nonviable." New Eng. J. of Med., March 6, 1986 at 660. The 14th edition of L. Hellman & J. Pritchard, Williams Obstetrics (1971) at 493, on which the court relied in Roe for its understanding of viability, stated that "[a]ttainment of a [fetal] weight of 1,000 g. [or a fetal age of approximately 28 weeks' gestation] is . . . widely used as the criterion of viability." A three year study at MacDonald Hospital in Cleveland, Ohio reported in the New England Journal of Medicine in 1986, however, concluded that the survival rate among infants weighing 750 to 999 g. was 67 percent (49 of 73) and 26 percent (20 of 77) among those weighing 500 to 749 g. New Eng. J. of Med., March 6, 1986 at 660. Over a decade ago, the Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston recommended that intensive supportive care be considered on fetuses weighing 600 g. New Eng. J. of Med., January 23, 1975 at 4. A child weighing 440 g. at birth has survived. Providence Journal, January 10, 1988 at A-24.

Medical advances have unequivocally established that the criteria underlying the trimester framework in Roe have become conceptually incompatible and inconsistent, particularly with regard to fetal viability. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. at 457-458 n.5 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (citing four medical treatises). See also Medical World News, September 14, 1981 at 30 ("[N]eonatologist Elizabeth R. Brown reported that among babies born in Harvard's joint neonatology program from 1975 to 1978, survival rates were 44% among those weighing 751 to 1,000 g."); New Eng. J. of Med., November 22, 1979 at 1164 ("[I]ncreasing numbers of infants weighing less than 750 g. at birth are now being admitted to the nursery."); Medical World News, October 3, 1977 at 15 (At Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, "of 75 low-birth weight babies who had been admitted to the hospital between 1973 and 1975 [,t]hirty of the infants (40%) survived, including six who had weighed less than 750 g. at birth."); Reid, Ryan & Benirschke, Principles and Management of Human Reproduction at 255 (Philadelphia: Saunders Co., 1972) ("Viability, though, is a changing concept. Medical advances in the treatment of the premature make it possible to anticipate that even these very small abortuses of 20 weeks' gestation may soon have a greater chance of survival. . . .").

B. The Concept of Trimesters or Life "Stages" Expressed in Roe Is Itself Inherently Arbitrary.

The "line-drawing" inherent in Roe's trimester framework is not premised upon any medical, philosophical or legal principle or theory and is necessarily arbitrary in origin. As Justice White pointed out in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747, 792 (1986) (dissenting opinion), "there is no nonarbitrary line separating a fetus from a child or, indeed, an adult human being." Medical science does not attribute identifiable, distinguishable or qualitative significance to any particular "stages" of fetal development. To the contrary, as a biological fact, fetal development progresses in a continuum: all cells essential to the fetus' development are present from the earliest stages of pregnancy.

Each person begins life as a single cell. The biological process which began at that moment in our life has continued without interruption to the moment that this sentence is being read. Modern genetics clearly substantiates that a new individual human life begins at fertilization. A human being originates in the union of two gametes, the ovum and the spermatozoon, which contain all characteristics and attributes which the new child has inherited genetically from his or her parents. Roberts, An Introduction to Medical Genetics (London: Oxford University Press, 1965) at 1. Children and ultimately adults are who they are because of the hereditary combination which they originally received at the time of their fertilization.

> "[F]rom the moment of fertilization, when the deohyribose nucleic acids from the spermatozoon and the ovum come together to form the zygote, the pattern of the individual's constitutional development is irrevocably determined; his future health, his future intellectual potential, even his future criminal proclivities are all dependent on the sequence of the purine and pyrimidine bases in the original set of DNA molecules of the unicellular individual."

Gordon, "Genetical, Social and Medical Aspects of Abortion," South African Medical Journal (July, 1968) at 721-730.

The fertilized ovum represents a full human genetic package of 46 chromosomes, a unique combination of chromosomes which does not genetically change as fertilization is followed by cell division, growth, and systematic and orderly differentiation. Nardone, "The Nexus of Biology and the Abortion Issue," The Jurist (Spring, 1973) at 153. The assignment of the fertilized ovum to the biological species homo sapiens occurs at the moment of fertilization and "is determined not by the stage of development, but by the sum total of its biological characteristics – actual and potential – which are genetically determined." Id. at 154.

The Roe opinion's reference to the early fetus as merely a "potential life", unfairly characterizes the fetus' chances of surviving until birth. Once spermatozoon and ovum meet and the conceptus is formed, there is an 80 percent chance that, unless deliberately aborted, the being will be delivered as a living child. G. Pincus, The Control of Fertility, 197 (1963). All that is required for the fetus to grow is continued nourishment. It is significantly more likely than not that conception will result in a live birth.

The trimester framework expressed in Roe is refuted by modern genetics, which attaches no distinguishable or qualitative significance to particular "stages" of fetal development. The trimester framework in Roe does not originate from any innate physiological process or condition, but is founded upon an artificial criterion applied by external forces of social policy and administrative convenience. See Woodward, "The Abortion Papers," Washington Post, January 22, 1989 at D-1 (correspondence among Justices acknowledging "arbitrary" character of trimester framework). Viability is not a characteristic of the fetus, but rather a condition external to the fetus. The value of a person should not be dependent upon a condition external to the person.

C. The Determination in Roe that Life Has Variant Comparative Values at Different Stages of Fetal Development Violates Ultimate Principles of Morality, Philosophy and Natural Law.

The right to abortion created in Roe v. Wade necessarily implicates value judgments about the sanctity and importance of human life itself. The decision of when a fetus is entitled to full protection as a person under the Fourteenth Amendment is ultimately not an exercise in evaluating fetal survivability or assessing the current state of the art in incubator science, as Roe implies. The determination of who a fetus is as a being is ultimately a judgment of who we are as a people and by what tradition, heritage and values, if any, we define our very identity and essence.

1. Supreme Authority of Natural Law.

Natural Law is as old as Aristotle, and as classical as Cicero. See Aristotle, Rhetoric, Book 1, Chapter 13 (1373 b 4) (d. circa 323 B.C.); Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, Book 5, Chapter 7 (1134 b 18); Cicero, De Re Publica, III, xxii, 33 fl. 1st century B.C. Since the inception of the United States of America, the Nation has defined its essential identity and ultimate being by reference to Natural Law. The supreme authority of Natural Law was first ordained as a self-evident and timeless tenet in our Declaration of Independence. See Declaration of Independence, pars. 1-2. As Justice Jackson wrote in American Communications Association v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 439 (1949), "[t]he men who led the struggle forcibly to overthrow lawfully constituted British authority found moral support by asserting a natural law under which their revolution was justified, and they broadly proclaimed these beliefs in the document basic to our freedom."

The supreme authority of Natural Law represents a fundamental premise underlying the very existence of the Constitution of the United States. See Declaration of Independence, pars. 1-2. See generally J. Locke, The Second Treatise of Government (J. Gough rev. ed. 1976) (3d ed. 1698). In quoting ancient treatises in Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896), this Court noted that:

> "There are things which we acquire the dominion of, as by the law of nature, which the light of natural reason causes every man to see, and others we acquire by the civil law; that is to say, by methods which belong to the government. . . . (quoting Dig. bk. 41, tit. 1, De Adquir. Rer. Dom.).

> "The civil law, it is said, cannot be contrary to the natural law. This is true as regards those things which the natural law commands or which it forbids; but the civil law can restrict that which the natural law only permits. The greater part of all civil laws are nothing but restrictions on those things which the natural law would otherwise permit."

Id. at 523-524, quoting Pothier, Traite du Droit de Propriete, Nos. 27-28.

In noting that there is no calculus for determining which of the first eight Amendments are incorporated into the Fourteenth Amendment, Justice Frankfurter in Adamson v. People of State of California, 332 U.S. 46, 65, (1947) (concurring opinion) wrote

> "[i]n the history of thought 'natural law' has a much longer and much better founded meaning and justification than such subjective selection of the first eight Amendments for incorporation into the Fourteenth."

See Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 831 n.39 (1975), quoting Thomas Paine on a Bill of Rights, 1777, reprinted in 1 Schwartz 316 ("[T]he civil right of pleading by proxy, that is, by a council, is an appendage to the natural right [of self-representation]. . . .") (parenthetical in original). See also Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (New York: Oxford University Press, 1976) at 31-32 ("Belief in natural rights and natural law were deeply ingrained in the eighteenth-century American mind. . . . The conviction that there were such natural rights made it easy to express them in a Constitution, and then to accept the notion that a duly enacted statute in conflict with natural rights was not a binding law. . . . This early belief in the supremacy of natural law and its survival into our own time, albeit with different intellectual trappings and under other names, helped to secure acceptance of the legitimacy of judicial supremacy on matters of constitutional interpretation.").

2. Unalienable Right to Life.

As a matter of Natural Law, life is unalienable and necessarily supersedes any rights or privileges conferred by civil authorities. The issue of what is human life and when life can claim the protection of the law is not an inscrutably religious or theological concept or a matter of personal idiosyncratic choice. "Life is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual. . . ." 1 Blackstone, Commentaries 129-130. The Declaration of Independence recognizes as a "self-evident" truth that all persons "are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights [and] that among these are Life. . . ." Declaration of Independence, par. 2.

Even if the disciplines of contemporary medicine, philosophy and theology are unable to arrive at a consensus as to when life begins for an individual human, this does not suggest that an ultimate answer or truth to this inquiry does not exist. The Court's admission that it cannot "solve the difficult question of when life begins," Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159, prudentially requires a presumption that personhood begins at conception.

> "Respect for the paramount sanctity of life lies at the center of Western civilization. However narrowly one defines life itself – however uncertain one may be about the correct definition – protecting the penumbra, 'near-life' or 'life becoming' would seem, to promote that central public purpose."

Archibald Cox, quoted in Wauck, The Decline of Personhood, 14 Human Life Rev. 54 (1988). Prudential certitude, that quantum of certitude sufficient to act with moral responsibility, is proportionate to the gravity of the matter at hand. Where the matter is serious and there is doubt of fact, there exists a moral obligation to take the safer course. Accordingly, the greatest prudential certitude is required when the lives of persons are at stake.

In light of modern genetics (see discussion supra at 8-10) and in the absence of any compelling medical or philosophical basis for attributing any distinguishable or qualitative significance to particular "stages" of fetal development, the process in Roe of defining life according to temporal criteria, of allocating variant comparative values to life in accordance with such temporal criteria, and of permitting the termination of innocent life at an early stage of temporal development is baseless, arbitrary, and without moral justification. Every person possesses a fundamental intrinsic worth and value which cannot and should not be diminished by reference to external criteria (e.g. viability, wealth or status) or abilities (e.g., ability to communicate or I.Q.). If the right to life is indeed unalienable, it must be based on the simple fact that a human being is a human being.

> "We may feel safe enough, personally in using the factual inequality and inferiority of the embryo as a ground for treating its life as expendable. After all, we are not now and never again will be unequal and inferior in just the way the embryo is. But in reasoning thus we are being arbitrary, for we are selecting as decisive the characteristics we prefer among all the differences of human beings. . . .

> "To decide that some of these differences, some of these inequalities, some of these ways of being inferior can so detract from the basic worth of a person as to warrant his destruction by another is essentially to decide that all persons have a certain definite and limited worth and that certain facts characterizing persons can lessen that worth in a definite and calculable way. Now, this is precisely the mistake of utilitarianism. It understands human worth not in terms of what is intrinsic to the person and his life – dignity – but in terms of what is extrinsic – value for something. Human goods can then be appraised and weighed, and the right to kill will depend upon computation. In effect, utilitarianism puts a price on every man's head. Every person in transformed into an object."

Grisez, Abortion: the Myths, the Realities, and the Arguments (New York: Corpus Books, 1970) at 304-305 (emphasis in original).

3. Qualified Nature of Privacy Interest.

Life, being unalienable, necessarily supersedes the right of privacy articulated in Roe v. Wade.[3] The right of privacy is derivative of, and dependent upon, Natural Law. See Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 510 n.1 (1965) (Black, J., dissenting) (" 'A right of privacy in matters purely private is . . . derived from natural law'."), quoting Pavesick v. New England Life Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 194, 50 S.E. 68, 70 (1905).

---

[3] "If . . . personhood is established, the appellant's case [the demand for abortion], of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the [Fourteenth] Amendment." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 156-157.

The strongest supporters of privacy interests recognize that such rights are qualified in nature and are not unalienable. "[T]he 'ability independently to define one's identity that is central to any concept of liberty' cannot truly be exercised in a vacuum. . . ." Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 205 (1986) (Blackman J., dissenting), quoting Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 619 (1984). See J.S. Mill, On Liberty, at 141 (G. Himmelfarb ed. 1985) ("As soon as any part of a person's conduct affects prejudicially the interests of others, society has jurisdiction over it. . . ."). This Court has recognized, for example, that physical intrusions into one's "bodily integrity" are constitutionally permitted in furtherance of important state interests. See Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) (upholding compulsory blood-test of an accused); Jacobsen v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 26 (1905) (upholding compulsory vaccination law and rejecting purported "inherent right of every free man to care for his own body").

Accordingly, a mother's rights with respect to her own body and its uses may have a primacy – but only up to that point at which other human rights are involved. In abortion, the qualified right of the mother must necessarily give way to the life interest of the fetus throughout the developmental duration of the pregnancy, if the unalienable character of life under Natural Law is to be given any meaning.

> "Harm is arguably done, first of all to society, which is deprived of the person that the fetus would have become, and second to the fetus itself, which may after a point be a sentient being even if not a person. . . . In addition, there is a very important consequence for the father, who may against his will be deprived of having a child. Indeed, if it is the decision whether or not to beget a child that is protected, and if that decision is said to be central to a person's identity, then the father's own 'personhood' would appear to be violated whenever the mother has an abortion against his wishes."

Rubenfeld, The Right of Privacy, 102 Harv. L. Rev. 737, 758 n.112 (1989).

II. This Court Has the Obligation to Reexamine Roe v. Wade, Overrule It, and Proclaim the Constitutional Rights of Fetuses from the Moment of Conception.

A. Principles Underlying Stare Decisis Compel, Rather than Preclude, a Reexamination of Roe v. Wade in the Circumstances.

As Justice Powell eloquently noted in Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 710 n.6 (1978) (concurring opinion), "the law has recognized the necessity of change, lest rules simply persist from blind imitation of the past." Id. "[H]istory does not impose any rigid formula to constrain the Court in the disposition of cases . . . [and] changes in society or in the law [may] dictate that the values served by stare decisis yield in favor of a greater objective." Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 266 (1986). Precedent must be reexamined where "subsequent events have undermined its continuing validity," Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerk's Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. 235, 256 (1970) (Stewart, J., concurring), as where medical studies have undermined the viability criteria underlying Roe v. Wade. Precedent should also be reexamined whenever Natural Law rights are implicated, such as the unalienable rights of fetuses in this case. See Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government, supra at 112 ("Natural law . . . legitimizes change, if indeed it does not impel it; and it legitimizes for the public and perhaps even for the judge himself a measure of constitutional adjudication as an instrument of reform."). See also Swift & Co. v. Wickham, 382 U.S. 111, 116 (1965) ("[W]e would fall short in our responsibilities if we did not accept this opportunity to take a fresh look at the problem. We believe that considerations of stare decisis should not deter us from this course. Unless inexorably commended by statute, a procedural principle of this importance should not be kept on the books in the name of stare decisis once it is proved to be unworkable in practice; the mischievous consequences to litigants and courts alike from the perpetuation of an unworkable rule are too great.").

This Court has consistently recognized that "stare decisis is a principle of policy and not a mechanical formula of adherence to the latest decision, however recent and questionable, when such adherence involves collision with a prior doctrine more embracing in its scope, intrinsically sounder, and verified by experience." Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerk's Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. at 242. See Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, ___ U.S. ___, 108 S.Ct. 1419, 1421 (1988); Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119 (1940). As Justice Jackson wrote in American Communications Association v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 439 n.11 (1949) (concurring in part and dissenting in part), "[u]nquestioning idolatry of the status quo has never been an American characteristic." Justice Douglas commented that:

> "A judge looking at a constitutional decision may have compulsions to revere past history and accept what was once written. But he remembers above all else that it is the Constitution which he swore to support and defend, not the gloss which his predecessors may have put on it. So he comes to formulate his own views, rejecting some earlier ones as false and embracing others. He cannot do otherwise unless he lets men long dead and unaware of the problems of the age in which he lives do his thinking for him.
>
> This re-examination of precedent in constitutional law is a personal matter for each judge who comes along. . . . [It] is the necessary consequence of our system and to my mind a healthy one. The alternative is to let the Constitution freeze in the pattern which one generation gave it. But the Constitution was designed for the vicissitudes of time. It must never become a code which carries the overtones of one period that may be hostile to another."

William O. Douglas, "The Decline of Stare Decisis," An Autobiography of the Supreme Court (New York: MacMillan Co., 1963).

In reexamining Roe v. Wade, this Court need not be troubled by the frequency with which that case has been cited or the arguable "reliance interest" built upon it. Compare City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. at 420 n.1. The frequency with which a case has been cited is surely not justification alone for adherence to stare decisis nor does it warrant a refusal to reexamine the prior precedent. See Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. at 705 (Powell, J., concurring) (overruling Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, despite fact that "[f]ew cases in the history of the Court have been cited more frequently than Monroe. . . .").[4]

B. The Rationale Underlying Roe v. Wade Is Not Valid.

This Court should overrule Roe v. Wade since the trimester framework first advanced in that opinion is not supported by medical consensus, is intrinsically arbitrary, is morally and philosophically unsound, and violates Natural Law. The Court's rationale in Moragne v. States Marine Lines, Inc., 398 U.S. 375, 405-406 (1970), overruling The Harrisburg, 119 U.S. 199 (1886), is particularly apt. Like Roe, the Court's earlier decision in The Harrisburg:

[4] Since Roe v. Wade purports to rest upon constitutional rather than statutory grounds, a reexamination of this ruling is particularly appropriate. It is "this Court's considered practice not to apply stare decisis as rigidly in constitutional as in nonconstitutional cases. . . ." Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 543 (1962). See Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261, 273 n.18 (1980), quoting Burnett v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 407-408 (1932) ("The doctrine of stare decisis has a more limited application when the precedent rests on constitutional grounds, because 'correction through legislative action is practically impossible.' "); Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerk's Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. at 260 (Black, J., dissenting) ("In the area of constitutional law, for example, where the only alternative to action by this Court is the laborious process of constitutional amendment and where the ultimate responsibility rests with this Court, I believe reconsideration is always proper."). See also Welch v. Texas Dept. of Highways and Public Transportation, 479 U.S. 811, 107 S.Ct. 2941, 2948 (1987); Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. at 267 (Powell, J., dissenting); Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. at 696; Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600, 627 (1974) (Powell, J., concurring); United States v. Barnett, 376 U.S. 681, 699 (1964).

> "rested on a most dubious foundation when announced, has become an increasingly unjustifiable anomaly as the law over the years has left it behind, and . . . has produced litigation-spawning confusion in an area that should be easily susceptible of more workable solutions. The rule has had a long opportunity to prove its acceptability, and instead has suffered universal criticism and wide repudiation. To supplant the present disarray in this area with a rule both simpler and more just will further, not impede, efficiency in adjudication. Finally, a judicious reconsideration of precedent cannot be as threatening to public faith in the judiciary as continued adherence to a rule unjustified in reason. . . ."

Moragne v. States Marine Lines, Inc., supra at 405-406.

The public and scholarly reactions to Roe v. Wade have been tumultuous and highly critical.[5] The rationale underlying Roe and the privacy right recognized in the opinion are especially vulnerable for lacking a substantive constitutional origin. See Tribe, The Supreme Court, 1972 Term – Forward: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 7 (1973) ("One of the most curious things about Roe is that, behind its own verbal smokescreen, the substantive judgment on which it rests is nowhere to be found."); Ely The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, supra at 932 n.79 ("Even reading the cases [Roe] cited 'for all that they are worth,' it is difficult to isolate the 'privacy' factor that unites them with each other and with Roe."). As the Court itself acknowledged recently in Bowers v. Hardwick:

[5] See, e.g., Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government, supra at 51-55; Linsky, By What Right? A Commentary on the Supreme Court's Power to Revise the Constitution at 15-21, 99-100 (1975); Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973); Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); Espstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159; Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1973). See generally G. Gunther, Cases and Materials on Constitutional Law 650-656 (9th ed. 1975).

> "The Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution. . . . There should be, therefore, great resistance to expand the substantive reach of those clauses, particularly if it requires redefining the category of rights deemed to be fundamental. Otherwise, the Judiciary necessarily takes to itself further authority to govern the country without express constitutional authority."

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. at 194-195.

C. This Court Should Proclaim that Fetuses Are Protected under the Constitution from the Moment of Conception.

A pronouncement conferring the constitutional protections of the Fourteenth Amendment upon fetuses would be consistent with principles previously recognized by the Court as well as the unalienable tenets of Natural Law. The Fourteenth Amendment applies to those who "are humans, live, and have their being. . . ." Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68, 70 (1968). This Court has previously acknowledged that the States' interests in protecting the "potentiality of life" exist "throughout the course of the woman's pregnancy." City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. at 429; Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1977). The States have an "important and legitimate interest in potential life." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 164. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., supra at 428-429. The States' interests in "encouraging childbirth except in the most urgent circumstances" are "rationally related to the legitimate governmental objective of protecting potential life." H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 414 (1981); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 325 (1980).

The rights afforded to fetuses under Natural Law and in all legal contexts (other than the aberration created by Roe v. Wade) warrant and compel a pronouncement that life at all temporal stages is of compelling constitutional protection.[6] As medical technology has advanced, civil and criminal law have generally recognized fetuses as persons entitled to the full protections of the law. "The ideological history of prenatal injury law, and the more recent development of prenatal death law has consistently moved toward the affirmation of the unborn as a 'person' in the law. . . ." Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639, 640 (1980). In tort law, "[w]ith recent advances in embryology and medical technology, medical proof of causation in these cases [of prenatal injury] has become increasingly reliable, which argues for eliminating the viability or [6] "[I]t is at least arguable that the fetus could be regarded as a holder of rights under the due process clauses of the fifth and fourteenth amendments, as well as the equal protection clause of the latter. Any such 'right to life' could hardly be deemed alienable. . . . The inalienability of that right suggests that the government bears an affirmative duty to protect the interests of the fetus. . . ." Tribe, The Abortion Funding Conundrum: Inalienable Rights, Affirmative Duties, and the Dilemma of Dependence, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 330, 340-341 (1985).

---

other arbitrary developmental requirement altogether." Prosser & Keeton, Torts, §55 at 369 (5th ed. 1984). See also Robertson, Toward Rational Boundaries of Tort Liability for Injury to the Unborn: Prenatal Injuries, Preconception Injuries and Wrongful Life, 1978 Duke L.J. 1401, 1425 (1978) ("[T]he current weight of authority is with those courts which do not require live birth as a condition for maintaining a wrongful death action. . . ."). Similarly, "the criminal law and the laws pertaining to descent and distribution of property have acknowledged the separate existence of the unborn child from the moment of conception and the corresponding duty owed either to the state [criminal law] or to the child [property] for its protection from an early age.") Id. at 1404 n.21 (parentheticals in original).

A pronouncement conferring the protections of the Fourteenth Amendment upon fetuses is especially warranted and appropriate in light of this Court's tradition of affording special protection upon insular minorities. United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152 n.4 (1938). See Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, supra at 933-935 ("Compared with men, very few women sit in our legislatures. . . . But no fetuses sit in our legislatures. . . . [T]he Court should throw its weight on the side of a minority demanding in court more than it was able to achieve politically. But even assuming this suggestion can be given principled content, it was clearly intended and should be reserved for those interests which, as compared with the interests to which they have been subordinated, constitute minorities unusually incapable of protecting themselves. Compared with men, women may constitute such a 'minority'; compared with the unborn, they do not.") (emphasis in original).

D. The Liberty Interests of the Mother as Promulgated in Roe v. Wade Do Not Warrant the Taking of Innocent Fetal Life.

Even under the reasoning of Roe, a mother's right to abortion was never perceived to be unqualified or absolute in character. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 154-155. See Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 474 (1977) ("Roe did not declare an unqualified 'constitutional right to an abortion' "); Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 208 (1973) (Burger, C.J., concurring) ("Plainly, the Court today rejects any claim that the Constitution requires abortions on demand.").

Upon reexamination of Roe, this Court should rule that the mother's qualified right to privacy not only "must be considered against important state interests in abortion," Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 154; City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. at 428, but also must be weighed against the unalienable rights of the fetus to life.

This Court should not be troubled that the reversal of Roe would produce widespread ramifications on women's constitutional liberties generally. The purported maternal privacy right articulated in Roe was not specifically identified in the Constitution, see City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., supra at 427, ("[The Constitution does not specifically identify this right [of privacy] . . . "), nor did the purported maternal privacy right fall within the contours of "fundamental" liberties traditionally characterized by the Court. See Moore v. City of East Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494, 538 (1977) (Stewart, J., dissenting) ("implicit in the concept of ordered liberty."); Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325-326 (1937). See also Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747, 789-791, (White, J., dissenting). Since the origin of the "Roe right" is itself unique and is not shared with the fundamental liberties of women, a reversal of that right would not jeopardize conceptually the fundamental constitutional liberties which protect women.

The basic liberties of women should not be considered dependent philosophically upon Roe v. Wade, since the purported right in Roe necessarily implicates the diametrically countervailing, irreconcilable, and unalienable natural right of life. No individual right is truly "fundamental" or worth preserving if it is inherently based upon the destruction of another person's life. "If . . . personhood is established, the appellant's case [the woman's demand for abortion], of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the [Fourteenth] Amendment." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 157-158.

Under the law, the basic liberties of women are plainly not dependent upon Roe v. Wade. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. §2000(e), prohibits discrimination in any employment practice on the basis of sex. The Equal Pay Act of 1963, 29 U.S.C. §206(d)(1), prohibits discrimination by covered employees on the basis of sex. The Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits discrimination "with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction on the basis of . . . sex." 15 U.S.C. §1691(a)(1).

Title IX of the Education Amendment Act of 1972 prohibits "discrimination under any education program or activity . . . on the basis of sex. . . ." 20 U.S.C. §1681(a). In addition, this court has decisively invalidated gender-based classifications. Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 689 (1973). See Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609 (1984) (state's compelling interest in eradicating gender-based discrimination superseded First Amendment associational freedoms of national civic membership organization); Nashville Gas Co. v. Satty, 434 U.S. 136 (1977) (employer's policy of denying employees returning from pregnancy leave their accumulated seniority acts both to deprive them "of employment opportunities" and "to adversely affect [their] status as an employee" because of their sex in violation of §703(a)(2) of Title VII); Califano v. Goldfarb, 430 U.S. 199 (1977) (gender-based distinction in eligibility for 42 U.S.C. §402(f)(1)(D) Social Security survivors' benefits violated Due Process Clause of Fifth Amendment); Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190 (1976) (gender-based differential for age at which persons were permitted to procure alcohol constituted invidious discrimination in violation of Equal Protection Clause); Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7 (1975) (support payments statute which identified 21 years as majority age for males and 18 as majority age for females violated Equal Protection Clause of Fourteenth Amendment); Turner v. Dept. of Employment Security and Board of Review of Industrial Commission of Utah, 423 U.S. 44 (1975) (unemployment compensation statute's conclusive presumption of incapacitation of pregnant woman for specified period violated due process); Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld, 420 U.S.

636 (1975) (gender-based distinction in survivors' benefits mandated by 42 U.S.C. §402(g) of Social Security Act violated Due Process Clause of Fifth Amendment); Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975) (women may not be systematically excluded or automatically exempted from jury service based solely on sex); Cleveland Board of Education v. LaFleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) (mandatory termination provisions in maternity leave policy violates Due Process Clause of Fourteenth Amendment); Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971) (provision in probate code which gave preference to men over women when persons of the same entitlement class applied for appointment as administrator of decedent's estate violated Equal Protection Clause of Fourteenth Amendment).

CONCLUSION

This case profoundly challenges the Court to review Natural Law and, in a very real sense, to define our Nation's legal heritage, essence, and foundation. In Bowers v. Hardwick, it was said that "the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men" is "the right to be let alone." See Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. at 199 (Blackmun, J., dissenting), quoting Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting). While the right to privacy is no doubt important, the amicus Catholic Lawyers Guild calls upon the Court to assess whether our Constitution stands for any higher or more fundamental ideal than merely the "right to be let alone." See id. The amicus Catholic Lawyers Guild submits that the unalienable right to life is such an ideal, that the right to life intrinsically supersedes any and all rights or privileges conferred by civil authorities, and that any and all doubts regarding the potentiality or definition of life must be properly resolved in favor of assuming the existence of human life from the moment of conception.

Accordingly, this Court should overrule Roe v. Wade, reverse the court of appeals in this case, and proclaim that all humans are entitled to the full protections of the Fourteenth Amendment from the moment of conception.

Respectfully submitted,

Catholic Lawyers Guild of the Archdiocese of Boston, Inc.

CALUM B. ANDERSON
LEONARD F. ZANDROW, JR.
PARKER, COULTER, DALEY & WHITE
One Beacon Street
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
(617) 723-4500

Date: February 23, 1989

APPENDIX

Fourteenth Amendment

"All person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privilege or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U.S. Const. Amend. XIV, §1.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE UNITED STATES CATHOLIC CONFERENCE AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

MARK E. CHOPKO *
General Counsel

PHILLIP H. HARRIS
Solicitor

Of Counsel:
HELEN M. ALVARÉ

UNITED STATES CATHOLIC CONFERENCE
1312 Massachusetts Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 659-6690

* Counsel of Record

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	4
I. BEFORE ADDRESSING THE MERITS OF THIS CASE, THE COURT SHOULD RECONSIDER ITS DECISION IN ROE v. WADE	4
II. THE COURT'S APPLICATION OF PRIVACY PRINCIPLES TO ABORTION IN ROE v. WADE WAS FUNDAMENTALLY FLAWED	7
III. A REASONED RECONSIDERATION OF ROE v. WADE IN LIGHT OF CURRENT KNOWLEDGE IS NECESSARY	13
A. The Problems Associated with Illegal Abortion Are Not Solved by Constitutional Abortion	14
1. Illegal Abortions	15
2. Maternal Deaths	16
3. Infant Mortality	19
B. Personal, Social and Family Problems are Aggravated, Not Alleviated, by Abortion	20
1. The "Unwanted" Child	21
2. Effect on Adoption	23
3. Psychological Ramifications	24
C. There Is No Basis For Roe v. Wade's Inclusion Of Abortion Within The Right of Privacy	28
CONCLUSION	29

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES: Page

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6
Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578 (1897) 8
Bender v. Williamsport Area School District, 475 U.S. 534 (1986) 4, 5, 6
Doe v. Bolton, 319 F. Supp. 1048 (N.D. Ga. 1970) .. 6
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 3, 6, 13, 14, 16
Doe v. Scott, 310 F. Supp. 688 (N.D. Ill. 1970) 6
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 2, 10
Hagans v. Lavine, 415 U.S. 528 (1974) 5, 6
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 21
In re Baby M., 109 N.J. 396, 537 A.2d 1227 (1988) 24
Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905) 7, 8, 12, 13
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) 9
Mansfield C. & L.M.R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379 (1884) 5, 16
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 2, 9, 10
Mitchell v. Maurer, 293 U.S. 237 (1934) 4
Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 9
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 8, 9, 11
Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584 (1979) 12
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 9
Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 12
Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 9, 12
Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 10
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 655 F. Supp. 1300 (W.D. Mo. 1987) 4
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988), prob. juris noted, 109 S.Ct. 780 (1989) 4, 5
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim
Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122 (1819) 8
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) .....passim

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

West Virginia State Board v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 9

STATUTES:

28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1982) 4, 5, 6
28 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982) 4, 5, 6
42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1982) 4
42 U.S.C. § 300z(a) (6) (B) (1982) 23

BOOKS & STUDIES:

Abortion in the United States (D. Calderone ed. 1958) 15
B. Nathanson, Aborting America (1979) 15
B. K. Rothman, The Tentative Pregnancy (1986) .. 27
Bachrach, "Adoption As A Means of Family Formation: Data From the National Survey of Family Growth," 45 J. Marr. & Fam. 859 (1983) 24
Berger, "Abortion in America: The Effects of Restrictive Funding," 298 New Eng. J. Med. 1474-77 (June 29, 1978) 17
Calef, "The Hostility of Parents to Children: Some Notes on Infertility, Child Abuse and Abortions," 1 International Journal of Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy 79-96 (1972) 23
Callahan, "How Technology is Reframing the Abortion Debate," 16 Hastings Center Report 33-42 (1986) 19
Cates, U.S. Centers for Disease Control, Statement submitted to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution, 2 Constitutional Amendments Relating to Abortion 439 (U.S. GPO Serial No. J-97-62) (1983) 17
Congressional Quarterly, Independent Adoptions, 2 Editorial Research Reports 647 (Dec. 11, 1987) 24
Del. Campo. "Abortion Denied—Outcome of Mothers and Babies," 130 Journal of the Canadian Medical Association 361 (1984) 26
E. Lenoski, The Plight of the Children (1981) 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Gold and Cates, "Restriction of Federal Funds for Abortion: 18 Months Later," 69 Am. J. of Public Health 929 (Sept. 1979) 18

Grand and Murray, "Facts Don't Back Link of Abortion Death in Texas to Fund Cutoff," Ob. Gyn. News 1, 26 (Dec. 1, 1977) 18

Harlap, Shiono, Ramcharan, Berendes, and Pellegrin, "A Prospective Study of Spontaneous Fetal Losses After Induced Abortion," 301 New Eng. J. Med. 677 (1979) 20

Harrison, et al. "Fetal Treatment 1982," 307 New Eng. J. Med. 1651-52 (1982) 19

Hilgers and O'Hare, Abortion Related Maternal Mortality: An In-Depth Analysis, New Perspectives On Human Abortion 69-91 ..... 16, 18

J. Connery, Abortion: The Development of the Roman Catholic Perspective (1977) 14

J. Leggo, Abortion Policy: An Evaluation of the Consequences for Maternal and Infant Health (1985) 16, 17

J. Noonan, A Private Choice: Abortion in America in the Seventies (1979) 10, 11

J. Noonan, The Experience of Pain by the Unborn, New Perspectives On Human Abortion 205-16.. 14

Jancin, "Prenatal Gender Selection Appears to be Gaining Acceptance," 23 Ob. Gyn. News 1, 30-31 (March 1-14, 1988) 27

K. Luker, Taking Chances: Abortion and the Decision Not to Contracept (1975) 15

Kumar and Robson, "Previous Induced Abortion and Antenatal Depression in Primiparae," 8 Psychological Medicine 711-14 (1978) 23

Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield, and Ryan, "Association of Induced Abortion with Subsequent Pregnancy Loss," 243 Journal of the American Medical Association 2495-99 (1980).... 20

Liebman and Zimmer, The Psychological Sequelae Of Abortion: Fact And Fallacy, The Psychological Aspects of Abortion 127-38 27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

National Committee for Adoption, Adoption Factbook: United States Data, Issues, Regulations and Resources 18 (Nov. 1985) 23

New Perspectives on Human Abortion (Hilgers, Horan, Mall, eds. 1981) .....passim

Ney, Infant Abortion and Child Abuse: Cause and Effects, The Psychological Aspects Of Abortion 25-38 23

Pettiti and Cates, "Restricting Medicaid Funds for Abortions: projections of excess mortality for women of childbearing age," 67 Am. J. of Public Health 860-62 (1977) 17

Pohlman, "Unwanted Conceptions: Research on Undesirable Consequences," 14 Eugenics Quarterly 143 (1967) 22

R. Helfer, Child Abuse and Neglect: The Diagnostic Process and Treatment Programs 28 (1977) (DHEW Pub. No. 77-30069) 22

Report of the Interdivisional Committee on Adolescent Abortion, American Psychological Association, Adolescent Abortion: Psychological and Legal Issues 84 (1986) 27

Rue, "Abortion in Relationship Context," International Review of Natural Family Planning 95-121 (Summer 1985) 27

S. Jordan, Decision Making for Incompetent Persons (1985) 10, 11

Sim, Abortion and Psychiatry, New Perspectives On Human Abortion 151-63 25

Syska, Hilgers, O'Hare, An Objective Model for Estimating Criminal Abortions and Its Implications for Public Policy, New Perspectives on Human Abortion 164-81 ..... 15, 16

The Psychological Aspects of Abortion (Mall and Watts eds. 1979) .....passim

Tietze and Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 1986 132 (Alan Guttmacher Institute 1986) 16, 17, 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Tietze, Induced Abortion as a Method of Fertility Control, Fertility And Family Planning: A World View 311 (S.J. Berman, et al. eds. 1969)	15
Torres and Forrest, "Why do Women Have Abortions?" 20 Family Planning Perspectives 169-76 (1988)	18, 19
Trussel, et al., "The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing for Abortion," 12 Family Planning Perspectives 120-30 (May/June 1980)	18
U.S. Bureau of the Census, Statistical Abstract of the United States: 1988 Nos. 87, 101, 276 (108th ed. 1987)	21
U.S. Centers for Disease Control, 35 CDC Surveillance Summaries 955 (1986)	17
U.S. Centers for Disease Control, 29 Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Reports 254 (June 6, 1980)	18
U.S. Centers for Disease Control, Abortion Surveillance 1979-80 6 (May 1983)	20
U.S. Congress, Office of Technology Assessment, Infertility: Medical and Social Choices (U.S. GPO Serial No. OTA-BA-358) (1988)	24
V. Fontana, Somewhere a Child is Crying: Maltreatment-Causes and Prevention (3rd ed. 1983)	22
Williams Obstetrics (J. Pritchard & P. MacDonald, 16th ed. 1980)	19
World Health Organization, Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction: Seventh Annual Report (Geneva, Nov. 1978)	20
MISCELLANEOUS:
"Abortion in the U.S. 1978-79," 13 Family Planning Perspectives, 6-18 (Jan.-Feb. 1981)	20
Forsythe, "Homicide of the Unborn Child: The Born Alive Rule and Other Legal Anachronisms," 21 Val. U. L. Rev. 563 (1987)	19
Kolata, Fetal Sex Test Used as Step to Abortion, N.Y. Times, Dec. 25, 1988	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Letter from C. Everett Koop, M.D., Sc.D., Surgeon General, U.S.P.H.S., to Ronald Reagan, The President of the United States (Jan. 9, 1989)	25, 26
National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities: A Reaffirmation (Nov. 14, 1985)	28
"No Excess Deaths Follow Medicaid Cutoff of Abortion," Ob. Gyn. News (April 1, 1979) (statement of Dr. Willard Cates)	18
"Repeated Abortions Increase Risk of Miscarriage, Premature Births and Low-Birth-Weight Babies," 11 Family Planning Perspectives 39-40 (1979)	20
Ryan, "Humane Abortion Laws and the Health Needs of Society," 17 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 424-34 (1965)	18
"Social Support Programs Held Key to Reducing Infant Mortality," Ob. Gyn. News 1, 18 (Mar. 15-31, 1988)	19
Wardle, "Rethinking Roe v. Wade," 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231	14, 22
"Washington Focuses on its High Perinatal Mortality," Ob. Gyn. News 6 (Nov. 15-30, 1982)	20
Will, "Splitting Differences," Newsweek 86 (February 13, 1989)	14
Wilson and Hitchings, "Adoption: It's Not Impossible," 112 Business Week (July 8, 1985)	24

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE UNITED STATES CATHOLIC CONFERENCE AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS

All active Catholic Bishops in the United States are members of the United States Catholic Conference ("Conference"), a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia. The Conference advocates and promotes the pastoral teachings of the Bishops in such diverse areas as education, family life, health care, social welfare, immigration, civil rights, criminal justice, and the economy. When permitted by court rules and practice, the Conference files briefs as amicus curiae in litigation of importance to the Catholic Church and its people throughout the United States. Of the values that the Conference seeks to promote through its participation in litigation, respect for human life is of the highest importance.

In this case the Court has accepted a unique challenge —whether to continue the wholesale invalidation of regulatory efforts directed at abortion, or to begin a process of reasoned reconsideration of its jurisprudence in this controversial area. Because the exercise of that "right" imperils vital and fundamental interests of many, not merely the concerns of women and their physicians, this Court should review its basic approach to abortion cases. The Conference is concerned that affirmance of the judgment below will further confuse the legal landscape and derogate other fundamental rights, most especially those of countless unborn children. Because the federal right created in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), underlies jurisdiction in this case, this Court may begin the process of reconsideration without further delay.

Through their counsel, the parties have consented to the appearance of this amicus.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In 1973, this Court held that its privacy jurisprudence "is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 153. It did so, however, recognizing that this kind of decision involved more than the decisions given constitutional protection in its earlier privacy cases from Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923), to Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965). Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159. In abortion there is involved the termination of a life and the infringement of other persons' and the state's interests. For this reason, the Court held open the possibility that these interests could not only be balanced against, but even subrogate, the now protected choice of abortion. In sixteen years of constitutional experience, that prospect has never meaningfully materialized.

In his concurring opinion in Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton, Justice Douglas discussed the nature of "liberty" as including "autonomous control over the development and expression of one's intellect, interests, tastes, and personality." 410 U.S. at 211 (1973) (emphasis in original). This right, the Justice said, is "absolute, permitting of no exceptions." Id. No other rights encompassed by his notion of liberty, including the right of privacy, were denominated autonomous, and no other Justice spoke of autonomy in relation to personal liberty or privacy in those first abortion cases. 410 U.S. 113-223. Yet by the time the Court reached its decision in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, this Court had come to employ the concept of autonomy in direct relation to a woman's decision to abort her child. 476 U.S. 747, 772 (1986). By so doing, the Court has truly caused the pregnant woman to be "isolated in her privacy" from all other legitimate interests of society, of her community, of her family, and of her unborn child—a result that Roe v. Wade disavowed. 410 U.S. at 159.

The problem lies not in Thornburgh, but in Roe v. Wade. To explain its extension of the constitutional right of privacy to abortion, the Court had to engage in speculation as to how certain perceived medical, social, or psychological "detriments" to a pregnant woman might be alleviated by abortion. Id. at 153. This nation's experience shows that those predictions were unfounded. Widespread abortion has not solved problems; illegal abortion, maternal and infant mortality, family instability, teenage pregnancy, and similar difficulties continue unabated. In addition, abortion has created its own list of unexpected and undesirable detriments to our society.

The only rational solution for this Court is not to entrench its decisional law further, but to reconsider its rationale for including abortion within the right of privacy. This the Court can and should do because subject matter jurisdiction over this case is dependent upon abortion remaining a constitutional right. In order for the Court to examine its own jurisdiction, as it is bound to do in this and every case,[1] Roe v. Wade must be reconsidered.

ARGUMENT

I. BEFORE ADDRESSING THE MERITS OF THIS CASE, THE COURT SHOULD RECONSIDER ITS DECISION IN ROE v. WADE.

Since January 9, 1989, when this Court noted probable jurisdiction in this case, there has been rampant speculation across this nation as to whether Roe v. Wade would, could or should be reconsidered. For the most part, however, the prognosticators have ignored the fundamental fact that subject matter jurisdiction is always open to review, and that jurisdiction over this case depends on the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade.

Without discussion, the district court below concluded that it had jurisdiction over this case "under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1982) and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and § 1343(3) (1982)." Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 655 F. Supp. 1300, 1303 (W.D. Mo. 1987). The court of appeals opinion, on review here, does not even mention jurisdiction. Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988), prob. juris. noted, 109 S.Ct. 780 (1989) (No. 88-605). Yet this Court has stated that:

> [E]very federal appellate court has a special obligation to "satisfy itself not only of its own jurisdiction, but also that of the lower courts in a cause under review," even though the parties are prepared to concede it.

Bender v. Williamsport Area School District, 475 U.S. 534, 541 (1986) (quoting Mitchell v. Maurer, 293 U.S. 237, 244 (1934) (citation omitted)). Every federal court is therefore obliged to examine its subject matter jurisdiction, whether the issue is raised by a party, a witness, an intervenor, an amicus curiae, or by the court itself. The question of jurisdiction is so "fundamental" that "the Court is bound to ask and answer [it] for itself, even when not otherwise suggested, and without respect to the relation of the parties to it." Bender, 475 U.S. at 547 (quoting Mansfield C. & L.M.R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 382 (1884)).

The abortion cases filed in federal courts since the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade have principally relied, as this case does, on 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343 for federal jurisdiction. Those statutory provisions require, of course, a "deprivation, under color of any State law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States" or a claim "arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." 28 U.S.C. §§ 1343(3) and 1331. Because of this Court's pivotal holding in Roe v. Wade that the constitutional "right of privacy . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy," federal courts apparently assume that the jurisdictional requirement of a constitutional deprivation or claim is always extant where abortion is involved.[2] In fact, many parties do not even raise the issue, concentrating instead on other jurisdictional issues such as plaintiffs' standing, as the parties in this case did below. Webster, 851 F.2d at 1075; see, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. at 754-55.

---

[1] Bender v. Williamsport Area School District, 475 U.S. 534, 541 (1986).

[2] This is not an unreasonable assumption since, under Roe v. Wade, plaintiffs can generally allege a substantial constitutional claim. Hagans v. Lavine, 415 U.S. 528, 538 (1974). Nevertheless, the issue remains open to review at each level of the federal judiciary. Bender, 475 U.S. at 541.

Yet prior to Roe v. Wade's elevation of abortion to a constitutional position, federal jurisdiction over abortion cases was not at all clear; lower courts cited one another for assurance that they ought even to entertain these complaints. See, e.g., Doe v. Bolton, 319 F. Supp. 1048, 1052 (N.D. Ga. 1970) and Doe v. Scott, 310 F. Supp. 688, 689 (N.D. Ill. 1970). This Court has itself assumed jurisdiction in several abortion cases, beginning with Doe v Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), without ever mentioning that subject matter jurisdiction is wholly dependent on the continued efficacy of Roe v. Wade's central holding.[3] Such silence by this Court, however, is decidedly not a binding jurisdictional decision. As this Court noted in another action brought under 28 U.S.C. § 1343:

> Moreover, when questions of jurisdiction have been passed on in prior decisions sub silentio, this Court has never considered itself bound when a subsequent case finally brings the jurisdictional issue before us. We therefore approach the question of the District Court's jurisdiction to entertain this suit as an open one calling for a canvass of the relevant jurisdictional considerations.

Hagans v. Lavine, 415 U.S. 528, 533 n.5 (1974) (citations omitted). Similarly, this Court is now faced with a consideration of federal jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343; indeed, the obligation to address the issue "is inflexible and without exception," applying "in all cases" and "[o]n every writ of error or appeal." Bender, 475 U.S. at 547 (quoting Mansfield C. & L.M.R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. at 382). In proceeding then to "canvass all relevant jurisdictional considerations," the Court must begin with studied consideration of its decision in Roe v. Wade. For it is that decision upon which federal jurisdiction rests.

---

[3] In both Thornburgh v. American College, 476 U.S. at 759 and Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 420 n.1 (1983), this Court reaffirmed Roe v. Wade without commenting upon the jurisdictional ramification of that holding.

II. THE COURT'S APPLICATION OF PRIVACY PRINCIPLES TO ABORTION IN ROE v. WADE WAS FUNDAMENTALLY FLAWED.

One of the more enduring and intractable debates throughout the constitutional history of the United States has been how best to protect individual personal liberties against the arbitrary exercise of governmental power. Certainly for the last century or more in constitutional adjudication, deeply personal actions, interests, and choices, some not particularly threatening to public order, have been subjects of state regulation. This Court has struggled to demarcate those personal actions deserving of constitutional protection, on the one hand, from the interest of the government, the competing interests of other persons, and the common good, on the other. Some interests have had to be subrogated to other values, or the common good, in order for our basic institutions to thrive or even survive. Others have been protected under a body of case law developed on a theme of personal liberty and privacy. It has been a continuing search for fundamental constitutional values.

Historically, it was always understood that liberty to engage in certain personal actions was not license. In Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 26 (1905), Justice Harlan explained:

> [T]he liberty secured by the Constitution of the United States to every person within its jurisdiction does not import an absolute right in each person to be, at all times and in all circumstances, wholly freed from restraint. There are manifold restraints to which every person is necessarily subject for the common good . . . . Real liberty for all could not exist under the operation of a principle which recognizes the right of each individual person to use his own, whether in respect of his person or his property, regardless of the injury that may be done to others.

Although the ability to make certain choices was often given constitutional foundation, such as in the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment, the Court has always required that some balance be struck between legitimate competing interests, rationally related to the choice. E.g., Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578 (1897).[4] In the early cases the Court struggled without a script, but still decided that protection of basic constitutional values must be the dominant adjudicative principle.[5]

The early debate on what became the privacy doctrine in this century occurred during the process of incorporation of "federal" rights to the states through the fourteenth amendment. In a seminal decision, Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937), the Court articulated the necessary standard to sort those rights "incorporated" from those "unincorporated." The "incorporated" rights were not necessarily enumerated in the Constitution but were those "fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions." Id. at 326.[6] Only those liberties

[4] In Allgeyer, the Court found that there was certainly a basic right to engage in business contracts as an element of personal liberty that deserved to be protected. But for purposes of this discussion, it should be noted that the Court did "not intend to hold that in no such case can the State exercise its police power." Indeed the Court found that this fundamental right "may be regulated, and sometimes prohibited, when the contract for business conflicts with the policy of the State as contained in its statutes . . . ." Allgeyer, 165 U.S. at 582.

[5] Throughout its cases the Court has engaged in an effort to apply faithfully those values. Justice Harlan in Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. at 22, cites approvingly Chief Justice John Marshall in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 202 (1819) for the idea that the spirit of the Constitution "is to be collected chiefly from its words."

[6] The Palko Court employed "freedom of thought" as its primary example: "Of that freedom one may say that it is the matrix, the indispensable condition, of nearly every other form of freedom." 302 U.S. at 327. In his concurring opinion in Roe v. Wade, Justice Douglas states that such internal matters as thought or belief are integral to one's autonomy and not subject to any infringe-

"found to be implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" were incorporated. Id. at 325. In his famous dissent in Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 542 (1961), Justice Harlan recited that the search for these fundamental constitutional values was intended to be a "rational process" that must reflect the "traditions of the country, not judges." Thus, he found that personal liberty was somewhat of a "continuum which, broadly speaking, includes a freedom from all substantial arbitrary impositions and purposeless restraints . . . ." Id. at 543. In that language, endorsed by the Court in Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 501-502 (1977) (plurality opinion), Justice Harlan acknowledged that protection of personal liberty often required a balance of different interests. By preserving liberty against only "substantial arbitrary" and "purposeless" restrictions, the Court invited consideration of countervailing interests.

When an individual exercises a private choice, which is personal as to him or her and does not affect the interests of others, the equation is only the individual versus the State. In many instances, individuals have made such choices, opposed to those of the State, whether they were over religious preferences,[7] the education of children,[8] the person to marry,[9] or similar interests. It makes sense that the State should have a strict standard of proof to engage in restriction of such choices where there are no third-party interests at stake. This is especially true when the exercise of individual choice falls within the context of a protected relationship, like a ment by the State. 410 U.S. at 211. Other interests, like an interest in one's life, health, or well-being, are subject to appropriate regulation. Id. at 211-14.

[7] West Virginia State Board v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943).

[8] Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925).

[9] Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967).

marriage or family.[10] Yet even in these relationships the State has regulatory authority, severely circumscribed, but sufficient to insure individual choices be worked out in a balance respectful of all members of the protected relationship.[11]

When one considers abortion decisions, however, the calculation is never simply one of individual interests competing with interests of the State. The choices made in an abortion decision are complex and certainly affect the life interests of others: the unborn child, the father, other members of the family, and society itself. S. Jordan, Decision Making for Incompetent Persons 19 (1985). The decision implicates the procreative interests of both partners, can affect the sanctity of a marriage relationship, ends a life, and has other impacts on family relations, alienating children from their parents and separating those parents from their unborn grandchildren. It subjugates liberties that in other contexts are found to be fundamental, but in this context are found to be less worthy of protection. J. Noonan, A Private Choice: Abortion in America in the Seventies 90-95, 190 (1979).

In perhaps its most candid observation about the nature of the "right" being established in Roe v. Wade, the majority specifically recognized that the decision-making process they were about to protect was, in its basic character, different from the character of the decisions protected in the line of cases from Meyer to Griswold (see notes 8-10). Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159. However, even while stating that a woman could not be "isolated in her privacy," the Court nonetheless framed the discussion in language that would enable subsequent majorities to link Roe v. Wade to the same line of cases which it admittedly distinguished in that original opinion. E.g., Thornburgh v. American College, 476 U.S. at 722. By describing abortion as a confrontation only between a State and a woman, the Court has precluded full and fair consideration of the true nature and other impacts of the decision. S. Jordan, Decision Making, supra, at 20. Rather than carefully balance the way in which the various and plainly fundamental interests in life, procreation, marriage, family, or indeed the common good, might be affected by the abortion decision, the majority has treated these admittedly different interests as somehow subrogated to a state's interest, which it has already arbitrarily diminished beyond recognition. J. Noonan, A Private Choice, supra, at 90-95.

[10] Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 486 (1965); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944).

[11] Prince, 321 U.S. at 166-67.

Over the last sixteen years, a majority of this Court has characterized itself as protecting a "promise that a certain private sphere of individual liberty will be kept largely beyond the reach of government." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772 (citing without discussion the string of decisions noted above). The Court originally offered a number of rationales, legal, medical and social, for so doing. Although these rationales when first offered in 1973 were debatable, on further consideration and through actual experience, they have been largely unrealized. In actuality, although it claims to the contrary, the Court has isolated the pregnant woman in her privacy from all other interests. To be true to its constitutional roots and history, this Court should courageously label excess for what it is and promise to begin a thoughtful reconsideration of abortion jurisprudence.

In this kind of critical self-evaluation, it must be remembered that the privacy doctrine was intended to protect only certain kinds of choices, those "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. at 325. Its fidelity was to be measured by the "tradition of the country, not judges." Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. at 542. Limitations on choice were to be invalid only when they were "purposeless" or "substantial[ly] arbitrary." Id. As the majorities in the abortion case have erected a series of "substantial arbitrary impositions and purposeless restraints" on virtually every competing interest, the Court has separated legitimate privacy doctrine from its roots.[12] In stretching the privacy doctrine until it was broad enough to cover abortion, the Court introduced a flaw into its jurisprudence that has become a threat to the very constitutional values and legitimate societal interests the doctrine was meant to protect.

This Court should now rationally evaluate the abortion decision within its true decisional matrix.[13] If the Court seriously seeks support for abortion decisions in the historical line of privacy cases, it must reflect accurately that one person's "liberty" is not "license" to control even one's own body where another's interest could suffer or the common good be diminished. Jacobson

---

[12] For example, it is widely recognized that parents have a general right to protect their children from potential adverse consequences of medical decisions. Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584, 604 (1979) (analyzing and rejecting Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976)). Yet, in the abortion area, parents do not have the ability to exercise the same fundamental freedom. Thus has Justice O'Connor observed that, in the area of abortion, different rules come into play and nothing is safe from "ad hoc nullification" at the hands of a majority. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Even traditional principles of informed consent have been abrogated in the abortion context. See id. at 798-804 (White, J., dissenting).

[13] This amicus would note Justice O'Connor's efforts to rectify the standard by which these various concerns are reviewed. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828-29 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). A rational balancing of legitimate interests throughout pregnancy is precisely the kind of calculus originally intended in privacy doctrine. See id. at 828.

v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. at 26-27. And it must reexamine the rationales first proffered for bringing abortion under the Constitution.

III. A REASONED RECONSIDERATION OF ROE v. WADE IN LIGHT OF CURRENT KNOWLEDGE IS NECESSARY.

> The detriment that the State would impose upon the pregnant woman by denying this choice altogether is apparent. Specific and direct harm medically diagnosable even in early pregnancy may be involved. Maternity, or additional offspring, may force upon the woman a distressful life and future. Psychological harm may be imminent. Mental and physical health may be taxed by child care. There is also the distress, for all concerned, associated with the unwanted child, and there is the problem of bringing a child into a family already unable, psychologically and otherwise, to care for it. In other cases, as in this one, the additional difficulties and continuing stigma of unwed motherhood may be involved.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 153. These "detriments" are the precise underpinnings for the announced holding that the constitutional right of privacy "is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Id. When this Court thus speculated on the potential problems caused by denying women the discretion to abort their unborn children, however, it necessarily did so without any knowledge of how abortion might or might not alleviate the enumerated problems.

Today our country has sixteen years' experience with the effects of abortion's ever-increasing availability. The experience has been a painful one, but the knowledge gained must now be considered. This Court should do what it suggested in Doe v. Bolton: "readjust its views and emphases in light of the advanced knowledge and techniques of the day." [14] 410 U.S. at 191. When considered, two things become increasingly apparent—abortion has not eliminated the problems it was supposed to solve and it has created additional problems unanticipated by the Court in Roe v. Wade.

A. The Problems Associated with Illegal Abortion Are Not Solved by Constitutional Abortion.

Abortion advocates argue strenuously that reconsideration of Roe v. Wade might lead to a narrowing of the choice of abortion that would cause "misery and deaths of thousands of women from illegal operations and reverse startling improvements which the legalization of abortion has made in both maternal and infant mortality and morbidity." [15] The assertion proceeds from a false premise. Even before Roe v. Wade, abortion was legal under certain circumstances throughout the United States. 410 U.S. at 118, 182. In fact, prior to 1973, the circumstances permitting abortion were expanding.[16] Therefore, even if this Court were to remove abortion from constitutional protection, it would not result in instantaneous illegality. The only abortion policy dependent upon constitutional protection for its survival is abortion-on-demand—something few states are likely to enact, and this Court insists it has not endorsed. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772 ("within the limits specified in Roe"); but see 476 U.S. at 383-84 ("We have apparently already passed the point at which abortion is available merely on demand.") (Burger, C.J., dissenting).

[14] There are other holdings, findings, and statements in the opinion that also should be reconsidered, including the discussion of Roman Catholic tradition and the decision that an unborn child is not a person. 410 U.S. at 134, 158, 162; J. Connery, Abortion: The Development of the Roman Catholic Perspective (1977); J. Noonan, The Experience of Pain by the Unborn, in New Perspectives on Human Abortion 205-16 (Hilgers, Horan, Mall, eds. 1981) (hereinafter "New Perspectives"); see Wardle, "Rethinking Roe v. Wade," 1985 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231.

[15] See Appellees' Motion to Affirm at 17.

[16] Compare the Texas statute struck down in Roe v. Wade with the more "modern" Georgia statute in Doe v. Bolton. 410 U.S. at 117, 183. See also Will, "Splitting Differences," Newsweek 86 (February 13, 1989). To observe this trend is not to endorse it.

However close to abortion-on-demand this country is, abortion has not reduced maternal deaths, or eliminated illegal abortions. The "problems" that Roe v. Wade was intended to solve continue; they are related to abortion itself, whether "legal" or not. In addition, new problems have been created, while reasonable legislative efforts, such as the Missouri statute on review here, are themselves deemed "illegal."

1. Illegal Abortion.

Prior to Roe v. Wade, abortion advocates inflated the estimates of illegal abortions and maternal deaths in order to influence judges and legislators.[17] Researchers have more recently determined that legal abortion does not replace illegal abortion; rather, total abortions have increased six- to eleven-fold.[18] Even the small effect that legal abortion does have on the incidence of illegal abortion decreases as the total number of abortions rises. Syska, Hilgers, O'Hare, An Objective Model for Estimating Criminal Abortions and Its Implications for Public [17] Estimates of illegal abortions prior to Roe v. Wade are notoriously unreliable. Abortion in the United States 180 (D. Calderone ed. 1958); Tietze, Induced Abortion as a Method of Fertility Control, in Fertility And Family Planning: A World View 311 (S.J. Berman, et al. eds. 1969). Widely used figures on maternal deaths were later admitted to be "totally false." B. Nathanson, Aborting America 193 (1979).

[18] Earlier estimates that legal abortions simply replace illegal ones assumed that unintended pregnancies remain constant despite easier access to abortions—an assumption now proven false. See K. Luker, Taking Chances: Abortion and the Decision not to Contracept (1975).

Policy, in New Perspectives, supra note 14, at 164-81. These findings not only undercut the argument that to restrict the availability or scope of legal abortion would increase illegal abortion, but also the argument that even more abortions are the solution to continued illegal abortions. The researchers conclude: "What was previously thought to be a single solution to criminal abortion [legalization], is clearly a nonsolution." Id. at 180 (emphasis supplied).

2. Maternal Deaths.

Not only do deaths from illegal abortions continue to occur,[19] but constitutional abortion has added its own casualties to the maternal mortality statistics—in some cases simply bringing "back-alley" practitioners to the clinics. Indeed exhaustive study has shown that maternal deaths resulting from legal abortions are replacing those due to illegal abortions. Hilgers and O'Hare, Abortion Related Maternal Mortality, supra note 19, at 90. The trend toward a decrease in maternal deaths due to abortion began before Roe v. Wade and is attributable to improvements in health care and obstetrical medicine, not constitutional litigation. J. Legge, Abortion Policy: An Evaluation of the Consequences for Maternal and Infant Health 154-55 (1985).[20] Recent evidence suggests "in [19] Hilgers and O'Hare, Abortion Related Maternal Mortality: An In-Depth Analysis, in New Perspectives 69-91. Supporters of abortion now admit that "a substantial proportion of illegal abortions in the 1960s were performed by physicians, including some highly experienced practitioners, while in the late 1970s, most illegal abortions were self-induced or performed by medically unqualified practioners. It is entirely possible that the death-to-case ratio following illegal abortion in the United States is now higher, not lower than it was 15-20 years ago." Tietze and Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 1986 132 (Alan Guttmacher Institute 1986).

[20] Maternal mortality from all causes has declined sharply since the 1940s due to antibiotics and other medical advances. In 1965, competition with other factors, [Roe v. Wade] and its implementation did not have a strong impact on health indicators." Id. at 150. After 1973 the decline in abortion-related deaths stopped and reversed itself in 1977, 1979, and 1982. U.S. Centers for Disease Control, 35 CDC Surveillance Summaries 955 (1986).

This country's experience after the adoption of the "Hyde Amendment" by Congress in 1976 is particularly instructive on this point.[21] Before the Hyde amendment became effective, abortion advocates predicted increases in illegal abortions and maternal deaths.[22] When the federal funding cut occurred, there was no discernible evidence of resort to illegal abortions or of increased abortion-abortion-related deaths decreased faster than other maternal deaths, in part because "illegal abortions may have shifted from the non-medical to the medical sector and become safer." Cates, U.S. Centers for Disease Control, Statement submitted to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution, in 2 Constitutional Amendments Relating to Abortion 439 (U.S. GPO Serial No. J-97-62) (1983). An international comparison by abortion supporters recently concluded that "reported rates of abortion mortality are more closely associated with the availability of modern methods of contraception (including surgical sterilization), with the general level of health services and with the adequacy of the registration system than with the legal status of abortion or the presumed incidence of illegal abortions performed by untrained operators." Tietze and Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 1986, supra note 19, at 127.

[21] The Hyde Amendment, named for its principal sponsor, prohibits the use of any federal Medicaid funds to pay for abortion except under certain specified circumstances. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 302 (1980).

[22] E.g., Berger, "Abortion in America: The Effects of Restrictive Funding," 298 New England Journal of Medicine 1474-77, 1475 (June 29, 1978); see Pettiti and Cates, "Restricting Medicaid funds for abortions: projections of excess mortality for women of childbearing age," 67 Am. J. of Public Health 860-62 (1977).

related mortality.[23] More intensive investigation did not find the predicted maternal deaths and complications. Over an eighteen-month period, only one death of a Medicaid-eligible woman in Texas occurred due to an illegal abortion; two others were not directly related to the funding cut. Even this "finding" was rebutted upon further investigation.[24]

Claims that childbirth is statistically more risky than abortion have also been exaggerated.[25] In a recent survey by abortion advocates, only 7% of the women obtaining an abortion reported any reason relating to a "health problem" as part of their motivation.[26] As each "indica-

---

[23] "Original projections by the CDC that the cutoff of Medicaid funding for abortions would result in 5-90 excess abortion-related deaths annually have not proved true." "No Excess Deaths Follow Medicaid Cutoff of Abortion," Ob. Gyn. News (statement of Dr. Willard Cates) (April 1, 1979); see also U.S. Centers for Disease Control, 29 Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Reports 254 (June 6, 1980); Trussel, et al., "The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing for Abortion," 12 Family Planning Perspectives 120-30, 127, 128 (May/June 1980).

[24] Gold and Cates, "Restriction of Federal Funds for Abortion: 18 Months Later," 69 Am. J. of Public Health 929 (Sept. 1979). Reporters discovered that the Texas woman "portrayed as a martyr to the Hyde Amendment" had died for reasons not related to the funding cutoff. Grand and Murray, "Facts Don't Back Link of Abortion Death in Texas to Fund Cutoff," Ob. Gyn. News 1, 26 (Dec. 1, 1977).

[25] Hilgers and O'Hare, Abortion-Related Maternal Mortality, supra note 19, at 84-90. Even advocates of constitutional abortion now admit that U.S. Centers for Disease Control figures suggest an abortion at 16-20 weeks is more dangerous than carrying to term. Tietze and Henshaw, Induced Abortion, supra note 19, at 110. As Dr. Kenneth Ryan stated as early as 1965, "with the advances in medical technology, there are now almost no absolute contraindications to pregnancy." Ryan, "Humane Abortion Laws and the Health Needs of Society," 17 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 424-34, 430 (1965).

[26] See Torres and Forrest, "Why Do Women Have Abortions?" 20 Family Planning Perspectives 169-76, 170 (1988). Among the seven percent who cited a health problem, only half said a doctor informed them that their condition might be made worse by remaining pregnant. Id. at 172.

tion" for abortion—e.g., diabetes, hypertension—finds its own appropriate treatment in modern medicine, it disappears from the proposed lists of "indications" for abortion. This progress in preventing maternal mortality has refocused attention on medicine's ability to treat both mother and unborn child as separate patients. Williams Obstetrics vii (J. Pritchard & P. MacDonald, 16th ed. 1980).[27]

3. Infant Mortality.

Abortion advocates argue that increased abortions have produced "startling improvements" in infant mortality. They even point approvingly to the increasing numbers of women, especially teenagers, whose babies are aborted each year.[28] Of course babies that are aborted never appear in infant mortality statistics, they appear in the abortion statistics. The distinction is without a legitimate difference.[29] The millions of children aborted during the last sixteen years are very real infant mortality statistics. Infant mortality improves in relation to better prenatal and postnatal care, not to abortion.[30] In cities where abortion rates far exceed national averages, infant

---

[27] See Callahan, "How Technology is Reframing the Abortion Debate," 16 Hastings Center Report 33-42, 37-38 (1986); Harrison, et al. "Fetal Treatment 1983," 307 New England Journal of Medicine 1651-52 (1982).

[28] See Appellees' Motion to Affirm, at 18.

[29] See, e.g., Forsythe, "Homicide of the Unborn Child: The Born Alive Rule and Other Legal Anachronisms," 21 Val. U. L. Rev. 563, 607-11 (1987).

[30] "Social Support Programs Held Key to Reducing Infant Mortality," Ob. Gyn. News 1, 18 (Mar. 15-31, 1988).

mortality rates are a scandal.[31] At the same time, other forms of infant mortality increase in proportion to abortion.

Among the most tragic features of widespread abortion is the fact that a prior abortion may endanger subsequent children who otherwise could have been wanted and loved by their own mothers. This endangerment sometimes occurs in the form of a physical inability to carry a subsequent pregnancy to term. Although some studies suggest this as a possible effect of even one abortion, a woman who has had two or more abortions is at significantly increased risk of being unable to carry later children to term.[32] This is a substantial public health problem in light of the fact that over 35% of all abortions in the United States are performed on women who have had previous abortions, and that the figure is even higher in major cities. U.S. Centers for Disease Control, Abortion Surveillance 1979-80 6 (May 1983).

B. Personal, Social and Family Problems are Aggravated, Not Alleviated, by Abortion.

One of the most disturbing aspects of the majority opinion in Roe v. Wade was its failure to balance the predicted (but now unrealized) "benefits" of abortion

---

[31] Compare "Abortion in the U.S. 1978-79," 13 Family Planning Perspectives, 6-10, 10-11 (Jan.-Feb. 1981) with "Washington Focuses on its High Perinatal Mortality," Ob. Gyn. News 6 (Nov. 15-30, 1982).

[32] Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield, and Ryan, "Association of Induced Abortion with Subsequent Pregnancy Loss," 243 Journal of the American Medical Association 2495-99 (1980); "Repeated Abortions Increase Risk of Miscarriage, Premature Births and Low-Birth-Weight Babies," 11 Family Planning Perspectives 39-40 (1979) (reporting on World Health Organization, Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction: Seventh Annual Report (Geneva, Nov. 1978)); see also Harlap, Shiono, Ramcharan, Berendes, and Pellegrin, "A Prospective Study of Spontaneous Fetal Losses After Induced Abortion," 301 New England Journal of Medicine 677 (1979).

against the probable (and now manifest) harm expanding abortion would cause. A growing body of evidence demonstrates that abortions, especially multiple abortions, have damaging effects on maternal and infant health, future pregnancies, mental well-being, adoption alternatives and other aspects of "marriage," "procreation," "contraception," "family relationships," and "child rearing." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 152-53. These effects are dramatically illustrated by the mounting evidence that abortion does not reduce child abuse and neglect, makes adoption increasingly difficult, and creates serious psychological ramifications.

1. The "Unwanted" Child.

Among the concerns cited in Roe v. Wade as justification for finding an abortion right in the Constitution was "the distress, for all concerned, associated with the unwanted child, and . . . the problem of bringing a child into a family already unable, psychologically and otherwise, to care for it." 410 U.S. at 153. Implicit here was an assumption that the existence of "unwanted" children was due in part to lack of access to abortion, and that recognition of an abortion right would alleviate this problem. That this projected "benefit" has not materialized is clear from current statistics on child abuse and out-of-wedlock childbearing.[33] The correlation between the [33] Between 1970 and 1985, births to unmarried women rose from 399 thousand to 828 thousand annually. Between 1973 and 1982 estimated "unwanted births" to never-married women remained roughly the same: in 1973, 86% of the births were "wanted at conception," 26% were "mistimed," and 14% were "unwanted at conception"; in 1982, 90% were "unwanted at conception," 28% were "mistimed," and 10% were "unwanted at conception." Between 1978 (when reasonably accurate national reporting of child abuse is said to have begun) and 1985, reported cases of child abuse and neglect rose from 607 thousand to 1.3 million annually. U.S. Bureau of the Census, Statistical Abstract of the United States: 1988 Nos. 87, 101, 276 (108th ed. 1987).

---

increasing numbers of abortions and the increasing incidence of child abuse and neglect is such that one may well wonder whether the former is somehow contributing to the latter.[34]

Even at the time of the Court's 1973 decision, there was much literature indicating that children who were intensely desired during pregnancy may be at higher, not lower, risk of being abused and neglected after birth. Dr. Vincent Fontana, a professor of clinical pediatrics and a Chairman of the Mayor's Task Force on Child Abuse and Neglect of the City of New York, stated that abortion is a "sweeping and simplistic" solution that fails because "the assumption that every battered child is an unwanted child, or that most or even a large proportion of abused children are unwanted children is totally false."[35] Another professor of pediatrics, Dr. Edward Lenoski, discovered in 1975 that 91% of the abused children in his survey had been wanted by their parents: "Significantly high among these parents," Lenoski observes, "was the desire for the pregnancy."[36]

Considered together these studies demonstrate that abortion has not eliminated or reduced child abuse or other manifestations of dysfunctional families, and it never will. Other researchers go further, finding that abortion hinders normal maternal-infant bonding with later children and may increase the likelihood of later [34] Wardle, "Rethinking Roe v. Wade," supra note 14, at 232-43 (describing and collecting research).

---

[35] V. Fontana, Somewhere a Child is Crying: Maltreatment-Causes and Prevention 215-17 (3rd ed. 1983).

[36] E. Lenoski, The Plight of the Children (1981). See also R. Helfer, Child Abuse and Neglect: The Diagnostic Process and Treatment Programs 28 (1977) (DHEW Pub. No. 77-30069); Pohlman, "Unwanted Conceptions: Research On Undesirable Consequences," 14 Eugenics Quarterly 143 (1967).

child abuse.[37] Unless this nation becomes an Orwellian society where psychological tests are mandated to determine eligibility for parenthood, the solutions to child abuse must address the causes, not the victims, of the problem. Using abortions to eliminate "unwanted" children is not relieving distress or other psychological problems, it is simply eliminating children.

2. Effect on Adoption.

Prior to Roe v. Wade, two options were recommended to prospective unwed mothers: single motherhood and adoption. Rather than being a third alternative, abortion has disproportionately tended to replace adoption, eliminating children who would have been wanted and raised by adoptive parents. The National Committee for Adoption cites "the legalization of abortion" as a factor that "reduces the potential number of adoptive children," recounting data such as the following: In 1972, there were 403,200 out-of-wedlock births and 65,335 unrelated adoptions; but in 1982 there were 715,227 out-of-wedlock births but only 50,720 unrelated adoptions.[38] In 1981 Congress noted that "at present, only 4 per centum of unmarried pregnant adolescents who carry their babies to term enter into an adoption plan or arrange for their babies to be cared for by relatives or friends." 42 U.S.C. § 300z (a) (6) (B). In practice the prospective unwed mother's three choices have been reduced to two. If she is unalterably attached to her child she is assisted in preparing for single parenthood, but otherwise abortion is proposed as her best alternative.

---

[37] Ney, Infant Abortion and Child Abuse: Cause and Effect in The Psychological Aspects Of Abortion 25-38 (Mall and Watts eds. 1979); Kumar and Robson, "Previous Induced Abortion and Antenatal Depression in Primiparae," 8 Psychological Medicine 711-14 (1978); Calef, "The Hostility of Parents to Children: Some Notes on Infertility, Child Abuse and Abortions," 1 International Journal of Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy 79-66 (1972).

[38] National Committee for Adoption, Adoption Factbook: United States Data, Issues, Regulations and Resources 18 (Nov. 1985).

Meanwhile the pool of prospective adoptive parents has grown, due in part to delayed childbearing and unwanted infertility.[39] In 1984 alone, over two million couples were seeking to adopt children, while only some 58,000 children were available.[40] So while demand for adoptable children rises, supply declines. Bachrach, "Adoption As A Means of Family Formation: Data From the National Survey of Family Growth," 45 J. Marr. & Fam. 859 (1983). Infertile couples, frustrated at the short supply of adoptable children, have increasingly resorted to unusual and even experimental reproductive technologies, which themselves create new tensions for the institutions of marriage and family.[41] In short, the adverse effects of constitutional abortion are spreading to such unexpected areas as adoption, creating problems never anticipated when Roe v. Wade was first decided.

3. Psychological Ramifications.

Several of the concerns that prompted this Court to conclude that abortion ought to become a constitutionally protected privacy right dealt with the psychological stress [39] Based on 1982 figures, infertility affects an estimated 2.4 million couples in the United States. The decreased supply of children available for adoption has increased demands for infertility treatment from these couples. U.S. Congress, Office of Technology Assessment, Infertility: Medical and Social Choices 3, 14 (1988) (U.S. GPO Serial No. OTA-BA-358).

---

[40] Wilson and Hitchings, "Adoption: It's Not Impossible," 112 Business Week (July 8, 1985); see also Congressional Quarterly, Independent Adoptions, 2 Editorial Research Reports 647 (Dec. 11, 1987).

[41] They have also presented the judiciary with unique and challenging legal battles. E.g., In re Baby M., 109 N.J. 396, 439, 537 A.2d 1227, 1249 (1988).

that pregnancy and child care may place upon the mother and her family.[42] 410 U.S. at 153. The underlying assumption was that abortion would relieve the psychological burden and, presumably, not replace it with something worse. Experience proves otherwise.

Only five years after Roe v. Wade, the psychological evidence against abortion had accumulated to the point that experts could conclude that "[a]bortion puts women at greater risk mentally" than does childbirth. The Psychological Aspects of Abortion x (Mall and Watts eds. 1979). "Out of the sea of conjecture surrounding the psychological aspects of abortion emerges the somewhat heretical idea that social policy may have moved in the wrong direction." Id. at xi. It is now even more clear that abortion policy did take a wrong turn and that women and their families are suffering psychologically as a result. "Not only is the woman who has a genuine psychiatric handicap more likely to suffer than benefit from an abortion, but across the board the prognosis of a post-abortive psychosis is worse than that of a post-partum one." Sim, Abortion and Psychiatry, in New Perspectives 151-63, 162.

Coincident with this Court's noting probable jurisdiction in this case, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service recommended a new controlled study on the mental health effects of abortion.[43] His reason for the [42] It is not easy to understand how concern about the family translates into a policy treating abortion as an autonomous decision affecting only the mother and her physician. E.g., Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772.

---

[43] Letter from C. Everett Koop, M.D., Sc.D., Surgeon General, U.S.P.H.S., to Ronald Reagan, The President of the United States (Jan. 9, 1989). The Surgeon General stated that there was no "conclusive data about the health effects of abortion on women." In so stating, his letter offers no explanation into either the "data" or the degree to which they must be "conclusive" for him to accept them. He most certainly does not state his disagreement with recommendation was his conclusion "that, at this time, the available scientific evidence about the psychological sequelae of abortion simply cannot support either the preconceived beliefs of those pro-life or of those pro-choice." While noting the conflicting scientific evidence in the field, the Surgeon General does confirm two critical points that undermine the very assumptions upon which constitutional abortion relies. First, he confirms that even after sixteen years and twenty million abortions, there is still no confirmation that the possible benefits projected for Roe v. Wade exist. Second, he states that "when pregnancy, whether wanted or unwanted comes to full term and delivery, there is a well documented, low incidence of adverse mental health effects." [44] In other words, when a child, whether initially wanted or not, is born instead of aborted, adverse psychological consequences are rare.[45]

It is beyond question, however, that post-abortion trauma does exist, and can be lethal, especially for the woman most frequently cited as a beneficiary of legalized points made below that post-abortion trauma and other effects exist. The fact that studies may conflict does not mean they should or may be discarded wholesale.

---

[44] Id. at 2.

[45] "A review of published reports on women who had been denied abortion and were followed up shows that 70.6% of the 6298 women completed their pregnancies and only 13.2% had an abortion elsewhere." These women, denied abortion by review committees in various European countries, could reasonably be expected to have the most negative emotional attitudes toward giving birth. Yet "the literature shows a generally comparable outcome of pregnancy, delivery and puerperium between women who were denied abortion and controls," "no evidence that a continued unwanted pregnancy will endanger the mother's mental health," and "good acceptance of the infant by the mother, especially if she has the father's support." Del Campo, "Abortion Denied—Outcome of Mothers and Babies," 130 Journal of the Canadian Medical Association 361, 362 (1984).

abortion—the pregnant teenager. The American Psychological Association states:

> Although they are rare, cases have been reported of women's experiencing psychotic breaks following abortion despite the absence of preexisting psychological problems (Spaulding & Cavenar, 1978). In light of statistics showing that suicide is the third leading cause of death among adolescents, one needs to be alert to this risk . . .. Compared with adults, adolescents appear to have somewhat more negative responses on average following abortion.

Report of the Interdivisional Committee on Adolescent Abortion, American Psychological Association, Adolescent Abortion: Psychological and Legal Issues 84 (1986).

The increasing use of amniocentesis and other prenatal diagnostic techniques for detecting fetal abnormalities has also exacerbated the psychological problems of abortion by eroding the willingness of parents to accept the children they have voluntarily conceived. This practice at least delays, and may disrupt, the vital development of maternal-infant bonding. B.K. Rothman, The Tentative Pregnancy 100-102 (1986). The problem is likely to increase as more women resort to prenatal diagnosis and abortion for reasons of convenience, such as to select a child of the desired sex.[46]

The damaging psychic impact of abortion is not limited to the mother. Liebman and Zimmer, The Psychological Sequelae Of Abortion: Fact And Fallacy in The Psychological Aspects of Abortion 127-38 (1979). In particular, abortion is contributing to dysfunctional families and causing adverse psychological harm to the father as well. Rue, "Abortion in Relationship Context," Interna- tional Review of Natural Family Planning 95-121 (Summer 1985).

---

[46] Since amniocentesis can now be used to determine an unborn's gender with certainty, abortions of children not of the desired sex are increasing. Jancin, "Prenatal Gender Selection Appears to be Gaining Acceptance," 23 Ob. Gyn. News 1, 30-31 (March 1-14, 1988). See Kolata, Fetal Sex Test Used as Step to Abortion, N.Y. Times, Dec. 25, 1988, at 1 and 38.

C. There Is No Basis For Roe v. Wade's Inclusion Of Abortion Within The Right Of Privacy.

This Court placed a freedom to choose abortion within its privacy doctrine because it thought that by constitutionalizing abortion, the health and welfare of both women and society would improve. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 153. As indicated by the above discussion, abortion has failed to solve the medical, familial and societal problems it was supposed to cure. To the contrary, it has inflicted its own evils upon women, the family, our communities and the nation. Solutions to the list of problems that existed before Roe v. Wade, or to the additional problems added since that decision, are not easy.[47] We now know there is no one simple answer like the one abortion was to provide. In protecting unlimited abortion against every other consideration, the Court has fortified itself against the critiques of physicians, lawyers, scholars, and basic community values.

This Court set us on our present path, and this Court can initiate a process to correct the course of its jurisprudence. The first step is to reconsider federal jurisdiction over abortion by reviewing the decision that first brought abortion within the constitution—Roe v. Wade. In undertaking that reconsideration, this Court should look to that line of privacy cases predating this country's turn toward abortion. In those precedents are found the proper balancing of individual and societal interests—a [47] "Respect for human life leads individuals and groups to reach out to those with special needs. With the support of the Catholic community, Catholic organizations and agencies will continue to provide services and care to pregnant women, especially to those who would otherwise find it difficult or impossible to obtain high-quality care." National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities: A Reaffirmation 10 (Nov. 14, 1985).

---

balancing that allows for personal liberty within a framework that respects familial relationships, preserves and promotes the common good, and protects our free society.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed after this Court has reconsidered its essential constitutional and jurisdictional holdings in the area of abortion jurisprudence.

Respectfully submitted,

MARK E. CHOPKO *
General Counsel

PHILLIP H. HARRIS
Solicitor

Of Counsel:
HELEN M. ALVARÉ

UNITED STATES CATHOLIC CONFERENCE
1312 Massachusetts Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 659-6690

* Counsel of Record

February, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF FOR 127 MEMBERS OF THE MISSOURI GENERAL ASSEMBLY AS AMICI CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

TIMOTHY BELZ*
Belz & Beckemeier, P.C.
7777 Bonhomme, Suite 1806
St. Louis, MO 63105
(314) 863-0200

LYNN D. WARDLE
RICHARD G. WILKINS
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University
Provo, UT 84602
(801) 378-1211

Counsel of record*

St. Louis Law Printing Co., Inc., 13305 Manchester Road 63131 314-231-4477

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Interest of the Amici	1
Summary of Argument	2
Argument	5
Conclusion	27
Appendix	A-1

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases:

Ball v. James, 451 U.S. 355 (1981) 15

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S 438 (1977) 18,24

Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 24

Bowen v. Kendrick, 108 S.Ct. 2562 (1988) 18

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 25

Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977) 4,25

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 24,26

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 24,25

Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) ... 12

Fullilove v. Klutznick, 448 U.S. 448 (1980) 27

Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971) 11

Hanna v. Plummer, 380 U.S. 460 (1965) 23

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 18,24

Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 20,26

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 2,17,18,24

Missouri K. & T. Ry. v. May, 194 U.S. 267 (1904) 2,17

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S 494 (1977) ... 24,25

New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262 (1932) ... 22

O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904 (Mo.banc 1983) ... 3,8

Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 25

Planned Parenthood Assoc. of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 2,6

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 2,6,24

Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641 (1984) 17

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

San Antonio School District v. Rodriquez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973) 21

State v. Emerich, 13 Mo.App. 492 (1883), aff'd, 87 Mo. 110 (1885) 7

Stegall v. Morris, 258 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.banc 1953) 3,9

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 24,26

Truax v. Corrigan, 257 U.S. 312 (1921) 22

United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 11

United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166 (1974) 15,18

West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937) .. 26

Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 22,23

Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) 18

Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978) 24,26

Constitution, Statutes and Regulations:

U.S. Const. art. V 6,20

1907 Mo. Laws, pp. 230-31 8

Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Misdemeanors," ch. I, § 12 (1825) 6

Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II (1835)

§ 9 3,8

§ 10 6

§ 36 6

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 7336 (1919) 7

Mo. Rev. Stat. (1986)

§ 1.205 10,11

§ 1.205.1 10

§ 1.205.2 8

§ 188.010 2,5

§ 188.130 9

§ 191.320 9

§ 197.032 9

§ 376.805 9

§ 453.070 9

§ 537.080 3,8

Mo. Rev. Stat. (Supp. 1988)

§ 135.327 9

§ 188.036 9

§ 208.151 9

§ 208.152 9

Treatises and Other Authorities:

A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 16

Blasi, The Ruthless Activism of the Burger Court, The Burger Court: The Counter-revolution that Wasn't 198 (V. Blasi ed. 1983) 16

Bok, Ethical Problems of Abortion, 2 Hastings Center Stud. 33 (1974) 11

Caldeira, Judges Judge the Supreme Court, 61 Judicature 208 (1977) 16

IV The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 262 (R. Basler ed. 1953) 13

A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 3,10,16,25,26

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 14,16

J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust (1980) 11

Epstein, Substantive Due Process By Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 (1974) 16

1 M. Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 (1911) 17

The Federalist

No. 48 (J. Madison) 13

No. 78 (A. Hamilton) 12,13

Fletcher, Abortion, Euthanasia, and the Case of the Defective Newborn, 292 N. Eng. J. Med. 75 (1975) 11

F. Frankfurter, The Public and its Government (1930) 22,23

Freund, Storms Over the Supreme Court, 69 A.B.A. J. 1474 (1983) 16

Ginsburg, Some Thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N.C.L. Rev. 375 (1983) 18

L. Hand, The Bill of Rights (1958) 17

Heyman & Holtz, The Severely Defective Newborn, 23 Pub. Policy 381 (1975) 11,12

R. Jackson, The Struggle for Judicial Supremacy (1941) 12

Koop, Infanticide American Style, 125 Cong. Rec. S19389-91 (July 18, 1979) 11

Lee, Preserving Separation of Powers: A Rejection of Judicial Legislation Through the Fundamental Rights Doctrine, 25 Ariz. L. Rev. 805 (1983) 16

Noonan, An Almost Absolute Value in History, The Morality of Abortion: Legal and Historical Perspectives 1 (J. Noonan ed. 1970) 10

Sandalow, Federalism and Social Change, 43 L. and Contemp. Probs., Summer 1980 at 29 21

A. Schweitzer, Reverence for Life (1965) 10

R. Sherlock, Preserving Life: Public Policy and the Life Not Worth Living (1987) 11

J.B. Thayer, John Marshall (1901) 15

L. Wardle & M. Wood, A Lawyer Looks at Abortion (1982) 21

Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231 15,16,18,19,20

Miscellaneous:

Amicus Brief of the United States of America filed in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S 747 (1986) 16

Editorial J. Pediatrics 904 (1973) 11

From the World Beyond Washington, in Planned Parenthood — World Population (Alan Guttmacher Institute), Washington Memo, Jan. 14, 1986, Jan. 15, 1987, Jan. 21, 1988, Jan. 12, 1989 .. 19

Journal of the House

April 30, 1974, pp. 1631-32 6

April 24, 1975, pp. 1033-34 6

April 11, 1979, pp. 1288-89 5

April 23, 1986, pp. 1512-13 5

Journal of the Senate

April 30, 1974, p. 1021 6

April 2, 1975, p. 543 6

June 15, 1979, p. 1544 5

April 16, 1986, p. 1159 5

Legal Ramifications of the Human Life Amendment: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on S.J. Res 3, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 47-82 (prepared statement of Professor Lynn D. Wardle) 15,20

N.Y. Times, May 3, 1988, Jul. 6, 1988, Jul. 7, 1988, Jul. 30, 1988, Sept. 25, 1988, Oct. 5, 1988, Oct. 30, 1988 14

U.S. News & World Rep., Sept. 14, 1987 16

U.S. Senate, Legislative Information Service, Legis, Feb. 10, 1989 18

Washington Post, Jan. 24, 1989 14

BRIEF FOR 127 MEMBERS OF THE MISSOURI GENERAL ASSEMBLY AS AMICI CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE AMICI

Amici are 127 members of the Missouri General Assembly.[1] They therefore have a substantial interest in the outcome of this case. They assert not just the state interest in upholding the Missouri statute, but their interest as the individuals elected by the people of Missouri to strike the balance of competing interests and resolve the public policy issues involved in this case. Thus, the amici have a direct interest in preserving the integrity of the federal system and the legislative role in the democratic process. The views of the amici, moreover, may aid the Court in its continuing efforts to define the proper sphere of legislative action in an area of continuing public debate. Counsel for all parties have consented to the filing of this brief.

[1] The amici include Senators Harold L. Caskey, Phil B. Curls, Pat Danner, David Doctorian, Fred Dyer, Francis E. Flotron, Mike Lybyer, James L. Mathewson, Thomas W. McCarthy, Emory Melton, Norman L. Merrell, Jay Nixon, John T. Russell, Jeff W. Schaeperkoetter, John D. Schneider, John E. Scott, Dennis Smith, Irene Treppler and Harry Wiggins; and Representatives Todd Akin, Bill Alter, Ollie Amick, Ron Auer, Stephen C. Banton, Francis M. Barnes, James A. Barnes, Philip M. Barry, Joe Bock, Francis R. Brady, Russell G. Brockfeld, Everett W. Brown, Galen B. Browning, Gary L. Burton, Flavel J. Butts, Elmer J. Cantrell, Steven R. Carroll, Mervin R. Case, Gail L. Chatfield, Doyle Childers, Bonnie Sue Cooper, Norwood A. Creason, Dewey G. Crump, Wayne F. Crump, George P. Dames, Michael P. David, William T. Dawson, Ronnie DePasco, Jeanette T. Dixon, Laurie B. Donovan, Joseph L. Driskill, Robert L. Dunning, Sr., Steven E. Ehlmann, T. Mark Elliott, Herbert C. Fallert, Ken F. Fiebelman, James V. Froelker, Donald L. Gann, Jess Garnett, Jack Goldman, Russell Goward, Christopher Graham, Timothy P. Green, David C. Hale, John Hancock, Raymond W. Hand, Patrick J. Hickey, Ted House, W.O. (Bob) Howard, Mary C. Kasten, John Kauffman, Pat Kelley, Timothy M. Kelley, Craig Kilby, Sam D. Leake, Ken Legan, William C. Linton, T.M. Macdonnell, W.A. (Bill) Markland, William Marshall, Jean H. Mathews, Joe McCracken, William P. McKenna, Wesley A. Miller, Jim Mitchell, Neil Molloy, Walt Mueller, Jim Murphy, Al Nilges, Judith G. O'Connor, Matt O'Neill, Joseph R. Ortwerth, Edward E. Ottinger, Paul (Pete) Page, Carole Roper Park, Opal Parks, Robert J. Quinn, William A. Raisch, David L. Rauch, Anthony D. Ribaudo, James N. Riley, Henry C. Rizzo, Larry M. Rohrbach, Carson Ross, James (Jay) Russell, Edward Schellhorn, David Schwab, Delbert Lee Scott, Vernon E. Scoville, III, Robert F. Sego, Jonathan Selsor, Norman E. Sheldon, Todd P. Smith, Earle F. Staponski, Kaye H. Steinmetz, Thomas P. Stoff, Chuck Surface, James M. Talent, Merrill M. Townley, Joseph L. Treadway, Robert D. Ward, Stephen R. Waters, Harold G. Weil, Dale Whiteside, Clarence Wohlwend, J. Dan Woodall, Chuck Wooten and Dennis Ziegenhorn. Total members: 197.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The abortion controversy, involving complex questions of public policy and oftentimes competing notions of public morality, continues unabated. The Missouri legislature, as in the past (Planned Parenthood Assoc. of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983); Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976)), has once again attempted to balance the competing interests of all parties (including unborn children) affected by the abortion decision. The federal courts have once again invalidated, in large measure, that legislative effort. This unseemly struggle between the state legislature and the federal judiciary should not continue. While the Court has an obligation to protect express constitutional rights, the Court "should not forget that 'legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.' " Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 479-489 (1977) (quoting Missouri K. & T. Ry. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 279 (1904) (Holmes, J.)).

For over 150 years, the State of Missouri has consistently expressed its opposition to abortion on demand. The legislature and courts of Missouri, moreover, have extended the protection of state law to "all humans, born and unborn" (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.010 (1986)), in contexts ranging from abortion regulation (id.) to criminal law (Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II, § 9 (1835)), tort law (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 537.080; O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904 (Mo.banc 1983)), and property law (see Stegall v. Morris, 258 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.banc 1953)). These regulatory efforts all permissibly express the state's compelling interest in the protection of unborn life. Such regard for human life does not transgress constitutional norms. Rather, it represents "respect for the paramount sanctity of human life which has always been at the centre of western civilization." A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 53 (1976).

By invalidating the regulations at issue here, the lower courts improperly intruded upon the legislative arena. Basic prudential and constitutional concerns — including the principle of popular sovereignty, the inherent limitations of the judicial process, and the need to preserve public confidence in the judiciary — counsel substantial deference to legislative resolutions of controversial issues of public policy. And despite stifling supervision by federal courts, the legislatures of all of the states (and Congress) have, like the Missouri legislature, enacted modern statutes regulating and restricting abortion practices in more than a dozen substantive areas. See Appendices A-1 to A-15, and B.

Moreover, the decisions below entrench upon policy-making authority properly reserved to the states. The federal judiciary has erred by attempting to impose upon the states a non-existent consensus regarding abortion policy. The states should be freed from the substantive due process fetters of abortion-privacy doctrine so that "the law might come to reflect a tolerable accommodation of competing views." Sandalow, Federalism and Social Change, 43 L. and Contemp. Probs., Summer 1980 at 36.

Finally, the Court should clarify the proper standard of judicial review in this troublesome area. State regulations having a harmless, collateral or insubstantial impact upon a protected interest should not trigger any level of exacting judicial review. Regulations that are found to have a substantial impact, furthermore, do not reflexively merit "strict scrutiny." A "test so severe that legislation can rarely meet it should be imposed by the courts with deliberate restraint in view of the respect that properly should be accorded legislative judgments." Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 705 (1977) (Powell, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). The Court would do much to clarify and rationalize the task of federal and state courts by holding that the "rational basis" test applies to the review of popularly-enacted abortion regulations.

ARGUMENT

I. Missouri Has Always Been Committed To The Protection Of Life And To The Regulation Of Abortion

The citizens of Missouri and their elected officials are emphatically committed to the protection of human life in all of its stages and to the regulation of abortion. As the legislature has said:

> It is the intention of the general assembly of the state of Missouri to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.010 (1986).

This commitment, this conviction, is bipartisan and overwhelming. The Act which is the subject of this suit was passed 119-36 in the Democrat-controlled House of Representatives[2] and 23-5 in the Democrat-controlled Senate[3] before being signed into law by Governor Ashcroft,[4] a Republican. In 1979, the House voted 139-18[5] and the Senate 28-4[6] to pass an abor-

---

[2] Journal of the House, April 23, 1986, pp. 1512-13.

[3] Journal of the Senate, April 16, 1986, p. 1159.

[4] Governor Ashcroft's "Proclamation" of January 22, 1989 as a day in memoriam for the "23 million unborn children" who "have been denied their 'right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness' " since 1973 is attached hereto as Appendix C. He has issued a similar proclamation every January since 1985.

[5] Journal of the House, April 11, 1979, pp. 1288-89.

[6] Journal of the Senate, June 15, 1979, p. 1544.

tion statute which was approved by Democrat Governor Teasdale.[7] This Court reviewed that statute in Planned Parenthood Assoc. of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983). In 1974, the Senate voted 27-5[8] and the House 148-3[9] to approve an abortion statute, later signed into law by Republican Governor Bond, which was the subject of Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976). And in 1975, pursuant to Article V of the U.S. Constitution, the Senate voted 24-8[10] and the House 112-36[11] to apply to the U.S. Congress to call a convention for the purpose of proposing a human life amendment[12] to the U.S. Constitution.

This profound opposition to abortion on demand is as old and enduring as the State of Missouri itself. Missouri began to codify its abortion policy in 1825,[13] shortly after it became a state, and by 1835[14] the law extended protection to all unborn

---

[7] Governor Teasdale's "Proclamation" of January 22, 1980, is similar to Governor Ashcroft's (n. 4, supra) and is attached hereto as Appendix D. Governor Teasdale issued similar proclamations each January in 1977, 1978 and 1979.

[8] Journal of the Senate, April 30, 1974, p. 1021.

[9] Journal of the House, April 30, 1974, pp. 1631-32.

[10] Journal of the Senate, April 2, 1975, p. 543.

[11] Journal of the House, April 24, 1975, pp. 1033-34.

[12] See Appendix E.

[13] Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Misdemeanors," ch. I, § 12 (1825). See Appendix F.

[14] Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II, §§ 10 and 36 (1835). See Appendix F.

children by forbidding all kinds of abortion procedures, throughout pregnancy, "unless the same shall have been necessary to preserve the life of such woman, or shall have been advised by a physician to be necessary for that purpose. . . ." This qualified prohibition of abortion remained intact from 1835 until 1973.[15]

There is no doubt, historically, about the status ascribed to unborn children by Missouri lawmakers. Since the beginning of abortion regulation in Missouri, the General Assembly has uniformly used the terms "child" or "unborn child" to refer to fetuses and embryos from the moment of conception onward.[16] Distinctions with respect to penalties for performing abortions were made on the basis of "quickening."[17] From 1835 through the end of the century, abortions of unborn children prior to [15] Mo. Rev. Stat., § 7336 (1919). There were minor amendments between 1835 and 1919, but the statutes were substantially unchanged from 1919 through 1973. See Appendix F.

---

[16] See Appendix F.

[17] An 1883 opinion of the Missouri Court of Appeals described the meaning of the term "quick":

> The framers of our statutory provisions in regard to abortion, undoubtedly used the words "quick with child" in the old common-law meaning of the phrase, when they speak of the woman being "pregnant of a quick child." The statute recognizes a period of pregnancy previous to quickening. As the child is, in truth, alive from the moment of conception, this quickening must be taken to mean that period of pregnancy at which the womb, having become too large to be contained in the pelvis, rises into the abdomen, when the woman feels, or imagines that she feels, the movement of the foetus.

State v. Emerich, 13 Mo.App. 492, 495 (1883), aff'd, 87 Mo. 110 (1885).

quickening were generally misdemeanors,[18] but beginning in 1907[19] and continuing through 1973, even those early abortions led to "felony abortion" convictions, while abortion of unborn "quick" children led to the more serious felony conviction of manslaughter.[20]

Missouri has pursued its policy to protect the unborn in contexts other than abortion. In 1835, for instance, the legislature declared that "[t]he wilful killing of any unborn quick child, by any injury to the mother of such child, which would be murder if it resulted in the death of such mother, shall be deemed manslaughter in the first degree." Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II, § 9 (1835). This statute remained substantially unchanged until it was repealed by the 1986 Act, which made Missouri's homicide laws applicable to the killing of all unborn children in non-abortion contexts by declaring that "the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons. . . ." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2 (1986). Even before passage of this Act, however, Missouri's wrongful death statute (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 537.080) was construed to apply to the unborn by a unanimous Missouri Supreme Court, which concluded "that the term 'person' as used in 537.080 includes the human fetus en ventre sa mere." O'Grady v. Brown, 654 S.W.2d 904, 910 (Mo.banc 1983). And Missouri courts have [18] The Missouri abortion statutes, from the beginning until Roe, were directed at the provider or procurer of an illegal abortion, but never at the woman upon whom the abortion was performed, and the reported cases do not reveal any instance in which such a woman had been prosecuted for having an abortion, even as an accessory.

---

[19] 1907 Mo. Laws, pp. 230-31. See Appendix F.

[20] Thus, the more serious manslaughter conviction required an additional quantum of proof of actual pregnancy — that the mother feel the movement of the child.

long recognized the property rights of persons from the time of conception onward (see Stegall v. Morris, 258 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.banc 1953)).

The Missouri General Assembly has also pursued its policy to protect the unborn by providing practical alternatives to abortion. A few of these, for example, are special medical assistance to women who are pregnant (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 208.151); special subsidies to facilitate certain adoptions (§ 453.070); and tax credits of up to $5,000.00 for expenses related to the adoption of a "special needs child" (§ 135.327).

In addition to the major legislation leading to the Danforth and Ashcroft cases and this case, the Missouri General Assembly has passed numerous other bills occasioned directly by Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) and its progeny. For example, suits for wrongful life (brought by the child) and for wrongful birth (brought by the parents) have been abolished (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.130); Medicaid funding is forbidden for abortions except where the life of the mother is endangered (§ 208.152); persons and institutions refusing to participate in abortions cannot be discriminated against (§ 197.032); state-sponsored genetic diagnostic and counseling centers cannot refer for abortions unless the mother's life is endangered (§ 191.320); medical insurance coverage for elective abortions must be by optional rider requiring an additional premium (§ 376.805); and abortions done with the intent to use fetal organs or tissues for transplants, and trafficking in fetal organs and tissues, are prohibited (§ 188.036).

In sum, Missouri is, and always has been, committed to the protection of innocent human life and to the regulation of abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Until Roe v. Wade, pursuit of these policies was not complicated. Since Roe v. Wade, pursuit of these policies has been continually frustrated.

II. The Missouri Regulations Permissibly Express The State's Fundamental Interest In The Protection Of The Unborn

In the 1986 Act, the Missouri General Assembly expressed its continuing concern with the protection of human life by finding that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and that "[u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being." Mo. Rev. Stat. 1.205.1(1) and (2) (1986). Far from transgressing constitutional norms, § 1.205 and its accompanying regulations embody compelling values inherent in our democratic system of government. The lower courts' contrary conclusion should be reversed.

Official respect for the life of the unborn has been "an almost absolute value in history."[21] Behind the many centuries of legal restriction of abortion lies what former Solicitor General Archibald Cox has called "the most compelling interest of the State in prohibiting abortion: the interest in maintaining that respect for the paramount sanctity of human life which has always been at the centre of western civilization, not merely by guarding 'life' itself, however defined, but by safeguarding the penumbra, whether at the beginning, through some overwhelming disability of mind or body, or at death."[22]

The equal worth under law of all lives — not just the able-bodied, full-facultied, socially-accepted, racially-and-culturally homogenized, and mature-but-not-decrepit — is one of the cornerstones of our constitutional democracy. The Declaration of Independence proclaims that it is "self-evident" that "all men

---

[21] Noonan, An Almost Absolute Value in History in the Morality of Abortion; Legal and Historical Perspectives 1, 6 (J. Noonan ed. 1970).

[22] A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 53 (1976) (Professor Cox criticizes the Court's opinion in Roe because it "fails even to consider" this interest). See also A. Schweitzer, Reverence for Life 5 (1965).

. . . are endowed . . . [with the unalienable rights of] Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness" and that "to secure these rights Governments are instituted. . . ." Accordingly, the Missouri legislature — like the legislatures of most states[23] — has consistently sought to secure these rights for all people, including the unborn. See supra Part I.[24] In our legal tradition, the taking of human life has never been deemed a purely private matter.

The categorical exclusion of any human life from the protection of the law based upon some immutable biological characteristic, such as race, sex, physical and mental development, or bodily condition, is inconsistent with the idea of democracy. R. Sherlock, Preserving Life: Public Policy and the Life Not Worth Living 15-74 (1987). The value and worth of life itself is tenuous indeed if the interests of those outside the mainstream — whether they be unborn children, the elderly, the handicapped, the dying, or just the socially excluded — are ignored. Section 1.205 and its accompanying regulations are expressions of these fundamental values; values going to the very heart and soul of America's — and Missouri's — democratic system. They are not unconstitutional.[25]

---

[23] See Appendix A.

[24] See also J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust 43-73 (1980); Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971); United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152 n.4 (1938).

[25] See Bok, Ethical Problems of Abortion, 2 Hastings Center Stud. 33, 42-44 (1974). If there were any question about the reality of the need for concern regarding the risk abortion poses to other persons on the "fringes" of life in 1973, that reality is now undeniable. There has been a profound and appalling increase in the incidence of acts manifesting disregard and apathy for the destruction of other classes of unwanted, vulnerable human lives. Correlation between abortion and euthanasia, infanticide, child abuse, and other invidious practices is no longer a matter of idle speculation. See, e.g., Koop Infanticide American Style, 125 Cong. Rec. S19,389-91 (July 18, 1979); Editorial J. Pediatrics 904 (1973); Fletcher, Abortion, Euthanasia, and the Case of the Defective Newborn, 292 N. Eng. J. Med. 75-77 (1975); Heymann & Holtz, The Severely Defective Newborn, 23 Pub. Policy 381, 410, 413 (1975); Bok, supra at 42.

The Missouri legislation at issue here presents the case for bright lines. "A sense of security and acceptance, which underlies the very concepts of rights and self-respect which is a precondition of human happiness, depends upon knowing when one . . . is a fully protected member of the community." Heymann & Holtz, The Severely Defective Newborn 23 Pub. Policy 381, 411 (1975). The Missouri legislature has defined personhood to include all human beings — and not to exclude any. Nothing in the text or history of the United States Constitution, except its darkest and most shameful hours pertaining to the treatment of racial minorities and slaves,[26] suggests that the duly authorized branches and units of our republican government may not be so inclusive.

III. Invalidation Of The Missouri Regulations Is An Unwarranted Intrusion Into The Legislative Arena

Federal courts, like the other branches of the federal government, are bound by discernible prudential and constitutional limits. As Solicitor General, later Justice, Robert H. Jackson wrote, "the rule of law is in unsafe hands when courts cease to function as courts and become organs for control of policy."[27] The Founders were not unaware of the risk noted by Jackson. Hamilton wrote: "[T]he general liberty of the people can never be endangered from [the judiciary] . . . so long as the judiciary remains truly distinct from both the legislature and the executive. For I agree that 'there is no liberty if the power of [26] Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857).

[27] R. Jackson, The Struggle for Judicial Supremacy 322 (1941).

judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers.' "[28]

Three basic prudential and constitutional concerns require substantial judicial deference to legislative resolutions of controversial issues of public policy: the principle of popular sovereignty, the inherent limitations of the judicial process, and the need to preserve public confidence in the judiciary. These factors counsel this Court to uphold, rather than invalidate, the Missouri abortion regulations.

"Just government," the Declaration of Independence states, "is founded on the consent of the governed." The things that matter most in life matter differently to different people, and the only morally supportable method of resolving deeply held differences of opinion regarding public policy is to let the people decide — through the democratic processes. The Court's prior abortion decisions, as evidenced by the decisions below, wrongfully ignore this fundamental precept. Virtually none of those affected by the abortion privacy doctrine were permitted to participate in its creation, nor — as the opinions below demonstrate — has the general populace had any opportunity [28] The Federalist, No. 78 (A. Hamilton) (quoting Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws, vol. 1, p. 181) (emphasis added). See also The Federalist, No. 48 (J. Madison) ("It is equally evident that none of [the three branches of government] ought to possess, directly or indirectly, an overruling influence over the others in the administration of their respective powers").

Abraham Lincoln also recognized the limits of the judicial role:

> [I]f the policy of the Government, upon vital questions, affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made, in ordinary litigation between parties, in personal actions, the people will have ceased, to be their own rulers, having, to that extent, practically resigned their government, into the hands of the eminent tribunal.

IV The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 262, 268 (R. Basler ed. 1953).

since to modify it. By constitutionalizing the controversy, the Court has removed the profound legal and moral issues surrounding the abortion decision from the realm of public debate and democratic decisionmaking. This course should be corrected.[29]

Recognition of the institutional limitations of the judicial branch also compels respect for legislative resolutions of controversial issues of public policy. Judicial deference to Missouri's abortion regulations is warranted here because of the superior fact-finding capability of the legislative branch,[30] the [29] On January 23, 1989, 67,000 demonstrators gathered in Washington, D.C., as they have during the previous fifteen years, to march to this Court to protest the abortion decision. Washington Post, Jan. 24, 1989, at A1, col. 1. If our constitutional system of government were functioning properly, those protestors would have been gathering at their statehouses to demonstrate, not at a courthouse.

---

The arrest of thousands of anti-abortion protestors (peacefully sitting on sidewalks and walkways to block access to abortion clinics) in 1988 alone is symptomatic of a widely-shared perception that the range of political solutions to what many believe to be a morally intolerable judicially-imposed rule is so limited that massive civil disobedience is the only viable alternative. See, e.g., N.Y Times, Oct. 30, 1988, at A26, col. 1 (2,200 abortion protestors arrested in 27 cities in demonstrations on October 28 and 29); N.Y. Times, May 3, 1988, B1, col. 2 (503 anti-abortion protestors arrested in Manhattan); N.Y. Times, Oct. 5, 1988, A22, col. 1 (400 anti-abortion protestors arrested in Atlanta); N.Y. Times, Jul. 6, 1988, A7, col. 1 (600 protestors block the entrance to a clinic in Pennsylvania); N.Y. Times, Jul. 30, 1988, at A30, col. 3 (235 anti-abortion protestors arrested in Amherst, New York); N.Y. Times, Sept. 25, 1988, at A33, col. 6 (158 anti-abortion protestors arrested in Reston, Washington); N.Y. Times, Jul. 7, 1988, at A20, col. 6 (133 anti-abortion protestors arrested in Florida).

[30] See Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 935 n.89 (1973) ("because the claims involved [in the abortion controversy] are difficult to evaluate, I would not want to entrust to the judiciary authority to guess about them — certainly not under the guise of enforcing the Constitution").

superior accountability of the legislative branch,[31] and the benefits to the public and to democracy in general which flow from the proper functioning of open legislative processes.[32] Judicial deference, furthermore, would ease the significant burden Roe and its progeny have imposed upon the federal court system.[33]

---

[31] As Justice Powell warned in his concurring opinion in United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 188 (1974): "We should be ever mindful of the contradictions that would arise if a democracy were to permit general oversight of the elected branches of government by a nonrepresentative, and in large measure insulated, judicial branch."

[32] Chief Justice John Marshall's biographer described this concern (J.B. Thayer, John Marshall 106-107 (1901)):

> [T]he exercise of [the judiciary's power of review], even when unavoidable, is always attended with a serious evil, namely, that the correction of legislative mistakes comes from the outside, and the people thus lose the political experience, and the moral education and stimulus that come from fighting the question out in the ordinary way, and correcting their own errors * * *. The tendency of a common and easy resort to this great function, now lamentably too common, is to dwarf the political capacity of the people, and to deaden its sense of moral responsibility.

See also Ball v. James, 451 U.S. 355, 373 (1981) (Powell, J., concurring).

[33] As the decisions of the courts below demonstrate, the abortion privacy doctrine has proven to be unmanageable. There is virtually no abortion regulation, direct or indirect, immediate or remote, substantial or insignificant, that has not been challenged and litigated in federal court. Accordingly, a major portion of federal judicial time and energy has been devoted to supervising state and local elected officials' attempts to regulate abortion. "During the entire decade before Roe v. Wade was decided, there was a total of only 18 opinions published in all federal courts in all cases dealing with abortion or abortion regulation." Legal Ramifications of the Human Life Amendment: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on S.J. Res 3, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 47, 51, 66 (prepared statement of Professor Lynn D. Wardle). Since Roe there have been literally hundreds of reported federal court decisions considering challenges to (and virtually all invalidating) federal and state abortion regulations. Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade,

(footnote continued on next page)

In addition, the imperative need to preserve public confidence in the federal judiciary mandates the greatest measure of judicial self-restraint in the abortion arena. When the judiciary creates as well as interprets and applies public policy, it may threaten that confidence. Indeed, a great part of the opposition to Roe comes from those who object to the creation and imposition of public policy on a profoundly controversial subject by judicial fiat.[34] It is "necessary that the Supreme Judiciary

---

1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231, 238 n.41. In fact, there have now been more major abortion decisions by this Court alone, in the 16 years beginning with Roe, than were decided in the same period of time before Roe by all federal courts combined. Wardle, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. at 233 n.19.

[34] Strict judicial review of state abortion legislation has been one of the most controversial and highly criticized exercises of judicial power in the history of our nation. Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); Epstein, Substantive Due Process By Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 (1974); Freund, Storms Over the Supreme Court, 69 A.B.A. J. 1474 (1983); Blasi, The Ruthless Activism of the Burger Court, The Burger Court: The Counter-revolution that Wasn't 198, 212 (V. Blasi ed. 1983); A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent 27-29 (1975); A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 113 (1976). Numerous legal scholars, including many sympathetic to decriminalizing abortion, have criticized the abortion decisions for failing to articulate a persuasive principle that lifts the ruling "above the level of a political judgment." A. Cox, supra at 13-14. At least four recent Solicitors General have criticized the judicially-created abortion doctrine and/or Roe v. Wade. Charles Fried (see Amicus Brief of the United States of America filed in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)), Rex E. Lee, (see Lee, Preserving Separation of Powers: A Rejection of Judicial Legislation Through the Fundamental Rights Doctrine, 25 Ariz. L. Rev. 805, 813 (1983)), Archibald Cox (see A. Cox, supra at 13-14, 54-56), Robert Bork (U.S. News & World Rep., Sept. 14, 1987, at 20). Even federal judges, charged with the duty of enforcing abortion privacy doctrine, have "labelled Roe v. Wade massive 'judicial legislation'." Caldeira, Judges Judge the Supreme Court, 61 Judicature 208, 212 (1977) ("For these judges, the justices' opinions on Roe lacked sufficient reasoning to justify this judicial excursion into the field of morals").

should have the confidence of the people." 1 M. Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, 76 (1911) (remarks of Nathaniel Gorham, Massachusetts). This confidence, however, can be "lost, if [judges] are employed in the task of remonstrating against popular measures of the Legislature." Id. at 77. The "legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in as great a degree as the courts."[35] Our constitutional Republic cannot survive long the notion that unelected judges must decide fundamental issues for the common people.[36]

It is, finally, of profound significance that the coequal branches of the federal government have refused to endorse Roe.

> [I]n every session since Roe was decided, Congress has been flooded with proposals directly or indirectly expressing dissatisfaction with the abortion privacy doctrine. In less than thirteen years [1973 to mid-1985], nearly six hundred separately-numbered resulutions pertaining to abortion [were] introduced in Congress, including 270 joint resolutions proposing anti-abortion amendments to the Constitution. Congress has enacted more than twenty 'prolife' bills in recent years, and several highly publicized

---

[35] Missouri K. & T. Ry. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270 (1904) (Holmes, J.) (cited in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 479-480 (1977)), and Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 700 (1984) (Stevens, J., concurring and dissenting in part).

[36] See also L. Hand, The Bill of Rights 70 (1958) ("For myself it would be most irksome to be ruled by a bevy of Platonic Guardians, even if I knew how to choose them, which I assuredly do not").

> congressional hearings have featured prominent criticism of the abortion decisions.[37]

Such substantial congressional animosity toward a judicially-created rule is telling. The refusal of the coequal branches of the federal government (and the state legislatures) to endorse or support the abortion doctrine of the Court stands in stark contrast, for instance, to the success of the Court's gender discrimination decisions — a contrast that is especially noteworthy because the Court has dealt with both subjects during the same period of time.[38] This clash between the life-tenured judiciary and the elected representatives of the people should not continue. As Justice Powell noted in his concurring opinion in United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 188 (1974):

> Repeated and essentially head-on confrontations between the life-tenured branch and the representative branches of government will not, in the long run, be beneficial to either. The public confidence essential to the former and [37] Wardle, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. at 247-48. During the past six years, 299 separately-numbered bills or resolutions regarding abortion have been introduced in Congress. In the 98th Congress — 94 filings; 99th Congress — 93 filings; 100th Congress — 105 filings; 101st Congress (1 month) — 7 filings. U.S. Senate, Legislative Information Service, Legis, Feb. 10, 1989. As appendix B, attached, reveals, there are currently 22 separate provisons in federal statutory law dealing with abortion (most prohibiting any governmental support for non-therapeutic abortion in federal programs); all but four of these provisions have been enacted since 1973. Moreover, in little over a decade, congressional restrictions of public funding of abortion (enacted annually as budget restrictions) have provoked at least four major confrontations between Congress and the Court. See Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980). See also Bowen v. Kendrick, 108 S.Ct. 2562 (1988).

[38] See Ginsburg, Some thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N.C.L. Rev. 375, 376 (1983).

> the vitality critical to the latter may well erode if we do not exercise self-restraint in the utilization of our power to negate the actions of other branches.

IV. The Decisions Below Entrench Upon Policy-Making Authority Properly Reserved To The States

From 1973 through the end of 1988 state legislatures have enacted three hundred (or more) different bills regulating abortion.[39] As Appendix A (A-1 through A-15) documents, abortion regulations, restrictions and prohibitions are contained in the current statutes or codes of all the states. These enactments, moreover, manifest remarkably consistent life-protective [39] For the bills enacted from 1973 to 1984, see Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231, 247 n.83. For the period since then see From the World Beyond Washington, in Planned Parenthood — World Population (Alan Guttmacher Institute), Washington Memo, Jan. 14, 1986, at 5 (hereinafter "Washington Memo") (in 1985 eighteen separate abortion bills were enacted by state legislatures); Washington Memo, Jan. 15, 1987, at 6 (in 1986 at least six different pieces of abortion legislation were enacted by state legislatures); Washington Memo, Jan. 21, 1988, at 7 (in 1987 eight pieces of abortion legislation were enacted by state legislatures); Washington Memo, Jan. 12, 1989, at 4 (in 1988 nine separate pieces of abortion legislation were enacted by state legislatures). The fervency of the legislative debate is further demonstrated by the bills introduced, but not passed, by state legislatures. For example, in 1988, 200 bills regulating abortion were introduced in state legislatures, but only nine were enacted into law that year. Washington Memo, Jan. 12, 1989, at 4. Moreover, by 1983, 23 state legislatures had sent memorials requesting Congress to propose an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution and at least 19 state legislatures had passed petitions calling on Congress to convene a Constitutional Convention to propose a human life amendment to the Constitution. Wardle, supra, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. at 274. See also Appendix E.

policies plainly in tension with the Court's abortion privacy doctrine. Thus, this case raises sensitive federalism issues.[40]

The shared-sovereignty scheme of cooperative federalism adopted in the Constitution guarantees that when there is no constitutional consensus (i.e., a majority in a super-majority of the constituent states; see U.S. Const., art. V) on an issue of public policy, that issue may not be considered part of the fundamental, unquestionable law of the land. The drafters of the Constitution thus rejected the view that national consensus can always (or best) be achieved through the imposition of national policies formulated at the national level by officials of the national government. The genius of our Constitution is that it is "made for people of fundamentally differing views." Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 76 (1905) (Harlan, J., dissenting). Many federal courts, including the courts below, have significantly erred by trying to impose upon the states a nonexistent consensus regarding abortion policy.

In Roe, the Court announced a complicated set of rules designed to regulate the abortion decision nationwide. "Sensitivity to the values of federalism," however, "would . . . have [40] Abortion privacy doctrine raises federalism issues beyond the apparent tension between state legislatures and the federal judiciary. Despite the constant, unanimous assertion by the states of their continuing interest in determining their own abortion policy, there is abundant evidence that government authority to regulate abortion has shifted away from the state and toward the national legislature since Roe v. Wade. For example, in the entire decade before Roe was decided only ten bills were introduced in Congress relating to abortion (and all of them were introduced after federal courts began to invalidate state abortion laws in 1969). By comparison, in the decade after Roe nearly 500 separately-numbered bills and resolutions dealing with abortion were introduced in Congress (an increase of about 5000 percent), and in the six years since the end of the first post-Roe decade, another 299 have been introduced. Legal Ramifications of the Human Life Amendment, supra note 33, at 47-82 (listing proposed congressional legislation dealing with abortion); see also Wardle, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. at 247-48.

---

counseled a decision [regarding abortion] permitting the states to shape their abortion laws at least in some measure, according to local preferences." Sandalow, Federalism and Social Change, 43 L. and Contemp. Probs., Summer 1980, at 29, 36. Why? Because at the time the Court decided Roe, and certainly since then, "a national consensus plainly had not evolved regarding abortion." Id. at 36.[41] But, if the States were now liberated from the stifling abortion privacy doctrine that treats them as if they are "subordinate governmental agencies subject to societal norms determined at the national level," "the law might come to reflect a tolerable accommodation of competing views, differing from state to state in accordance with the differences among their citizens." Id.[42]

The responsibility of this Court to preserve the federal system of government is surely as important as its responsibility to nurture the development of new constitutional liberties. Abortion is a deeply controversial issue on which the scholars and experts are divided. In determining what the abortion policy of the United States is — or should be — the Constitution compels substantial deference to decisions made at the state level. As this Court has previously noted (San Antonio School District v. Rodriquez, 411 U.S. 1, 42-43 (1973)):

> The ultimate wisdom as to these [issues] is not likely to be divined for all time even by the scholars who now so earnestly debate [them]. In such circumstances, the judiciary is well advised to refrain from imposing on the States inflexible constitutional restraints that could cir-

---

[41] If there is any clear national consensus regarding the abortion issue, however, it is reflected by the consistent and abiding policy of the states to protect unborn children. See Appendix A.

[42] The process of achieving general national consensus on the issue of abortion by means of state legislation was well underway when this Court disrupted the process in 1973. L. Wardle & M. Wood, A Lawyer Looks at Abortion 42, 43 (1982).

> cumscribe or handicap the continued research and experimentation so vital to keeping even partial solutions to [such] problems and to keep abreast of ever-changing conditions.

In Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 597 (1977), another privacy decision, the Court emphasized that individual states must "have broad latitude in experimenting with possible solutions to problems of vital local concern." The Court stated that "Mr. Justice Brandeis' classic statement of the proposition merits reiteration" (id. at n.20) (quoting New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262, 311 (1932) (Brandeis, J., dissenting):

> To stay experimentation in things social and economic is a grave responsibility. Denial of the right to experiment may be fraught with serious consequences to the Nation. It is one of the happy incidents of the federal system that a single courageous State may, if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory; and try novel social and economic experiments without risk to the rest of the country. This Court has the power to prevent an experiment. We may strike down the statute which embodies it on the ground that, in our opinion, the measure is arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable. But in the exercise of this high power, we must be ever on our guard, lest we erect our prejudices into legal principles.[43]

---

[43] Over sixty years ago, during the heyday of another era of substantive due process, Justice Holmes wrote (Truax v. Corrigan, 257 U.S. 312, 342-44 (1921) (Holmes, J., dissenting)):

> There is nothing that I more deprecate than the use of the Fourteenth Amendment beyond the absolute compulsion of its words to prevent the making of social experiments that an important part of the community desires, in the insulated chambers afforded by several States, even though the experiments may seem futile if even noxious to me and to those whose judgments I most respect.

Justice Frankfurter echoed that concern when he wrote (F. Frankfurter, The Public and its Government 50-51 (1930)):

(footnote continued on next page)

The constitutional allocation of law-making functions between state and federal governments is seriously undermined if federal courts disregard state legislation on matters as to which there is no express overriding federal legislative interest. See generally Hanna v. Plummer, 380 U.S. 460, 477-478 (1965) (Harlan, J., concurring). There is no better modern evidence of the inhibiting anti-federalist effects of substantive due process than the decisions of the courts below. If upheld, they will continue to stifle healthy and democratic debate about abortion.

V. Strict Scrutiny Of The Missouri Regulations Is Inappropriate

The lower courts prematurely applied an overly strict standard of review without giving due consideration to the profoundly important state interests supporting the Missouri legislation. The Court should take this opportunity to clarify the standards governing judicial review of state abortion regulations.

State regulations having a harmless, collateral, or insubstantial impact upon protected interests should not trigger any level of exacting judicial review.[44] Rather, there must be a significant intrusion upon protected interests before such scrutiny is in-

---

> The veto power of the Supreme Court over the social-economic legislation of the states, thus exercised through the due process clause, is the most vulnerable aspect of undue centralization. It is . . . the most destructive, because judicial nullification on grounds of constitutionality stops experimentation at its source, and bars increase to the fund of social knowledge by scientific tests of trial and error. . . . The inclination of a single Justice or two, the tip of his mind or his fears, may determine the opportunity of a much needed social experiment to survive, or may frustrate for a long time intelligent attempts to deal with the social evil.

[44] Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 597 (1977) ("State legislation which has some effect on individual liberty or privacy may not be held unconstitutional simply because a court finds it unnecessary, in whole or in part").

voked.[45] Thus, the earliest abortion precedents of this Court teach that legislation dealing with abortion or having some incidental effect upon the abortion decision is not, for that reason alone, subject to strict scrutiny. State regulation must substantially burden or restrict the abortion decision before any level of exacting scrutiny is triggered.[46]

---

[45] See, e.g., Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 383 (1978) ("critical examination" is appropriate when government classification "significantly interferes with the exercise of" fundamental right to marry); id. at 387 (rigorous judicial scrutiny appropriate when legislation "interfere[s] directly and substantially with the right to marry" and citizens "suffer a serious intrusion into their freedom of choice in an area in which we have held such freedom to be fundamental"); id. at 397 (Powell, J., concurring in judgment) ("the Court has yet to hold that all regulation touching upon marriage implicates a 'fundamental right' triggering the most exacting scrutiny"); id. at 403 (Stevens, J., concurring in judgment) (state laws "may 'significantly interfere with decisions to enter into the marriage relationship.' . . . That kind of interference, however, is not a sufficient reason for invalidating every law reflecting a legislative judgment that there are relevant differences . . . ."); Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 499 (1977) (plurality opinion) ("the usual judicial deference" is unwarranted when the government "undertakes . . . intrusive regulation" of a protected right).

[46] While the Court's explanation and application of this standard has sometimes been obscure, "the right in Roe v. Wade can be understood only by considering both the woman's interest and the nature of the State's interference with it. Roe did not declare an unqualified 'constitutional right to an abortion,' as the courts below seemed to think. Rather, the right protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference" with her right of privacy. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 473-74. See Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973) ("unduly restrict the woman's right of privacy"); id. at 193 ("impermissibly restricts the physician's right"); id. at 198 ("unduly restrictive of the patient's rights" and "substantial and irrational roadblocks"); id. at 199 ("unduly infringes on the physician's right to practice"); Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 66-67 (1976) ("unduly burdensome interference"); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 640 (1979) (opinion of Powell, J.) (the question the Court must answer is whether statute "does not unduly burden the right to seek an abortion"); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 314 (1980); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1976). See generally City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 452-53, 462 n.8 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting); Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 828-833 (1986) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The Missouri regulations at issue here do not substantially burden, but only collaterally impact, the abortion-childbirth decision. The broad-based claims of appellees are neither "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty . . . such that neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed," (Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325 (1937)), nor are they "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" (Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 (1977) (plurality opinion)). Cf. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 191-195 (1986). Surely the "right" to be free of legislative declarations that life begins at conception; the "right" to indirect public funding, assistance of public employees, and use of public facilities to facilitate abortions; the "right" to official encouragement and promotion of abortion; and the "right" to the cheapest, quickest late-pregnancy abortions possible (regardless of the risk to potentially viable unborn children) cannot — by any stretch of the imagination — be said to be inherent in the text of the Constitution, the traditions of the American people, or to be a pillar upon which democracy rests. See generally A. Cox, supra at 54.

Even if the Court concludes that the Missouri regulations have a significant enough impact upon protected interests to warrant some level of judicial scrutiny, the standard of review applied below was overly strict. The abortion right recognized in Roe "cannot be said to be absolute." 410 U.S. at 154. "[A] pregnant woman does not have an absolute constitutional right to an abortion on her demand." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 198. The almost-certainly-fatal strict scrutiny applied below, however, effectively creates such an absolute right. This result flies in the face of principled constitutional adjudication.

"A test so severe that legislation can rarely meet it should be imposed by the courts with deliberate restraint in view of the respect that properly should be accorded legislative judgments." Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 705 (1977) (Powell, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). See also Parts III and IV supra. Because of these concerns, legislation need ordinarily possess only a "rational basis" to pass muster under the due process clause. Compare Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) with West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937). This Court would do much to clarify and rationalize the task of federal (and state) courts by reversing the judgment of the court of appeals and indicating that the ordinary standard for due process review — i.e., the rational basis test — applies to abortion cases.[47] At a minimum, the Court should, in such cases, defer to legislative judgments at least to the extent appropriate under a "critical examination" standard of review, instead of applying the traditionally fatal standard of "strict scrutiny." Cf. Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 383 (1978) (applying a "critical examination" standard in a marriage privacy case).[48]

Finally, the courts below erred in failing to give sufficient attention and respect to the profound interests and values asserted by Missouri in support of its legislation.[49] If the history of abor-

---

[47] The standard of judicial review for abortion cases is a muddled morass. Apparently the constitutionality of abortion regulations might depend upon (1) the trimester of pregnancy regulated, Roe, 410 U.S. at 164-65, but see City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 434, (2) the current state of prevailing medical opinion, City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 431, 434, and (3) the legislative motive for enacting the legislation, Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 759. These and other ambiguities in this Court's abortion decisions have led the lower courts into an impossible swamp.

[48] Under this standard, state regulation passes constitutional muster if it "is supported by sufficiently important state interests and is closely tailored to effectuate only those interests." Zablocki, 434 U.S. at 388.

[49] Indeed, the decisions below once again render the federal judiciary vulnerable to the most oft-repeated criticism of substantive due process: that the doctrine permits judges to exceed the judicial function "when a statute offends their policy preferences." A. Cox, supra at 54.

tion regulation in Missouri and the United States teaches anything, it is that the resolution of the complex and controversial issues surrounding the abortion debate is not allocated to the judicial branch alone. Fullilove v. Klutznick, 448 U.S. 448, 472 (1980). Missouri's legislation is neither hasty, nor novel; rather it reflects more than a century of consistent statutory respect for a fundamental principle of western civilization: the protection and fostering of human life.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted.

TIMOTHY BELZ*
Belz & Beckemeier, P.C.
7777 Bonhomme, Suite 1806
St. Louis, MO 63105
(314) 863-0200

LYNN D. WARDLE
RICHARD G. WILKINS
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University
Provo, UT 84602
(801) 378-1211

Counsel of record*

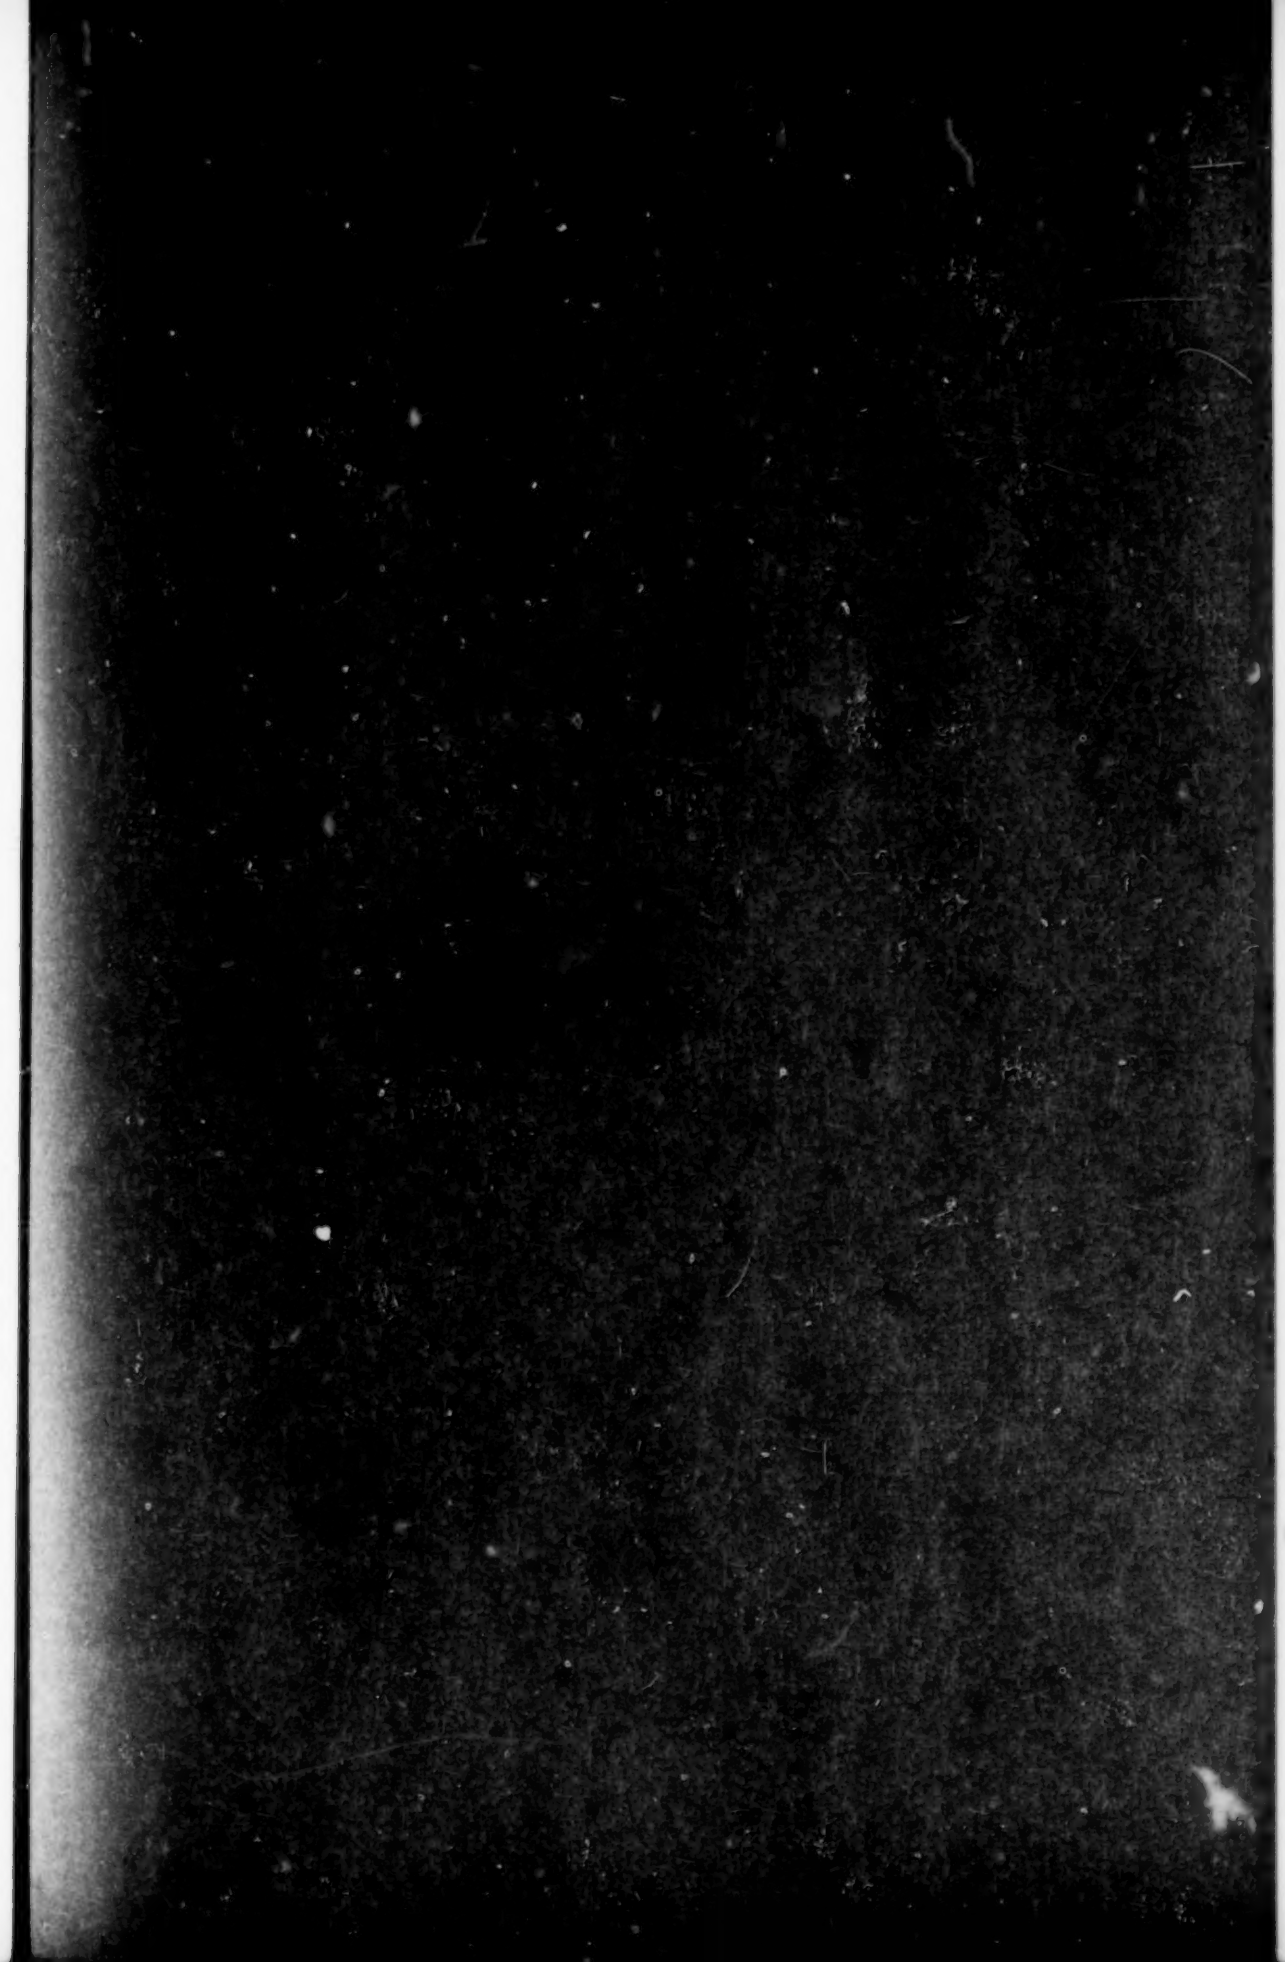
February 22, 1989



APPENDIX A

STATE STATUTES REGARDING ABORTION
(February 1989)

(Current Legislation Regulating, Restricting or Prohibiting Abortion in All 50 States)

A-1 Trimester/Health Regulations.

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16.010(a)(1) (1986) (Lic. phys. or surg.); § 18.16.010(a)(2) (1986) (Hosp. or approv. fac.); § 08.64.105 (1987) (State Med. Board to reg).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 96-2901 (1956) (Duty to promote life if born alive).

AR Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-9-302 (1987) (Clinics, etc. registered with and regulated by State Board of Health); § 5-61-302 (1987) (Lic. med. pract.; viol.); § 5-61-102 (1987) (Unlawful/drugs after quickening for abortion, or any other method); § 20-18-603 (1987) (Registration of term. of pregnancy).

CA Cal.Health & S.Code § 25951 (West 1984) (Authority to perform; requirements); § 25952 (West 1984) (Preg. res. from rape or incest); § 25953 (West 1984) (Med. Staff Committee); § 25954 (West 1984) (Def. mental health); § 25955.5 (West 1984) (System for Reporting); § 25955.9 (West 1984) (Rights of infant born alive); § 27491 (West 1984) (Death requiring inquiry).

CO Colo.Rev. Stat. § 18-6-101 (1986) (Lic. phys., hosp.); § 18-6-101(1)(6) (1986) (Less than 16 wks of gestation); § 18-6-101(4) (1987) (req. of hosp. board); § 25-1-666 (1982) (Sale of drug only through prescription).

DE Del.Code Ann., tit. 24, § 1790(a) (1987) (Lic. phys., hosp); § 1790(b)(1) (1987) (No more than 20 wks. gestation); § 1790(c) (1987) (Written report from hosp. board); § 1795 (1987) (Protect live birth).

nant patients, report); ch. 38 § 6 (West 1983) (Duty to report death).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 52.202 (1967) (County medical examiner invest. death by abortion); § 52.203 (1967) (Notice to Cty. Med. Ex.); § 333.2835 (1980) (Reports; abortion defined).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.413 (West 1989) (Recording, reporting); § 145.416 (West 1989) (Licensing and regulating); § 145.412(2) (West 1989) (Hosp. or abort. fac. after 1st trim.); § 145.412(1) (West 1989) (Phys.).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 97-3-3(1) (1972) (Duly lic., pract. phys.).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188:020 (Vernon 1983) (Physicians req.); § 188.025 (Vernon Supp. 1988) (Subseq. 16 wks, hosp. req.); § 188.052 (Vernon 1983) (Physician's report); § 188.055 (Vernon 1983) (Forms to be supplied to facilities and physicians).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-109(a) (1987) (Lic. physician); § 50-20-109(b) (1987) (After 3 mos., hosp.); § 50-20-110 (1987) (Reporting); § 50-20-109, 49-3-204 (1987) (Hosp. performing, licensing).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-335 (1985) (Lic. phys.); § 28-336 (1985) (Accepted med. proc.); § 28-343 (1985) Bureau Vital Statis. reporting form); § 28-345 (1985) (Dept. Health file).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 442.250(1)(a) (1987) (Lic. phys.); § 442-250(1)(b) (1987) (Within 24 wks); § 442.250(1)(c) (1987) (After 24th wk); § 442.250(2) (1987) (After 24th in hosp.); § 442.256 (1987) (Records); § 442.265 (1987) (Hosp. sub. vital stats); § 442.260 (1987) (Health div. adopt regulations).

NJ N.J.Stat.Ann. § 30:4D-6.1 (West 1980) (Performed in hosp., phys. submit report).

NM N.M.Stat.Ann. § 24-18-18 (1978) (Report of induced abortion).

NY N.Y. Penal Law § 125.05(3) (McKinney 1984) (Duly lic. phys., within 24 wks.).

NC N.C.Gen.Stat. § 14-45.1(a) (1986) (Phys. lic., first 20 wks in hosp. or facility); § 14-45.1(b) (1986) (After 20th wk.); § 14.45.1(c) (1986) (Statistical reports).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-04(1) (1981) (Lic. phys.); § 14-02.1-04(2) (1981) (1st 12 wks, but before viability, lic. hosp.); § 14.02.1-07 (1981) (Records req.); 14.02.1-07.1 (1981) (Forms).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 3701.341 (Anderson 1987) (Public health rules on abortion may be adopted by Public Health Council).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63 § 1-731(A) (West 1984) (Phys. lic.); § 1-731(B) (West 1984) (Subs. end of 1st trim., hosp.); § 1-733 (West 1984) (Self-induced abortion; advice of physician); § 1-737 (West 1984) (Hosp. which may perform); § 1-738 (West 1984) (Form to be completed); § 1-739 (West 1984) (Records).

OR Or.Rev.Stat. § 435-496 (1987) (Reports to Vital Stat. Unit).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18 §3207 (Purdon 1975) (Abortion facilities); § 3207 (Purdon 1975) (Reports); § 3209 (Purdon 1975) (Abortions after 1st trimester); § 3214 (Purdon 1975) (Reporting) (Held unconst.).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-20 (Law. Co-op 1976) (Legal Abortions 1st, 2nd, 3rd trimesters); § 44-41-60 (Law. Co-op 1976) (Reported); § 44-41-70 (Law. Co-op 1976) (Promulgation of rules for hosp.); H&E R 61-12 §§ 101 to 609 (Law. Co-op 1976) (Rules and regs for abortion clinics, minimum licensing standards).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-3 (1986) (First 12 wks); § 34-23A-4 (1986) (2nd 12 wks-place of performance); § 34-23A-5 (1986) (After 24 wks); § 34-23A-6 (1986) (Blood supplies and testing facilities); § 34-23A-19 (1986) (Reports req.).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 39-4-201(c)(1) (1982) (1st 3 mos.); § 39-4-201(c)(2) (1982) (After 3 mos. before viability; hosp.); § 39-4-203 (1982) (Records and reports).

TX Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. art. 4512.8 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Texas Abortion Fac. Reporting/Licensing Act).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-302 (Supp. 1988) (Phys., 90 days after must be in hosp.); § 76-7-306 (1953) (Concurrence of attending physician); § 76-7-309 (1953) (Pathologist's report); § 76-7-313 (Supp. 1988) (Physician's report); § 26-2-23(3) (1953) (Records kept).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-72 (1988) (When lawful 1st trim.); § 18.2-73 (1988) (When lawful 2nd trim.); § 18.2-74 (When lawful after 2nd trim.); § 18.2-74.1 (1988) (When nec. to save life of woman); § 82.1-264 (1985) (Reports).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.060 (1987) (Lawful termination); § 9.02.070 (1987) (Not quick, more than 4 mos.); § 9.02.070(c) (1987) (Accredited hospital); § 43.20A.625 (1982) (Records).

WV W.Va.Code § 16-2F-6 (1984) (Reporting reqs.).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 69.186 (West Supp. 1988) (Induced abortion reporting).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-107 (1988) (Forms for reporting); § 35-6-108 (1988) (Complications).

A-2 Viability and Post-Viability Regulations.

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16.010(d) (1962) (Abortion def. as termin. preg. nonviab. fetus).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 36-2301.01 (1956) (Abortion of viab. fetus; reqs.; def.).

AK Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-16-703 (1987) (Not pres. viab. until end of 25th wk.); § 20-16-705 (1987) (Prohib; exceptions); § 20-16-706 (1987) (Method or technique); § 20-16-707 (1987) (Attendance of addit. phys.).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(5) (West 1986) (Standard during viab.).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 16-12-141 (1988) (Viab. unborn right to life, annon. after).

HI Haw.Rev.Stat. tit. 25 § 453-16(b) (1985 repl.) (Abortion = termin. of unviab. fetus).

ID Idaho Code § 18-608(3) (1987) (3rd trim/viab; save fetus).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38 para. 81-25 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Preserv. of life and health of mother; viab. of fetus); para. 81-26 (Smith-Hurd 1975, as amended) (Preserv. life and health of viab. fetus); para. 81-26(2)(a) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Attending phys.) para. 81-32 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Evid. of life); ch. 110 para. 11-107.1 (1983) (Supp. 1988) (Injunct. relief father after viab.).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-2(3) (1986) (After viab.); § 35-1-58.5-7 (1986) (After viab.; 2nd phys; preserv. life; legal status).

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 707-10 (1978) (Preserv. life and health of viab. fetus).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 311.780 (1983) (Prohib. after viab.-exceptions).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 14:87.5 (1985) (intentional failure to sustain life of aborted viable infant); § 40:1299.35.4 (1989 supp.) (No abortion after viability; exceptions) (Additional phys. preserve life).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22 § 1598(4) (1964) (Supp. 1988) (Abortions after viab. are crim.).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.415 (West 1989) (Live fetus after abortion); § 145.412 subd. 3 (West 1989) (Unlawful when fetus potent. viab.; exceptions).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.029 (Supp. 1989) (Phys. determine viab.); § 188.030 (1982) (Abort. viable permitted).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-108 (1987) (Prot. of prem. infants born alive); § 50-20-109(c) (1987) (No abort. after viab.).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-329 (1985) (No abort. after viab.); § 28-330 (1985) (Abort. procedure prot. viab. child).

NY N.Y.Pub Health Law § 4164 (McKinney 1984) (Induced viab. births).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-04(3) (1981) (After viab, no abort. except in hosp.); § 14.021.03 (1981) (Preserving life of viab. child).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63 § 1-732 (West 1983) (Viable fetus-grounds to abort, procedure); § 1-734 (West 1983) (Preserve life, attending phys., live-born fetus).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3210 (Purdon 1975) (Abortion after viab.); § 3211 (Purdon 1975) (Viab.) (Held unconst.).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-302 (Supp. 1988) (After viab., when necessary for mother's health); § 76-7-307 (1953) (Med. proc. to save unborn child); § 76-7-308 (1953) (Med. skills).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 940.15(2) (West Supp. 1988) (No abortion after viab.); § 940.15(3) (West 1981) (Unless necess to pres. life of woman); § 940-15(4) (West 1981) (Then, in hosp.); § 940.15(6) (West 1981) (Method).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-102 (1988) (No abortion after viab.); § 35-6-103 (1988) (Viab. no affected by abortion); § 35-6-104 (1988) (Means of treatment).

A-3 Informed Consent.

DE Del.Code Ann. tit. 24, § 1794 (1974 rev.) (Consent of woman).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(4) (West 1986) (Informed consent); § 390.025(2) (West 1986) (Abortion referral and counseling agencies).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 15-11-12(a)(2) (1985) (Minor signs consent).

ID Idaho Code § 18-609 (1987) (Informed consent); § 18-610 (1987) (Refusal to consent by pregnant woman).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. Ch. 18 para. 81-26(b) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Inform woman of pain reliever for fetus); para. 81-54(2) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Informed consent of minor).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-68.6-2(1)(B) (1986) (Woman's consent filed).

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 707.8 (1978) (Nonconsensual termination).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. 12 § 311.726 (1983) (Vol, inf. consent); § 311.729 (1983) (Info on alternatives) (appear to be unconst).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.33(D) (1985) (Writ. consent); § 40:1299.35.6 (1985) (Informed consent).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1599 (Supp. 1988) (Informed consent 48 hr. waiting).

MD Md HG Code Ann. § 20-211 (1987) (Inform. before abortion, signed).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 112, § 12S (West 1983) (Written informed consent).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.412(4) (West 1989) (Informed consent).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.027 (Vernon 1982) (Informed consent); § 188.039 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Consent form).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-106 (1987) (Informed consent); § 50-20-104 (1987) (Disclosure of alternatives); § 50-20-106 (1987) (No req., no coercion).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-327 (1985) (Informed consent req.).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 442.252 (1987) (Physician certify); § 442.253 (1987) (Requirements).

NY N.Y. Penal Law § 125.05(3) (McKinney 1984) (Consent).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-03(1) (1981) (Full informed consent).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2919.12(a) (Anderson 1987) (Informed consent).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-738 (West 1983) (Consent).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3205 (Purdon 1975) (Informed consent) (Held unconst.); § 3208 (Purdon 1975) (Printed info.) (Held unconst.).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.7-2 (1985) (informed writ. consent req.); § 23-4.7-3 (1985) (Req. disclosures); § 23-4.7-5 (1985) (Consent form).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-20 (1976) (1st, 2nd, 3rd trim. woman's consent); § 44-41-30(a) (1976) (Persons from whom consent is req.).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-7 (1986) (Consent of patient); § 34-23A-10 (1986) (Info, counseling required); § 34-23A-10.1 (1986) (Statement of Informed Consent).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 39-4-201(c) (1982) (Woman's consent); § 39-4-202 (1982) (Consent req., info).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-305.5 (Supp. 1988) (Informed consent).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-76 (1988) (Informed consent req.).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.070 (1987) (Prior consent).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 146-78 (West Supp. 1988) (Informed consent).

A-4 Parental Participation Requirements.

AL Ala.Code § 26-21-1 (Supp. 1988) (Leg. Purp.); § 26.21-2 (Supp. 1988) (Def.); § 26-21-3 (Supp. 1988) (Writ./Unem. minor; notice to mother when preg. caused by father; writ. statement when eman. minor; waiver); § 26-21-4 (Supp. 1988) (Proc. for waiver); § 26-21-5 (Supp. 1988) (Not nec. in med. emerg.); § 26-21-7 (Supp. 1988) (Nonliab. of phys. for claims of nondisc. of info.); § 26-21-8 (Supp. 1988) (Confident.).

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16.010(a)(3) (1962) (Parental consent).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 36-2152(A) (1982) (Parental notice, unmarried or uneman. minor); § 36-2152(B)(2) (1982) (Notice req. if jud. ord.); § 36-2152(B)(3) (1982) (Emerg.); § 36-2153 (Supp. 1988) (Parental cons. waiver).

AK Ark.Stat.Ann. § 28-65-302 (1987) (Ct. approval before guardian can consent for incapacitated pers.).

CA Cal.Civ.Code 34.5 (West Supp. 1989) (Children and minors, consent); § Cal. Health & S Code § 25958 (West Supp. 1989) (Uneman. minor); Cal. cc Code § 2435 (West Supp. 1989) (Attorney in fact; auth. to consent).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 18-6-101(1) (1986) (Justified med. term. incl. parental/spousal consent reqs.).

DE Del.Code Ann. tit. 24, § 1790(b)(3) (1974) (2 parents if minor resides in same household; otherwise 1 parent).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(4)(a) (West 1986) (If under 18, parent or court (unmarried)); § 390.001(4)(b) (West 1986) (If married, husband gets notice).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 15-11-112(a)(1)(A) (1985) (Notification required (parental)); § 15-11-112(b) (1985) (Waiver provision).

ID Idaho Code § 18-609(6) (1987) (Unmarried minor, 24 hr. notice to parents).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. Ch. 38 para. 51-54(3) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Parental consent for minor); para. 81-64 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Notice req. uneman. minor); para. 81-65 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Waiver of notice); para. 81-66 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Med. emerg. excep.); para. 81-67 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Other excep.); ch. 40 para. 1015 (Supp. 1988) (No spousal, parental liab. without consent).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-2.5(a) (1986) (Uneman. minor, 1 parent); § 35-1-58.5-2.5(b) (1986) (Petition juv. cit.); § 35-1-58.5-2.5(c) (1986) (Waiver); § 35-1-58.5-2.5 (1986) (Notice req.).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. 12 § 311.732 (1983) (Writ. consent of minor, both parents); § 311.732 (1983) (Exceptions); §

311.733 (1983) (Severability); § 311.735 (1983) (Notice to spouse) (Atty gen. opp. unconst.).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.33(D) (1985) (Uneman. minor, writ. par. consent); § 40:1299.33(d) (1985) (Minor emanc. by marriage, spousal consent); § 40:1299.35.5 (1985) (Parental consent); § 40:1299.35.5 (1985) (Court permission).

ME Ma.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1597 (Supp. 1988) (Parental notif.) (Consent not req.).

MD Md. HG Code Ann. § 20-103(a) (1987) (Notice req. for unmarried minor); § 20-103(b) (1987) (Incomplete notice); § 20-103(c); (d) (1987) (Waiver; evidence of notice).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch 112, § 12S (West 1983) (Minor, unmarried, her consent & parents'); § 12S (West 1983) (Judge's order).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 144.353 subd. 2 (West 1989) (Parental notice for uneman. minor-48 hours); § 144.343 subd. 6 (West 1989) (Substitute notif.).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 41-41-53(1) (Supp. 1988) (Uneman. minor, writ. consent both parents); § 4-41-53(3) (Supp. 1988) (Petition for waiver).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.028.1(1) (Vernon 1989) (Writ. consent minor & 1 parent); § 188.028.1(2) (1989) (Eman. minor); § 188.028 (Vernon 1989) (Court order).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-107 (1987) (Writ. notice to spouse or parent req.) (Parent if under 18 and unmarried); § 41-1-105 (1987) (Self-consent of minors not applic. to abortion).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 38-347 (1985) (Minor, notice req., excepts, waiver).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 442.255 (1987) (Uneman. minor, notify parent); § 442.255 (1987) (Ct. order); § 442.2555 (1987) (Appeal ct. ruling).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-03(1) (1981) (Notif. to parents of uneman. minor-before viab.); § 14.02.1-03(2)(a) (1981) (Subsequent to viab.); § 14-02.1-03(2)(b) (1981) (Uneman. minor consent of parents); § 14.02.1-03.1 (1981) (Parental consent or judicial author.-limited to rights under constit.).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2919.12(B)(1)(a) (Anderson 1987) (Uneman. minor-24 hrs. notice to 1 par.; juv. ct.); § 2919.12(B)(1)(a) (i)-(iv); (Anderson 1987) (Uneman. minor notice to others besides parents).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-738 (West 1983) (Consent of parents); § 2602 (West 1983) (Right of self-consent (minor)).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3206 (Purdon 1975) (Parental consent).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.7-6 (1985) (Minors-parental consent); § 23-4.8-2 (1985) (Notify husband); § 23-4.8-3 (1985) (Exceptions).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-20(c) (1976) (3rd trim., husband's consent); § 44-41-30(b)(c) (1976) (Unmar. minor, incompetent).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-7 (1987) (Unmarried minor-consent of parents); § 34-23A-7 (1987) (Married minor, consent of husband).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 37-10-303 (Supp. 1988) (Uneman. minor, writ. consent parents); § 37-10-303 [effec. July 1, 1989] (Waiver); § 37-10-304 [effec. July 1, 1989] (Applicability-pseudonym); § 39-4-202(f) (1982 repl.)

(Notice req. uneman.); § 39-4-202(f)(1)(2) (1982 repl.) (Notice not req. if eman.).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-304 (1953) (Notify parents, husband if married).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-76 (1988) (When consent of parent req.).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.070(a) (1987) (Married, consent of husband); § 9.02.070(a) (1987) (Unmarried, consent of legal guardian).

WV W.Va.Code § 16-2F-3 (1984) (Parental notice req. uneman. minors; waiver); § 16-2F-4 (1984) (Waiver of notice; petition); § 16-2F-5 (1984) (Emergency except.).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 146.78(5) (West Supp. 1988) (Parental notice for minor).

A-5 Spousal Participation Requirements.

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 18-6-101(1) (1986) (Justified med. termin. incl. parental/spousal consent reqs.)

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(4)(b) (West 1986) (If married, husband gets notice).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. Ch 400 para. 1015 (Supp. 1988) (No spousal, parental liability without consent).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann 12 § 311.735 (1983) (Notice to spouse) (Atty gen. opp. unconst.).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.33(d) (1985) (Minor emanc. by marriage, spousal consent).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-107 (1987) (Writ. notice to spouse or parent req.) (Parent if under 18 and unmarried).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.8-2 (1985) (Notify husband); § 23-4.8-3 (1985) (Exceptions).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-20(c) (1976) (3rd trim., husband's consent).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-7 (1987) (Married minor, consent of husband).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-304 (1953) (Notify parents, husband if married).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.070(a) (1987) (Married, consent of husband).

A-6 Conscience Protection Provisions.

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16.010(b) (1962) (No req. for hosp. or phys. to partic.).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 36-2151 (1973) (Right to refuse).

AR Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-16-601 (1987) (Refusal to perform, partic., consent, or submit) (Immunity from civil liability).

CA Cal. Health & S Code § 25955 (West Supp. 1989) (Refusal to partic.).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 18-6-104 (1986) (Failure to comply-no discipline).

DE Del.Code.Ann. tit. 24, § 1791 (1974) (Refusal to perform).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(8) (West 1986) (Refusal to partic.).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 16-12-142 (1988) (No requirement for phys. or hosp.).

HI Haw.Rev.Stat. 25 § 453-16(d) (1985) (No partic. required).

ID Idaho Code § 18-612 (1987) (Refusal to perform) (If Roe overruled).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-33 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Conscientious objections); ch. 111 ½, para. 5201 (Smith-Hurd 1988) (Refusal to recommend or participate); para. 1503 et seq. (Smith-Hurd 1988) (Right of Conscience Act).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 16-10-3-1 (1986) (No req. priv. denom. hosp.); § 16-10-3-2 (1986) (Performance not req. (phys.)); § 16-10-1.5-8 (1986) (Hosp. not req.).

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 146.1 (1978) (Liab. of persons); § 146.2 (1978) (Liab. of hosp.).

KS Kan.Stat.Ann. § 65-444 (1981) (Refusal to permit, hosp.); § 65-443 (1981) (Perf. not req.).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 311.800(3) (1983) (No priv. hosp. req.); § 311.800 (4) (1983) (No phys., staff req.).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.31 (1985); § 40:1299.32 (1985) (Discrim. against hosp.)

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1591 (Supp. 1985) (Immunity and emp. protection); § 1592 (Supp. 1988) (Discrim. for refusal).

MD Md HG Code Ann. § 20-214 (1987) (Partic. not req. by doctors, hosp., patients).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch 112, § 121 (West 1983) (Refusal to partic.); ch 272, § 21B (West 1983) (Priv. hosp.).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. §§ 333.20181, 333.20182 (West 1967) (Hosp. not req., phys., staff, not req.); § 333.20183 (West 1967) (Refusal to give advice); § 333.20184 (West 1967) (Discrimination).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.414 (West 1989) (Abortion not mandatory); § 145.42 (West 1989) (Nonliab. for refusal to perform.)

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.105 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Discrim. by emp.); § 188.110 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Discrim. by colleges); § 197.032 (1982) (Hosp. & med. person may refuse).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-111 (1987) (Right to refuse to partic.).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-337 (1985) (Not req. to admit in hosp., clinic); § 28-338 (1985) (Not req. to perform); §§ 28-339, 28-340, 28-341 (1985) (Discrimination against).

NJ N.J.Stat.Ann. § 2A:65A-1 (West 1980) (No person req.); § 2A:65A-2 (West 1980) (No hosp. req.); § 2A:65A-3 (West 1980) (Nonliability).

NM N.M.Stat.Ann. § 30-5-2 (1978) (Persons and instit. exempt).

NY N.Y. Civ. Rights Law § 79-i (McKinney 1984) (Discrimin. against person refusing to perform).

NC N.C.Gen.Stat. § 14-45.1(e) (1986) (No req. to partic.); § 14-45.1(f) (1986) (No req. hosp.).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 23-16-14 (1978) (Partic. not mand.).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-741 (West 1983) (Refusal to perform).

OR Or.Rev.Stat. § 435.475 (1987) (Refusal to admit); § 435.485 (1987) (Med. persons not req. to partic.).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3202(d) (Purdon 1975) (Right of conscience); tit. 43, § 955.2 (Purdon Supp. 1988) (Hosp. immun. from req. to perform).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-17-11 (1985) (Protection of non-partic.).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-40 (1976) (Certain hosp. or clinics may refuse); § 44-41-50 (1976) (Med. empl. not req.).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-11 (1986) (Counselor not liab.); § 34-23A-12 (1986) (No liab. refusal to perform); § 34-23A-13 (1986) (Discrim.) § 34-23A-14 (1986) (Hosp. not req.).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 39-4-204 (1982) (Right to refuse to perform); § 39-4-205 (1982) (Rights of hosp. to refuse).

TX Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. art. 4512.7 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (right not to perform).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-306 (1953) (Physician, hosp. emp., hosp. not req. to partic.).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-75 (1988) (Conscience clause).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.080 (1987) (Objecting to partic.).

WV W.Va.Code § 16-2F-7 (1984) (Art. does not req. performance).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 448.03(5) (West 1987) (Civil nonliability).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-105 (1988) (Priv. inst. not req., no liab. for refusal); § 35-6-106 (1988) (Persons not req.).

A-7 Public Funding, Participation Restrictions.

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 35-196.02 (1956) (Limit on public funds); § 15-1630 (1981) (Abortion at educ. fac. prohib.).

CA Cal. Health & S Code § 25955.3 (West 1984) (No loss of priv. or public benefits).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. §§ 26-4-105.5, 26-15-104.5, Colo.Const., art. V, § 50, (1982 repl. vol.) (No public funds for abortion-exception).

ID Idaho Code §§ 41-2142, 41-2210A (Supp. 1988) (Insurance-limitation elective abortions); § 56-209c (Supp. 1988) (Denial of payments for abortions).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 23, para. 5-5 (1988) (No med. payment for abortions from Dept. of Med. Assist.); para. 6-1 (1988) (No financial aid); para. 7-1 (1988) (No local aid).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-2.5(c) (1986) (County pays for minor's atty. in abortion proceeding); § 16-10-3-3 (1986) (State funding of abort. prohib.).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. 12 § 311.715 (1983 repl.) (Use public funds prohib.); § 311.810 (1983) (No denial of govt. assist. for accept or reject. of abortion).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.34 (Supp. 1989) (No state emp. may counsel abortion); § 40:1299.34.5 (Supp. 1989) (No use public funds).

MD Md.HG Code Ann. § 20-208 (comment) (1987) (State funding not req.).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch 29, § 208 (West 1983) (No payment for approp. for abortion); ch 258A, § 3 (West 1983) (No emergency rape funds for abortion or abortion counseling).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.925 (West 1989) (Family planning grants, not for abortion); § 261.28 (West 1989) (Subsidy for abortions prohibited); § 393.07 subd. 11 (West 1989) (No funding (welfare)); § 2568.40 (West 1989) (Subsidy prohibited).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.205 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Use pub. funds prohibited); § 188.210 (Vernon Supp. 1989)

(Public emp. prohib.); § 188.215 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Public fac. prohib.); § 208.152(14) (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Fam. planning services, no payment for abortions).

NJ N.J.Stat.Ann. § 30:4D-6.1 (West 1980) (Medicaid funds not used).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.3-01 (1981) (Use public funds restricted); § 14.02.3-02 (1981) (Use for fam. planning prohibited); § 14.02.3-04 (1981) (Abortion in govt. hospitals).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 5101.55(B) (Anderson 1987) (No loss public assist. benefits); § 5101.55(C) (Anderson 1987) (State or public funds not used).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3215 (Purdon 1975) (Publicly owned facilities, public officials, public funds); tit. 62, § 453 (Purdon Supp. 1988) (Exp. of public funds for abort. limited).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 28-6-4.5 (1984) (Public funds not to be used).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-322 (Supp. 1988) (Public funds restric.) § 76-7-323 (Supp. 1988) (Public funds for support entities restricted); § 16-18-4 (Supp. 1988) (No Medicaid).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 32.1-92.2 (1988) (Funding when physical deformity or mental deficiency in fetus); § 32.1-92.1 (1985) (Funding when preg. resulted from rape, or incest).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 46.24 (West 1987) (Assist. to minors concerning abortion notification); § 46.245 (West 1987) [from county] (Subsidy of abort. prohibited); § 59.07(136) (West 1988) (Municipal subsidy restricted); § 66.04(1)(m) (West Supp. 1988) (Municipal subsidy restricted).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-117 (1988) (Use of appropriated funds, exception).

A-8 Private Advertising, Promotion, Speech Restrictions.

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 13-3605 (1956) (Advert., pun.).

CA Cal.Bus&P Code § 601 (West 1974) (Advert. felony).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 25-1-665 (1982) (Unlawful to sell or advert. abortion drugs, substances).

CT Conn.Gen.Stat.Ann. § 53-31 (1958 rev.) (Fine for encouraging abortion (i.e. publ. advert., lecture)).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 797.02 (West Supp. 1988) (Advert. regs; penalty).

ID Idaho Code § 18-603 (1987) (Advert.); § 18-607 (1987) (Unauthorized sales).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 14:87.4 (1985) (Abortion advert.).

MD Md. HG Code Ann. § 20-201 (1987) (No advert. abortion referral service).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch 272, § 20 (West 1983) (Advert.).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 750.15 (West 1968) (Advert., sell); § 750.40 (West 1968) (Publications); § 750.34 (West 1968) (Immoral advertis.).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 617.25 (West 1986) (Indecent articles and information); § 617.26 (West 1986) (Mailing, carrying).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 97-3-5 (1972) (Advert., sale or gift).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-109(4) (1987) (No soliciting, advert.).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 202.200 (1987) (Advert. goods and serv. to prod. miscarriage).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-06 (1981) (Soliciting).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-736 (West 1983) (Advert. counseling).

VT Vt.Stat.Ann. tit. 13, § 104 (Supp. 1988) (Advert.).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-76.1 (1988) (Encouraging, promoting prohibited).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 943.145 (West Supp. 1988) (Crim. trespass to medical facility).

WY Wyo.Stat § 35-6-116 (1988) (Advert.).

A-9 Legislature/Public Policy, Purpose, Declaration.

AL Ala.Code § 26-21-1 (Supp. 1988) (Legis. purpose).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. §§ 36-340, 36-341 (1956) (Authority to release records).

AK Ark.Stat.Ann § 20-16-701 (1987) (Legis. intent. reg. cons. w/Sup. Ct.).

CT Conn.Gen.Stat.Ann. § 53-31a (1958) (Abortion or miscarriage public policy); § 53-31b (1958) (Severability).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-21 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Leg. intent); para. 81-51 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Leg. intent, parental consent); para. 81-62 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Leg. Purpose) (Notice).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 16-10-3-4 (1986) (Childbirth preferred over abortion).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. 12 § 311.710 (1983) (Legis. finding).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.35.0 (Supp. 1989) (Legis. intent).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1598 (Supp. 1988) (Abortions).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 6 § 15FF (West 1983) (Pro-life month).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 333.9131 (West 1968) (Clinical abortions not family planning).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 393.07 subd. 11 (West Supp. 1989) (Public policy: childbirth over abortion); § 256B.011 (West Supp. 1981) (Policy for childbirth and abortion funding).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.010 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Intent of gen. assem.); § 1.205 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Life begins at concep.).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-102 (1987) (Statement of purpose); § 50-20-103 (1987) (Legis. intent).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-325 (1985) (Abortion; decl. of purpose).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-01 (1981) (Purpose).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3202 (Purdon 1975) (Legis. intent).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.8-1 (1985) (Decl. of purpose for spousal notice); Const. R.I., Art. I, § 2 (No right granted).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 37-10-301 (Supp. 1988) (Legis. intent for parental consent).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 78-11-23 (Supp. 1988) (Right to life policy).

WV W.Va.Code § 16-2F-1 (1984) (Legis. findings and intent) (parental notice).

A-10 Disposition of Aborted Fetuses Regulations.

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 36-329 (1956) (Fetal death regis.); § 36-330 (1956) (Delayed regis.); § 36-331 (1956) (Disposal).

AK Ark.Stat.Ann. §§ 20-17-802(a), 20-17-801 (1987) (Dispose as other tissue).

CA Cal. Health & S Code § 25957 (West 1984) (Disposal, storage).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(7) (West 1986) (Fetal remains).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 16-12-141.1 (1988) (Disposal of fetus).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 40:1299.35.14 (1985) (Disposal of remains) (Held unconst. in 1986).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.1621 (West 1989) (Disposition of fetuses).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 41-39-1 (1972) (Disposal of fetus).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-105 (1987) (Disposition).

NY N.Y. Pub Health Law §§ 4164(4), 4162 (McKinney 1984) (Disposal of body).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-09 (1981) (Humane disposal).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-109 (1988) (Disposal).

A-11 Fetal Experimentation and Transplantation Restrictions.

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 36-2302 (1956) (Exper. prohib.); § 36-2301(B) (1956) (Records must be released which under invest.).

AK Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-17-802(b)(1) (1987) (No exper. if born alive); § 20-17-802(b)(2) (1987) (Or dead, without mother's permission); § 20-17-802(c), (d) (1987) (No sale, exchange, possession).

CA Cal. Health & S. Code § 25956 (West 1984) (Research restric., fetal remains); § 25957 (West 1984) (Fetal remains, exper.).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(6) (West 1986) (Exper. prohib; exceptions).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-26(7) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (No sale or experi.); para. 81-31 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Analysis of fetal tissue); para. 81-32.1 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (OK if fetal tissue not result of abortion).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-6 (1986) (Exper., transport, prohibited; class A misdemeanor).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 436.026 (Michie/Bobbs-Merrill 19____) (Sale, transport, of viab. aborted child for exper. prohib.).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 14:87.2 (1985) (Human exper. live fetus); § 40:1299.35, 13 (1985) (Exper.).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1593 (Supp. 1988) (Sale or use of fetuses).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 112, § 12J(a)I, II, III (West 1983) (Exper. prohibited); § 12J(a)IV (West 1983) (No sale or transfer of fetus).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. §§ 333.2685, 333.2686, 333.2687, 333.2685, 333.2619 (West 1968) (Human research); § 333.2690 (West 1968) (Sale, transfer).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.422 (West 1989) (Exper. or sale).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. §§ 188.036, 188.037 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Prohibited abortions).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-108(3) (1987) (No exper. of prem. infant born alive).

NE Neb. Rev. Stat. § 28-342 (1985) (Aborted Child); § 28-346 (1985) (Exper.).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 451.015 (1987) (Commer. use prohib.).

NM N.M.Stat.Ann. §§ 24-9A-1 to 24-9A-7 (1978) (Maternal, Fetal, and Infant Exper. Act).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14.02.2-01 (1981) (Exper. live fetus); § 14.02.2-02 (1981) (Exper. dead fetus).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2919.14 (Anderson 1987) (Abortion trafficking).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-735 (West 1983) (Sale, exper.).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3216 (Purdon 1975) (Fetal exper.).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 11-54-1 (1981) (Exper.).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-17 (1986) (Exper. consent req.).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 39-4-208 (1982) (Research, etc.).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-310 (1953) (Exper. prohib.); § 76-7-311 (1953) (Selling/buying prohib.).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-115 (1988) (Penalty for giving away live/viab. for exper.).

A-12 Feticide Restrictions.

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 707.7 (1978) (Feticide = class C felony; attempted = class D felony).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1594 (Supp. 1988) (Failure to pres. life, subject to homicide laws).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 750.322 (West 1968) (Wilfull killing of unborn quick child); § 750.323 (West 1968) (Death of quick child, medicine).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 97-3-37 (1972) (Homicide-killing of unborn quick child).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3212 (Purdon 1975) (Infanticide).

A-13 Wrongful Birth/Life/Death Regulation.

CA Cal. CC Code § 43.6 (West 1982) (Immunity from liab.).

ID Idaho Code § 5-334 (1977 as amended) (Act or omission prev. abort. not actionable).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 70, para. 2.2 (1988) (No wrongful death action).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 34-1-11 (1986) (Actions prohib.).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1594 (Supp. 1988) (Failure to pres. life subject to wrongful death).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.424 (West 1989) (Prohib. tort actions).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.130 (1989) (No cause of action).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 442.270 (1987) (Failure to exercise reasonable care to preserve life = wrongful death).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 32-03-43 (Supp. 1987) (Prohib.).

SD S.D.Codified Law Ann. §§ 21-55-1, 21-55-2, 21-55-3, 21-55-4 (1987) (Prohib.).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 78-11-24 (Supp. 1988) (Act or omission preventing abortion not actionable).

A-14 General Criminal Prohibitions.

AL Ala.Code § 26-21-6 (Supp. 1988) (Penalties for violating consent reqs. Class A misd.); § 12A-13-7 (1975) (Inducing abortion; fine and prison).

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16010(c) (1962) (Knowing violation-fine, impris. or both).

AZ Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 13-3603 (1956) (Def.; punish.); § 13-3604 (1956) (Woman solicits, punish.); § 36-2303 (1956) (Violations:Class B misd.); § 36-2152(C) (1982) (Class 1 misd. if viol. sec.).

AR Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-16-704 (1987) (Class A misd.); § 5-61-101 (1987) (Class D Felony; violat.); § 5-61-102 (1987) (Fine and imprison; viol. of); § 20-17-802(f) (1987) (Class A misd. for viol. of).

CA Cal.Pen.Code § 274 (West 1988) (Supplying or admin. abortifacient; exception, punishment); § 275 (West 1988) (Solicit or submit to abortifacient; exception, punishment); § 276 (West 1988) (Soliciting use; except., punish; proof req.); § 1108 (West 1985) (Abortion-corroboration of testimony); § 187 (West 1988) (Murder defined; death of fetus); § 11413 (West Supp. 1989) (Terrorism, arson, pro-anti-abortion facilities); § 12022.9 (West Supp. 1989) (Termin. of preg. w/o consent).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 18-6-105 (1986) (Distributing abortifacients class 1 misd.); § 18-6-102 (1986) (Elements of offense of crim. abortion); § 18-6-103 (1986) (Pretended crim. abort.); § 15-1-667 (1986) (Penalty for sale of drugs (fine)).

CT Conn.Gen.Stat.Ann. § 53-29 (1958) (Attempt to procure abortion, fine or imprisonment); § 53-31 (1958) (Encouraging abortion Class D felony); § 53-30 (1958) (Woman may be fined or imprisoned).

DE Del.Code Ann. tit. 11, § 651 (1974) (Abortion, class D felony); § 652 (1974) (Self-Abortion, class A misd.); § 653 (1974) (Issuing abortional articles, class B misd.); tit. 24, § 1795 (1974) (Class A misd. if violate); § 1766(b) (1974) (Guilty of felony if violate chapter 24).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(10)(a) (West 1986) (Penalties for violations felony of 3rd degree); § 390.001(10)(b) (West 1986) (If result in death of woman, 2nd degree); § 390.025 (West 1986) (Penalty 1st degree misd. for viol.); § 797.03 (West Supp. 1988) (Misd. 2nd degree for wilfull viol.).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 16-12-140 (1988) (Criminal abortion, penalty); § 16-12-143 (1988) (Failure to file reports a misd.); § 15-11-118 (1985) (Violations of parental notification, misd.).

HI Haw.Rev.Stat. 25 § 453-16(c) (1985) (Knowing violation fine, imprisonment).

ID Idaho Code § 18-605 (1987) (Unlawful-procurement-felony); § 18-606 (1987) (Unlawful-accomplice a felony); § 18-607 (1987) (Abortifacients-unlawful sale = misd.); § 18-614 (1987) (Abortion-procurement) (If Roe overruled); § 18-615 (Abortion-submission to) (If Roe overruled).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-23.1 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violation, class 2 felony); para. 81-25 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violation, class 2 felony); para. 81-26 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violation, class 3 felony); para. 81-31 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violation, class A misd.); para. 81-31.1 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Abortion referral fee = class 4 felony); para. 81-31 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violations-unprof. cond.); para. 81-55 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Violations); para. 81-68 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Penalty).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-4 (1986) (Class C felony; class A misd.).

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 707.7 (1978) (Not licensed = class C felony); § 707.8 (1978) (Nonconsensual term.); § 707.9 (1978) (Murder of fetus aborted alive).

KS Kan.Stat.Ann. § 21-3407 (1981) (Criminal Abortion-class D felony).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 436.026 (Michie/Bobbs-Merrill 1985) (Imprisonment for viol. of); § 311.990 (1983) (misd. to viol. prov. of).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 14:87 (1985) (Imprisonment for com. abortion); § 14:87.1 (1985) (Killing a child during del.); § 14:87.2 (1985) (Human exper.); § 14:87.4 (1985) (Advert.);§ 14:87.5 (1985) (Aborted viab. fetus); § 14.88 (1985) (Distrib. of abortifacients); § 40:1299.25.18 (1985) (Penalties); § 40:66 (1985) (failure to complete form, misd.); CC&P § 465 (Indictment form).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1593 (Supp. 1988) (Punishment, sale or use fetuses); § 1593(4) (Supp. 1988) (Abortions after viab.)

MD Md. HG Code Ann. § 20-206 (1987) (Penalty for abortion referral services viol.); § 20-21 (1988 amendment) (Unlawful acts); § 20-211(e) (1987) (Penalty for not giving info).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 112, § 12J(a)V (West 1983) (Viol, imprisonment); § 12J(a)VI, VII (West 1983) (Defense); § 12N (West 1983) (Punishment for violation of 12L or 12M); § 12T (West 1983) (Viol. of 120 to 12R, punish.); ch. 272, § 20 (West 1983) (Penalty for advert.); § 21 (West 1983) (Instruments for abortion); § 19 (West 1983) (Procuring miscarriage); ch. 277, § 79 (West 1983) (Indictment, form).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 750.14 (West 1968) (Intent to procure); § 750.15 (West 1968) (Drugs, medicine); §

750.40 (West 1968) (Publications); § 750.34 (West 1968) (Immoral advert.); § 750.322 (West 1968) (Wilfull killing unborn, quick); § 750.323 (West 1968) (Death of quick child, medicine); §§ 750.14, 767.72 (West 1968) (Manslaughter); § 750.149 (West 1968) (Compounding offenses); § 333.2691 (West 1968) (Violations of §§ 333.2685 to 333.2690); § 333.20199(2) (West 1968) (Violations of §§ 333.20181 to 333.20184).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.412 subd. 4 (West 1989) (Criminal Acts); § 144.343 subd. 5 (West 1989) (Penalty); § 617.20 (West 1986) (Drugs to produce miscarriage); § 617.26 (West 1986) (Mailing and carrying obscene matter); § 617.25 (West 1986) (Indecent articles and info.).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 41-41-61 (Supp. 1988) (Penalties for viol. of confidence); § 97-3-3 (1972) (Abortion); § 97-3-5 (1972) (Advertisement, etc.).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 188.035 (Vernon 1982) (Death of child aborted alive); § 188.070 (Vernon 1982) (Breach of confid.); § 188.075 (Vernon 1982) (Viol. of sections 188.010 to 188.085); § 188.080 (Supp. Vernon 1987) (Abortion other than phys.); § 188.200 et seq. (Supp. Vernon 1989) (Public crimes).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-106 (1987) (Viol. of is misd.); § 50-20-108 (1987) (Protection of prem. infants born alive-felony); § 50-20-109 (1987) (Viol. of (1)(2)(3) felony, of (4) misd.); §§ 50-20-112, 50-20-110 (1987) (Penalties).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-328 (1985) (Abortion w/o inform. consent-class II misd.); § 28-332 (1985) (Viol. penalty); § 28-335 (1985) (Lic. phys.); § 28-336 (1985) (Ac. med.); § 28-339 (1985) (Discrim.); §§ 28-342, 346 (1985) (Exper.); § 28-344 (1985) (Reporting form viol.); § 28-706 (1985) (Criminal nonsupport).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 202.200 (1987) (Advert., misem.); § 201.120 (1987) (Abort., punishment); § 201.130 (1987) (Selling drugs/miscarriage); § 200.220 (1987) (Woman taking drugs to termin. preg.); § 442.260 (1987) (Criminal penalty).

NH N.H.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 585.12 (1986) (Attempt to procure miscarriage); § 585.13 (1986) (Intent to destroy quick child); § 585.14 (1986) (Causing death to woman); § 630.1(N) (1986) (Fetus not included under capital murder statute).

NM N.M.Stat.Ann. § 24-9A-6 (1978) (Penalty); § 30-5-3 (1978) (Criminal abortion).

NY N.Y. Penal Law § 125.00 (McKinney 1984) (Homicide defined); § 125.45 (McKinney 1984) (Abortion in 1st degree); § 125.50 (McKinney 1984) (Self-abortion in 2nd degree); § 125.55 (McKinney 1984) (Self-abortion in 1st degree); § 125.60 (McKinney 1984) (Issuing abortional articles); § 125.15(2) (McKinney 1984) (Manslaughter 2nd degree); § 125.20(3) (McKinney 1984) (Manslaughter 1st degree); § 125.40 (McKinney 1984) (Abortion in 2nd degree); § 265.00 (McKinney 1984) (''Serious offense''); N.Y. CPL Law § 700.05 (McKinney 1984) (''Designated offense'').

NC N.C.Gen.Stat. § 14-44 (1986) (Using drugs or instruments to destroy unborn child); § 14-45 (1986) (Using drugs or instr. to produce miscarriage, injure preg. woman); § 14-46 (1986) (Concealing birth of child).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-04(4), (5) (1981) (Penalties) § 14-02.1-05 (1981) (Penalty); § 14-02.1-08 (1981) (Protect. viable fetus born alive); § 14-02.1-10 (1981) (Concealing-penalty); § 14-02.1-11 (1981) (General penalty); § 14-02.3-05 (1981) (Penalty); § 12.1017.1-02 (Supp. 1987) (Murder unborn child); § 12.1-17.1-03

(1987) (Manslaughter unborn); § 12.1-17.1-04 (1987) (Negl. homicide unborn); § 12.1-17.1-05 (1987) (Aggr. Assault unborn); § 12.1-17.1-06 (1987) (Assault unborn); § 12.1-17.1-07 (1987) (Exceptions).

OH Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2919.12(D) (Anderson 1987) (Unlawful abortion); § 2919.13 (Anderson 1987) (Abortion manslaughter).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 21, § 861 (West 1983) (Procuring an abortion); § 862 (West 1983) (Submitting to, soliciting); § 863 (West 1983) (Concealing stillbirth, death); tit. 63, § 1-731(A) (West 1983) (Persons who perform-viol., penalties); § 1-732(F) (West 1983) (Homicide); tit. 21, § 713 (West 1983) (Killing unborn quick child-manslaughter); § 714 (West 1983) (Procuring destruction of unborn child).

OR Or.Rev.Stat. § 435.990 (1987) (Penalties).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3213 (Purdon 1975) (Prohibited acts); § 3218 (Purdon 1975) (Criminal penalties).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.8-4 (1985) (Penalties); § 11-54-2 (1981) (Penalties); § 11-9-18 (1981) (Manslaughter).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-80 (1976) (Performing, soliciting unlawful abortion); § 16-1-10 (Supp. 1988) (Felony).

SD S.C.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-10.2 (1986) (St. informed consent-misd.); § 22-17-5 (1988) (Unau. abort. felony); § 22-17-6 (1988) (Int. killing of fetus by injury to mother).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. §37-10-304 (Supp. 1988) (Violations) [Effec. 7-1-89]; § 39-4-201 (1982) (Criminal abortions); § 39-4-206 (1982) (Violation = felony); 39-4-208 (1982) (Violation = felony).

TX Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. art. § 4512.5 (Vernon 1976) (Destroying unborn child).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-314 (1953) (Violations); § 76-7-324 (1953) (Violation of restriction of public funds).

VT Vt.Stat.Ann. tit. 13 § 101 (1974) (Definition and punishment); § 103 (1974) (Joining with murder indictment).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 18.2-71 (1988) (Penalty).

WA Wash.Rev.Code Ann. § 9.02.010 (1987) (Punishment); § 9.02.020 (1987) (Preg. women attempt abortion); § 9.02.030 (1987) (Selling drugs, etc.); § 9.02.050 (1987) (Concealing birth).

WV W.Va.Code § 61-2-8 (1988) (Abortion, penalty); § 16-2F-8 (1984) (Penalties); § 61-2-8 (1988) (Homicide, result of abortion); § 62-9-5 (1988) (Form of indictment).

WI Wis.Stat.Ann. § 940.04 (West 1981) (Abortion); § 940.13 (Supp. West 1988) (Abortion exception); § 940.15 (Supp. West 1988) (Abortion); § 943.145 (Supp. 1988) (Criminal trespass).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-110 (1988) (Penalty for viol.); § 35-6-111 (1988) (Penalty for person other than phys. who performs abortion); § 35-6-112 (1988) (Penalty for using other means); § 35-6-113 (1988) (Penalty)

A-15 Miscellaneous Regulations.

AK Alaska Stat. § 18.16.010(c)(4) (Supp. 1988) (Domicile-30 days).

AR Ark.Stat.Ann. § 20-16-702 (1987) (Definitions).

CA Cal.Food&A.Code § 13121-13130 (West 1986) (Birth Defect Prevention Act) (prev. pesticide induced abortions); Chapter 11: Health&S, § 464 (West 1979) ("Therapeutic Abortion Act," lists of fam. plan. clinics); Cal.Welf&I.Code § 220,1773 (West 1984) (No restr. jud. fac. inmates); Cal.Bus&PCode § 2746.6 (West Supp. 1989) (Discip. to nurse-midwife for aiding); § 2761, 2878 (West Supp. 1989) (For nurses); § 2660 (West Supp. 1989) (For physical therapists); § 4521 (West Supp. 1989) (Psychiatric technicians); Cal.Health&S.Code § 429.50 (West 1979) (State Dept. of Health Services may compile data for study); Cal.Pen.Code § 3405, 4028 (West Supp. 1989) (No restr. prisoners).

CO Colo.Rev.Stat. § 12-36-117(b) (1985) (Unprof. conduct = aiding in crim. abortion).

DE Del.Code Ann. tit. 11, § 654 (1974) (Defined); § 222(22) (1974) (Therapeutic abortion defined); tit. 24, § 1792 (1974) (No person shall assist in unlawful abortion); § 1793 (1974) (Residency req.).

FL Fla.Stat.Ann. § 390.001(1) (West 1986) (Definitions); § 390.026 (West 1988 Supp.) (Internal risk management program); § 406.11(a)(a)(9) (West 1986) (Exam by med. examin. when crim. abortion); § 462.14(z) (West Supp. 1988) (Revocation of naturopathy license for unlawful term. of preg.).

GA Ga.Code Ann. § 43-34-37(8) (1988) (Discipl. phys. crim. abortion); § 15-11-111 (1985) (Def.); § 15-11-113 (1985) (Time and notice of waiver hearing); § 15-11-114 (1985) (Conduct of hearing, appeal); § 15-11-115 (1985) (Applicability to nonresident minors); § 15-11-117 (1985) (Immunity to healthcare provider in good faith); § 15-11-110 (1985) (Parental Notif. Act).

HI Haw.Rev.Stat. 25 § 453-8 (1985) (Revocation of license to proc. medicine); § 453-16(a)(3) (1985) (Domicile req.) (Atty gen. says unconst.).

ID Idaho Code § 18-604 (1987) (Definitions); § 18-611 (1987) (Physicians may accept representations); § 18-613 (1987) (Statutory changes in event Roe is overruled); [18-604 to 18-611 repealed; 18-612 to 18-615 effective]; § 19-2115 (1987) (Abort.-corrobor. testimony); § 54-1814 (1987) (Grounds for medical discipline); § 39-241(c) (1987) (Def. "fetal death"); § 32-102 (1987) (Unborn child as existing person).

IL Ill.Ann.Stat. ch. 38, para. 81-22 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Definitions); para. 81-26(8) (Smith-Hurd 1975) (No abort. based on sex of fetus); para. 81-30.1 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Viol., revocation of license); para. 81-34 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Severability); para. 81-35 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Short title); para. 81-52 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Title of Act); para. 81-53 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Abortion defined); para. 81-61 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Short title-parental notice); para. 81-63 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Definitions); para. 81-68.1 (Smith-Hurd 1975) (Invalidity, severability); ch. 111, para. 4400-22 (1978) (Supp. 1988) (Disciplinary grounds, elective abortion); ch. 111½, para. 87-9 (1988) (State insuranee benefits, no abortion); ch. 127, para. 526 (Supp. 1988) (State insurance benefits, no abortion); ch. 111, para. 4267 (Supp. 1988) (Physical therapy, disciplinary actions).

IN Ind.Code Ann. § 35-1-58.5-1 (1986) (Definitions).

IA Iowa Code Ann. § 707.10 (1978) (Duty to preserve live fetus); § 205.1 (1978) (Sale of abortifacients); § 205.2 (1978) (Exception).

KS Kan.Stat.Ann. § 65-2837(b)(5) (1981) (Professional incompetency).

KY Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. 12 § 311.720 (1983) (Definitions) (sub. (5), (6), (8) unconst.); § 311.790 (1983) (Birth and Death cert. for live-born abortion); § 311.820 (1983) (No fee for couns. abortion); § 311.830 (1983) (Severability); § 211.027 (Michie/Bobbs-Merrill 19____) (Rules and regs. by Cab. for Hum. Res.); § 304.5-160 (1988).

LA La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 14:87 (1985) (Def. of abortion); § 40:1299.35.1 (1989 supp.) (Definitions); § 40:63 (1985) (Abortion, purpose of sec.); § 40:64 (1985) (Forms for collection of data); § 40:65 (1985) (Completion of forms); § 37:1285 (1985) (Physicians, revocation).

ME Me.Rev.Stat.Ann. tit. 22, § 1595 (1964) (Supp. 1988) (Definition live born and live birth); § 1596 (1964) (Supp. 1988) (Abortion data).

MD Md. HG Code Ann. § 20-202. (1987) (No agreement with abortion referral service in another state); § 20-203 (1987) (Regis. Ab. Referral Serv.); § 20-204 (1987) (Fee-splitting prohib.); § 20-205 (1987) (Rules, regs, referral services); § 20-207 (1987) (Phys. defined).

MA Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 112, § 12J(b) (West 1983) (Legal procedures); § 12K (West 1983) (Definitions of 12L to 12U); § 12U (West 1983) (Enjoining abortion); ch. 32B, § 3A (West 1983) (Coverage for abortions under admin. contract); ch. 32A, § 12 (West 1983) (Insurance, retired teachers); 32A, §§ 4, 10C, 14 (West 1983) (Insurance, state employees); 32B, §§ 3, 16 (West 1983) (Insurance-pol. subdiv.); ch. 6, § 15FF (West 1983) (Pro-Life Month); ch. 176G, § 17 (West 1983) (Health maintenance org., rules and regs.).

MI Mich.Comp.Laws Ann. § 767.72 (West 1968) (Dying declarations); § 380.1507 (West 1968) (Schools and school districts, reprod. health educ. programs).

MN Minn.Stat.Ann. § 145.411 (West 1989) (Defintions); § 145.421 (West 1989) (Definitions); § 145.423 (West 1989) (Abortions, live births); § 148.75(d) (West 1989) (Physical therapist revocation); § 147.091(c) (West 1989) (Physician revocation); § 617.21 (West 1986) (Evidence); § 390.32 (West Supp. 1989) (Investigation of deaths arising from criminal abortion); § 62D.20 (West Supp. 1989) (Rules, health maint. org.-vol. abortions).

MS Miss.Code Ann. § 41-41-51 (West 1989) (Definitions); § 41-41-55 (West 1989) (Applicability; ct. proceedings, standard for waiver); § 41-41-57 (Supp. 1988) (Except. for emergencies); § 41-41-59 (Supp. 1988) (Viol. p.f. unprof. conduct); § 41-41-61 (Supp. 1988) (Confid. of records); § 41-41-63 (Supp. 1988) (Severability); § 41-61-59 (Supp. 1988) (Rep. death to med. ex.); § 73-25-29 (Supp. 1988) (Physician, revoc. of license, abort. not medically necessary).

MO Mo.Ann.Stat. § 376.805 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (1983 am.) (Elective abort., insurance); § 188.015 (Supp. 1989) (Definitions); § 188.047 (Vernon 1982) (Tissue sample); § 188.060 (Vernon 1982) (Records retained 7 yrs.); § 188.065 (Vernon 1982) (Revocation of license); § 188.085 (Vernon 1982) (Not exclusive); § 188.100 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Definitions); § 188.115 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Severability clause); § 188.120 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Cause of action); § 188.200 Vernon (Supp. 1989) (Definitions); § 188.220 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Taxpayer standing); § 58.455 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Death certificate); § 58.451 (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Death by crim. action).

MT Mont.Code Ann. § 50-20-101 (1987) (Short title "Montana Abortion Control Act"); § 50-20-104 (1987) (Definitions); § 37-3-322 (1987) (Unprofessional conduct: perf. abort. against law); § 41-1-103 (1987) (Rights of unborn children).

NE Neb.Rev.Stat. § 28-326 (1985) (Terms defined); § 28-331 (1985) (Care and treatment of child aborted-born alive); § 71-148(8) (1956) (License revocation).

NV Nev.Rev.Stat. § 201.120 (1987) (Abortion; definition); § 201.140 (1987) (Evidence; witness must testify); §

634.018 (1987) (Chirop. unprof. cond. aid. crim. abortion); § 630A.370 (1987) (Homeopathic phys., unlawful abortion);§§ 632.220, 632.320 (1987) (Nurses, unprof. cond.); § 633.131 (1987) (Osteopathic phys. unprof. cond.); § 442.268 (1987) (Civil immunity, justly perf. abortion); § 442.240 (1987) (Defined); § 175.301 (1987) (Corrob. evidence essen.).

NJ N.J.Stat.Ann. § 45:9-16(c) (West 1980) (Med. lic. revocation); § 2A:65A-4 (West 1980) (Severability).

NM N.M.Stat.Ann. § 30-5-1 (1980) (Definitions); § 61-6-14(B)(1) (1980) (Lic. revoked-phys.); § 61-10A-5 (1980) (Osteop. phys. assis. revoked).

NY N.Y. Penal Law § 125.05 (McKinney 1984) (Definition of terms); § N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 394-C (McKinney 1984) (Report on request for abortion services); N.Y. Exec. Law § 291(3) (McKinney 1984) (Opportunity for med. treatment for aborted infant born alive); N.Y. Pub Health Law § 17 (McKinney Supp. 1989) (Release of med. records concerning abortion not to parents); N.Y. Judic. Law § 4 (McKinney 1984) (Ct. not public for abortion).

NC N.C.Gen.Stat. § 90-14 (Supp. 1988) (Revocation license).

ND N.D.Cent.Code § 14-02.1-02 (1981) (Definitions); § 14-02.3-03 (1981) (Payment by health insurance policies).

OH Ohio Code Ann. § 2919.11 (Anderson 1987) (Definitions); § 4734.09 (Anderson 1987) (Chiro. can't abort); § 2919.12(E) (Anderson 1987) (Civil liability); § 2701.15 (1987) (Ct. may not order abortion); § 4731.22(21) (Anderson 1987) (Discipline of phys.).

OK Okla.Stat.Ann. tit. 63, § 1-730 (West 1983) (Definitions); 63, § 938(a) (West 1983) (Deaths to be investigated); tit. 59, § 524 (West 1983) (Abortion-infant born alive-right to med. treatment); 59, § 509(1) (West 1983) (Unprofessional conduct).

OR Or.Rev.Stat. § 435.435 (1987) (Effect of refusal to consent to termination); § 465.110 (1987) (Place for unlawful abortion = nuisance); § 432.120 (1987) (Records, disclosure rule); § 659.029 (1987) (Employ. discrim.); § 685.110(4) (1987) (Revocation of naturopath license).

PA Pa.Stat.Ann. tit. 18, § 3203 (Purdon 1975) (Definitions); 18, § 3217 (Purdon 1975) (Civil penalties); 18, § 3219 (Purdon 1975) (State Board of Med. Ed. and Lic.); tit. 42, § 6144 (Purdon 1975) (Dying declarations in case of abortion).

RI R.I.Gen.Laws § 23-4.7-1 (1985) (Abortion defined); § 23-4.7-4 (1985) (Emergency); § 23-4.7-7 (1985) (Liability of phys.); § 23-4.7-8 (1985) (Severability); § 23-4.8-5 (1985) (Severability); § 27-18-28 (1979) (Health insurance); § 36-12-2.1 (1986) (Exclusion from hosp. care coverage); § 11-9-18 (1981) (Care of babies born alive during abortion).

SC S.C.Code Ann. § 44-41-10 (1976) (Definitions).

SD S.D.Codified Laws Ann. § 34-23A-1 (1976) (Definition of terms); § 34-23A-2 (1976) (Lawful only under certain conditions); § 34-23A-16 (1976) (Birth cert. live birth resulting from abort.); § 34-23A-16.1 (1976) (Right/life babies born alive); § 34-23A-18 (1976) (Abortion as evidence in termin. parental rights case); § 34-23A-20 (1976) (Severability; § 34-23A-21 (1976) (Repeal of chapter when states given exclusive authority); § 36-4-30(1) (1976) (Unprofess. conduct).

TN Tenn.Code Ann. § 37-10-302 (Supp. 1988) [effec. July 1, 1989] (Definitions); § 37-10-305 (Supp. 1988) [effec.

July 1, 1989] § 37-10-307 (Supp. 1988) [effec. July 1, 1989] (Civil actions); § 39-4-201(d) (1982) (Residency); § 39-4-206 (1982) (Rights to med. treatment-infant born alive during abortion); § 39-4-206 (1982) (No cause of wrongful death); § 39-4-207 (1982) (Custody of infant prem. born alive due to abortion); § 68-11-201 (Supp. 1988) (Defin. "Ambulatory Surgical Treatment Center"); § 63-1-120(14) (1986) (Revoc. of lic.); § 63-9-111(b) (1986) (Revocation of lic, osteopathic).

TX Tex.Fam.Code Ann. § 15.022 (Vernon 1986) (Definition) (Termination of parental rights of child born alive during abortion); § 17.011 (Vernon 1986) (Living child after abortion); § 12.05 (Vernon 1986) (Rights of living child after abortion); Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. art. 44956 § 3.08(14) (Vernon Supp. 1989) (Revoc. of lic.).

UT Utah Code Ann. § 76-7-301 (Supp. 1988) (Definitions); § 76-7-312 (1953) (No intimidation, coercion); § 76-7-315 (1953) (Emergency exceptions); § 76-7-316 (1953) (Actions not precluded); § 76-7-321 (Supp. 1988) (Definitions); § 53A-13-101 (Supp. 1988) (Parental consent for school instruction on abortion); § 78-11-25 (Supp. 1988) (Failure, refusal to prevent birth not a defense).

VT Vt.Stat.Ann. tit. 13, § 102 (1974) (Dying declaration as evidence).

VA Va.Code Ann. § 19.2-8 (Supp. 1988) (Limitation of prosecution); § 54.1-2914(A)(1) (1988) (Unprofessional conduct).

WA Wash.Rev.Code.Ann. § 9.02.010 (1987) (Defined); § 9.02.040 (1987) (Evidence); § 9.02.070(b) (1987) (Residence requirement); § 9.02.090 (1987) (Act submitted to electorate); § 18.130.180(18) (1988) (Unprofessional conduct).

WV W.V.Code § 16-2F-2 (1984) (Definitions); § 16-2F-9 (1984) (Severability); § 16-2B-2 (1984) (Abortion not approved method of child spacing, family planning); § 16-2F-3 (1984) (Referral of minor for counselling).

WY Wyo.Stat. § 35-6-101 (1988) (Definitions).

APPENDIX B

CURRENT FEDERAL STATUTES REGARDING ABORTION

1. 42 U.S.C. § 300a-6 (1982) (Public Health Service prohibition against funding programs using abortion as family planning method).

2. 42 U.S.C. § 300a-7(b) (1982) (Public Health Service prohibition of public officials requiring recipients to perform, assist or provide facilities for abortion or discriminating in educational application because of belief about abortion).

3. 42 U.S.C. § 300a-8 (1982) (Public Health Service penalty for government officer or employee endeavoring to coerce abortion upon beneficiary of federal program).

4. 42 U.S.C. § 300z-5 (1982) (Adolescent Family Life Act demonstration projects, parental consent not required if parents compel abortion).

5. 42 U.S.C. § 300z-10 (1982) (Adolescent Family Life Act demonstration project grants available only to programs not providing abortion counseling).

6. 42 U.S.C. § 1975c (Supp. IV 1986) (Civil Rights Commission denied authority to study abortion).

7. 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000d-4a note (West Supp. July 1988) (University civil rights requirements in federally assisted programs—abortion neutral) (See 20 U.S.C.A. § 1688, infra).

8. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (1982) (Equal Employment Opportunities provisions do not require health insurance to cover abortion).

9. 42 U.S.C. § 2996f(b)(8) (1982) (Legal Services Corporation prohibited from handling abortion litigation).

10. 42 U.S.C.A. § 6107 (West Supp. July 1988) (Age Discrimination provisions in federally assisted programs—abortion neutral) (See 20 U.S.C.A. § 1688 infra).

11. 10 U.S.C. § 1093 (Supp. II 1984) (Defense appropriations may not be used for abortions).

12. 18 U.S.C. § 552 (1982) (Crime for federal officer to violate abortion importation law).*

13. 18 U.S.C. § 1461 (1982) (Crime to mail information about abortion).*

14. 18 U.S.C. § 1462 (1982) (Crime to import abortifacient).*

15. 29 U.S.C.A. § 706 (West Supp. July 1988) (Rehabilitation Services antidiscrimination law—abortion neutral) (See 20 U.S.C.A. § 1688 infra).

16. 29 U.S.C.A. § 794 (1982) (nondiscrimination under Federal Rehabilitation grants—abortion neutral).

17. 22 U.S.C. § 2151b (1982) (International Development funds may not be used for abortion promotion).

18. 22 U.S.C.A. § 2151n (West Supp. 1988) (International Development report on international abortion coercion required).

19. 22 U.S.C.A. § 2304 note (West Supp. July 1988) (International Military Assistance human rights violation reports include coerced abortion).

20. 20 U.S.C.A. § 1687 (West Supp. July 1988) (Education, discrimination based on sex or blindness—abortion neutral).

21. 20 U.S.C.A. § 1688 (West Supp. July 1988) (Education, discrimination based on sex or blindness—abortion neutral).

22. 19 U.S.C. § 1305 (1982) (Tariff Act, importation of illegal abortion material prohibited).*

* Apparently pre-1973.

APPENDIX C

Office of the Governor
State of Missouri

PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, January 22, 1989, is the 16th anniversary of the United States Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion on demand; and

WHEREAS, the protection of the Constitution of the United States ought to apply to all human beings, irrespective of age, health, function, or condition of dependency, including unborn children at every state of their biological development; and

WHEREAS, since 1973, over 23 million unborn children have been denied their "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness"; and

WHEREAS, the people of Missouri and their elected and appointed officials treasure God's gift of life and have promoted life's protection through numerous programs, legislation, executive decrees, and judicial orders:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN ASHCROFT, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI, do hereby proclaim January 22, 1989, as a day in memoriam for these unborn children and urge all Missourians to recognize this day and fully participate in its observance.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Missouri, in the City of Jefferson, this 17th day of January, 1989.

/s/ John Ashcroft
Governor

Attest:

/s/ Roy D. Blunt
Secretary of State

APPENDIX D

Office of the Governor
State of Missouri

PROCLAMATION:

WHEREAS, January 22, 1980, is the sixth anniversary of the United States Supreme Court decision which legalized abortion on demand; and

WHEREAS, the protection of the Constitution of the United States ought to apply to all human beings, irrespective of age, health, function or condition of dependency, including their unborn offspring at every stage of their biological development; and

WHEREAS, over seven and one-half million unborn children have been denied their "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness"; and

WHEREAS, the people of Missouri and their elected officials respect God's gift of life:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOSEPH P. TEASDALE, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI, do hereby proclaim January 22, 1980, as a day in memoriam for these unborn children and urge all Missourians to recognize this day and fully participate in its observance.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Missouri, in the City of Jefferson, this 18th day of January, 1980.

/s/ Joseph P. Teasdale
Governor

Attest:

/s/ James C. Kirkpatrick
Secretary of State

APPENDIX E

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 7

BE IT RESOLVED by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that this legislature, pursuant to the authority granted by Article V of the Constitution of the United States, respectfully applies to the Congress of the United States to call a convention for the purpose of proposing the following article as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

ARTICLE —

Section 1. With respect to the right to life, the word person as used in this article and in the Fifth and Fourteenth Articles of Amendment to the Constitution of the United States applies to all human beings irrespective of age, health, function or condition of dependency, including their unborn offspring at every stage of their biological development.

Section 2. No unborn person shall be deprived of life by any person; provided, however, that nothing in this article shall prohibit a law permitting only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of the mother.

Section 3. The congress and the several states have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a duly attested copy of this resolution be immediately transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Congress from this state.

APPENDIX F

Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Misdemeanors," ch. I, § 12 (1825):

Be it further enacted, That every person who shall wilfully and maliciously administer or cause to be administered to or taken by any person, any poison, or other noxious, poisonous or destructive substance or liquid, with an intention him or her thereby to murder, or thereby to cause or procure the miscarriage of any woman then being with child, and shall thereof be duly convicted, shall suffer imprisonment not exceeding seven years, and be fined not exceeding three thousand dollars.

Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II, § 10 (1835):

Every person who shall administer to any woman pregnant with a quick child, any medicine, drug, or substance whatsoever, or shall use or employ any instrument or other means, with intent thereby to destroy such child, unless the same shall have been necessary to preserve the life of such mother, or shall have been advised by a physician to be necessary for that purpose, shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter in the second degree.

Mo. Rev. Stat., "Crimes and Punishments," art. II, § 36 (1835):

Every physician, or other person, who shall wilfully administer to any pregnant woman, any medicine, drug, substance or thing whatsoever, or shall use, or employ any instrument or means whatsoever, with intent thereby to procure abortion, or the miscarriage of any such woman, unless the same shall have been necessary to preserve the life of such woman, or shall have been advised by a physician to be necessary for that purpose, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

1907 Mo. Laws, pp. 230-31:

Any person who, with intent to produce or promote a miscarriage or abortion, advises, gives, sells or administers to a woman (whether actually pregnant or not), or who, with such intent, procures or causes her to take, any drug, medicine, or article or uses upon her, or advises to or for her the use of, any instrument or other method or device to produce a miscarriage or abortion (unless the same is necessary to preserve her life or that of an unborn child, or if such person is not a duly licensed physician, unless the said act has been advised by a duly licensed physician to be necessary for such a purpose), shall, in event of the death of said woman, or any quick child, whereof she may be pregnant, being thereby occasioned, upon conviction be adjudged guilty of manslaughter in the second degree, and punished accordingly; and in case no such death ensue, such person shall be guilty of the felony of abortion, and upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three or more than five years, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $1,000.00, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any practitioner of medicine or surgery, upon conviction of any such offense, as is above defined, shall be subject to have his license or authority to practice his profession as physician or surgeon in the state of Missouri revoked by the state board of health in its discretion.

Mo. Rev. Stat., § 7336 (1919):

Any person who, with intent to produce or promote a miscarriage or abortion, advises, gives, sells, or administers to a woman (whether actually pregnant or not), or who, with such intent, procures or causes her to take, any drug, medicine, or article, or uses upon her, or advises to or for her the use of, any instrument or other method or device to produce a miscarriage or abortion (unless the same is necessary to preserve her life or that of an unborn child, or if such person is not a duly licensed physician, unless the said act has been advised by a duly licensed physician to be necessary for such a purpose), shall, in event of the death of said woman, or any quick child, whereof she may be pregnant, being thereby occasioned, upon conviction be adjudged guilty of manslaughter, and punished accordingly; and in case no such death ensue, such person shall be guilty of the felony of abortion, and upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three years nor more than five years, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any practitioner of medicine or surgery, upon conviction of any such offense, as is above defined, shall be subject to have his license or authority to practice his profession as physician or surgeon in the state of Missouri revoked by the state board of health in its discretion.

Mo. Rev. Stat., § 559.100 (1969):

Any person who, with intent to produce or promote a miscarriage or abortion, advises, gives, sells or administers to a woman (whether actually pregnant or not), or who, with such intent, procures or causes her to take any drug, medicine or article, or uses upon her, or advises to or for her the use of, any instrument or other method or device to produce a miscarriage or abortion (unless the same is necessary to preserve her life or that of an unborn child, or if such person is not a duly licensed physician, unless the said act has been advised by a duly licensed physician to be necessary for such a purpose), shall, in event of the death of said woman, or any quick child, whereof she may be pregnant, being thereby occasioned, upon conviction be adjudged guilty of manslaughter, and punished accordingly; and in case no such death ensue such person shall be guilty of the felony of abortion, and upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three years nor more than five years, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any practitioner of medicine or surgery, upon conviction of any such offense, as is above defined, shall be subject to have his license or authority to practice his profession as physician or surgeon in the state of Missouri revoked by the state board of medical examiners in its discretion.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CENTER FOR JUDICIAL STUDIES AND CERTAIN MEMBERS OF CONGRESS IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

[List of names on inside cover]

JULES B. GERARD
School of Law
Washington University
St. Louis, MO 63130
314-889-6427
Counsel for The Center for Judicial Studies

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

26p

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Dornan, Robert K.
Hyde, Henry J.
Stenholm, Charles W.
~~Armstrong, William~~
Barton, Joe
Bateman, Herbert
Bliley, Thomas J.
Bilirakis, Michael
Bond, Christopher
Bunning, Jim
Burton, Dan
Combest, Larry
Costello, Jerry F.
Cox, Christopher
Crane, Philip M.
Dannemeyer, William E.
DeWine, Michael
Emerson, Bill
Gallegly, Elton
Garn, Jake
Hancock, Melton D.
Hastert, Dennis J.
Henry, Paul B.
Hiler, John
Holloway, Clyde C.
Kolter, Joe
LaFalce, John J.
Lagomarsino, Robert J.
Lent, Norman F.
Lightfoot, Jim
Lukens, Donald E.
Mazzoli, Romano L.
McConnell, Mitch
McCrery, Jim
McMillen, J. Alex
Nielson, Howard C.
Parris, Stan
Penny, Timothy J.
Perkins, Carl C.
Ravenel, Arthur
Rohrabacher, Dana
Sensenbrenner, F. James Jr.
Skelton, Ike
Smith, Denny
Smith, Larken
Smith, Robert C.
Smith, Virginia
Solomon, Gerald B.H.
Stangeland, Arlan
Symms, Steve
Tauke, Thomas J.
Tauzin, W.J.
Thurmond, Strom
Volkmer, Harold L.
Weber, Vin
Weldon, Curt

also: Norman Shumway

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	3
ARGUMENT	4
I. THIS CASE ILLUSTRATES THE TENDENCY OF STATE AND LOWER FEDERAL COURTS TO NULLIFY THE RIGHTFUL POWER OF THE STATES TO ENACT REASONABLE LEGISLATION ON THE IMPORTANT SUBJECT OF ABORTION	4
II. THE CONFUSION IN STATE AND LOWER FEDERAL COURTS AND THE EROSION OF STATE POWER IN THE ABORTION AREA ARE ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE INTERNAL INCOHERENCE OF ROE v. WADE AND TO THE LACK OF ANY PRINCIPLED FOUNDATION FOR THE ASSERTED CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO ABORTION	12
III. THE SOLUTION TO THE PROBLEMS CREATED BY ROE v. WADE IS TO ABANDON THE RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY THAT CASE AND TO RESTORE TO THE STATES AND CONGRESS THEIR RIGHTFUL POWERS TO LEGISLATE ON THE SUBJECT OF ABORTION	19
CONCLUSION	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases — Page

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 5, 9
Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 5
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 20, 21
Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886) 14
Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927) 15
Charles v. Daley, 749 F.2d 452 (7th Cir. 1984), prob. juris. noted sub nom., Diamond v. Charles, 471 U.S. 1115 (1985), appeal dismissed, 476 U.S. 54 (1986) 5
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod. Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 4
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 5
Diamond v. Charles, 471 U.S. 1115 (1985) 5
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 3, 4
Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 14
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 14
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 5, 9
Haskell v. Washington Twp., 635 F. Supp. 550 (S.D. Ohio 1986) 5
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 5
Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967) 14
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) 14
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 5, 9
Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) 5
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 14
Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 20
Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 5, 11
Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928) 14
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 20
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 14
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Cincinnati, Inc. v. Cincinnati, 822 F.2d 1390 (6th Cir. 1987) 5
Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 5
Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 5, 9, 10, 11
Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Reproductive Health Serv. v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1076 (8th Cir. 1988), prob. juris. noted, 109 S.Ct. 780 (1989) 6, 7, 10, 11
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... 4, passim
Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 14
Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) 14
Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968) 14
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 4, 19
Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891) 14
United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095 (1987) 11

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Const. 2, 6, 7, 12, 14
U.S. Const. amend. IX 15
U.S. Const. amend. XIV 2, 12, 15

Statutes

42 U.S.C. § 300a-6 (1982) 2
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1986) 5
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2 (1986) 6, 7
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) 7, 8
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.200 (1986) 8
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986) 8, 9
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.210 (1986) 9, 10
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 (1986) 9, 10

Other Authorities

The Human Life Bill, 1981: Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcomm. on the Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981) 6
Cates & Grimes, The Trimester Threshold for Pregnancy Termination: Myth or Truth? in Second Trimester Pregnancy Termination 50 (M. Keirse & B. Gravenhorst ed. 1982) 17
Uddo, A Wink from the Bench: The Federal Courts and Abortion, 53 Tul. L. Rev. 398 (1979) 18

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CENTER FOR JUDICIAL STUDIES AND CERTAIN MEMBERS OF CONGRESS IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE

The Center for Judicial Studies, Cumberland, VA 23040, is a tax-exempt, public policy institution founded in 1982 for the purpose of promoting judicial and legal reform. The Director of the Center is Dr. James McClellan. The Center is the only educational and public policy organization in the United States that focuses exclusively on the problem of judicial activism. The Center seeks to confine the power of the federal judiciary to the bounds envisioned by the Framers of the Constitution and of the fourteenth amendment.

Individual Amici are members of the Congress of the United States. They are concerned about the fact that Roe v. Wade has expanded federal judicial powers into areas that are within the rightful legislative domain of Congress and the states. This expansion has adversely affected the constitutional allocation of powers between the judicial and legislative branches and between the states and the federal government. It has effectively prevented both the Congress and the states from implementing sound legislative solutions to abortion issues. And it has introduced into this important area an atmosphere of capriciousness that has arisen from the unpredictable character of state and federal court decisions that have vainly sought to apply the elusive criteria of Roe v. Wade in a coherent manner.

This case involves the efforts of a state legislature to regulate abortion. Congress, too, has enacted legislation affecting that area, see 42 U.S.C. § 300a-6 (1982), and may do so again. The lower court decisions in this case, holding unconstitutional various provisions of Missouri law affecting the use of state funds, raise issues similar to those involved in litigation now pending with respect to federal regulations of abortion funding. This Court's efforts to define the scope of permissible abortion regulation directly affects the ability of elected representatives —both state and federal—to deal with this important and controversial question. These are matters of immediate interest to the Center for Judicial Studies and to the Members of Congress who are Amici herein.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The abortion decisions of 1973, Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton, sharply restricted the powers of the states to regulate abortion. Under the trimester scheme therein adopted, the states cannot prohibit abortion until the third trimester. Even in the third trimester, the states are prohibited from forbidding an abortion that is sought for the mother's "mental or physical health." The unlimited elasticity of that vague criterion, when combined with the requirement that state restrictions on abortion be justified by a compelling state interest, in effect makes Roe v. Wade a mandate for abortion on request at all stages of pregnancy.

Since 1973, this Court has reaffirmed Roe v. Wade's mandate. State and lower federal courts have interpreted that mandate strictly against the states. One result is that the states are effectively forbidden not only to prohibit abortion but also to regulate it in any significant way. Even the power of the states and the Congress to withhold public funding of abortion, a power that this Court has explicitly sanctioned, has been eroded by state and lower federal courts that appear hostile to any restrictions on free access to abortion.

The case herein illustrates the confusion that has prevailed in the state and lower federal courts. That confusion is traceable to the internal incoherence of Roe v. Wade as constitutional doctrine, and to the lack of any principled foundation for the asserted constitutional right to abortion.

The inadequacies of Roe v. Wade are not susceptible of any merely cosmetic remedy. Rather, those inadequacies are so basic that they can be eliminated only by abandoning Roe and by restoring to the states and to the Congress their rightful powers to legislate on the subject of abortion.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS CASE ILLUSTRATES THE TENDENCY OF STATE AND LOWER FEDERAL COURTS TO NULLIFY THE RIGHTFUL POWER OF THE STATES TO ENACT REASONABLE LEGISLATION ON THE IMPORTANT SUBJECT OF ABORTION.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, (1973), this Court restricted the states' regulatory powers over abortion according to the trimesters of gestation. During the first trimester, the states may not prohibit abortion and their power to regulate it is minimal. From the end of the first trimester until viability, which Roe defined as "the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb," 410 U.S. at 163, the states may not prohibit abortion but may regulate it "in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health." Id. at 164. From viability until birth, the states may regulate and even prohibit abortion, except where it is necessary, "in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." Id. The health of the mother includes "psychological as well as physical well-being" and "the medical judgment may be exercised in the light of all factors—physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age—relevant to the well-being" of the mother. Doe, 410 U.S. at 191-92. At all stages of gestation, state regulations limiting abortion will be upheld only if they are justified by a "compelling state interest" and are "narrowly drawn to express only the legitimate state interest at stake." Roe, 410 U.S. at 155; see also id. at 156-64.

Since 1973, this Court has reaffirmed the mandate of Roe v. Wade, making it more restrictive in the process. In so doing, the Court has effectively left no room for state prohibitions of abortion and very little room for state regulations of the subject. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747 (1986); City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reprod.

Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983); H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979); Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976).

This Court has, to be sure, approved legislation denying public funding and the use of public facilities for abortion, thereby upholding the rightful prerogatives of Congress and the states in this one area. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977). But decisions of some lower courts have tended to undercut even these approved congressional and state prerogatives. See, e.g., Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983); Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988). Other decisions have tended to be hostile to all state efforts to legislate in this area. See, e.g., Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Cincinnati v. Cincinnati, 822 F.2d 1390 (6th Cir. 1987); Charles v. Daley, 749 F.2d 452 (7th Cir. 1984), prob. juris. noted sub nom., Diamond v. Charles, 471 U.S. 1115 (1985) appeal dismissed, 476 U.S. 54 (1986); Haskell v. Washington Twp., 635 F. Supp. 550 (S.D. Ohio 1986). These decisions substantiate the claim of Appellants that "the lower federal courts do no apply normal principles of constitutional adjudication to abortion cases." Jurisdiction Statement (J.S.) at App. 11.

The decisions of the courts below in this case exemplify this tendency of judicial hostility. For example, the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit dismissed Missouri's statutory definition of life[1] as "simply an im-

[1] Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1986) provides:

1. The general assembly of this state finds that:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

permissible adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify [the state's] abortion regulations." Reproductive Health Serv. v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1076 (8th Cir. 1988), prob. juris. noted, 109 S.Ct. 780 (1989). The court of appeals offered no justification for this conclusion. Missouri's declaration that the life of a human being begins "at conception" is supported by abundant scientific evidence. See generally The Human Life Bill, 1981: Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcomm. on the Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. passim (1981). Moreover, this statutory definition is explicitly made subject to "the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2 (1986). The court of appeals dismissed this saving clause on the ground that, "A recitation that state laws must be compatible with the United States Constitution is simply a restatement of the postulate contained in article VI of the Constitution." Webster, 851 F.2d at 1077. The statute, however, makes itself subject not only to the Constitution but also to "decisional interpretations thereof" by this Court. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2. If, as the court of appeals concluded, this Court's decisions mean that such a definition of life can have no effect on the abortion area, then the clear meaning of the saving clause is that the definition has no effect in that area because, as Appellants contend, the definition "simply defines the point at which unborn children are entitled to the protection of Missouri law in circumstances other than those involved in abortion." J.S. at App. 16. If the court of appeals interpretation of this Court's decisions is correct, then the Missouri statutory definition of life simply does not do anything at all with respect to abortion and therefore should have been upheld. The court of appeals did not explain how such a definition, which has nothing to do with abortion, infringes the right of privacy with respect to abortion.

A similar disposition to undercut legitimate state authority can be seen in the treatment of Missouri's viability-testing requirement.[2] As the courts below recognized, the states have a compelling interest in preserving the life of a fetus once the point of viability is reached. Yet those courts deprived Missouri of a reasonable and

(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being.

(3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health and well-being of their unborn child.

2. Effective January 1, 1988, the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every state of biological development.

4. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

[2] Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) provides:

Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions. In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

indeed necessary means of advancing that interest through the statutory requirement that a determination as to viability be made in an appropriate case before the abortion is performed. The statute does not make any particular test mandatory or determinative. It simply requires, when the physician has "reason to believe" that the child is twenty or more weeks' gestational age—i.e., may be viable, that "such medical examination and tests" shall be performed "as are necessary to make a finding of gestational age, weight, and lung maturity," all of which are indicia of viability. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986). Contrary to the apparent view of the courts below, this statute does not improperly intrude upon medical judgment. It allows the physician to make the required findings through whatever examinations or tests are necessary. The statute leaves the decision as to the necessity of any particular test to the judgment of the physician. The statute does not require the physician to perform any particular tests. He may rely upon whatever examinations are necessary to make the required findings, findings that are relevant to the determination of viability.

The diminished prerogatives of the states in the abortion area can be seen with special clarity in the lower courts' invalidation of the Missouri statutes that forbid the use of public funds for "encouraging or counselling" abortion, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986), and that forbid the performance or assistance of abortion by public employees or through public facilities.[3] The first thing

[3] Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.200 (1986) provides:

> As used in sections 188.200 to 188.220, the following terms mean:
>
> (1) "Public employee", any person employed by this state or any agency political subdivision thereof;
>
> (2) "Public facility", any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivisions thereof;
>
> (3) "Public funds", any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986) provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.210 (1986) provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 (1986) provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

to remember here is that this Court has extensively and firmly upheld the right of the Congress and the states to deny public funding of abortion and the use of public medical facilities for abortion. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 646 (1977); Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977).

The court of appeals subjected the "encouraging or counselling" provision, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205, to "a proportionately greater increase in scrutiny" because it threatens to "inhibit the exercise of constitutional rights . . . of both physicians and their patients: the right to disseminate and receive information about abortion, and the right to knowingly and intelligently choose an abortion after consulting a physician." Webster, 851 F.2d at 1078. The court of appeals went on to hold the provision unconstitutionally vague. But as Appellant argues, this is not a prohibition of such constitutional rights but merely a prohibition of public funding of abortion that is in full accord with this Court's decisions that permit the states to deny such funding. The restriction, in the words of Appellant, prohibits only "the expenditure of public funds for the sole purpose of affirmatively advocating to a particular woman that she undertake an abortion procedure not necessary to save her life. The statute does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy." J.S. App. 25. Further, the provision is not unconstitutionally vague. Rather, "it provides a reasonable person fair notice of the conduct which will not be subsidized by the state." Id.

The hypercritical judicial attitude toward the acknowledged state power to restrict abortion funding is manifested also in the court of appeals' treatment of the Missouri statutes restricting the performance or assistance of abortion by public employees or public facilities. Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 188.210, 188.215 (1986). These statutes are well within the authority recognized by the abortion funding decisions of this Court and especially by Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977). In Poelker, this Court upheld a prohibition of "the performance of abortions" in city hospitals even where no net expenditure of public funds was involved. The court of appeals, however, said Poelker involved "an indigent who sought a free abortion at the expense of the city." Webster, 851

F.2d at 1081. And the court of appeals held that the Missouri prohibition of the use of public employees is unconstitutional because it applies even where the women pay for the abortions at no cost to the public, so that "even women who can afford abortions cannot obtain them through the assistance of public employees." Id. at 1083. The court of appeals' analysis involves a radical misreading of Poelker, in which this Court upheld a prohibition not only of funding but of "the performance of abortion in the city hospitals," Poelker, 432 U.S. at 520, even though the prohibition made no exceptions for paying patients or even for small communities where no other facility is available. See id. at 523-24 (Brennan, J., dissenting).

The court of appeals bypassed the Poelker precedent of this Court and instead placed its reliance on Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983). This misplaced reliance on Nyberg instead of on Poelker is particularly objectionable because Poelker upheld the prohibition as applied while this case presents a facial challenge to the Missouri statutes. A facial challenge "must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid. The fact that the . . . [Act] might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is insufficient to render it wholly invalid since we have not recognized an 'overbreadth' doctrine outside the limited context of the First Amendment." United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987).

The decisions below in this case illustrate a process of erosion of legitimate state powers that is especially indefensible because it relates to such an important area of law and policy.

II. THE CONFUSION IN STATE AND LOWER FEDERAL COURTS AND THE EROSION OF STATE POWER IN THE ABORTION AREA ARE ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE INTERNAL INCOHERENCE OF ROE v. WADE AND TO THE LACK OF ANY PRINCIPLED FOUNDATION FOR THE ASSERTED CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO ABORTION.

Roe v. Wade assumed or declared at various points that the Constitution guarantees a right to abortion, without ever identifying the basis of that right in a way that would guide its subsequent application. Although Roe v. Wade acknowledged that "[t]he Constitution does not explicitly mention any right of privacy," 410 U.S. at 152, it did not provide any specific reasons why the right to privacy included a right to abortion. Indeed, when one person demands access, free of governmental regulation, to a surgical procedure that is to be performed by another person—whether an abortion, a vasectomy, or a sex change operation—interference with the former's "privacy" is not an idea that comes readily to mind. Typically a failure to declare the constitutional basis of a holding would simply impede efforts by lower courts and public officials to gauge the scope, meaning, and future course of decisions. As to Roe v. Wade, however, the fact that the constitutional right declared was therefore utterly unknown, and that the abortion laws of approximately two thirds of the states were at odds with it, see id. at 139-40, made its principled application impossible from the outset.

Although this Court traditionally decides whether a constitutional challenge has any legal basis before it imposes on the states the burden of justifying their laws, Roe v. Wade took a different route. Rather than determining first the merit of Appellant Roe's attempt "to discover [an abortion] right in the concept of personal 'liberty' embodied in the Fourteenth Amendment," the privacy rights "said to be protected by the Bill of Rights or its penumbras . . .," and the "rights reserved to the people by the Ninth Amendment," see id. at 129, Roe instead gathered various medical and moral justifications for abortion laws, id. at 129-47, and held them inadequate.

Canvassing their long history, Roe found "[t]hree reasons [that] have been advanced to explain historically the enactment of criminal abortion laws in the 19th century and to justify their continued existence." Id. at 147. The first justification was "that these laws were the product of a Victorian social concern to discourage illicit sexual conduct," a justification not advanced by Texas in Roe, never "taken seriously" by any court or commentator, and attacked by "appellants and amici" as "not a proper state purpose at all." Id. at 148. Second, "[w]hen most criminal abortion laws were first enacted, the procedure was a hazardous one for the woman," id., a situation which "[m]odern medical techniques have altered." Id. at 149. Finally, "the third reason [was] the States' interest—some phrase it in terms of duty—in protecting prenatal life," id. at 150, although there is an "absence of legislative history to support the contention" that an original purpose of abortion laws "was to protect prenatal life," id. at 151, and there is "some scholarly" and state court support for the view that "most state laws were designed solely to protect the woman." Id. Thus, without explaining whether the Appellant's claim had any constitutional basis, Roe announced that "[it] is with these interests, and the weight to be attached to them, that the case is concerned." Id. at 152.

The rest of the Roe opinion described a balancing mechanism that weighs the states' regulatory interests against the abortion right, but did not explain with any specificity either the source, content, and scope of that right, or the reasons why it outweighed certain state interests. It offered no foundation for its newly announced abortion right beyond citing "a line of decisions . . . going back perhaps as far as Union Pacific R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 251 (1891), [in which] the Court has recognized that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy, does exist under the Constitution." Id.

But those cases are not a "line of decisions" that might be logically extended to reach new circumstances. They are rather widely disparate and unrelated precedents. They concern rules of evidence,[4] freedom of speech,[5] criminal procedure and punishment,[6] contraception,[7], education,[8] and interracial marriage,[9] and child labor.[10] None of those decisions explained why, or suggested how, the Constitution guarantees a right to abortion. Except for Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972), and Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965), they do not purport to rest on a constitutional right of privacy as such, and they do not cite each other in support of such a right. Indeed, Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891), the case cited as the origin of the constitutional right of privacy, concerned a common law right which was not constitutional, which merely protected tort plaintiffs from court-ordered examinations of their alleged

[4] Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 251 (1891).

[5] Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 564 (1969).

[6] Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 8-9 (1968); Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 350 (1967); Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535, 541-42 (1942); Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting); Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886).

[7] Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 453-54 (1972); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 484-85 (1965); id. at 486 (Goldberg, J., concurring).

[8] Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399 (1923).

[9] Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 12 (1967).

[10] Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944).

physical injuries, and which in any event permitted English courts to order examinations of pregnant women to ascertain "whether a woman convicted of a capital crime was quick with child . . . in order to guard against the taking of the life of an unborn child for the crime of the mother." Id. at 253.

The flow of Roe v. Wade's reasoning from the right of privacy to the abortion right is as cryptic as is its definition of privacy. Roe v. Wade simply announced the abortion right and confessed a degree of ambivalence about its constitutional basis: "This right of privacy, whether it be founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action, as we feel it is, or, as the District Court determined, in the Ninth Amendment's reservation of rights to the people, is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Roe, 410 U.S. at 153.

The internal incoherence of Roe becomes especially obvious at this point. The majority opinion cited Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927), with approval. 410 U.S. at 154. Buck v. Bell uphold the constitutionality of a statute that provided for compulsory sterilzation by surgery. One would have supposed that a compelled and unconsented surgical intrusion into a person's body would have been the classical illustration of a government's unconstitutional invasion of that person's privacy. But after Roe, state and federal legislatures and courts were confronted with the task of trying to comprehend the astounding conclusion that restricting access to a desired surgical procedure is somehow an invasion of privacy whereas compelling an unwilling person to undergo a surgical procedure is not.

Once it concluded that a constitutional right to abortion existed, Roe took only modest steps to define that right. It expressed skepticism of "the claim asserted by some amici that one has an unlimited right to do with one's body as one pleases." id. at 154, and doubted whether such a claim "bears a close relationship to the right to privacy previously articulated in the Court's decisions." Id. It also cautioned that "this right is not unqualified and must be considered against important state interests in regulation." Id. Roe thus concluded that the "right to privacy, however based, is broad enough to cover the abortion decision; that the right, nonetheless, is not absolute and is subject to some limitations; and that at some point the state interests as to protection of health, medical standards, and prenatal life, become dominant." Id. at 155. And, it suggested that the limitations on the right to abortion would result from balancing the new "fundamental right" against "compelling state interests." Id. at 155-56.

In attempting to strike that balance, Roe again chose not to clarify the nature of the "fundamental right" involved. Instead, it devised a balancing mechanism that hinges on the weights accorded to the regulatory interests of the state. The first regulatory interest Roe identified, the "Victorian social concern to discourage illicit sexual conduct," id. at 148, was accorded little weight, while the state's interests in the protection of life, whether maternal or fetal, were deemed more weighty: "As we intimated above, it is reasonable and appropriate for a State to decide that at some point in time another interest, that of health of the mother or that of potential human life, becomes significantly involved." Id. at 159. Roe did not explain the criteria whereby it determined that certain regulatory interests are "reasonable and appropriate" while others are not, nor whether those criteria emanated from the privacy right.

Being "reasonable and appropriate" nevertheless does not suffice, according to Roe, for a regulatory interest to tilt the balance in favor of the state. A "compelling" interest is required. Id. at 162-63. "With respect to the State's important and legitimate interest in the health of the mother, the 'compelling' point, in light of present medical knowledge, is at approximately the end of the first trimester . . . because of the now-established medical fact . . . that until the end of the first trimester mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth." Id. at 163. The decision does not explain the conditions under which those medical data were gathered; why the state could not seek to protect the health of individual women who run a greater risk of complications from abortion than the "average" woman; or what would happen to constitutional law as medical understanding evolved.[11]

To protect "potential life," however, medical considerations inexplicably are not controlling. As a matter of medical fact, the embryo or fetus is obviously alive throughout pregnancy, but "the 'compelling' point is at viability . . . because the fetus then presumably has the capacity of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Id. The significance and origin of the term "meaningful life" are to this day unknown. Further, Roe's explanation of the significance of viability suggests a view of the abortion right expressly contradicted elsewhere in its opinion. The abortion right here seems to consist of the mother's right to sever any bodily tie she may have to the fetus, but not to destroy it if doing so is unnecessary to sever that connection. But elsewhere in the opinion Roe cautioned that "the right of privacy previously articulated in the Court's decisions" does not "bear[] a close relationship" to any "unlimited right to do with one's body as one pleases." Id. at 152. Indeed, in defining the right of privacy, Roe vacillated between [11] Indeed, evolving medical knowledge now opens to question whether any medical basis ever existed for dividing pregnancy into trimesters, in spite of the fact that medical journals in the decade preceding Roe v. Wade stressed that division. See Cates & Grimes, The Trimester Threshold for Pregnancy Terminations: Myth or Truth?, in Second Trimester Pregnancy Termination 50 (M. Keirse & B. Gravenhorst ed. 1982).

---

calling it "a right of personal privacy," id., which suggests a right of personal autonomy, and describing it as "a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy," id., which implies a limited area of protections from state intrusion.

Roe v. Wade, moreover, left unanswered the question whether "the State has a compelling interest in protecting that life from and after conception" rather than merely in the third trimester. Id. at 159. That question, of course, is crucial if not dispositive. But Roe considered the question "of when life begins" a "difficult question" that "[w]e need not resolve" because "[w]hen those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer." Id. That statement is perhaps the most difficult of all to understand. Roe had resorted to a lengthy discussion of medicine, philosophy, and theology to identify other regulatory interests that, unlike the interest of protecting life from conception, it considered reasonable and appropriate. Id. at 129-52. But when the issue became whether the victim of abortion is a living human being, Roe abstained. The decision, in effect, that the fetus may be killed whether or not a human being is the same in principle as a decision that an acknowledged human being may be killed. And it is fair to ask why, if Roe were in doubt, it did not give the benefit of that doubt to innocent life.

In light of the internal incoherence of Roe v. Wade itself, it is not surprising that the decision has fostered arbitrary judicial decisions in which practically the only prediction that can safely be made is that the ruling will be hostile to whatever state regulation of abortion happens to be at issue. See Uddo, A Wink from the Bench: The Federal Courts and Abortion, 53 Tul. L. Rev. 398 (1979). Indeed, even at the Supreme Court level, it is "painfully clear that no legal rule or doctrine is safe from ad hoc nullification by this Court when an occasion for its application arises in a case involving state regulation of abortion." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstets. & Gynecs., 476 U.S. 747, 814 (1986) (O'Connor, J., dissenting). With good reason it was said that Thornburgh "finds no justification in the Court's previous holdings, departs from sound principles of constitutional and statutory interpretation, and unduly limits the state's power to implement the legitimate (and in some circumstances compelling) policy of encouraging normal childbirth in preference to abortion." Id. at 798 (White, J., dissenting).

III. THE SOLUTION TO THE PROBLEMS CREATED BY ROE v. WADE IS TO ABANDON THE RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY THAT CASE AND TO RESTORE TO THE STATES AND CONGRESS THEIR RIGHTFUL POWERS TO LEGISLATE ON THE SUBJECT OF ABORTION.

The confusion and instability manifested in abortion decisions since 1973 by state and lower federal courts as well as by this Court are attributable to Roe v. Wade itself. By proclaiming as fundamental a privacy right to abortion that is devoid of any linkage to the text or history of the Constitution, as well as any linkage to the common meaning of the word "privacy," Roe virtually guaranteed that the implementation of that right would be as arbitrary as was its creation.

From its inception, Roe v. Wade could not have been based on anything other than uniquely controversial moral judgments that the Constitution does not make. Making them calls for a competence and democratic legitimacy that federal courts lack by design. As a result, it is not surprising that Roe v. Wade's sixteen-year journey through our system of justice has left a trail of unprincipled decisions and legislative confusion, which, unless ended, bode more of the same for the future. It is a journey that will place this Court ever more sharply at odds with firmly established limits on the role of courts in our society; with the idea of law itself as a set of binding principles that rise above the personal opinions of the men and women who enforce it; and with the democratice power of the states and their local subdivisions to order private and public life according to the different moral visions of their respective communities. "The Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution." Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 194 (1986).

In the interest of the orderly adjudication of constitutional cases, the solution should go to the source of the problem. Fortunately, this case presents an opportunity to resolve this problem by applying the principles this Court recently announced in Bowers. In holding that the right of privacy does not include a constitutional right to engage in sodomy, the Court identified "the nature of the rights qualifying for heightened judicial protection. In Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 326 . . . (1937), it was said that this category includes those fundamental liberties that are 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if (they) were sacrificed.' A different description of fundamental liberties appeared in Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 . . . . (1977) (opinion of Powell, J.), where they are characterized as those liberties that are 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.'" Id. at 191-92.

Measured by these criteria the asserted right to abortion ought to fail the test for inclusion in the list of fundamental liberties. As the Court said of sodomy in Bowers, "to claim that a right to engage in such conduct is 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' is, at best, facetious." Id. at 186.

It is past time to abandon the regime of heightened judicial scrutiny mandated by Roe v. Wade and to return to the tested formulation urged by Justice Rehnquist in his dissent in that case: "The test traditionally applied in the area of social and economic legislation is whether or not a law such as that challenged has a rational relation to a valid state objective." Roe, 410 U.S. at 173. A return to this principled standard will restore to the states and to the Congress their rightful powers to deal with this vital subject of abortion.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Amici Curiae submit that the judgment of the court of appeals from which this appeal is taken should be reversed, that the Missouri statutes involved should be upheld as constitutional, and the rule of Roe v. Wade should be abandoned.

Respectfully submitted,

JULES B. GERARD
School of Law
Washington University
St. Louis, MO 63130
314-889-6427
Counsel for The Center for Judicial Studies

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER; STATE OF MISSOURI,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES; PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF GREATER KANSAS CITY; HOWARD I. SCHWARTZ, M.D.; ROBERT L. BLAKE, M.D.; CARL C. PEARMAN, M.D.; CARROLL METZGER, R.N.C.; MARY L. PEMBERTON, B.S.W.,

Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court of Appeals For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE HOLY ORTHODOX CHURCH

JAMES GEORGE JATRAS*
PAUL FARLEY
ORTHODOX CHRISTIANS FOR LIFE
Post Office Box 805
Melville, New York 11747
(516) 271-4408

*Counsel of Record

Counsel for Amicus Curiae
February 21, 1989

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO., (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF FACTS 4

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 5

ARGUMENT 7

I. THIS IS AN APPROPRIATE CASE IN WHICH TO RECONSIDER ROE v. WADE 7

II. ROE v. WADE WAS WRONGLY DECIDED AND OUGHT TO BE OVERRULED 9

A. The Court's Finding in Roe v. Wade, That Abortion is Consistent With Historic Moral Practices, is Erroneous 10

1. Early Christian Writings, and the Fathers of the Church, All Condemned Abortion as Murder 11

2. The Early Church Recognized That Life Begins at Conception, and Rejected Distinctions Based Upon Fetal Development or Viability 12

B. Human Life Begins at Conception 17

C. A Human Life is a "Person" for Purposes of the Constitution 19

CONCLUSION 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES:

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 8

Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) 21

Levy v. Louisiana, 361 U.S. 68 (1968) 20

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 118 U.S. 394 (1886) 21, 22

United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 18

CONSTITUTIONAL MATERIALS:

U.S. Const. amend. V 7

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, sec. 1 ..... 7, 20, 21

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS:

Subcommittee on the Separation of Powers, Senate Committee on the Judiciary, The Human Life Bill, S.158, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981) 18

THEOLOGICAL MATERIALS:

Apostolic Canon 66 15

Athenagoras of Athens, Legation for Christians 12

Augustine of Hippo, On the Gift of Perserverence 16

St. Basil the Great, Letters 12, 13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Clement of Alexandria, Paedagogus 23

Council of Ancyra, Canon 21 15

The Didache, the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles 11

Ecclesiastes 14

The Epistle of Barnabas 11

Galatians 14

St. Gregory of Nyssa, On the Soul and the Resurrection 13

Isaiah 14

St. John Crysostom, Homilies in Romans 12

Jeremiah 14

Job 14

Fr. John Kowalczyk, An Orthodox View of Abortion 12

Luke 14

Archibishop Philaret of Chernigov, Historical Teaching of the Fathers of the Church 16

St. Photius, Letter to the Patriarch of Aquileia 16

Psalms 14

Quinisext Ecumenical Council, Canon 91 12

Fr. Seraphim (Rose), The Place of Blessed Augustine in the Orthodox Church 16

Tertullian of Carthage, Apology IX 13, 14

II Thessalonians 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

MISCELLANEOUS:

Bishop, The Privileges of Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, 79 Nw. U. L. Rev. 142 (1984) 21

East and Valentine, Reconciling Roe v. Wade..... 22

Eliot, American Historical Documents, 1000-1904..... 2

The Federalist, No. 37 (J. Madison)..... 2

The Federalist, No. 78 (A. Hamilton) 17

Haugh, Photius and the Carolingians..... 16

Horan, Grant, and Cunningham, Abortion and the Constitution..... 22

Locke, Second Treatise on Civil Government 3

Washington, First Inaugural Address..... 2

The Writings of Samuel Adams 22, 23

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER; STATE OF MISSOURI,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES; PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF GREATER KANSAS CITY; HOWARD I. SCHWARTZ, M.D.; ROBERT L. BLAKE, M.D.; CARL C. PEARMAN, M.D.; CARROLL METZGER, R.N.C.; MARY L. PEMBERTON, B.S.W.,

Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court of Appeals For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE HOLY ORTHODOX CHURCH

The Holy Orthodox Church respectfully submits this brief amicus curiae on behalf of itself and its members.[1]

[1] Counsel for Amicus has obtained the oral consent of both parties to this case. Written consent shall be filed with the Clerk of the Court immediately upon its receipt.

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Holy Orthodox Church was founded by Jesus Christ and the Apostles, and bears witness to that continuous and unbroken faith.[2] The precepts of the Orthodox Christian faith mandate the protection of innocent human life, especially that of unborn children. The Church regards abortion as murder, and as such, takes a very active role in opposing legalized abortion. That the issue of abortion has both a moral and a legal dimension to it, is indisputable. However, this cannot in any way be equated to an assertion that the two aspects are disparate, or unrelated. Rather, the two have historically been intertwined; it must be recognized that laws have traditionally been positive expressions of moral norms.

The Framers of the Constitution discerned a divine presence not only in daily living, but as reflected in the Constitution itself. "It is impossible for any man of pious reflection not to perceive in it a finger of that Almighty hand which has been so frequently and signally extended to our relief in the critical stages of the revolution."[3] That

---

[2] The Holy Orthodox Church includes all major Orthodox Christian groups in the United States: Albanian, American, Antiochian, Bulgarian, Carpatho-Russian, Greek, Romanian, Russian, Serbian, and Ukrainian. Regardless of the jurisdiction, all Orthodox Christians share a unity of faith and tradition extending back almost two thousand years to the time of Jesus Christ and the Apostles.

[3] The Federalist, No. 37 (J. Madison). George Washington echoed this sentiment. " . . . it would be peculiarly improper to omit, in this first official act, my fervant supplications to that Almighty Being, who rules over the universe, who presides in is, a law must of its very nature have a moral component to it, which cannot be divorced from the law itself.

(Continued on following page)

Legal precepts, particularly those of constitutional proportions, simply cannot be judged in a vacuum. This notion not only predates the Constitution;[4] it is at the very heart of our civilization. The foundations of our morality can be found in the dawn and early morning light of the Judeo-Christian tradition, of which the Orthodox Church is a unique custodian. From its inception nearly two thousand years ago, it has never deviated from its condemnation of abortion, based on numerous scriptural references and the teaching of the Holy Fathers of the Church. The Church regards the Roe v. Wade decision as a gruesome turn on the road of judicial activism, having resulted in a holocaust which has claimed at least twenty million innocent lives.[5] the council of nations, and whose providential aids can supply every human defect. . . . In tendering this homage to the great Author of every public and private good, I assure myself that it expresses your sentiments not less than my own. . . . No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand, which conducts the affairs of men, more than the people of the United States." Washington, First Inaugural Address, quoted in, Eliot, American Historical Documents, 1000-1904, at 226 (New York: P.F. Collier & Son Corp., 1938).

(Continued from previous page)

[4] See, e.g., John Locke, Second Treatise on Civil Government, ch. IV, secs. 22 and 23 (New York: Liberal Arts Press, 1952).

[5] This brief is filed with the blessings of: The American Carpatho-Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Diocese: His Grace,

(Continued on following page)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND STATEMENT OF FACTS

Amicus curiae adopts the statement of the case and the statement of the facts as set out in the Appellants' Brief.

(Continued from previous page)

Bishop Nicholas; V. Rev. Frank P. Miloro, Dean of Christ the Savior Orthodox Theological Seminary; The Anthiochian Orthodox Christian Archdiocese of North America: His Eminence, Most Rev. Metropolitan Philip; Rt. Rev. Antun, Auxiliary Bishop; V. Rev. Peter E. Gillquist, Chairman of the Council of Coordinators, Antiochian Evangelical Orthodox Mission, and member, Worship and Evangelization Committee, National Council of Churches; V. Rev. Jack N. Sparks, Dean of St. Athanasius College; The Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America: Rt. Rev. Maximos, Bishop of Pittsburgh; Rev. Dr. Stanley S. Harakas, Archbishop Iakovos Professor of Orthodox Theology and Christian Ethics, Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology; Rev. Dr. Theodore Stylianopoulos, Professor of New Testament and Orthodox Spirituality, Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology, and member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches; Rev. Fr. George A. Alexson, Secretary-Treasurer of the Greater Washington Orthodox Clergy Council, and Pastor, St. Katherine's Greek Orthodox Church of Northern Virginia; The Orthodox Church in America: His Beatitude Theodosius, Archbishop of Washington, Metropolitan of All America and Canada; Rt. Rev. Peter, Bishop of New York and New Jersey; Rt. Rev. Dimitri, Bishop of Dallas and the South; Rt. Rev. Herman, Bishop of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania; Rt. Rev. Gregory, Bishop of Sitka and Alaska; Rt. Rev. Nathaniel, Bishop of Detroit and the Romanian Episcopate; Rt. Rev. Job, Bishop of Hartford and New England; Rt. Rev. Tikhon, Bishop of San Francisco; Rt. Rev. Mark, Acting Bishop of Chicago and the

(Continued on following page)

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In this case, the Holy Orthodox Church seeks to restore to our nation's law the highest principle which a civilized society can espouse – the recognition that all

---

(Continued from previous page)

Midwest; V. Rev. Leonid Kishkovsky, Secretary of External and Ecumenical Affairs, and President-Elect of the National Council of Churches; V. Rev. John Meyendorff, Dean of St. Vladimir's Orthodox Theological Seminary, and Professor of Church History and Patristics; V. Rev. Daniel K. Donlick, Dean of St. Tikhon's Orthodox Theological Seminary; V. Rev. Joseph P. Kreta, Dean of St. Herman's Orthodox Theological Seminary; V. Rev. Thomas Hopko, Associate Professor of Dogmatic Theology, St. Vladimir's Orthodox Theological Seminary, and member, Faith and Order Commission of the World Council of Churches; V. Rev. John Kowalczyk, Adjunct Professor of Religious Education and the Christian Family, St. Tikhon's Orthodox Theological Seminary, and Pro-Life Coordinator of the Diocese of Eastern Pennsylvania; V. Rev. Vladimir Borichevsky, Professor of Moral and Pastoral Theology, St. Tikhon's Orthodox Theological Seminary; Rev. Fr. Alexander F.C. Webster, Senior Research Associate, Ethics and Public Policy Center, Washington, D.C. (for identification only); Holy Transfiguration Orthodox Monastery, Elwood City, Pennsylvania; Holy Dormition Orthodox Monastery, Rives Eaton, Michigan; The Russian Orthodox Church in Exile: His Eminence, Most Rev. Vitaly, Metropolitan of New York and Eastern America, First Heirarch of the Russian Orthodox Church in Exile; Most Rev. Anthony, Archbishop of Los Angeles and Southern California; Most Rev. Antony, Archbishop of San Francisco and Western America; Most Rev. Laurus, Archbishop of Syracuse and Holy Trinity Monastery, Rector of Holy Trinity Orthodox Seminary, and Abbot of Holy Trinity Orthodox Monastery, Jordanville, New York; Rt. Rev. Alypy, Bishop of Chicago, Detroit, and Midwest America; Rt. Rev. Hilarion, Bishop of Manhattan; Rt. Rev. Daniel, Bishop of Erie and Protector of the Old Rite; Rev. Fr. Alexey human life is sacred. In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Supreme Court relied heavily upon its presentation of historic Christianity's teaching and practices. The assertions made in Roe were erroneous, and have no foundation in the church's traditions. Rather than being ambivalent, or even condoning abortion, as suggested by the Roe Court's opinion, historic Christianity has always condemned abortion as murder, without regard for any distinctions as to fetal development or viability.

(Continued on following page)

The Roe Court also blurred the factual question of when life begins with the distinct legal question of what constitutional value attends to that life. The resulting

---

(Continued from previous page)

Young, Editor of 'Orthodox America'; Rev. Fr. Gregory Williams, Editor of 'Living Orthodoxy'; The Serbian Orthodox Church in the United States and Canada: His Grace, Bishop Christopher; The Ukrainian Orthodox Church of America and Canada: His Grace, Bishop Vsevolod.

In addition, this brief is endorsed by: Orthodox Christians for Life – John Protopapas, Co-Founder and Chairman; Rev. Fr. Edward Pehanich, Co-Founder and Spiritual Advisor, and Diocesean Representative for the Carpatho-Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Diocese; Valerie Protopapas, Educational Director, and Sanctity of Life Director for the Diocese of New York and New Jersey (OCA); and V. Rev. Gordon T. Walker, liaison to the Antiochian Evangelical Orthodox Mission. This brief is also endorsed by: Dr. Lewis J. Patsavos, Professor of Canon Law, and Dr. John Chirban, Professor of Psychology and Counseling, Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology; Dr. John Erikson, Professor of Canon law and Church History, St. Vladimir's Orthodox Theological Seminary; the Orthodox Christian Association of Medicine, Psychology, and Religion; the Orthodox Brotherhood of the United States; the National Association of Romanian Orthodox Women in America; and American Romanian Orthodox Youth.

confusion has tied the hands of legislators, and elevated abortion to the status of a near-absolute right. Unless this Court takes judicial notice, the factual question of when life begins is properly a subject for legislative findings. The strictly legal question of a life's constitutional value is the clear issue before this Court, as the State of Missouri has made an appropriate factual determination.

Science and history both mandate a conclusion that human life and constitutional personhood are coextensive, and any other result is without foundation in American jurisprudence. Consequently, the Holy Orthodox Church urges this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade, and accord full constitutional protection to all human life, beginning at conception.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS IS AN APPROPRIATE CASE IN WHICH TO RECONSIDER ROE v. WADE

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and in subsequent cases, this Court has never reached the critical legal and public policy issue, that of when life begins. Id. at 159. However, for constitutional purposes, it is entirely appropriate for this Court to undertake to construe the term "life" as it appears in both the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.[6] In the absence of a judicial determination, [6] "No person shall be . . . deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. . . ." U.S. Const. amend. V. "No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. . . ." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, sec. 1.

---

such matters have traditionally been committed to the political processes. Unfortunately, the Court has nonetheless proceeded to preclude any legislative determination of the question. Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 444 (1983).

This has created the confusing and circular assertion that life and personhood are unrelated, but nonetheless it is impermissible for legislatures to make findings as to when life begins. Unlike any other factual question, the political processes are now forbidden from employing the fruits of scientific research. If elected officials are to be prohibited, as a matter of law, from making necessary and proper factual findings, then this Court must determine for purposes of the Constitution, whether or not life is present in an unborn fetus. The State of Missouri has undertaken to make such a determination, and to address the merits of this case, this Court must make a ruling upon the validity of that assertion. Even though the question of when life begins may be difficult,[7] that does not remove the necessity of a just and proper judicial disposition of this case.

The Court has elevated abortion above all other constitutional rights; in practice, it may not be restricted, even if a life is indeed present. Unlike other constitutional rights, abortion need not be balanced against competing governmental interests. The implication is that the right to an abortion is more central to the tradition of individual liberty in America than the cherished rights of free speech and religion.

---

[7] Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 159 (1973).

The Missouri statute at issue here presents an important opportunity for this Court to resolve the ambiguities created by previous decisions, and clarify the precise relationship between human life and constitutional personhood. The Court need not make a ruling on the factual question of when life begins; indeed, this is properly left to legislatures and trial courts. However, it is imperative that there be a clear statement of the constitutional value of human life, whatever point science indicates it begins. If personhood does not attach until birth, then it is crucial to have guidance as to the legal status of pre-natal human life. The instant case frames the issue as clearly as is possible.

II. ROE v. WADE WAS WRONGLY DECIDED AND OUGHT TO BE OVERRULED

Amicus does not suggest to this Court that the theology or canons of the Orthodox Church, or of any other religious body, should form the basis of American constitutional law. However, in its lengthy historical exegesis, the Roe Court sought to show that abortion was philosophically and morally grounded in the Judeo-Christian tradition. To the extent such a perception is the foundation of Roe, the Orthodox Church bears an undivided witness to the fact that it is a perception which is utterly inconsistent with the experience of historic Christianity.

In the early centuries of the Church, its moral traditions and teachings were universally embraced, holding sway over almost the whole of Europe, the Middle East, and northern Africa, from Hadrian's Wall to the frontiers of the Persian Empire. Though this unanimity was later lost, the divergent moral strands of western thought, including Anglo-American jurisprudence, ultimately trace their lineage to this rich heritage.

A. The Court's Finding in Roe v. Wade, That Abortion is Consistent With Historic Moral Practices, is Erroneous

The Roe Court relied heavily upon the contention that "Christian theology and canon law came to fix the point of animation at 40 days for a male and 80 days for a female, a view that persisted until the 19th century," and that "there was otherwise little agreement about the precise time of formation or animation." 410 U.S. at 134. The Court apparently found that Aristotle's three stage theory of life formed the basis of Christianity's beliefs, and "came to be accepted by early Christian thinkers." Id. at 133, n.22. The implicit conclusion is that the ancient Christian Church did not consider abortion in early pregnancy to be the taking of a human life. With all due respect to this Honorable Court, such was simply not the case.

Early Christian thought was not in any sense comparable or equivalent to prior Jewish or Greco-Roman traditions. The Church's teaching represented a significant departure from Aristotelian thought, and from the beginning regarded abortion as abhorrent and an abomination before God. The biologically erroneous Aristotelian view was rarely alluded to, and even in such cases where mention was made of the attempted distinction between "formed" and "unformed" fetuses, it was for the purposes of reiterating its moral irrelevance. To the extent that some western Christian writers espoused certain elements of Aristotelian philosophy, they must be regarded as rather exceptional scholastic forays, whose basic premises and ultimate results have now been conclusively demonstrated to be false. The Christian Church, from its inception, expressed a distinct and fundamental horror of abortion, at whatever stage of pregnancy, and considered it to be the killing of a human being.

1. Early Christian Writings, and the Fathers of the Church, All Condemned Abortion as Murder

Among the most highly regarded of ancient Christian writings is the Didache, which dates from the late first century.[8] Its teaching is unambiguous: "Do not murder a child by abortion or kill a newborn infant." Id. at II, 2. This is echoed in another didactic writing universally esteemed in the ancient Church, the Epistle of Barnabas, from the early second century: "Never do away with an unborn child or destroy it after its birth." Id. at XIX, 5.

The writings of the Fathers of the Church and other authorities further attest to the unanimity with which abortion was condemned. Among the earliest was the philosopher and apologist Athenagoras of Athens, who wrote to the Emperor Marcus Aurelius (c.177) to defend Christians against false charges of murder: "What reason would we have to commit murder when we say that women who induce abortions are murderers, and will have to give account of it to God?"[9] St. Basil the Great (c.330-379) was unequivocable: "A woman who deliberately destroys a fetus is answerable for murder."[10] St. John Chrysostom (c.345-407) who in his famous homilies railed against men who secured the abortions of their illegitimate offspring, called their actions "even worse than murder." Of such men who impelled women to have abortions, he said, "You do not let a prostitute remain a prostitute, but make her a murderer as well."[11]

---

[8] Also known as The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, it is a codification of the oral tradition handed down by the Apostles to their successors. Cf. II Thessalonians 2:15. It was called "scripture" by Clement of Alexandria (+c.215), and was recommended for catechists by St. Athanasius (c.297-373).

Finally, Canon 91 of the Quinisext Ecumenical Council (691 A.D.), decreed that people "who furnish drugs for the purpose of procuring abortion, and those who take fetus-killing poisons, they are made subject to the penalty prescribed for murderers." The same canonical position along with the opinions of individual Church Fathers, were compiled in the Photian Collection, which was adopted as the official ecclesiastical law book of the Orthodox Church in 883 A.D.

2. The Early Church Recognized That Life Begins at Conception, and Rejected Distinctions Based Upon Fetal Development or Viability

The Roe Court observed that there was "little agreement about the precise time of formation or animation.

---

[9] Athenagoras, Legation for Christians, 6 Patrologia Graeca 969 (Paris: J.P. Migne ed., 1844-1865).

[10] St. Basil the Great, Letters CLXXXVIII, Canon 2.

[11] St. John Crysostom, Homilies in Romans, XXIV. See also the authoritative treatise by Fr. John Kowalczyk, An Orthodox View of Abortion, (Minneapolis: Light & Life Publishing Co., 2d ed. 1979).

There was agreement, however, that prior to this point the fetus was to be regarded as part of the mother, and its destruction, therefore, was not homicide." 410 U.S. at 134. This assertion has no basis in the practices or theology of historic Christianity.

Among the earliest testimonies that fetal development was irrelevant is that of St. Basil the Great, who wrote that "any hairsplitting distinction as to its being formed or unformed is inadmissible with us."[12] He also condemned suppliers of abortifacients, regardless of the stage of pregnancy: "Those who give potions for the destruction of a child conceived in the womb are murderers, as are those who take potions which kill the child."[13]

St. Basil's brother, St. Gregory of Nyssa (c.335-394), saw the fetus as a complete human being from the time of conception, and specifically rejected theories based upon formation or quickening: "There is no question about that which is bred in the uterus, both growing, and moving from place to place. It remains, therefore, that we must think that the point of commencement of existence is one and the same for body and soul."[14] Even Tertullian of Carthage (c.160-c.230), a prominent Latin ecclesiastical writer who seemed to accept the formed/unformed distinction as a biological matter, dismissed its moral importance: "Abortion is a precipitation of murder, nor does it matter whether or not one takes a life when formed, or [12] St. Basil the Great, supra note 10.

---

[13] Id., Canon 8 (emphasis supplied.)

[14] St. Gregory of Nyssa, On the Soul and the Resurrection.

drives it away when forming, for he is also a man who is about to be one."[15]

Though less specific, Holy Scripture also recognizes that an unborn child's life is sacred, and begins no later than conception: "Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I appointed you a prophet to the nations." Jeremiah 1:5, 6.[16] Also noteworthy is St. Luke's use of the same Greek word, brephos (baby), for both the unborn St. John the Baptist (Luke 1:44) and the newly-born Christ child (Luke 2:12). Even more indicative are those examples, in both Old and New Testaments, where God enters into a direct personal relationship with a specific individual before birth, by "consecrating," "appointing," "calling," and "setting apart" the unborn child through His grace.[17] This testifies to the Bible's view that the fetus is not only a human being but a person. That this understanding of an unborn person's receptivity to divine grace extends back to conception is further evidenced by the ancient practice, as formalized in the Church calendar, of celebrating not only the conception of Christ (Annunciation, March 25), but that of His mother (December 9), and St. John the Baptist (September 23).

The canon law of the ancient Church, still in effect in the Orthodox Church today, is entirely consistent with the foregoing exposition of theological, patristic, and

---

[15] Tertullian of Carthage, Apology IX.

[16] See also, Job 10:8, 9, 11; Psalms 139:13-16; Ecclesiastes 11:5; Luke 1:41-44.

[17] See, e.g., Psalms 139:13-16; Isaiah 44:2; Isaiah 49:1, 5; Jeremiah 1:5; and Galatians 1:15-16.

scriptural evidence. The first canonical pronouncement specifically on abortion was that of the regional Council of Elvira, Spain (c.303 A.D.), imposing life-long excommunication. In 314-315 A.D., the regional Council of Ancyra adopted Canon 21:

> Regarding women who become prostitutes and kill their babies, and who make it their business to concoct abortives, the former rule barred them for life from communion, and they are left without recourse. But, having found a more philanthropic alternative, we have fixed the penalty at ten years, in accordance with the fixed degrees.

The reference to prostitutes attests to the Fathers' recognition that abortion was only resorted to by women in the most desperate social circumstances. Three centuries into the Christian era, abortion was unthinkable to the broad mass of Christian people; canon law was adopted which lightened the penalty imposed upon those most in need of mercy. More importantly, the "former rule," imposing life-long excommunication, is Apostolic Canon 66, which pertains to homicide.[18] The fact that for centuries the Church treated abortion at any stage of pregnancy as homicide, without regard to fetal development, is indicative of the illusory nature of the formed/unformed distinction.

In addition, the Roe Court's reliance upon the writings of Augustine of Hippo (354-430) and Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274), as indicative of early Christian [18] Apostolic Canon 66 permitted penitents to return to communion only on their deathbeds. As the name suggests, an Apostolic Canon is a teaching received directly from the Twelve Apostles.

---

thought was misplaced.[19] While concepts such as "ensoulment" or "quickening" gained some currency in certain ecclesiastical circles beginning in the fifth century, this serves only to underscore the danger inherent in drawing broad-based conclusions based upon excerpts of writings from selected theologians. Augustine never laid claim to being infallible, nor did he presume to speak for the entire Church.[20] In fact, in the conclusion of his final treatise, he offered his opinions humbly to the judgment of the Church: "Let those who think that I am in error consider again and again carefully what is here said, lest perchance they themselves may be mistaken. And when, by means of those who read my writings, I become not only wiser, but even more perfect, I acknowledge God's favor to me."[21]

However, there is no doubt that despite their misunderstanding of fetal development, they sought to protect

---

[19] 410 U.S. at 133 n.22.

[20] "If some have spoken imprecisely, or for some reason unknown to us, even deviated from the right path, but no question was put to them nor did anyone challenge them to learn the truth – we admit them to the list of Fathers, just as if they had not said it, because of their righteousness of life and distinguished virtue and their faith, faultless in other respects. We do not, however, follow their teaching in which they stray from the path of truth." St. Photius, Letter to the Patriarch of Aquileia, quoted in, Haugh, Photius and the Carolingians, 136-137 (Belmont, Mass: Nordland, 1975); and Archbishop Philaret of Chernigov, 3 Historical Teaching of the Fathers of the Church, 254-255 (St. Petersburg, 1882).

[21] Augustine of Hippo, On the Gift of Perseverance, ch. 68. See also, Fr. Seraphim (Rose), The Place of Blessed Augustine in the Orthodox Church (Platina, California: St. Herman of Alaska Brotherhood, 1983).

the fetus and considered its destruction homicide. We can, with the benefit of historical and scientific hindsight, attribute the misapplication of a correct impulse to a biological error stemming ultimately from Aristotle. The Roe Court adopted this error as the basis of its analysis of the moral acceptability of abortion over the past two thousand years; but as would be the case with a hypothetical body of jurisprudence based on the Ptolemaic geocentric system or the phlogiston theory of combustion, this Court should not hesitate to look beyond what we now understand to be a factual error, albeit a persistent one.

Historic Christianity recognized conception as the time at which life and soul were united, and regarded abortion at any stage of pregnancy as homicide. Though the Orthodox Church, for historical reasons relating to its organizational and doctrinal continuity with historic Christianity, is more acutely aware of this fact, this should not be taken as sectarian pleading. Rather, it is a unique witness to an older and sounder tradition that is our common heritage. The fact that the theological writings of Christian antiquity were formulated by men with little understanding of biology, but whose views are entirely compatible with our modern understanding, is further testament to their moral perspicacity.

B. Human Life Begins at Conception

The incorrectness of the Roe Court's assertion that there has been a historic lack of consensus on abortion has been demonstrated in section II A, supra. Even so, it is not the judiciary's proper role to evaluate consensus. The Federalist No. 78 (A. Hamilton.) The legal and social morass resulting from the Roe decision is in large part a product of the confusion over what was actually decided. The Roe Court blurred the strictly factual question of when life begins with the quite distinct legal determination of what constitutional value attends to that life.

Modern science has borne out the prescient wisdom of the Holy Fathers of the Church, that life begins at conception, and at no other arbitrary or scholastically derived juncture.[22] However, this Court need not make a scientific determination of when life begins, any more than it was necessary in Roe to determine when a fetus is "viable;" this is a matter which is properly committed to the political processes. The Missouri legislature has undertaken to make findings of fact, as is appropriate in matters of social and economic regulation. It is improper for the judiciary to enjoin the political processes from determining the factual basis for proposed legislation. Traditionally, the federal courts give the greatest possible deference to legislative determinations with respect to such questions.[23]

This Court need only interpret the term "person," and thereby determine the constitutional value of unborn human life. Unless this Court should foreclose the option by taking judicial notice, or adopting a constitutional definition of "life" embracing a manifest legal fiction, the [22] See, Subcommittee on the Separation of Powers, Senate Committee on the Judiciary, The Human Life Bill, S. 158, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 7-13 (1981).

---

[23] United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152-153 n.4 (1938).

State of Missouri is entitled to make a judgment as to when life begins. The judiciary's role is to determine the constitutional value of that life.

C. A Human Life is a "Person" for Purposes of the Constitution

To the extent that a construction of the term "person," as used in the Constitution, was made in Roe, it was done on the basis of the facts as presented and understood by the Court as that time. Amicus respectfully submits that the factual underpinnings of Roe v. Wade were erroneous, or at best incomplete. Reliance upon Aristotle and other selected writers from antiquity do not validate the Roe Court's conclusion that the morality of abortion has traditionally been ambivalent. As shown supra, some theorists have had erroneous views of the factual question of when life begins, but there has been no divergence as to the legal and moral value of that life once it has been established.

In Roe the Court went to some lengths to demonstrate that most references to "persons" in the Constitution had solely a postnatal connotation. However, this begs the question as to what "person" means in the Fourteenth Amendment. It must also be observed that most constitutional references to persons only dealt with adults, and in the original intent of the document, only white males. However, again, this still does not speak to the Fourteenth Amendment, which obviously was intended to vindicate the rights of black children as well as adults, and has subsequently been applied to protect the rights of women as well as men. There is no basis in history, jurisprudence, or simple logic to justify specially exempting the unborn from the scope of the Amendment.

Furthermore, the appropriate constitutional definition of "person" has already been made by this Court. Justice Douglas, writing for the Court, found that illegitimate children are "persons," on the grounds that:

> They are humans, live, and have their being. They are clearly "persons" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Levy v. Louisiana, 361 U.S. 68, 70 (1968).

Unborn children clearly are human, do live, and have their being, in accordance with Justice Douglas' perceptive holding. An unborn child has as little control over its status as an illegitimate child, and is far more vulnerable. They are "persons" under the Constitution, and there is no rational basis whatsoever for creating an arbitrary or scholastic distinction so as to exclude them.

Another critical distinction which the Roe Court ignored was the Fourteenth Amendment's differentiation of citizenship and personhood:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.[24]

As understood by the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment, citizenship relates to political rights, while personhood deals with the more basic rights inherent in all human beings. See, e.g., Bishop, The Privileges or Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, 79 Nw. U. L. Rev. 142, 151-153 (1984). The latter is a much broader classification than the former, encompassing both citizens and non-citizens; all citizens are persons, but the reverse is not true. Even a decision as monstrous as Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857), conceded that slaves were persons under the Constitution, but denied them the privileges of citizenship.

---

[24] U.S. Const. amend. XIV, sec. 1 (emphasis supplied).

Therefore, the many references to "persons" cited by the Roe Court in support of its finding of purely post-natal application were, contextually, referring to persons who were also citizens.[25] The references to "persons" relied upon by the Roe Court were made in political contexts, such as eligibility to vote or to hold political office, which of course would preclude all persons under a certain age, whether born or not. Such strict textual interpretation, done without regard for historical meaning and context, is devoid of constitutional justification.

In addition, this Court had already, some eighty-seven years prior to Roe, recognized corporations as "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment. Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 118 U.S. 394, 396 (1886). That corporations are not male, female, black, white, pre-natal, nor post-natal, is transparently obvious. There is also no conflict between the recognition of personhood, but simultaneous denial of citizenship, as corporations cannot vote nor hold political office. Thus, while Santa Clara is entirely consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment, Roe is not. The distinctions made in Roe and its progeny are artificial and have no basis in the adjudication of constitutional claims. This is made readily apparent through attempting to reconcile Santa Clara and Roe. Reading them together creates a result which is "hauntingly Orwellian – something can be a person without being human, and can be human without being a person.[26] No civilized society can possibly endorse such a conclusion.

---

[25] 410 U.S. at 157.

The instant case clearly frames the contradictions and ambiguities precipitated by the Roe decision, and Amicus urges this Court to resolve them by reaffirming the moral, social, and legal recognition of the value of unborn human life.

CONCLUSION

The historic morality which forms the foundation of American constitutional thought is firmly grounded in the Judeo-Christian tradition. That tradition has unambiguously recognized that life begins at conception, and that abortion is murder. The notion that abortion on demand is an inherent right which cannot be denied, is of recent origin. Samuel Adams recognized that such innovations should be resisted: "If the liberties of America are ever compleatly ruined, . . . it will in all probability be the consequence of a mistaken notion of prudence, which leads men to acquiesce in measures of the most destructive tendency for the sake of present ease."[27]

[26] East and Valentine, Reconciling Roe v. Wade, in Horan, Grant, and Cunningham, Abortion and the Constitution, at 90 (Washington: Georgetown University Press, 1987).

The "present ease" of abortion on demand does not, and cannot, alter the historical and moral truth that "universal life would proceed according to nature if we would practice continence from the beginning instead of destroying, through immoral and pernicious acts, human beings who are given birth by Divine Providence."[28] The assembled jurisdictions of the Holy Orthodox Church in the United States speak with one voice in urging this Court to recognize the sanctity of human life, and reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals.

Dated this 21st day of February, 1989.

Respectfully submitted,

James George Jatras*
Paul Farley
Orthodox Christians for Life
Post Office Box 805
Melville, New York 11747
(516) 271-4408

*Counsel of Record

[27] 2 The Writings of Samuel Adams, 287-288 (New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, H.A. Cushing ed., 1904) (emphasis in original).

[28] Clement of Alexandria, II Paedagogus, ch. X, 96, I.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE MISSOURI CATHOLIC CONFERENCE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

DAVID M. HARRIS*
J. ROGER EDGAR
BERNARD C. HUGER
KATHLEEN M. BOOZANG
GREENSFELDER, HEMKER & GALE, P.C.
Suite 1800, Equitable Bldg.
10 South Broadway
St. Louis, Missouri 63102
(314) 241-9090

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae Missouri Catholic Conference

*Counsel of Record

Of Counsel:

LOUIS C. DEFEO, JR.
General Counsel
MISSOURI CATHOLIC CONFERENCE
600 Clark Avenue
P. O. Box 1022
Jefferson City, MO 65102

February 21, 1989

St. Louis Law Printing Co., Inc., 13305 Manchester Road 63131 314-231-4477

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Table of Authorities	ii
Statement of Interest	1
Summary of the Argument	3
Argument	5
I. A Rational Relationship Test Should Be Employed By The Courts When Reviewing The Constitutionality Of State Legislation Regulating Abortion Because There Is No Fundamental Right To An Abortion	5
A. The History And Tradition Of The Nation, When Considered At The Time Of Informed Public Debate, Shows Fundamental Disputes Over, If Not The Repudiation Of, Abortion Upon Demand	6
B. No Fundamental Right To Abortion On Demand Can Be Implied From A Privacy Right	12
II. Missouri's Statutes Are Rationally Related To Its Legitimate Interest Of Protecting The Life Of The Unborn And Are Therefore Constitutional	18
Conclusion	22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases:

Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986) 5,6,12,13,14

Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471 (1970) 16

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 6,12

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 5,20

Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U.S. 349 (1908) 14

Lindsay v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972) 16

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 5,20,21

Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982) 4,20,21

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 4,20

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim

San Antonio School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973).....12,13,15

Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) 13,14

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (1986) (White, J. dissenting).....6,12,13

United States v. 12 200-Ft. Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973) .. 14,17

Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) 20

Statutes:

Mo.Rev.Stat. §§188.210 and 188.215 (1989) 18

Mo.Rev.Stat. §188.205 (1989) 18

Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 (1989) 19

Treatises and Commentaries:

Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities; A Reaffirmation . 2

B. George, State Legislatures versus the Supreme Court: Abortion Legislation in the 1980's, 12 Pepperdine Law Review 427 (1985) 6

Imber, Abortion and the Private Practice of Medicine (1986) 7,8,9,10

Taussig, The Prevention and Treatment of Abortion 162 (1910) 9,10,11

Callahan, How Technology is Framing the Abortion Debate, Hastings Center Report, Feb., 1986 at 33 . 10

Bartlett & Hoffman, Missouri Indigent Health Care Study (April, 1986) 18

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE MISSOURI CATHOLIC CONFERENCE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Missouri Catholic Conference is the joint public policy agency of the four Catholic dioceses of Missouri. It was formed in 1967 to promote the material and spiritual well being of all people in the State of Missouri in fields of health, education and social welfare. The board of directors of the Missouri Catholic Conference consists of the Catholic Bishops in the State of Missouri who represent the 800,000 Catholic residents of Missouri.

The interest of the Missouri Catholic Conference in this case arises from the position of the Catholic Church as expressed by the National Council of Catholic Bishops, which includes all of the Catholic Bishops of Missouri, that "human life is a precious gift from God; that each person who receives this gift has responsibilities toward God, toward self and toward others and that society through its laws and social institutions, must protect and sustain human life at every stage of existence. These convictions grow out of [the] Church's constant witness that life must be protected with the utmost care from the moment of conception." Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities; A Reaffirmation, Nov. 14, 1985. Based on these principles, the Missouri Catholic Conference supported, through testimony before committees of the Missouri General Assembly, the legislation which is the subject of this lawsuit.

The Missouri Catholic Conference believes that the Missouri legislature should be permitted to express the wishes of the majority of the residents of the State, including the Catholics of Missouri, regarding when an unborn child is deemed to be a human being, and regarding the use of public facilities or public employees to perform or assist in an abortion as provided in the challenged statute.

This Amicus supports the position of the Attorney General of Missouri that if Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) constitutes authority for the decision of the Eighth Circuit in its overturning of the Missouri statutes in this case, then that decision and its premises should be reconsidered.

Specifically, this Amicus will address, first, the question of whether the holding of Roe v. Wade that a woman has a fundamental right to abortion should be reconsidered, and, second, the question of whether the Missouri statute declaring that life begins at conception and making it unlawful: (i) for public employees within the scope of their employment to perform or assist in an abortion not necessary to save a life of the mother; and (ii) for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting in an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother, are within the permitted scope of legislative authority.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

1. The holding in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) that a woman has a fundamental right to an abortion, should be reconsidered and rejected in favor of evaluating state abortion regulation under the rational relationship test.

Fundamental rights are found only in the express language of the Constitution or are implied from the history and tradition of our Nation. Because there is admittedly no express right to an abortion in the Constitution, such a right can only exist if implied.

The history and tradition of the Nation should be considered from that point at which medical science enabled the public to be informed regarding abortion, in particular the life of the unborn. This history — from the late Nineteenth Century to date — shows, at best, sincere and deep division about the permissibility of abortion. Roe v. Wade erroneously relied upon historical events and thinking based on information that predated the development of current medical understanding — information which even Roe v. Wade acknowledged was incorrect. This reliance on unenlightened history allowed Roe v. Wade to take the ambivalence of long past times as a social decision to permit abortion.

Similarly, Roe v. Wade employed an incorrect test for implying fundamental rights. The abortion right was implied from an implied right of procreation which was in turn implied from the implied right of privacy. However, no privacy right exists because of the presence of the life of the unborn. In addition, by simply implying a right to abortion, Roe v. Wade failed to apply the proper standard for declaring fundamental rights. An implied right is found only when it derives from an express protection in the Constitution. To determine whether there is such a right it is necessary to ascertain whether the abortion decision is an inherent component of some express Constitutional right. This Court's decisions in areas of education, housing and public welfare establish that implied rights are not found just because a person may suffer physical, emotional or social harm. Roe v. Wade incorrectly relied upon potential burdens from carrying a child and thereafter raising that child to derive a fundamental right to abortion. Consequently, no fundamental right is involved when states, such as Missouri, refuse to subsidize a woman's wish to be relieved of the burden of bearing and raising a child. Those state regulations should be judged only on a rational relationship basis.

2. Missouri's statutory declaration of life at conception and prohibition of abortion services at public facilities or by public employees is rationally related to Missouri's legitimate state interest of protecting unborn life.

Missouri has the right to adopt a statutory theory that life begins at conception, because the statute contains no restrictions on abortion rights and legitimate state interests are served by giving protections to the unborn from conception.

Finally, Missouri has the right to refuse to subsidize abortion by denying access to its publicly supported facilities and its employees for abortion services, pursuant to Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977). The Eighth Circuit's holding in Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), that governmental entities must permit private pay abortions in public facilities, should be overturned as incompatible with Poelker v. Doe.

ARGUMENT

I. A RATIONAL RELATIONSHIP TEST SHOULD BE EMPLOYED BY THE COURTS WHEN REVIEWING THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATE LEGISLATION REGULATING ABORTION BECAUSE THERE IS NO FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT TO AN ABORTION.

It is well established that absent a countervailing fundamental right, states may fully regulate the activities of their citizens so long as the regulations bear a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest. See Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 470 (1977); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 324-25 (1980). As this Court has repeatedly admonished, the rational relationship test requires only that the reviewing court find that the state regulation bears some rational relationship to a legitimate state interest. See Maher, 488 U.S. at 326. Once that finding is made, no further scrutiny of the state regulation is constitutionally permissible even though the state regulation may be inartfully crafted to effect its purpose or there may be superior methods of achieving the state's purpose. See Id.

A heightened level of scrutiny is permissible only when the state regulation unduly burdens a constitutional right fundamental to the people. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 155 (1973). In this context, fundamental rights are found only in the express language of the Constitution or in the history and tradition of the Nation as inherent features of the liberty assured to the people in the Fourteenth Amendment. See Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2844 (1986).

In the context of the states' regulation of abortion, it is beyond dispute that the express language of the Constitution contains no protection for the abortion decision. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 116 n.2 (1973). Thus, if a woman's right to an abortion exists, it can only be found if the right to an abortion is a part of the history and tradition of our Nation inherent to our concept of liberty as embodied in the Fourteenth Amendment. See Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2194 (1986) (White, J. dissenting); Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2844 (1986); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 493-94 (1965). Although Roe v. Wade purported to find a fundamental right to an abortion, it did so by ignoring the traditional analysis, and by simply extrapolating the right to an abortion from an implied right to privacy.

A. The History And Tradition Of The Nation, When Considered At The Time Of Informed Public Debate, Shows Fundamental Disputes Over, If Not The Repudiation Of, Abortion Upon Demand.

If our Nation's history and tradition shows anything in this area it is that we, as a people, are deeply divided over the question of abortion. From the outset, this Court has acknowledged "the sensitive and emotional nature of the abortion controversy, of the vigorous opposing views, even among physicians and of the deep and seemingly absolute convictions that the subject inspires." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 116 (1973). See also, Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ____ U.S. ____, ____ 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2184 (1986) ("[A]bortion raises moral and spiritual questions over which honorable persons can disagree sincerely and profoundly.") Thus, the most that can be said of history's view of abortion is that "many men and women of good will and high commitment to constitutional government place themselves on both sides of the abortion controversy. . . ." Id. at 2196 (White, J., dissenting).

For example, at the time Roe v. Wade was decided, thirty-one states had criminalized abortion except to save the life of the mother. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 118-19 n.2. Of the remaining states, abortion was permitted only to safeguard the health of the mother, with a few of those states allowing abortion if the child was severely handicapped or the product of rape or incest. See, B. George, State Legislatures versus the Supreme Court: Abortion Legislation in the 1980's, 12 Pepperdine Law Review 427, 441 (1985). Only three states permitted abortion for convenience, the result embraced by Roe v. Wade. Id. at 441-42. Since Roe v. Wade, legislative activity to narrow abortion practice has accelerated. Nearly every state has promulgated new legislation since 1973 to restrict abortion. Id. at 427. It is reported that well over one hundred statutory formulations regulating abortion practice have evolved since 1973. Id.[1]

The judiciary's experience mirrors the tensions and divisiveness within society over this issue. No less than 250 federal court decisions and countless state decisions have been handed down since Roe v. Wade regarding the permissible scope of abortion. Not even this Court has been immune from the controversy. More than any other single issue, abortion regulation has dominated the constitutional landscape of this Court for more than fifteen years producing no less than 10 decisions, almost all of which were decided by the slimmest of margins. And with each new decision another outbreak of legislative resistance occurs. See, B. George, supra p. 7, at 511-12.

The only conclusion one can draw from this history is that the people, or at least a substantial majority of them, have chafed against the holding in Roe v. Wade. Although, it may be fair also to say there is no unity of views, that concedes a priori that abortion has never been a part of the history and tradition of our Nation such that it is inherent in our concept of liberty.

The same may also be said for the religious, moral, and even scientific debate over abortion. See generally, Imber, Abortion and the Private Practice of Medicine (1986). There is no consensus, and none has ever existed.

---

[1] The federal government has not been immune from the vicissitudes of the abortion debate. The so-called Hyde Amendment restricting the use of federal funds, in various formulations, has already been approved by the Court. See, Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980).

Roe v. Wade's discussion of our history and tradition shows, at best, that there was ambiguity in the views of those scholars of earlier times who focused on "quickening" as a noteworthy event during pregnancy. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 130-147 (1973). However, ancient, medieval, Victorian, and even some early thinkers of this century cannot be said meaningfully to have considered and resolved the abortion question as we know it today because the science of those times did not identify the character of the unborn nor were abortion services, as we know them today, readily available so that anyone could even be given the opportunity meaningfully to debate the question.

It is now acknowledged that "[i]gnorance about the biological origins and development of life also resulted in many differences of opinion about the circumstances in which abortion should be permitted. But with the increased sophistication of scientific medicine in the nineteenth century, a new consensus began to form among physicians." Imber, Abortion and the Private Practice of Medicine 2 (1986). Once science developed an understanding of unborn life akin to that possessed today, the medical community at first, and then society at large, rebelled against the concept of abortion:

> Nineteenth-century American doctors' efforts to restrict abortion were indebted to a growing understanding of fetal development, as yet unknown to the lay population: "Scientifically, regulars had realized for some time that conception inaugurated a more or less continuous process of development which would produce a new human being if uninterrupted. . . . From this scientific reasoning stemmed the regulars' moral opposition to abortion at any state in gestation." (Mohr, 1978:35-36). . . . The cultural resistance to abortion in America originated not in public opinion or in particular theological doctrine as much as in the medical profession's commitment to scientific findings. . . . Instead of creating new exceptions to the laws > prohibiting abortion, the scientific knowledge of conception formed the basis for a powerful opposition to it and strengthened theological valuation of the sanctity of unborn life.

Id. at 3.

Thus, by the beginning of this century, the leading medical thinkers had concluded that abortion was only permissible when necessary to save the life or physical well-being of the mother. See Taussig, The Prevention and Treatment of Abortion 162 (1910).[2]

It was this first real understanding of the scientific evidence regarding fetal life that produced any meaningful social debate and that debate resulted in a societal decision beginning in the Nineteenth Century to criminalize abortion in most states. Imber, supra p. 9, at 2. Thus, when Roe v. Wade purports to find up until the late Nineteenth Century that "abortion was viewed with less disfavor than under most American statutes currently in effect," that finding is correct as far as it goes, but it fails to go far enough. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 114. The error in Roe v. Wade is that the Court failed to recognize that the dramatic shift in public sentiment to outlaw abortion was directly attributable to the medical ability to document the existence of fetal life not only before birth but before quickening as well. As the scholars predicted nearly eighty years ago:

> The myth that life does not begin until fetal movements are felt ["quickening"] is still so widespread that it will take many years before it is finally put aside. Almost daily the physician hears the story that the woman did not think it was wrong to stop pregnancy in the early months before the child was alive. . . . Women of all classes should know more concerning the processes of gestation. They should be shown how early the fetal heart begins to pump blood through the vessels.

---

[2] Dr. Taussig is recognized as the early pioneer in medical-social thought regarding abortion. See, Imber, Abortion and the Private Practice of Medicine at 3-4 (1986).

Taussig, The Prevention and Treatment of Abortion 79 (1910).

Society can be said to have developed its "history and tradition" with respect to abortion only after society has assimilated the scientific knowledge of fetal life. Technology, having framed the abortion issue, cannot be ignored when searching for society's values. See Callahan, How Technology is Framing the Abortion Debate, Hastings Center Report, Feb., 1986 at 33. Yet Roe v. Wade, with its inconsistent adherence to antiquated medical science to define the abortion right, disregarded the role that current scientific discoveries have played in framing the abortion issue for debate and resolution in the public forum during the last of the Nineteenth and the Twentieth Centuries.[3]

---

[3] One example of this distortion is found in the treatment of medical science's progress in reducing the mother's morbidity and mortality from the abortion procedure. Roe v. Wade declares that with advances in medical science it was safer for a mother to have an abortion in the first trimester than to undergo a full term pregnancy, and therefore abortions could not be forbidden for any reason by the states during the first trimester. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 163 (1973). Yet the historical motivations behind those advances in medical science were manifestly not to enhance a mother's right to seek abortion for convenience, but effectively to deal with the problem of incomplete illegal abortions and safely to perform those abortions when necessary for maternal health. See Imber, Abortion and the Private Practice of Medicine 7 (1986). However, the possibility that such improvements would be later distorted into some unwanted endorsement of abortion for convenience, was predicted by Dr. Taussig in 1910.

> "Taussig recognized that improved medical treatment of abortion had the unintended consequence of making the procedure a safer, and therefore, more reasonable form of birth control:
>
> > The discovery of asepsis and antisepsis has not proved any unmixed blessing. Criminal abortion can, at the present time, be done with less danger of blood-poisoning than formerly. The result is inevitable. One of the main detriment factors in the production of abortion is gone when the woman realizes that her own life is not necessarily imperiled."
>
> Id. at 7, quoting Taussig, The Prevention and Treatment of Abortion 78-79 (1910).

Not that Dr. Taussig wanted mothers to go at risk for appropriate abortions, rather he was concerned that developing safe medical abortion procedures for those limited situations noted above would be misinterpreted as approval for abortion. It is ironic that the Twentieth Century's first pioneer in developing safe abortion procedures would have his medical achievements used to insulate constitutionally abortion on demand — a phenomenon Dr. Taussig predicted would "become one of the most serious sociological problems of the coming years, for every community must in self-preservation erect laws and exert its utmost influence to stem this tide that will otherwise sweep it to destruction. Taussig, The Prevention and Treatment of Abortion 79 (1910)

Clearly then, the historical sources relied upon by Roe v. Wade are irrelevant because the medical scholars, and, it follows, society at large, lacked the current scientific knowledge of the consequences of the abortion decision with respect to the fetus. Once science developed to the point of making abortion for convenience a possible choice, and identified the life of the unborn, the people reacted with the regulatory proscriptions struck down by Roe v. Wade. Thus, the only meaningful history and tradition of our Nation regarding abortion shows that, when armed with the relevant knowledge, society rejected the notion of a right to an abortion on demand.

No one can question that the relevant time frame in which to examine whether a right has become a part of our history and tradition is when society is fully informed of the facts underlying that right. For example, historical concepts of procreation are largely unhelpful when one is called upon to decide whether genetic engineering can be regulated given that society has not, until recently, been supplied with any information to be able to judge such a phenomenon.

This is manifestly not a tyranny of an ephemeral majority as some have suggested. See Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2181 n.4 (1986) (Stevens, J., concurring). Rather, the bulwark against such tyranny is contained in the express limitations on governmental authority set forth in the Constitution. See Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2844 (1986). However, when grappling with a "right" to be implied by the Court from the vague concept of liberty, this Court has counseled that only when our Nation's history and tradition clearly supports such a right, will such a right be found. Otherwise, the Court begins imposing its will as that of the people, rather than permitting the elected representatives to express the will of the people through legislation. See Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2846 (1986); San Antonio School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 30-31 (1973); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 501-502 (1965) (Harlen, J., concurring).

In sum, Roe v. Wade takes distant historical ambivalence toward abortion that was borne of ignorance and elevates that uninformed ambivalence to a fundamental right to an abortion. There is no dispute that once medical science dispelled historical concepts relied upon in Roe v. Wade, and allowed society to evaluate the merits of abortion in an informed manner, society rejected abortion on demand as a component of our fundamental sense of liberty. The most that has ever been said is that once the populace was informed, it became bitterly divided on the issue. This clearly falls short of the finding that abortion on demand is so rooted in the traditions and collective conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 493 (1965) (Goldberg, J., concurring).

B. No Fundamental Right To Abortion On Demand Can Be Implied From A Privacy Right.

Similarly flawed is Roe v. Wade's suggestion that an abortion right is necessarily implied from the implied right of privacy. First, it is disingenuous to suggest that a fundamental right to abortion is present because the decision to bear a child is within the privacy zone of the individual, when at the same time the Court has declared that the "woman cannot be isolated in her privacy." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 159 (1973). The woman is not alone because of the life of another — the unborn. All recognize that some sort of other life is involved in the decision to abort regardless of whether it is labelled "potential life" — "fetal life" — or "life."

The presence of the other life, however characterized, destroys the mother's purported privacy interest to have an abortion. Thus, the abortion decision is inherently different from other contexts where privacy rights are found because none of those situations involves another life. See e.g., Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969).

Merely because this life is not yet a person within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment does not mean that its presence can be totally ignored. As this Court observed in Bowers v. Hardwick, a privacy right does not attach to all activities in which there is no other person involved. 106 S.Ct. at 2846 ("Stanley itself recognized that its holding offered no protection for the possession in the home of drugs, firearms, or stolen goods.") Thus, the distinction between the day before conception and the day after is the presence of another life that precludes a finding that a woman is in her privacy. Cf., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2187 (1986) (Stevens, J., concurring).

Second, Roe v. Wade implied the right of abortion from another implied right, i.e. procreation, which was found from the implied right of privacy. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153 (1973). This approach improperly mixes concepts and constitutional analysis for finding a fundamental right. For each fundamental right implied from the broad guarantee of liberty, the Court must discover some basis in the Constitution. See San Antonio School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 33 (1972). It is improper simply to state that new fundamental rights can be implied as incident to the implied privacy right. This presupposes that the privacy right is absolute with the result that all so-called "private" decisions are automatically gathered within the fundamental rights category.[4] However it is beyond dispute that there is no absolute "privacy right." See Bowers v. Hardwick, ____ U.S. ____, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986). Whether a privacy right can be implied depends upon resort to the express provisions of the Constitution. Roe conveniently ignores this burden by simply implying the abortion right as necessarily included in the privacy or procreation rights. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 152-53 (1973).

Beyond the stark declaration of the privacy right to abortion, the only justification offered in Roe v. Wade for finding a fundamental right is a panoply of potential social burdens and hardships. Id. at 153. Among the interests of the women identified by Roe v. Wade is the physical burden of carrying a child to term, the mental and physical wear and tear in raising a child, the problem of an unwanted child and the possibility of a social stigma attaching to unwed mothers. Id. When examining these interests of the woman, it is difficult to conceive of any express constitutional privilege that is implicated by such consequences attendant to the bearing and raising of children.

---

[4] The tendency to, and fallacy of, ascribing absolute terms to implied rights was pointed out long ago by Mr. Justice Holmes:

> All rights tend to declare themselves absolute to their logical extreme. Yet all in fact are limited by the neighborhood of principles of policy which are other than those on which the particular right is founded, and which become strong enough to hold their own when a certain point is reached.

Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U.S. 349, 355 (1908).

This passage was cited favorably by the Court in United States v. 12 200-Ft. Reels, 413 U.S. 123, 127 n.5 (1973), when rejecting the concept that an unlimited right to privacy had been declared in Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969).

The traditional foundations for privacy rights, the First Amendment free speech guarantee, the Fourth Amendment right to be free of unreasonable searches and seizures and the protection against self-incrimination in the Fifth Amendment, simply do not express a fundamental right to be free of the burdens set forth in Roe v. Wade. In effect, Roe v. Wade seems to find a fundamental right by comparing the personal and social consequences of pregnancy, particularly unwanted pregnancy, to the consequences of intrusion by the state into personal and private decision to use contraceptives which was found fundamental in Griswold v. Connecticut.

This Court has repeatedly rejected such an approach to finding fundamental rights based upon comparative social burdens. For example, in San Antonio School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973), this Court found no fundamental right to an education. In so holding, the Court rejected the social burden approach to creating fundamental rights because that approach failed to adhere to the requirement of only implying rights that are found in the Constitution expressly or implicitly. This Court stated:

> The lesson of these cases in addressing the question now before the Court is plain. It is not the province of this Court to create substantive constitutional rights in the name of guaranteeing equal protection of the law. Thus, the key to discovering whether education is "fundamental" is not to be found in comparisons of the relative societal significance of education as opposed to subsistence or housing. Nor is it to be found by weighing whether education is as important as the right to travel. Rather, the answer lies in assessing whether there is a right to education explicitly or implicitly guaranteed by the Constitution.

411 U.S. at 33.

The paramount importance of finding fundamental rights in the Constitution was underscored by this Court's acknowledgment that education is of "grave significance . . . both to the individual and society" and education bears an intimate relationship to the meaningful exercise of the express rights to free speech and to vote. 411 U.S. at 30, 36.

The same result was reached by this Court in Lindsay v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972). In Lindsay the Court considered whether there is a fundamental right to "decent shelter" and "peaceful possession of one's home." 405 U.S. at 73. This Court recognized the "importance of decent, safe, and sanitary housing" but refused to find a fundamental right. Id. As the Court explained:

> But the Constitution does not provide judicial remedies for every social and economic ill. We are unable to perceive in that document any constitutional guarantee of access to dwellings of a particular quality, or any recognition of the right of a tenant to occupy the real property of his landlord beyond the term of the lease without the payment of rent or otherwise contrary to the terms of the relevant agreement. Absent constitutional mandate, the assurance of adequate housing and the definition of landlord-tenant relationships are legislative, not judicial functions.

405 U.S. at 74.

Finally, in Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471 (1970) this Court considered whether there is a fundamental right to public welfare. Finding no such right, this Court observed that "the intractable social and philosophical problems presented by public welfare programs are not the business of this Court [because] the Constitution does not empower this Court to second guess state officials charged with the difficult responsibility of allocating limited public welfare funds among a myriad of potential recipients." 397 U.S. at 487.

The possible social and personal consequences of having a baby, as real as they may be, simply are irrelevant to the analysis of whether a fundmental right to abortion is articulated by the Constitution. Moreover, the physical burdens of giving birth can surely be no greater than being without shelter, food, medical care and other aspects of life that this Court has repeatedly rejected as pertinent to the fundamental rights discussion.

In sum, Roe v. Wade improperly implied rights from previously implied rights instead of employing the correct methodology of returning to the express provisions of the Constitution as to determine the existence of an implied right. As this Court observed in United States v. 12 200-Ft. Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973):

> The seductive plausibility of single steps in a chain of evolutionary development of a legal rule is often not perceived until a third, fourth or fifth "logical" extension occurs. Each step, when taken, appeared a reasonable step in relation to that which preceded it, although the aggregate or end result is one that would never have been seriously considered in the first instance."

Id. at 127.

That is exactly what occurred in Roe v. Wade when the abortion right was implied from the right of procreation which was implied from the right of privacy which was implied in limited circumstances from carefully considered express provisions of the Constitution. If, as shown above, abortion is measured against those original Constitutional provisions, it is plain that no implicit fundamental right to abortion can be found. Accordingly this Court should reverse the Roe v. Wade decision. Because no fundamental right is present, the Missouri statutes should be judged against the rational relationship test.

II. MISSOURI'S STATUTE IS RATIONALLY RELATED TO ITS LEGITIMATE INTEREST OF PROTECTING THE LIFE OF THE UNBORN AND IS THEREFORE CONSTITUTIONAL IN ALL RESPECTS.

Among the provisions of the Missouri statute before this Court which the Eighth Circuit declared as unconstitutional are: (1) the statutory provisions declaring Missouri's view that life begins at conception and its interest in protecting such life; and (2) the provisions prohibiting public facilities and public employees from performing or assisting in abortions except to save the life of the mother. Mo.Rev.Stat. §§188.210 and 188.215 (1989).[5]

Missouri Catholic Conference believes that such provisions are rationally related to the State's legitimate interest in protecting unborn life. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 154 (1973) (States have a legitimate interest in protecting "potential" life.) Further, Missouri can reflect that interest through legislative judgments about how best to allocate scarce state dollars for health care. Missouri, which is ranked 47th among all states in generosity of its Medicaid program also has over 600,000 residents who are unable to qualify for any government health care program and also lack any health insurance. Bartlett & Hoffman, Missouri Indigent Health Care Study (April, 1986). Missouri should have the right to use its limited health care dollars to promote life instead of supporting its destruction through publicly operated facilities and public employees.

Turning to the challenged legislative findings, Missouri has declared its position that life begins at conception and unborn children are entitled to "life, health and well-being" consistent with the decisional law of the Supreme Court. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1989). The statute carries with it no penalty for acts contrary to that policy. Notwithstanding this straight forward declaration of interest, the Eighth Circut held that such a statement impermissibly adopted a theory of life inconsistent with that recognized in Roe v. Wade.

[5] Also before the Court is that section of the Missouri statute prohibiting the use of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Mo.Rev.Stat. §188.205 (1989). Missouri Catholic Conference adopts those arguments set forth by the Catholic Health Association as fully addressing the issues implicated by that section of the statute.

Assuming that Roe v. Wade is good law, which Missouri Catholic Conference disputes, there is nothing contained in Roe v. Wade to prohibit states from adopting declarations of interest in protecting life which, in the judgment of the State, begins at conception. All that Roe v. Wade held was that a state cannot use a definition of life to restrict a woman's purported abortion right beyond the Constitutional limits expressed in Roe v. Wade. Thus, the Court stated: "we do not agree that, by adopting one theory of life, Texas may override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 162. This statement came in explanation as to why Texas could not move the point of its compelling interest in protecting potential life to the time of conception in order to justify its criminalization of abortion. Id. at 159.

In this case Missouri is not using its legislative findings in any way to restrict abortion rights. The language is unadorned by penalties, proscriptions or impediments to a woman's abortion decision. Thus, unlike the situation in Roe v. Wade, Missouri is not attempting to use the legislative findings to criminalize or otherwise regulate in any manner the mother's conduct. This is demonstrated by the inability of the Eighth Circuit to identify any manner in which the findings could operate to impair a woman's abortion rights. There is simply nothing in Roe v. Wade to prohibit the use of legislative findings as Missouri has done.

Moreover, there are a myriad of other legitimate state interests that are promoted by a recognition of life beginning at conception. For example, it may enable parents to claim for the wrongful death of a non-viable unborn child. Clearly these legitimate purposes are rationally related to Missouri's legislative findings. Hence, under either Roe v. Wade or the rational relationship standard, there is no basis for invalidating Missouri's statute finding that life begins at conception and that such life is entitled to protection.

As to Missouri's control over its own facilities and employees, the Eighth Circuit invalidated those provisions based on its decision in Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982). In Nyberg the Eighth Circuit restricted the holdings of this Court's prior opinions to simply read that governmental funds need not be used to fund abortion decisions. Id. at 757-58, interpreting Williams v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358 (1980); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). However, Nyberg enjoined the city operated hospital in Virginia, Minnesota from refusing to perform abortions because the hospital was required to accept a patient who was willing to pay privately for an abortion. 667 F.2d at 758. Thus, under Nyberg's formulation, public resources cannot be denied to an abortion patient so long as that patient pays for the services out of her own pocket so that no public funds will be used to support abortion.

As the State of Missouri ably demonstrates, Nyberg's strained construction simply cannot be squared with this Court's holding in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977). In Poelker this Court held that the City of St. Louis could, consistent with Roe v. Wade, "[prohibit] the performance of abortions in the city hospitals except where there was a threat of grave physiological injury or death to the mother." Id. at 520. No exceptions for private pay abortions was contained in the City's policy nor did this Court carve out any such exceptions in Poelker. Moreoever, to suggest, as Nyberg does, that no public funds are used to support a private pay abortion in a public facility ignores the reality that the facility would not be there but for the use of public monies to build and operate the facility.

The untenable nature of the Eighth Circuit's position is demonstrated further by the necessary, but surely over broad, results implicated by its standard. For example, if a private pay patient demanded an abortion from a rural community without any private or public health care facilities, would the rural community be required to develop such a facility because the decision not to have such facilities "restricts access to the abortion decision." Nyberg, 667 F.2d at 758. In that same regard if a rural community had a hospital as the sole community health care facility, but for financial reasons wished to close the hospital, a private pay abortion patient could conceivably challenge that result because it would restrict access to abortion services.

Of course, such strained results would never occur because this Court has held that government may withdraw its subsidy even if as a practical matter it eliminates access to service. For example, in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), this Court considered whether the denial of public funds for abortion services was permissible. In finding no fundamental right affected, this Court rejected the argument that the indigency of abortion patients would impermissably deny access to such services. The Court explained that indigency, not being of the State's making, cannot serve to create affirmative obligations on the State to address indigency. Similarly, here there is no obligation for cities or states to build hospitals and hire health care professionals. If as a practical matter no facility is present for abortion services, that is a consequence of events that are independent of the state's action.

However, this Court need not address Nyberg, resting as it does on the strict scrutiny standard set forth by Roe v. Wade. As discussed above, no fundamental right to an abortion exists. Consequently, Missouri's statute passes muster because it is rationally related to a legitimate state goal of protecting the life of the unborn.

CONCLUSION

For all of the above reasons, Missouri Catholic Conference respectfully requests that this Honorable Court reverse the decision of the Eighth Circuit by finding that the Missouri statute is rationally related to a legitimate state interest and remand this action to the District Court for entry of judgment in favor of the State of Missouri.

February 21, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

David M. Harris*
J. Roger Edgar
Bernard C. Huger
Kathleen M. Boozang
Greensfelder, Hemker & Gale, P.C.
Suite 1800 Equitable Building
10 South Broadway
St. Louis, Missouri 63102
(314) 241-9090

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae
Missouri Catholic Conference

*Counsel of Record

Of Counsel:
Louis C. DeFeo, Jr.
General Counsel
Missouri Catholic Conference
600 Clark Avenue
P.O. Box 1022
Jefferson City, MO
65102

February 21, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE THE CATHOLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

Of Counsel:

J. STUART SHOWALTER
PETER E. CAMPBELL
JOHN MILES
THE CATHOLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES
4455 Woodson Road
St. Louis, Missouri 63134
(314) 427-2500

February 21, 1989

J. ROGER EDGAR*
DAVID M. HARRIS
KATHLEEN M. BOOZANG
GREENSFELDER, HEMKER & GALE, P.C.
Suite 1800, Equitable Bldg.
10 South Broadway
St. Louis, Missouri 63102
(314) 241-9090

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae The Catholic Health Association of the United States

*Counsel of Record

St. Louis Law Printing Co., Inc., 13305 Manchester Road 63131 314-231-4477

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Table of Authorities	ii
Statement of Interest	1
Summary of the Argument	2
Argument	4
I. Missouri's Statutory Prohibition On The Use Of Public Funds To Perform An Abortion Or To Counsel Or Encourage A Woman To Have An Abortion Not Necessary To Save Her Life Does Not Impinge On The Ability Of A Pregnant Woman To Have An Abortion	4
II. Missouri's Refusai To Subsidize A Health Care Provider's Choice To Counsel Or Encourage A Woman To Have An Abortion Not Necessary To Save Her Life Does Not Constitute An Infringement Of That Choice	5
III. Missouri's Refusal To Subsidize A Health Care Provider's Encouragement Or Counseling Of A Woman To Have An Abortion Not Necessary To Save Her Life Does Not Contravene The Practice Of Good Medical Care	11
IV. Roe v. Wade Should Be Reconsidered And On Reconsideration Overruled	13
Conclusion	15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.) 7

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 4,5

Lyng v. International Union, ___ U.S. ___, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988) 5,9,10

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) ..... passim

Ohio Bureau of Employment Services v. Hodory, 431 U.S. 471 (1977) 9

Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 680 F.Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.) 7,8

Planned Parenthood Association v. Kempiners, 700 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983) 8

Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), later app. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. Arizona, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub. nom Babbit v. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona, 479 U.S. 925 (1986) app. dismd. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. Babbitt, 479 U.S. 926 (1986) 6

Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub. nom Babbit v. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona, 479 U.S. 925 (1986) 7

Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 2,5

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 3,13

State of New York v. Bowen, 690 F.Supp. 1261 (S.D. N.Y. 1988) 6

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (1986) 13

Statutes:

Mo. Rev. Stat. §188.205 (1989) 2

Mo. Rev. Stat. §1.205 (1989) 14

Commentaries:

American Hospital Association Data (1987) 12

Missouri Indigent Health Care Study (1986) 10

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From the United States Court of Appeals
For the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE THE CATHOLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Catholic Health Association of the United States (CHA) is the national service organization composed of Catholic hospitals and long-term care facilities, their sponsoring organizations (Catholic religious orders and dioceses), and related multi-institutional healthcare systems.

CHA comprises approximately 600 Catholic hospitals, 260 Catholic long-term care facilities, 265 religious orders, 30 dioceses, and 60 systems. All of these institutional members of CHA are operated, supervised, or controlled by or in connection with the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, and each complies with Catholic teaching regarding abortion, the sanctity of life, and related issues.

Thus, this Amicus represents organizations that have a substantial interest in the constitutional issues presented by the instant case.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

1. Missouri has made a legislative decision to favor childbirth over abortion and to protect fetal life. It implemented that decision by the passage of Mo.Rev.Stat. §188.205 which prohibits the use of public funds for performing abortions or for counseling or encouraging women to have abortions. This Court has consistently held that a legislative choice not to subsidize the provision of abortion services is constitutionally valid and does not infringe upon a woman's choice to terminate her pregnancy.

2. Missouri does not withhold all public funds from entities providing abortions or abortion counseling but merely prohibits the recipients of public funds from utilizing those funds to provide abortions or to counsel or encourage women to have abortions. Missouri's statutory prohibition is rationally related to Missouri's desire to favor childbirth over abortion, a choice which this Court has held constitutional in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). Because the statute has a rational basis and does not rise to the level of a penalty, there is no constitutionally forbidden limitation on the First Amendment rights of either health care providers or women seeking abortions. Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983).

3. As evidenced by the successful provision of quality medical care by Catholic healthcare facilities throughout the United States, the failure to offer abortion on demand does not compromise the provision of quality medical care to pregnant women.

4. Roe v. Wade, 401 U.S. 113 (1973) should be reconsidered, and on reconsideration overturned, so as to allow states to assert their compelling interest in the preservation of human life from the moment of conception.

Neither the language of the Constitution nor the history and tradition of our Nation provide a woman with a fundamental right to choose to terminate her pregnancy. The reliance of Roe v. Wade on a trimester approach to identify the point at which a state's interest in protecting fetal life becomes "compelling" is technologically flawed and should be abandoned. A state's interest in protecting fetal life starts at the moment of conception. This Court should uphold as constitutional a legislative restriction on abortion which is rationally related to the state's interest in protecting fetal life from the point of conception.

ARGUMENT

I. MISSOURI'S STATUTORY PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO PERFORM AN ABORTION OR TO COUNSEL OR ENCOURAGE A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE DOES NOT IMPINGE ON THE ABILITY OF A PREGNANT WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION.

It is well established that a woman's constitutional right to an abortion -- a right the Amicus does not recognize as valid — does not entitle her to government financial assistance to enable her to exercise that right. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). A state's refusal to subsidize abortions despite its payment for childbirth of indigent women does not "impinge upon the fundamental right recognized in Roe." Maher, 432 U.S. at 474. Roe "implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds." Id.

Missouri's failure to subsidize abortions does not penalize a woman for exercising her constitutional right to choose to terminate her pregnancy. In Maher, this Court stated that a penalty analysis might be applicable "if Connecticut denied general welfare benefits to all women who had obtained abortions and who were otherwise entitled to the benefits." 432 U.S. at 474-75 n.8. Likewise, in McRae, this Court rejected the argument that the Hyde Amendment unconstitutionally penalized the exercise of a woman's right to choose an abortion. The Court opined that "[a] substantial constitutional question would arise if Congress had attempted to withhold all Medicaid benefits from an otherwise eligible candidate simply because that candidate had exercised her constitutionally protected freedom to terminate her pergnancy by abortion." 448 U.S. at 317 n.19. Missouri distributes public funds on a non-discriminatory basis but requires that such funds not be used to support abortion. Missouri's funding conditions thus implement a constitutionally permissible subsidy decision and do not interfere with a woman's right to an abortion.

II. MISSOURI'S REFUSAL TO SUBSIDIZE A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER'S CHOICE TO COUNSEL OR ENCOURAGE A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN INFRINGEMENT OF THAT CHOICE.

This Court has repeatedly held that the government's refusal to subsidize an individual's exercise of his or her constitutional rights does not constitute an infringement of those rights. See, Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). A legislature's refusal to subsidize constitutionally protected free speech neither infringes upon nor regulates the exercise of First Amendment rights. Regan, 461 U.S. at 546. The selection of particular entities or persons for entitlement to public funds is not open to judicial review and does not infringe upon the non-recipients' constitutional rights. Lyng v. International Union, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 108 S.Ct. 1184, 1191-92 (1988). Although the aggrieved entity or person may "not have as much money at it wants, and thus cannot exercise its freedom of speech as much as it would like, the Constitution 'does not confer the entitlement to such funds as may be necessary to realize all the advantages of that freedom' (cites omitted)." Regan, 461 U.S. at 550.

Missouri's public policy decision to foster its preference for childbirth over abortion and to protect the life of the fetus by not subsidizing the counseling and encouragement of abortions is clearly permissible under Regan. Moreover, it is indistinguishable from Connecticut's refusal to subsidize non-therapeutic abortions, which withstood Constitutional attack in Maher. Missouri's proscription of the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion in no way infringes on health care providers' first amendment rights to counsel their patients. Health care providers may still offer counsel regarding abortions or suggest them to woman for whom physicians believe they are medically necessary; they are merely precluded from relying on public funds to support such activities. See, Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474.

Lower courts which have specifically considered whether the state or federal government's refusal to subsidize abortion counseling infringes upon health care providers' freedom of speech have reached similar conclusions. In State of New York v. Bowen, 690 F.Supp. 1261 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) the district court found that HHS' regulations prohibiting Title X projects from encouraging, promoting or advocating abortion as a method of family planning do not interfere with health providers' first amendment right to counsel their patients. Id. at 1273. Relying on Regan, the Court found that HHS's regulations reflect the Secretary's decision to favor childbirth over abortion . . . . Congress has already forbidden funding for that purpose, a choice which can hardly be argued to have 'interfered' with free speech." Id. at 1273. "The regulations do not prohibit or compel speech. They grant money to support one view and not another; but that is quite different from infringing on free speech." Id. at 1274.

The Ninth Circuit utilized the same analysis when it considered a first amendment challenge to Arizona's prohibition on the expenditure of state social welfare funds to support private organizations which perform abortions and engage in abortion-related activities. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), later app. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. Arizona, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub. nom Babbit v. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona, 479 U.S. 925 (1986), app. dism'd Planned Parenthood of Central &

Northern Arizona v. Babbitt, 479 U.S. 926 (1986). Relying on this Court's pronouncements in McRae and Maher, the Ninth Circuit concluded that "the State of Arizona may not unreasonably interfere with the right of Planned Parenthood to engage in abortion or abortion-related speech activities, but the State need not support, monetarily or otherwise, those activities." (Emphasis added). Id. at 944.

The Ninth Circuit remanded the case to the district court to determine the correctness of Arizona's contention that its withdrawal of all funds was the only way Arizona could ensure that Planned Parenthood would not use state funds to support its abortion related activities. Id. at 945. Following remand the district court concluded Arizona had not met its burden and the Ninth Circuit affirmed. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1986), aff'd sub. nom Babbit v. Planned Parenthood of Central & Northern Arizona, 479 U.S. 925 (1986). But if a statutory scheme withholding all funds from entities performing abortion related activities is constitutionally infirm, Missouri's statute avoids any such infirmity. Missouri merely precludes recipients of public funds from using such funds to support activities in which women are counseled or encouraged to have abortions not necessary to save their lives. Missouri's statute is drawn as narrowly as possible to further its legitimate and strong state policy of encouraging childbirth over abortion and protecting fetal life. Therefore it does not infringe on health care providers' abortion-related speech activities. See, Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Arizona v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d at 944-945.

Two district courts have held that the Title X regulations do violate the first amendment, Planned Parenthood Federation of America v. Bowen, 680 F.Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-2251 (10th Cir.) and Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F.Supp. 137 (D.Mass. 1988), appeal pending, No. 88-1279 (1st Cir.). The Massachusetts district court found that the Title X regulations penalize the exercise of constitutional rights because a Title X project could be denied a grant solely because its non-federally funded activities include abortion referral and counseling. 679 F.Supp. at 145. The challenged Missouri statute in the present case avoids this problem. Furthermore, the district court's suggestion that the Title X regulations are an unconstitutional content-based restriction runs contrary to this Court's previous decisions. It is clearly within the power of a state to implement, through discretionary allocation of public funds, a value judgment favoring childbirth and adoption over abortion. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 474 (1977). The federal government's Title X funding prohibitions, like Missouri's are nothing more than an exercise of this value judgment.

The Colorado district court found that the Title X regulations "violate a physician's First Amendment right to disseminate necessary medical information, as well as a woman's First Amendment right to receive necessary medical information to enable her to . . . choose whether to have an abortion." 680 F.Supp. at 1476. Missouri's funding provision does not preclude physicians from disseminating or women from receiving abortion-related information. A physician is free to provide this information; Missouri is just not willing to pay for it, which is clearly within Missouri's power, as already decided by this Court in Maher and McRae.

In Planned Parenthood Association of Chicago v. Kempiners, 700 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983), Judge Cudahy in a separate opinion[1], found that "[s]ince a woman's freedom of choice does not carry with it a constitutional entitlement to the

[1] In Kempiners, the Seventh Circuit issued a Per Curiam decision vacating the district court decision and remanding the case to the district court for an evidentiary hearing to explore the questions of standing raised in a separate opinion by Judge Posner. 700 F.2d at 1116. Judge Cudahy issued a separate opinion on the merits although he deferred to the opinion of Judge Posner to create a majority in the Per Curiam decision. Id.

'financial resources' to have an abortion, it seems equally clear to me that there is no entitlement to funds for pregnancy counseling which includes the abortion option." Id. at 1126. Judge Cudahy went on to determine whether Illinois' denial of funds to Planned Parenthood, because it offered abortion counseling and referral services, was the equivalent of a refusal to subsidize or an unconstitutional penalty. Judge Cudahy found the Illinois funding scheme to be an unconstitutional penalty, concluding that "the Illinois Act clearly imposes an impermissible penalty on the exercise of protected free speech by counseling agencies." 700 F.2d at 1124.

Judge Cudahy's conclusion turned on the fact that Illinois denied benefits to an agency which would be otherwise eligible, "solely because its privately funded activities include abortion-related counseling. This kind of wholesale deprivation penalizes the agency for exercising its first amendment right to counsel for abortion." Id. Judge Cudahy's opinion is important to the present case in his observation that "[t]he State of Illinois could, if it desired, enact a valid law that restricts funding under the program to activities that do not involve abortion-related counseling." Id. at 1125. Missouri's law conforms precisely to the permissible alternatives described by Judge Cudahy.

Missouri's decision not to subsidize health care providers' provision of abortion counseling does not infringe either on providers' or women's first amendment right to free speech. Because the challenged statute does not implicate fundamental rights guaranteed by the first amendment, in this case the "right" to a subsidy, the statute should be subject to a rational basis review. Lyng v. International Union, ___ U.S. ___, ___, 108 S.Ct. 1184, 1191-92 (1988) and Ohio Bureau of Employment Services v. Hodory, 431 U.S. 471, 489 (1977). This standard of review is "typically quite deferential; legislative classifications are 'presumed to be valid'." Lyng, ___ U.S. at ___, 108 S.Ct. at 1192 (quoting Massachusetts Board of Retirement v. Murgia, 427 U.S. 307, 314 (1976)).

Missouri's allocation of public funds to favor childbirth over abortion is rationally related to Missouri's legitimate determination to encourage childbrith and protect fetal life. Missouri's funding provision thus unequivocally qualifies as a permissible subsidy mechanism as previously contemplated by this Court. The Missouri legislature has granted funds to Planned Parenthood to assist in the provision of its services to indigent women, but conditions the grant of these funds, pursuant to the statute at issue, by providing that none of the funds received from or through the state may be used to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

This Court's decisions "uniformly have accorded the States a wider latitude in choosing among competing demands for limited public funds." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 479 (1976). "The discretion about how best to spend money to improve the general welfare is lodged in Congress rather than the courts." Lyng, ___ U.S. at ___, 108 S.Ct. at 1193. Missouri, which currently allocates approximately $1,701,839,000 per year to subsidize health programs, must certainly have the discretion to favor childbirth over abortion and to protect fetal life in making its disbursement decisions. Bartlett and Hoffman, Missouri Indigent Health Care Study (April, 1986).

Missouri's limitation on the use of public funds reflects a conscious decision by the legislature regarding the expenditure of limited health care funds. It neither evidences an intent to penalize, nor in fact penalizes, health care providers involved in counseling women considering the termination of their pregnancies.

III. MISSOURI'S REFUSAL TO SUBSIDIZE A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER'S ENCOURAGEMENT OR COUNSELING OF A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE DOES NOT CONTRAVENE THE PRACTICE OF GOOD MEDICAL CARE.

The Catholic Health Association ("CHA") asserts and its membership operates under the belief that facilities and health care professionals who strive to protect and promote the best interests of both the mother and her unborn child provide a higher standard of medical care than those providers who are willing, to compromise the life of the unborn. CHA believes that the standard of care practiced by its membership is of superior benefit not only to the physical health and well-being of the mother and child, but also to their psychological, emotional and spiritual well-being.

CHA supports the spirit and intent of the Missouri laws currently before this Court and urges the Court to uphold these statutes as constitutional. Missouri's recognition that life begins at conception, and its prohibition on the use of public funds to counsel or encourage a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life, reflect the State's desire to protect the lives of both the pregnant woman and the unborn. Roe v. Wade and its progeny have recognized the compelling importance of both of these goals. The level of care provided at Catholic health care facilities throughout the country clearly demonstrates that Missouri's refusal to provide public funds to enable health care professionals to encourage or counsel women to obtain abortions will not represent a departure from accepted medical practice and will not compromise the medical care provided to these women or their unborn children. On the contrary, standards of medical care for these patients, both mother and child, will be enhanced.

CHA represents over 600 Catholic hospitals in the United States whose mission incorporates the goals of protecting and promoting not only maternal health and life, but also the health and life of the unborn. This continuing tradition belies the contention that the legal ability to perform abortions on demand is necessary to sustain quality medical care.

Many of the leading hospitals offering obstetric and gynecology services are Catholic facilities. Recent statistics reveal that 9.98% of the hospitals in the United States are Catholic facilities, in which 14.44% of the reported hospital births in this country occurred in 1987. 1987 American Hospital Association Data. In Missouri, 17% of the hospitals are Catholic, and these Catholic hospitals account for 28% of the reported hospital births in Missouri. The top two hospitals for obstetrics and gynecology in Missouri, measured in terms of number of births, are Catholic. If the provision of obstetric care suffers from the lack of abortion services, one surely would not expect to find Catholic hospitals at the forefront of obstetric care.

Many Catholic hospitals are affiliated with secular institutions' residency training and nursing programs through which they assist in training the nation's newly licensed physicians and student nurses. These institutions are certified by the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology. Surely no one would suggest that such certification is given to programs that fail to train health care professionals properly. On the contrary, given the role of Catholic hospitals in the field of obstetrics and gynecology, CHA believes that these physicians and student nurses receive some of the best training and experience available in the country. This experience clearly demonstrates that the availability of abortion services is not essential to the provision of quality medical care or to the training of health care professionals.

IV. ROE V. WADE SHOULD BE RECONSIDERED AND ON RECONSIDERATION OVERRULED

Amicus adopts the arguments of Amicus Curiae Missouri Catholic Conference that the Court should uphold the Missouri statutes challenged in this case and that the Court should reconsider its holdings in Roe v. Wade and its progeny.

Our Nation's experience both prior and subsequent to the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade reveals that that landmark decision was flawed jurisprudence from the start, based on technical data known today to be inaccurate, and essentially bad social policy. Clearly, the right to an abortion on demand cannot be found in either the express language of the Constitution, Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 152-54 (1973), or the history and tradition of our Nation, Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, ___ U.S. ___, ___, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 2196 (1986) (White, J., dissenting) and therefore most certainly cannot be deemed a "fundamental right" entitled to the highest level of Constitutional protection. Roe itself recognizes that the abortion decision was limited by certain legitimate state interests. Roe, 410 U.S. at 154. The Missouri statutes at issue here provide an opportunity for the Court to affirm that it meant what it said in Roe about the States' ability to regulate some aspects of the abortion decision.

In the years since Roe v. Wade this Court has protected the abortion decision to a greater extent than other medical decisions even though the same kind of physician-patient relationship was implicated. This had led to expansion of the "right" to demand abortion generally in society and, notwithstanding the language in Roe v. Wade relating to state interests, a diminution of the ability of the states to regulate. It has also led to greater and greater pressure on health care facilities and providers to permit abortion and related services.[2]

In contrast to these kind of pressures, Missouri's legislative pronouncements that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being," Mo.Rev.Stat. §1.205 (1986), reflect the position and belief of Missouri's citizens, as declared by their elected representatives. Missouri's legislative attempts to protect fetal life are legitimate state interests. This Court should reconsider Roe v. Wade to enable states to assert their interests in protecting fetal life from the point at which human life commences — conception.

The technological developments in reproductive technologies, even in the short time since 1973, underscore the misconceptions upon which the trimester approach adopted in Roe v. Wade is based. Amicus urges this Court to abandon the conceptually flawed technological underpinnings of Roe v. Wade and to return to states the power to protect life from the moment of conception.

---

[2] For example, St. Agnes Hospital v. Riddick is an action pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland (No. HM86-3071) relating to the attempt to the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education to withdraw accreditation from St. Agnes' residency training program in obstetrics and gynecology. One of the alleged justifications for the ACGME's action was the absence of full family planning services (including sterilization and abortion) at St. Agnes. Because of its Catholic ethics, St. Agnes is religiously opposed to providing those kinds of services and will not do so.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Amicus Curiae The Catholic Health Association of the United States respectfully requests that the Circuit Court's judgment be reversed in so far as the Circuit Court's judgment declared the Missouri statutes unconstitutional.

Respectfully submitted,

J. Roger Edgar
David M. Harris
Kathleen M. Boozang
Greensfelder, Hemker & Gale, P.C.
10 South Broadway, Suite 1800
St. Louis, Missouri 63102
(314) 241-9090

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Of Counsel

J. Stuart Showalter
Peter E. Campbell
John Miles
The Catholic Health Association of the United States
4455 Woodson Road
St. Louis, Missouri 63134
(314) 427-2500

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF AMERICAN COLLEGIANS FOR LIFE, INC., AND THE CATHOLIC LEAGUE FOR RELIGIOUS AND CIVIL RIGHTS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

JOSEPH E. SCHMITZ
Twelfth Floor
1050 Connecticut Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 457-9470

ROBERT A. DESTRO
Counsel of Record for Amici Curiae
The Columbus School of Law
The Catholic University of America
Washington, D.C. 20064
(202) 635-5140

ROBERT J. CRNKOVICH
General Counsel
American Collegians for Life, Inc.
1330 New Hampshire Ave., N.W.
Number 823
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 289-3282

NANCY J. GANNON
General Counsel
Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights
1100 W. Wells St.
Suite 605
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53233
(414) 289-0170

Table of Contents

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. THE NINTH AMENDMENT RESERVES TO THE PEOPLE, ACTING THROUGH THEIR ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES, THE RIGHT TO DECLARE THAT "THE LIFE OF EACH HUMAN BEING BEGINS AT CONCEPTION" AND THAT "UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH AND WELL-BEING." 3

II. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT'S PRECLUSION OF VIABILITY-TESTING WOULD, IN EFFECT, RENDER MISSOURI'S — AS WELL AS EVERY OTHER STATE'S — COMPELLING INTEREST IN PROTECTING HUMAN FETAL LIFE MEANINGLESS. 8

A. The Eighth Circuit's Decision that Missouri's Viability-testing Statute Is Unconstitutional Amounts to a Substantial Expansion of Roe v. Wade. 8

B. Missouri's Fetal Viability-testing Statute Is Not Inconsistent With Colautti v. Franklin. 12

III. THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY MAY DENY A STATE NEITHER THE POWER TO MAKE A PRONOUNCEMENT ABOUT THE VALUE OF UNBORN HUMAN LIFE, EVEN IN THE ABORTION CONTEXT, NOR THE POWER TO ESTABLISH ITS COMPELLING INTEREST IN UNBORN LIFE. 13

A. The Tenth Amendment Applies to the Federal Judiciary. 14

B. Neither the States Nor the People Have Consensually Abdicated Their Power to Make Moral Pronouncements About the Value of Unborn Human Life or About Abortion. 16

1. The Court's recent federalism cases reaffirm that the States retain certain sovereign powers, including the power to make fundamental policy decisions. 17

2. Abortion legislation falls squarely within the police power, a political realm reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment. 19

a. Protection of human life 20

b. Regulation of medical practice 20

c. Regulation of public health and welfare . . .20

d. Domestic relations 21

C. Roe v. Wade Does Not Require that State Policy on the Value of Unborn Human Life Be Abortion Neutral. 22

D. Due to the Compelling Nature of Missouri's Interest in the Protection of the Lives of Viable Unborn Children, This Is the Paradigmatic Case for Tenth Amendment Judicial Restraint. 22

CONCLUSION 25

Table of Authorities

CASES: Page

Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737 (1984) 4

Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 1977) 4

Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U.S. 207 (1903) 24

Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1977) 6

Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26 (1954) 19, 21, 24

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 18, 25

Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. 1980) 5

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6, 20, 22

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 10, 12, 13

De Sylva v. Ballentine, 351 U.S. 570 (1956) 20

Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749 (1985) 20

Federal Energy Regulatory Comm'n v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. 742 (1982) 17, 22

Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 15, 16. 23

Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323 (1974) 20

Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503 (1986) 7

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 22

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 5, 6, 24

Hisquierdo v. Hisquierdo, 439 U.S. 572 (1979) 21

Hunter v. Underwood, 471 U.S. 222 (1985) 13

Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983) 22

Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U.S. 46 (1907) 15

Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966) 7

Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 21, 23, 24

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 5, 6

Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803) 14

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623 (1887) 14, 19

National Wildlife Fed'n v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767 (11th Cir. 1983) 4

Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 6, 9

Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 10

Reproductive Health Service [sic] v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 3, 11, 12

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987) 3

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) . . . . . passim

Rose v. Rose, 107 S. Ct. 2029 (1987) 20

Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75 (1966) 20

South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S. Ct. 1355 (1988) 16, 18

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 5, 22

United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1 (1936) 16, 24

Williamson v. Lee Optical of Oklahoma, 348 U.S. 483 (1955) 24

Wynn v. Scott, 449 F. Supp. 1302 (N.D. Ill. 1978) 5

Yazoo & M.V.R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U.S. 174 (1889) 4

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS:

U.S. Const. art. I 16

U.S. Const. art. III 4

U.S. Const. art. V 13

U.S. Const. amend. I 20

U.S. Const. amend. IX 2, 7, 20, 25

U.S. Const. amend. X . . . 2, 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22, 25

U.S. Const. amend. XIV 5, 6, 13, 14, 17

STATUTES:

National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1988 & 1989, Pub. L. No. 100-180, title V, § 508, 101 Stat. 1086 7

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1986) 2, 3, 4

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) 2, 10

OTHER AUTHORITIES:

Amar, Of Sovereignty and Federalism, 96 YALE L.J. 1425 (1987) 16

Amar, Philadelphia Revisited: Amending the Constitution Outside Article V, 55 CHI. L. REV. 1043 (1988) 16

Declaration of Independence 13

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality and Law, 40 U. PITT. L. REV. 359 (1978) 17

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need For a Life-protective Amendment, 63 CALIF. L. REV. 1250 (1975) 17

Exec. Order No. 12,612, 52 Fed. Reg. 41,685 (1987) 15

Levinson, Constitutional Rhetoric and the Ninth Amendment, 64 CHI.[-]KENT L. REV. 131 (1988) 7

Lincoln, First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861, in A. Lincoln, Speeches and Letters (M. Roe ed. 1894) 23

Sager, You Can Raise the First, Hide Behind the Fourth, and Plead the Fifth. But What on Earth Can You Do With the Ninth Amendment?, 64 CHI.[-]KENT L. REV. 239 (1988) 7

Symposium on Interpreting the Ninth Amendment, 64 CHI.[-]KENT L. REV. 37 (1988) 7

The Federalist No. 22 14

The Federalist No. 82 15

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF AMERICAN COLLEGIANS FOR LIFE, INC., AND THE CATHOLIC LEAGUE FOR RELIGIOUS AND CIVIL RIGHTS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

Interest of Amici Curiae

American Collegians for Life, Inc., is a non-profit voluntary organization, comprised of students and alumni from United States colleges and universities, the purpose of which is to educate students about the medical ethics issues of abortion, infanticide, and euthanasia. The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights is a non-profit voluntary association, nationwide in membership, organized to promote good will and harmonious relations in the community, to combat all forms of religious prejudice and discrimination, and to defend the rights and sanctity of each human life.

Summary of Argument

The right of the people of Missouri, acting through their elected representatives, to declare that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and that "[u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being" is retained by them under the express terms of the Ninth and Tenth Amendments. The power of a State to protect the interests of unborn children in life, health and well-being in a manner consistent with the views of its people on the beginnings of human life is "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," U.S. Const. amend. X, to the extent that its exercise goes no further than permitted by "the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2 (1986).

Your amici will argue below that enactment of the two provisions of the challenged Missouri statute, its preamble or statement of purpose, § 1.205.1, and its requirement of viability testing at twenty or more weeks of gestational age, § 188.029, are legitimate exercises of state legislative authority under both the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution. Neither Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), nor any of its progeny claim for this Court the right or the authority to declare that the courts of the United States are the final arbiter of when life begins for purposes of State law. Concerning abortion, Roe held that "[w]ith respect to the State's important and legitimate interest in potential life, the 'compelling' point is at viability." 410 U.S. at 163. Missouri's requirement that the physician test for viability from and after twenty weeks is therefore the only way in which the State may determine whether its important and legitimate interest in the life of the unborn has become "compelling." To strike a requirement that "[b]efore a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable" is to render wholly illusory the power to protect what this Court held in Roe to be a "compelling" interest. The decision below effectively construes Roe to permit no limit on legal abortion up to the time of birth.

Argument

I. THE NINTH AMENDMENT RESERVES TO THE PEOPLE, ACTING THROUGH THEIR ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES, THE RIGHT TO DECLARE THAT "THE LIFE OF EACH HUMAN BEING BEGINS AT CONCEPTION" AND THAT "UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH AND WELL-BEING."

The Court of Appeals ruled that Missouri's statutory preamble declaring that life begins at conception is unconstitutional because "the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations." Reproductive Health Service [sic] v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1076 (8th Cir. 1988). The District Court's rationale was even more pointed: "This legislative pronouncement by the Missouri General Assembly clearly conflicts with the essence of Roe v. Wade. Consequently, §§ 1.205.1(1) and (2) are invalid as a matter of law." Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407, 413 (W.D. Mo. 1987).

Your amici submit that the courts below have misread the holding in Roe, and have transformed it into precisely what this Court said it wanted to avoid in that case — an opinion by the federal judiciary on "the difficult question of when life begins."

> When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159.

The Court's holding in Roe was stated directly: a State may not, "by adopting one theory of life, . . . override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake." 410 U.S. at 161. Where, as here, the preamble is a simple declaration of public philosophy in the abortion context and a recognition of legally cognizable interests for the unborn in the non-abortion setting, there are no rights of pregnant women, or of anyone else, at stake. See Yazoo & M.V.R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U.S. 174, 188 (1889) ("the preamble is no part of the act, and cannot enlarge or confer powers, nor control the words of the act, unless they are doubtful or ambiguous"); National Wildlife Fed'n v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767, 773 (11th Cir. 1983) ("Preambles to statutes do not impose substantive rights, duties or obligations."); Association of American Railroads v. Costle, 562 F.2d 1310, 1316 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Preamble "is not an operative part of the statute and it does not enlarge or confer powers."). The Missouri preamble is a statement of public morality by the elected representatives of the people of Missouri that the people of Missouri regard the human fetus as a human being.

Missouri could not have spoken more clearly concerning its intent to legislate "to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States [and] decisions of the United States Supreme Court"; its statute provides expressly that Missouri's laws "shall be interpreted and construed . . . subject only to" federal constitutional requirements and specific provisions to the contrary in Missouri law. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.2.

Since without injury there is no justiciable case or controversy under Article III, Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 754-758 (1984), and there is no constitutionally valid reason why the rule should change because the subject matter is abortion, see Charles v. Carey, 627 F.2d 772, 778-79 (7th Cir. 1980); Wynn v. Scott, 449 F.Supp. 1302, 1314-15 & n.9 (N.D. Ill. 1978) (3-judge court), the holdings of the courts below concerning the preamble represent, at most, an illegitimate attempt by the federal judiciary to police societal attitudes concerning abortion and the protection of unborn human life. Cf. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747, 795-96 n.4 (1986) (White, J., dissenting) ("Faced with such a decision [characterizing an asserted state interest in fetal life], the most appropriate course of action for the Court is to defer to a legislative resolution of the issue: in other words, if a state legislature asserts an interest in protecting fetal life, I can see no satisfactory basis for denying that it is compelling.") (emphasis in original); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 479-80 (1977) ("[W]hen an issue involves policy choices as sensitive as those implicated by public funding of non-therapeutic abortions, the appropriate forum for their resolution in a democracy is the legislature."), quoted in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 326 (1980); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 222 (White, J., dissenting) ("This issue, for the most part, should be left with the people and to the political processes the people have devised to govern their affairs.").

The fatal flaw in the decisions below is their reliance on what the District Court called the "essence of Roe v. Wade," rather than its holding. This Court's opinion in Roe rests on a view of the abortion controversy as a clash between State regulatory authority and individual liberty. The right of privacy accepted in Roe was "broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy," 410 U.S. at 153, only because the unborn were not, in this Court's view, "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment. See 410 U.S. at 156-57 ("If this suggestion of personhood is established, the appellant's case, of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the Amendment.").

While it is certainly possible to read the Court's opinion in Roe to stand for the proposition that the humanity of the unborn is constitutionally irrelevant to the question of whether an unborn child should be considered a "person" under the Fourteenth Amendment, this Court has never held that the point at which life begins and the human nature of the child are irrelevant to the manner in which the State formulates and executes policy not directed at prohibiting abortion. See, e.g., Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 482 (1983) (recognizing the State's compelling interest in preserving life during post-viability abortions); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. at 325 (1980) ("Abortion is different from other medical procedures, because no other procedure involves the purposeful termination of a potential life."). The Court's decision to recognize only "the less rigid claim that . . . at least potential life is involved," 410 U.S. at 150, does not preclude the States from recognizing the more substantial claim that an actual human life is involved. This Court's statement that "a legitimate state interest in this area need not stand or fall on acceptance of the belief that life begins at conception or at some other point prior to live birth," 410 U.S. at 150 (emphasis added) should be taken to mean precisely what it says.

Thus, the Court's holding "that the word 'person,' as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not include the unborn," 410 U.S. at 158, is not a constitutional rule which precludes any State recognition of the interests of the unborn. It precludes only laws and regulations which effectively prevent or unduly inhibit abortion. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 452 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 473 (quoting Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 147 (1977)); see also Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. at 314. The courts below, however, seemed to assume that the "essence" of Roe is that a State may not, consistent with the Constitution, even declare itself to be in fundamental disagreement with this Court's views on the beginning of human life or the interests of the unborn. This, we submit, is not only inconsistent with Roe itself, see 410 U.S. at 116 ("Our task . . . is to resolve the issue by constitutional measurement, free of emotion and of predilection."), it is precisely the evil at which the Ninth Amendment was directed.

The Ninth Amendment provides that "[t]he enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." While most of the recent scholarly commentary on the Ninth Amendment focuses on the degree to which — if at all — the Ninth Amendment supports judicial review of legislative decisions, see, e.g., Symposium on Interpreting the Ninth Amendment, 64 CHI.-KENT L.REV. 37-268 (1988), it would be impossible to conclude either from the language of the Amendment itself, its history, or the holdings of this Court, that the people, acting through their elected representatives at the State and federal levels, are not free to declare the existence of unenumerated or judicially "unrecognized" or unprotected interests. See, e.g., National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1988 & 1989, Pub. L. No. 100-180, title V, § 508, 101 Stat. 1086 (passed in response to this Court's decision in Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503 (1986)); Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641, 651-52 n.10 (1966).

The fact that this Court has not construed the Constitution to protect the interests of the unborn in the abortion context is, we submit, not relevant to a Ninth Amendment analysis, which speaks to non-preclusive effect of a constitutional enumeration. Compare Levinson, Constitutional Rhetoric and the Ninth Amendment, 64 CHI.[-]KENT L. REV. 131, 154-171 (1988) with Sager, You Can Raise the First, Hide Behind the Fourth, and Plead the Fifth. But What on Earth Can You Do With the Ninth Amendment?, 64 CHI.[-]KENT L. REV. 239, 237-251 (1988). It is only when a State attempts to use its regulatory power in a manner inconsistent with the Constitution that government action can violate the rights of individuals. Since the preamble has no operative effect, the State of Missouri's enactment of its preamble cannot be inconsistent with the Constitution.

II. THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT'S PRECLUSION OF VIABILITY-TESTING WOULD, IN EFFECT, RENDER MISSOURI'S — AS WELL AS EVERY OTHER STATE'S — COMPELLING INTEREST IN PROTECTING HUMAN FETAL LIFE MEANINGLESS.

A. The Eighth Circuit's Decision that Missouri's Viability-testing Statute Is Unconstitutional Amounts to a Substantial Expansion of Roe v. Wade.

Under the standards established in Roe, the States have an important and legitimate interest in protecting fetal life from conception until birth, which interest becomes compelling at viability. The Court in Roe thus addressed the maternal right of privacy against the acknowledged, proper, and important interests of the States: "this right [of privacy] is not unqualified and must be considered against important state interests in regulation." 410 U.S. at 154. The Court held that "at some point the state interests as to protection of health, medical standards, and prenatal life[] become dominant [in the abortion decision]." 410 U.S. at 155.

The Court further held that the State has "an important and legitimate interest in preserving and protecting the health of the pregnant woman," 410 U.S. at 162, and that "from and after [the first trimester], a State may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health." 410 U.S. at 164.

From the point at which a State's interest in protecting fetal rights becomes compelling, it "may go so far as to proscribe abortion . . . , except when it is necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother." 410 U.S. at 163-164. Accordingly, even after the Court's abortion decisions, the States can still regulate abortion after the point of viability, even to the point of completely prohibiting abortions, except when it is necessary to preserve the life or the health of the mother. Your amici would adopt Justice O'Connor's more expansive view that "the States['] compelling interest in protecting and preserving fetal life . . . is extant throughout pregnancy." Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 505 (O'Connor, J. concurring and dissenting).

If the States' interest in the protection of fetal life becomes compelling at viability, it necessarily follows that the States possess the ability to require that the point of viability be determined. Without that determination, a State would be unable to ascertain the point at which it could regulate or proscribe abortion, and the protection of its compelling interest would rest with the unfettered discretion of an abortionist whose fee depends upon the performance of the abortion. Roe does not require this result, and, we submit, the Tenth Amendment does not permit it.

If the compelling nature of a State's interest in unborn human life — not to mention the undeniable interest of a viable unborn child in the preservation of its own life — is to be anything more than illusory, then Roe and its progeny should be read to permit those States desiring to protect fetal life to require a physician to make a determination, consistent with sound medical practice, as to viability, "because the fetus [at viability] presumably has the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb. State regulation protective of fetal life after viability thus has both logical and biological justification." 410 U.S. at 164.

In rejecting attempts by States to determine objectively the point at which viability (and, consequently, a State's compelling interest in the life of the fetus under Roe) arises, the Court has stated that the determination of viability must be made by the attending physician:

> It is not the proper function of the legislature or the courts to place viability, which essentially is a medical concept, at a specific point in the gestation period. The time when viability is achieved may vary with each pregnancy, and the determination of whether a particular fetus is viable is, and must be, a matter for the judgment of the responsible attending physician.

Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64 (1976).

Notably, the Court rejected the argument advanced by Planned Parenthood in Danforth that the statute at issue was unconstitutional for failing to specify a gestational time (in terms of weeks) as the point of viability. In Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), this Court reiterated that viability is reached when "in the judgment of the attending physician on the particular facts of the case before him, there is a reasonable likelihood of the fetus' sustained survival outside the womb, with or without artificial support." 439 U.S. at 388.

The first sentence of Missouri's fetal viability-testing statute provides that "[b]efore a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable . . . ." Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.029. This provision merely requires that the physician use such skills and tests as are necessary in his or her professional judgment to determine if the point of viability has been reached. The State's interest in protecting the life of the human fetus becomes compelling at that point. The Missouri statute does nothing more than prescribe a standard for viability testing which is fully consistent with Colautti, and which provides a method for supervising adherence to that standard.

If, as this Court held in Roe, viability is the relevant criterion to be examined in weighing the power of the State to regulate or prohibit abortion, it logically follows that a State wishing to protect fetal life by regulating or prohibiting abortion must proceed through the following two-step process. First, there must be a determination as to whether the fetus is viable. If viability has not been reached, the State's interest is not compelling. If, however, the fetus is viable, then and only then can there be an examination as to whether the abortion is necessary to preserve the life or the health of the mother. To focus on the life or the health of the mother prior to a determination of viability would be contrary to the reasoning in Roe.

In enacting its viability-testing statute, Missouri has attempted to require performance of the first step of the Roe two-step process. Whether any subsequent attempt to regulate abortion is proper is an entirely different matter and is not before the Court in this case. The Eighth Circuit, by noting the additional cost of viability tests and the "risks" inherent in amniocentesis, 851 F.2d at 1075 n. 5, suggests that, even if the fetus were viable, these factors would outweigh the State's interest in determining whether its compelling interest had ripened. The Eighth Circuit thus bypassed the first step of the Roe test and prematurely reached the second.

By holding that the Missouri viability-testing statute is unconstitutional, the Eighth Circuit negates the very "essence" of the Roe holding the district court purported to preserve. The viability criterion is the linchpin which separates the Court's holding in Roe from what Chief Justice Burger denied was "abortion on demand." 410 U.S. at 208 (Burger, C.J., concurring). In essence, the Eighth Circuit's decision constitutes a rewriting of Roe and must therefore be reversed. Otherwise, the States' compelling interest in post-viability fetal life is illusory, and abortion on demand for all nine months of pregnancy is the law of the land. If the Court desires to provide for abortion on demand throughout pregnancy, it should so state and it should forego the use of a viability standard.

B. Missouri's Fetal Viability-testing Statute Is Not Inconsistent with Colautti v. Franklin.

Aside from the Eighth Circuit's attempt to re-write Roe, its reliance on Colautti for the proposition that a State may not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability" is misplaced. The Eighth Circuit stated that > "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability — be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-89 (1979). Nevertheless, this is precisely what the Missouri legislature has attempted to proclaim by requiring doctors to determine the fetus's [sic] gestational age, weight, and lung maturity.

851 F.2d at 1074-75 (parallel citations omitted). This quote purports to be a complete statement of the Court's holding in Colautti. However, the quote omits the conclusion of the Court's sentence, without which the quotation is extremely misleading. The Court's complete sentence follows:

> Because this point [i.e., viability] may differ with each pregnancy, neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability — be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor — as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus."

439 U.S. at 388-89 (italicized emphasis added, omitted language underlined).

Had the Eighth Circuit properly quoted the Court's Colautti decision, it would have been clear that the language used in Colautti is not applicable to this case. The Court in Colautti merely forbade the State from arbitrarily determining, under the guise of a single medical factor, the point at which the State's compelling interest arises, because "[v]iability is the critical point." 439 U.S. at 389. The Missouri statute lists three factors, not one, and, more importantly, it neither proclaims one of the elements as the determinant nor suggests that all of the elements listed are collective "determinants" of when the State's compelling interest arises. Medically determined viability is still "the critical point."

The Missouri viability-testing statute certainly does not attempt to legislatively define when viability is reached; it merely requires that the attending physician perform certain tests as are necessary to make a finding of gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child. This legislation is wholly consistent with the Court's holding in Colautti.

III. THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY MAY DENY A STATE NEITHER THE POWER TO MAKE A PRONOUNCEMENT ABOUT THE VALUE OF UNBORN HUMAN LIFE, EVEN IN THE ABORTION CONTEXT, NOR THE POWER TO ESTABLISH ITS COMPELLING INTEREST IN UNBORN LIFE.

At the heart of the controversy in this case, as in many abortion cases, is the federal judiciary's usurpation of a legislative power "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." U.S. Const. amend. X. Your amici recognize that the Tenth Amendment will not save a statute that otherwise violates the subsequently enacted Fourteenth Amendment. Hunter v. Underwood, 471 U.S. 222, 233 (1985). Since neither the preamble nor the viability-testing statute, properly construed, violates the Fourteenth Amendment, the Tenth Amendment requires federal judicial deference to Missouri's legislative judgment.

Our system of government is based upon the consent of the governed. Our Declaration of Independence proclaims that "Governments . . . deriv[e] their just powers from the consent of the governed." Our Constitution begins with "We the People," and Article V requires the consent of three-fourths of the States for amendments to the Constitution. The Tenth Amendment formalizes the principle that unless a power has been consensually relinquished by the States or the people, the federal government may not usurp that power. See The Federalist No. 22, at 58 (A. Hamilton) (R. Fairfield ed. 1981) ("The fabric of American empire ought to rest on the solid basis of the consent of the people. The streams of national power ought to flow immediately from that pure, original fountain of all legitimate authority.") (emphasis in original).

The substantive content of the Constitution, including the substantive content of its amendments, thus derives from the consent of the governed; if the people have not consensually abdicated a substantive power, such as the power to make policy choices which do not otherwise violate the federal constitution, e.g., a non-binding moral pronouncement, the Court cannot deprive the people of a sovereign State of that power. U.S. Const. amend. X; see e.g., Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 664 (1887) ("It cannot be supposed that the states intended, by adopting th[e Fourteenth Amendment], to impose restraints upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community."); cf. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 177 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) ("[T]he drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to [abortion].").

A. The Tenth Amendment Applies to the Federal Judiciary.

The Constitution binds the federal judiciary as well as the other branches of government: "[T]he framers of the constitution contemplated that instrument as a rule for the government of courts, as well as of the legislature. . . . [C]ourts, as well as other departments, are bound by that instrument." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 179-80 (1803) (emphasis added). Under the express language of the Tenth Amendment, the federal judiciary, as an organ of the "United States," is bound by the federalism principles incorporated therein. See The Federalist No. 82, at 252 (A. Hamilton) (R. Fairfield ed. 1981) ("[T]hat the States will retain all preëxisting authorities which may not be exclusively delegated to the federal head . . . may not apply with the same force to the judiciary as to the legislative power, yet I am inclined to think that [it is], in the main, just with respect to the former as well as the latter.") (emphasis in original); Exec. Order No. 12,612, 52 Fed. Reg. 41,685, 41,686 (1987) ("Acts of the national government — whether legislative, executive, or judicial in nature — that exceed the enumerated powers of that government under the Constitution violate the principle of federalism established by the Framers.").

Although the Court has never expressly struck down a federal judicial decision on Tenth Amendment grounds, it has recognized restrictions placed on its own powers by the federalism principles in the Tenth Amendment. In Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528 (1985), for instance, the Court upheld federal legislative encroachments on state functions under the Commerce power, holding that its own classification of governmental functions as "'traditional,' 'integral,' or 'necessary' . . . inevitably invites an unelected federal judiciary to make decisions about what state policies it favors and which ones it dislikes." Id. at 546. The Court explained: "The essence of our federal system is that within the realm of authority left open to them under the Constitution, the States must be equally free to engage in any activity that their citizens choose for the common weal, no matter how unorthodox or unnecessary anyone else — including the judiciary — deems state involvement to be." Id. (emphasis added).

At one point, the Court construed the Tenth Amendment broadly, stating that it "is not to be shorn of its meaning by any narrow or technical construction, but is to be considered fairly and liberally so as to give effect to its scope and meaning." Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U.S. 46, 90-91 (1907). Recent Tenth Amendment cases have typically been in the context of federal legislative encroachment on State powers. See, e.g., Garcia, supra. The cases sustaining federal legislation challenged under the Tenth Amendment are not dispositive here because they deal with the legislative branch of the federal government typically acting under the auspices of the Commerce Clause in Article I.

To the extent Garcia mandates a federal judicial deference to otherwise proper state or federal legislative action, it supports the Missouri legislature's enactment of the preamble and the viability-testing statute. Even if Garcia can be read to limit the responsibility of the Court to enforce the Tenth Amendment against federal legislative encroachment on an otherwise proper state action, but see South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S. Ct. 1355, 1369 (1988) (Scalia, J. concurring), it should not be read to limit the responsibility of the Court to enforce the Tenth Amendment against federal judicial encroachment on an otherwise proper state action. What Missouri has done here is proper state action.

B. Neither the States Nor the People Have Consensually Abdicated Their Power to Make Moral Pronouncements About the Value of Unborn Human Life or About Abortion.

Neither the States nor the people have surrendered their authority to make moral statements about the value of unborn human life or about abortion. "The question is not what power the federal government ought to have, but what powers in fact have been given by the people. . . . Each state has all governmental powers save such as the people, by their Constitution, have conferred upon the United States, denied to the states, or reserved to themselves." United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 63 (1936); see generally Amar, Of Sovereignty and Federalism, 96 YALE L.J. 1425 (1987); Amar, Philadelphia Revisited: Amending the Constitution Outside Article V, 55 CHI. L. REV. 1043, 1055 (1988) ("The Constitution is a set of grants of authority from the People themselves to their government agents for limited purposes. The corollary of these limited grants of power is that government agents generally possess no authority — no 'sovereignty' — other than that expressly or impliedly delegated by the People.").

At the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, which according to Roe curtails the power of the States to regulate abortion, at least 36 state or territorial legislatures had enacted laws limiting abortion. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 174-75 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). Of those 36 legislatures, 31 evinced the will of sovereign States. With only 37 States at the time, and only 28 necessary to ratify an amendment to the Constitution, it is mathematically impossible to dispute Justice Rehnquist's conclusion that "the drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to this matter." 410 U.S. at 177. See generally Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality and Law, 40 U. PITT. L. REV. 359, 389 (1978); Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-protective Amendment, 63 CALIF. L. REV. 1250, 1250-92, 1310-16, 1331-39 (1975).

The Eighth Circuit would now stretch the Fourteenth Amendment so far as to deny Missouri the power even to make a pronouncement about the value of unborn human life. Neither the people nor the States abdicated this power in the Fourteenth Amendment, nor have the people or the States since consented to the usurpation of that power, either expressly or implicitly. The Eighth Circuit's holding is thus a raw usurpation of power "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

1. The Court's recent federalism cases reaffirm that the States retain certain sovereign powers, including the power to make fundamental policy decisions.

In Federal Energy Regulatory Comm'n v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. 742 (1982), the Court stated that "'the authority to make . . .

fundamental . . . decisions' is perhaps the quintessential attribute of sovereignty. Indeed, having the power to make decisions and to set policy is what gives the State its sovereign nature." 456 U.S. at 776 (citations omitted); see id. at 777 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) ("[E]ach State is sovereign within its own domain, governing its citizens and providing for their general welfare. . . . The Constitution contemplates 'an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States,' a system in which both retain a 'separate and independent existence.'") (citations omitted).

The powers to make a fundamental declaration of policy on the value of unborn human life and to protect the State's compelling interest in the life of a viable unborn child are powers the exercise of which does not impinge on any constitutionally protected individual rights. Individuals do not have a right to be free from moral pronouncements of the majority, Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 196 (1986), and Roe recognized the compelling nature of the States' interest in the viable unborn child.

The Court's most recent Tenth Amendment case, South Carolina v. Baker, supra, suggests that the Tenth Amendment would protect a State if "it [were] deprived of any right to participate in the national political process or [if it were] singled out in a way that left it politically isolated and powerless." 108 S. Ct. at 1361; see id. at 1372 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) ("The Court has failed to enforce the constitutional safeguards of state autonomy and self-sufficiency that may be found in the Tenth Amendment and the Guarantee Clause, as well as in the principles of federalism implicit in the Constitution."). The Eighth Circuit's holding that Missouri may not promulgate its consensus policy decision that life begins at conception leaves Missouri "politically isolated and powerless" in the social debate over abortion. By disregarding Missouri's legitimate power to make a non-binding moral pronouncement about the value of unborn human life, the Eighth Circuit's holding runs counter to the principles of federalism formalized in the Tenth Amendment.

2. Abortion legislation falls squarely within the police power, a political realm reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment.

The police power enables the States respectively to set standards of behavior so as to promote the public well-being, and extends to the protection of human life, public health and safety, and public morals. See generally Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26, 32 (1954). This power necessarily involves legislative line-drawing between competing interests, and judicial review of this sovereign line-drawing has traditionally been very narrow. Id. ("The role of the judiciary in determining whether [state police] power is being exercised for a public purpose is an extremely narrow one.").

In Mugler v. Kansas, supra, the Court spelled out the fundamentally legislative nature of the State police power, and warned that judicial usurpation of this power violates the principles of federalism formalized in the Tenth Amendment:

> It belongs to [state legislatures] to exert what are known as the police powers of the state, and to determine, primarily, what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety.
>
> [T]he courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy of legislation. Indeed, it is a fundamental principle in our institutions, indispensable to the preservation of public liberty, that one of the separate departments of government shall not usurp powers committed by the constitution to another department.
>
> * * *
>
> It cannot be supposed that the states intended, by adopting [the 14th] amendment, to impose restraints > upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community.

123 U.S. at 661-64 (citation omitted).

a. Protection of human life

One of the most fundamental state police powers is the power to protect human life. In the context of First Amendment cases, the Court has consistently recognized that the broad power to protect human life is a power reserved to the States under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments: "'[T]he essential dignity and worth of every human being [is] a concept at the root of any decent system of ordered liberty. . . . [T]he protection of life itself [is] left primarily to the individual states under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments.'" Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749, 758 (1985) (quoting Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 348 (1974), in turn quoting Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75, 92 (1966) (Stewart, J., concurring)). The Court has recognized that this power includes the power to protect unborn or "potential" human life. See discussion of Roe v. Wade, supra.

b. Regulation of medical practice

The power to regulate the medical profession, like the power to protect life, belongs to the States. In Roe, the Court referred to this power as an important state interest "in maintaining medical standards." 410 U.S. at 154; see City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 459 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) ("This Court has never failed to recognize that 'a State may properly assert important interests in safeguarding health [and] in maintaining medical standards.'" (quoting Roe v. Wade)).

c. Regulation of public health & welfare

The power of the States to regulate for the sake of public health has been recognized since the earliest days of the Republic: "Health laws of every description constitute . . . a part of that mass of legislation which 'embraces everything within the territory of a state, not surrendered to the general government; all which can be most advantageously exercised by the states themselves.' Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 203, 6 L. ed. 23, 71." Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 73 (1905) (Harlan, J., dissenting). Likewise, the States have retained the power to regulate for the public welfare. See generally Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. at 33 ("The concept of the public welfare is broad and inclusive. The values it represents are spiritual as well as physical, aesthetic as well as monetary.") (citation omitted).

d. Domestic relations

Various aspects of abortion regulation can appropriately be classified within the sphere of domestic relations. For instance, parental or spousal notification requirements impinge on the relations of husband and wife or parent and child. The Supreme Court has "consistently recognized that '[t]he whole subject of the domestic relations of husband and wife, parent and child, belongs to the laws of the States and not to the laws of the United States.'" Rose v. Rose, 107 S. Ct. 2029, 2033 (1987) (citations omitted); see De Sylva v. Ballentine, 351 U.S. 570, 580 (1956) ("[T]here is no federal law of domestic relations, which is primarily a matter of state concern.").

The Court has enunciated a very narrow standard of reviewing State domestic relations statutes:

> On the rare occasion when state family law has come into conflict with a federal statute, this Court has limited review under the Supremacy Clause to a determination whether Congress has "positively required by direct enactment" that state law be preempted. A mere conflict in words is not sufficient. State family and family-property law must do "major damage" to "clear and substantial" federal interests before the Supremacy Clause will demand that state law be overridden.

Hisquierdo v. Hisquierdo, 439 U.S. 572, 581 (1979) (citations omitted). Abortion is the glaring exception.

C. Roe v. Wade Does Not Require that State Policy on the Value of Unborn Human Life Be Abortion-neutral.

The Eighth Circuit's implicit holding that State legislation must be abortion-neutral has no basis in the Constitution or in the Court's decision in Roe. Implicit in the Roe decision is that each State retains the power to define its "important and legitimate interest in potential life," even before viability. See City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427-28 (State's "'important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life' exists 'throughout the course of the woman's pregnancy.'") (citations omitted); Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828 ("The State has compelling interests in ensuring maternal health and in protecting potential human life, and these interests exist 'throughout pregnancy.'") (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (citation omitted); cf. Federal Energy Regulatory Comm'n v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. at 761 ("Indeed, having the power to make decisions and to set policy is what gives the State its sovereign nature.").

As the States possess an "important and legitimate interest" in protecting all pre-natal human life, Missouri's promulgation of a policy statement is protected by the Tenth Amendment.

D. Due to the Compelling Nature of Missouri's Interest in the Protection of the Lives of Viable Unborn Children, This Is the Paradigmatic Case for Tenth Amendment Judicial Restraint.

The policy of judicial restraint implicitly recognizes the Court's restriction by the federalism principles formalized in the Tenth Amendment. Various dissenting opinions in the Court's privacy cases have suggested that the Court's expansive reading of the Constitution in this area is unconstitutional as a de facto judicial amendment to the Constitution. See, e.g., Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 530-31 (1965) (Stewart, J., dissenting); cf. Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 951 (1983) (Powell, J., dissenting) ("The hydraulic pressure inherent within each of the separate [federal] Branches to exceed the outer limits of its power, even to accomplish desirable objectives, must be resisted.") (emphasis added) (quoted at Garcia, 469 U.S. at 565 (Powell, J. dissenting)). Where, as here, this Court has recognized the compelling nature of the State's interest, Missouri's legislative judgment should be respected.

In numerous other contexts, the Court has restrained itself from the temptation to usurp legislative powers of the States. The ramifications of such judicial encroachments go to the very heart of our constitutional democracy, a system fundamentally rooted in the concept of self-government:

> [T]he candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by the decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made, in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

Lincoln, First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861, in A. Lincoln, Speeches and Letters 171-72 (M. Roe ed. 1894).

The Court's most noted intrusion into the legislative realm reserved to the States involved the Court's reliance on substantive due process in the field of economic regulation. The dissenting opinions of Justices Holmes and Harlan in Lochner, supra, decried the Court's usurpation of legislative power reserved to the States: "[M]y agreement or disagreement has nothing to do with the right of a majority to embody their opinions in law," 198 U.S. at 75 (Holmes, J., dissenting); "'No evils arising from ... legislation could be more far reaching than those that might come to our system of government if the judiciary, abandoning the sphere assigned to it by the fundamental law, should enter the domain of legislation, and upon grounds merely of justice or reason or wisdom annul statutes that had received the sanction of the people's representatives.'" Id. at 74 (Harlan, J., dissenting) (quoting Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U.S. 207, 223 (1903)).

By the middle of the 20th Century, the Court had rejected the Lochner approach to substantive due process: "The day is gone when this Court uses the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to strike down state laws . . . because they may be unwise, improvident, or out of harmony with a particular school of thought. . . . We emphasize again what Chief Justice Waite said in Munn v. State of Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 134, 24 L.Ed. 77, 'For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts.'" Williamson v. Lee Optical of Oklahoma, 348 U.S. 483, 488 (1955), quoted in Harris v. McRae, supra, 448 U.S. at 326; cf. Berman v. Parker, supra, 348 U.S. at 32 ("Subject to specific constitutional limitations, when the legislature has spoken, the public interest has been declared in terms well-nigh conclusive. In such cases the legislature, not the judiciary, is the main guardian of the public needs to be served by social legislation . . . .").

In United States v. Butler, supra, the Court announced its proper constitutional role vis-a-vis legislative power reserved to the States:

> The Constitution is the supreme law of the land ordained and established by the people. . . . [T]he judicial branch of the [federal] government has only one duty; to lay the article of the Constitution which is invoked beside the statute which is challenged and to decide whether the latter squares with the former. . . . The only power it has, if such it may be called, is the power of judgment. This court neither approves nor condemns any legislative policy.

297 U.S. at 62-63.

As with substantive due process in the economic sphere, this Court has recently recognized the inherent danger of its intrusion into the realm of state legislative powers in the privacy context:

> The Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution. . . . There should be, therefore, great resistance to expand the substantive reach of [the Due Process Clause of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments], particularly if it requires redefining the category of rights deemed to be fundamental. Otherwise, the Judiciary necessarily takes to itself further authority to govern the country without express constitutional authority.

Bowers v. Hardwick, supra, 478 U. S. at 194.

This case presents the Court with an opportunity to withdraw, at least partially, from the essentially legislative field of abortion regulation. Particularly when a preamble has no binding effect, and the regulation is narrowly tailored to protect a compelling state interest, the Court should recognize that it too is bound by the Tenth Amendment and accordingly refrain from usurping the power of the people of Missouri to proclaim their respect for unborn human life.

Conclusion

By disregarding Missouri's legitimate powers to make a nonbinding moral pronouncement about the value of unborn human life and to regulate the medical profession's determination of fetal viability, the Eighth Circuit's holding runs counter to the principles of self-government and federalism formalized in the Ninth and Tenth Amendments. If the Court adopts the position taken by the Eighth Circuit, the States and the people will further lose control over one of the most vital social and moral debates facing this country.

Respectfully submitted,

signed: ROBERT A. DESTRO

ROBERT A. DESTRO
Counsel of Record for Amici Curiae
The Columbus School of Law
The Catholic University of America
Washington, D.C. 20064
(202) 635-5140

JOSEPH E. SCHMITZ
Twelfth Floor
1050 Connecticut Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 457-9470

ROBERT J. CRNKOVICH
General Counsel
American Collegians for Life, Inc.
1330 New Hampshire Ave., N.W.
Number 823
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 289-3282

NANCY J. GANNON
General Counsel
Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights
1100 W. Wells Street
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53233
(414) 289-0170

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH, HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN, HON. JOHN C. DANFORTH, AND OTHER UNITED STATES SENATORS AND MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS †

ALBERT P. BLAUSTEIN *
Rutgers University School of Law
Camden, N.J. 08102
(609) 757-6373

EDWARD R. GRANT
ANN-LOUISE LOHR
KEVIN J. TODD
AUL LEGAL DEFENSE FUND
343 So. Dearborn St. #1804
Chicago, Illinois 60604
(312) 786-9494
Counsel for Amici

* Counsel of Record

† Amici listed inside front cover

February 23, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

United States Senators

HON. DAN COATS (R-Ind.)
HON. JOHN C. DANFORTH (R-Mo.)
HON. ALFONSE M. D'AMATO (R-N.Y.)
HON. JESSE HELMS (R-N.C.)
HON. GORDON J. HUMPHREY (R-N.H.)
HON. TRENT LOTT (R-Miss.)
HON. CONNIE MACK (R-Fla.)
HON. DON NICKLES (R-Ok.)
HON. HARRY REID (D-Neb.)

Members of Congress

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE (D-Ohio)
HON. RICHARD K. ARMEY (R-Tex.)
HON. CASS BALLENGER (R-N.C.)
HON. STEVE BARTLETT (R-Tex.)
HON. DAVID E. BONIOR (D-Mich.)
HON. JIM COURTER (R-N.J.)
HON. THOMAS D. DELAY (R-Tex.)
HON. JACK FIELDS (R-Tex.)
HON. NEWT GINGRICH (R-Ga.)
HON. FRED GRANDY (R-Iowa)
HON. TONY P. HALL (D-Ohio)
HON. JAMES V. HANSEN (R-Utah)
HON. JAMES A. HAYES (D-La.)
HON. WALLY HERGER (R-Cal.)
HON. DUNCAN HUNTER (R-Cal.)
HON. EARL HUTTO (D-Fla.)
HON. JAMES M. INHOFE (R-Ok.)
HON. ROBERT LIVINGSTON (R-La.)
HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN (D-Ohio)
HON. BILL MCCOLLUM (R-Fla.)
HON. BOB MCEWEN (R-Ohio)
HON. EDWARD R. MADIGAN (R-Ill.)
HON. THOMAS J. MANTON (D-N.Y.)
HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES (D-Mass.)

Members of Congress—Continued

HON. CLARENCE E. MILLER (R-Ohio)
HON. GUY V. MOLINARI (R-N.Y.)
HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN (D-W.Va.)
HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY (D-Miss.)
HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD (R-Cal.)
HON. JOHN P. MURTHA (D-Pa.)
HON. JAMES L. OVERSTAR (D-Minn.)
HON. FRANK PALLONE (D-N.J.)
HON. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR. (R-S.C.)
HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO (R-N.J.)
HON. ROBERT A. ROE (D-N.J.)
HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND (R-Conn.)
HON. MARTY RUSSO (D-Ill.)
HON. H. JAMES SAXTON (R-N.J.)
HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH (R-N.J.)
HON. HARLEY O. STAGGERS, JR. (D-W.Va.)
HON. CLIFF STEARNS (R-Fla.)
HON. DON SUNDQUIST (R-Tenn.)
HON. BARBARA F. VUCANOVICH (R-Nev.)
HON. ROBERT S. WALKER (R-Pa.)
HON. FRANK R. WOLF (R-Va.)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICI	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. STARE DECISIS DOES NOT PREEMPT RECONSIDERATION OF ROE v. WADE	3
II. AFFIRMATION OF ROE v. WADE SERVES NONE OF THE INTERESTS OF STABILITY, PREDICTABILITY, OR CONSISTENCY THAT ARE FURTHERED BY STARE DECISIS	10
III. RECONSIDERATION AND REVERSAL OF ROE v. WADE IS CONSISTENT WITH PRIOR REVERSAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL DECISIONS BY THIS COURT	15
IV. ROE v. WADE'S HOLDING THAT THE UNBORN ARE NOT PERSONS UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT WAS CLEARLY IN ERROR AND SHOULD NOT BE PROTECTED BY STARE DECISIS	20
V. THE MOST "PRUDENTIAL" COURSE IN ADDRESSING THE PROBLEMS POSED BY ROE v. WADE IS TO OVERRULE THAT DECISION	24
CONCLUSION	28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

	Page
Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U.S. 525 (1923)	11, 16
Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964)	19
Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	9, 10
Amalgamated Food Employees Union v. Logan Valley Plaza, 391 U.S. 308 (1968)	19
Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Bough, 149 U.S. 368 (1893)	11
Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576 (1984)	25
Bowen v. Kendrick, 108 S.Ct. 2562 (1988)	13
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)	25, 26
Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954)	24
Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393 (1932)	3, 4, 6
Carey v. Population Services, Int'l, 431 U.S. 678 (1977)	25
Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 419 (1793)	5
Cleveland Bd. of Education v. LeFleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974)	25
Connecticut General Co. v. Johnson, 303 U.S. 77 (1938)	5
Conservatorship of Drabick, 200 Cal. App.3d 185, 245 Cal. Rptr. 840 (1987)	25
Cruzan v. Harmon, 760 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. 1988)	25
Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327 (1986)	17
Denney v. Texas, 437 U.S. 911 (1978)	5
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	12
Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857)	5, 21
Edgar v. Mite Corp., 457 U.S. 624 (1982)	25
Enelow v. New York Life Ins. Co., 293 U.S. 379 (1935)	4
Erie Ry. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)	19, 20
Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726 (1963)	11
Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts, 467 U.S. 561 (1984)	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
First National Bank v. Maine, 284 U.S. 312 (1932)	18
Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985)	5, 9, 19, 20
Gulfstream Aerospace Corp. v. Mayacamas Corp., 108 S.Ct. 1133 (1988)	4
Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe, 306 U.S. 466 (1939)	5
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981)	11
Hardwick v. Florida, 109 S.Ct. 185 (1988)	5
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	1, 13
Hudgens v. NLRB, 424 U.S. 507 (1976)	19
Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213 (1983)	19, 24, 27
In re Quinlan, 70 N.J. 10, 355 A.2d 647 (1976)	25, 26
In re Storar, 52 N.Y.2d 363, 420 N.E.2d 64 (1981)	25
Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257 (1960)	19
Kentucky v. Dennison, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 66 (1861)	4
Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238 (1976)	25
Kerlin's Lessee v. Bull, 1 U.S. (1 Dall.) 175 (1786)	9
Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., 215 U.S. 349 (1910)	11
Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68 (1968)	21
Liggett Co. v. Baldridge, 278 U.S. 105 (1928)	17
Lincoln Federal Labor Union v. Northwestern Iron & Metal Co., 335 U.S. 525 (1949)	17
Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905)	18
Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961)	27
Matter of Conroy, 98 N.J. 321, 486 A.2d 1209 (1985)	25
Matter of Peter by Johanning, 108 N.J. 365, 529 A.2d 419 (1987)	25
Morehead v. New York ex rel. Tipaldo, 298 U.S. 587 (1936)	11
Monell v. N.Y. City Dept. of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658 (1978)	5
National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976)	9, 19

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
North Dakota Pharmacy Board v. Snyder's Drug Stores, 414 U.S. 156 (1973)	16
O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969)	4
Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970)	5
Parden v. Terminal Ry., 377 U.S. 84 (1964)	4
Paris Adult Theater I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973)	25, 26
Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527 (1981)	17
Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, No. 87-107	19
Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693 (1976)	26
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896)	12
Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust, 157 U.S. 429, modified, 158 U.S. 601 (1895)	4, 5
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983)	11
Puerto Rico v. Branstad, 107 S.Ct. 2802 (1987)	4
Robbins v. California, 453 U.S. 420 (1981)	18
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim
Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160 (1976)	19
Simopolous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983)	10
Solorio v. United States, 107 S.Ct. 2924 (1987)	4
South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S. Ct. 1355 (1988)	4, 24
State Tax Commission v. Aldrich, 316 U.S. 174 (1942)	18
Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1 (1842)	11, 19
The Antelope, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 66 (1825)	21
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)	6, 7, 9
United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982)	18
United States v. Salvucci, 448 U.S. 83 (1980)	18, 19
United States Parole Comm'n. v. Geraughty, 445 U.S. 388 (1980)	24, 25
Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S. 1 (1974)	25
Welch v. Texas Dept. of Highways & Transportation, 107 S.Ct. 2941 (1987)	4
West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937)	16
Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977)	26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Whisenhunt v. Spradlin, 464 U.S. 965 (1983)	25
Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978)	25
Zbaraz v. Hartigan, 763 F.2d 1532 (7th Cir.), aff'd by evenly divided court, 108 S.Ct. 479 (1987)	11
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS
U.S. Const. Art. I, sec. 2	22
U S. Const. Art. V	4
U.S. Const. Amend. I	5, 19
U.S. Const. Amend. IV	18, 19
U.S. Const. Amend. X	9, 19
U.S. Const. Amend. XIII	5
U.S. Const. Amend. XIV	passim
U.S. Amend. XVI	5
U.S. Const. Amend. XXVI	5
STATUTES AND REGULATIONS
42 U.S.C. § 300-300a-6a (1982 ed. and Supp. IV)	14
42 U.S.C. § 1396 et seq. (1982 ed. and Supp. IV)	13, 14
42 U.S.C. § 300z et seq. (1982 ed. and Supp. IV)	14
Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089 (1866)	21
The Human Life Bill—S. 158: Report by the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers, Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong. 1st Sess. (1981)	7
Legal Ramifications of the Human Life Amendment: Hearings before the Subcomm. on the Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on S.J. Res. 3, 98th Cong. 1st Sess.	13
Proclamation No. 5761, 53 Fed. Reg. 1464 (1988)	14
OTHER AUTHORITIES
L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy (Rev. 7th ed. 1974)	22
J. Beck, Elements of Medical Jurisprudence (11th ed. 1860)	22
Blake, The Supreme Court's Abortion Decisions and Public Opinion in the United States, 3 Pop. & Dev. Rev. 45 (1977)	7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Blaustein & Ferguson, Desegregation and the Law (1957) 12

Blaustein & Field, "Overruling" Opinions in the Supreme Court, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 151 (1958) ..4, 6, 15, 23

E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life (1977) 21

Bush, Fertility—Related State Laws Enacted in 1982, 15 Fam. Plan. Persp. 111 (1983) 14

Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Ford. L. Rev. 807 (1973) 22

Chemerinsky, Rationalizing the Abortion Debate: Legal Rhetoric and the Abortion Controversy, 31 Buff. L. Rev. 107 (1982) 18

Congressional Research Service, The Constitution of the United States, Analysis and Interpretation (1987) 4

Cooper, Stare Decisis: Precedent and Principle in Constitutional Adjudication, 73 Cornell L. Rev. 401 (1988) 9

C. Corliss, Patten's Human Embryology: Elements of Clinical Development (1976) 22

A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1973) 8

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Law and Morality, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979) 6

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250 (1975) 22

Douglas, Stare Decisis, 49 Colum. L. Rev. 735 (1949) 5, 10

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 8, 15, 21, 22

Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 .....8, 16, 23

Ginsburg, Some Thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N.C. L. Rev. 375 (1985) 15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Gorby, The "Right" to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment "Personhood" and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 So. Ill. L. Rev. 1 22

Henshaw, et al., Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63 (1987) 27

Higginbotham, Text and Precedent in Constitutional Adjudication, 73 Cornell L. Rev. 411 (1988) 5

Horan and Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution, 57 (Horan, Grant, Cunningham, eds., 1987) 23

Horan, Grant, Cunningham, eds., Abortion and the Constitution (1987) 13

Howard, Garcia and the Values of Federalism: On the Need for a Recurrence to Fundamental Principles, 19 Ga. L. Rev. 789 (1985) 20

J. Imber, Abortion and Private Practice (1986) 26, 27

Knicely, The Thornburgh and Bowers Cases: Consequences for Roe v. Wade, 56 Miss. L.J. 267 (1986) 7, 15

Koop & Grant, The "Small Beginnings" of Euthanasia, 2 Notre Dame J. of L., Ethics & Pub. Pol'y 585 (1986) 26

Maltz, Some Thoughts on the Death of Stare Decisis in Constitutional Law, 1980 Wis. L. Rev. 467 ..... 4, 6

K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology (3rd ed. 1982) 22

Monaghan, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Adjudication, 88 Colum. L. Rev. 723 (1988) 7

Morgan, Roe v. Wade *and the Lessons of Pre-*Roe Case Law, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1724 (1979) 15

Note, Technological Advances and Roe v. Wade: The Need to Rethink Abortion Law, 29 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1195 (1982) 15

N.Y. Times, Jan. 22, 1989, at 17, col. 1 7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
P. Ramsey, Ethics at the Edge of Life (1979)	26
Reed, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Law, 9 Pa. Bar Assoc. Q. 134 (April 1938)	4, 10
Rehnquist, Is an Exapnded Right of Privacy Consistent with Fair and Effective Law Enforcement? Or: Privacy, You've Come a Long Way, Baby, 23 Kan. L. Rev. 1 (1974)	16
Rice, Overruling Roe v. Wade: An Analysis of the Proposed Constitutional Amendments, 15 B.C. Ind. & Comm. L. Rev. 307 (1973)	8
J. Thayer, John Marshall (1920)	6
Wash. Post, Nov. 13, 1988, at C6, Col. 1	14
Torres & Forest, Why Do Women Have Abortions?, 20 Fam. Plan. Persp. 169 (1988)	27
Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231 (1985)	13, 14, 15
Wechsler, Toward Neutral Principles of Constitutional Law, 73 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1959)	9

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH, HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN, HON. JOHN C. DANFORTH, AND OTHER UNITED STATES SENATORS AND MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE AMICI

The amici, Members of Congress and Senators, have substantial interests in the disposition of this appeal. Congress has enacted broad restrictions on the funding of abortion, which have been upheld by this Court. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). The decision of the court of appeals, if upheld, could adversely impact the ability of Congress to maintain such restrictions. Furthermore, among the questions accepted for review by this Court is whether Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) should be reconsidered or reversed. Congress is interested in this question, as it affects the correct interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment's protections of the right to life and of due process under law, as well as the fundamental balance between legislative authority and judicial review under the federal Constitution.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Stare decisis, a doctrine of diminished importance in the field of constitutional law, provides no basis for declining to reverse the multiple errors of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). More than 100 times, this Court has corrected itself on constitutional questions and overturned prior case law. The reasons for this self-correction —the difficulty of addressing constitutional error through amendment or legislation; the primacy of the text of the constitution over the interpretations placed upon it; and the inappropriateness of the nation's highest tribunal perpetuating constitutional error—apply with special force to Roe. Moreover, the interests furthered by stare decisis are not served by adherence to Roe. The doctrines of Roe have caused great instability and unpredictability in the law, such that reversal is necessary to restore an appropriate balance.

Reversal of Roe would also be consistent with past willingness to admit error. This Court has corrected decisions which, like Roe, have misinterpreted the "liberty" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to place an undue strait-jacket on legislative authority. And it has renounced the role of "super-legislature," sitting in judgment on the wisdom of state statutes. Doctrines on which long-standing social institutions and conventions were established have been overturned, as have doctrines on which scores of criminal convictions were predicated. The overturning of such decisions has often caused change, some of it disruptive. But it has also returned to the political branches of government their rightful authority to respond to the pressing moral and social issues at the root of such change. Roe, contrary to this tradition, has usurped the legislative function, and exacerbated the social turmoil over abortion.

Roe also merits reversal because it erroneously removed the protections of the Fourteenth Amendment, intended to embrace "all human beings," from the unborn. The humanity of the unborn cannot be debated in light of current medical technology, nor can the uniqueness of each individual unborn life be called into question. Redress of this error is imperative.

Finally, although this Court has shown an appropriate reluctance to reverse constitutional decisions where a less severe remedy is available, this case does not counsel such a cautious approach. The decision of the court of appeals illustrates the extent to which Roe has been utilized to frustrate even the most modest efforts to protect unborn life in general, and the viable unborn in particular. This opinion, unfortunately, typifies the application of Roe by the federal courts. Roe is constitutional error of the most radical variety, and the traditions of this Court call for such error to be dispatched without ambiguity.

ARGUMENT

I. STARE DECISIS DOES NOT PREEMPT RECONSIDERATION OF ROE v. WADE.

> Stare decisis is usually the wise policy, because in most matters it is more important that the applicable rule of law be settled than it be settled right. This is commonly true even where the error is a matter of serious concern, provided correction can be had by legislation. But in cases involving the Federal Constitution where correction through legislative action is practically impossible, this Court has often overruled its prior decisions. The Court bows to the lessons of experience and the force of better reasoning, recognizing that the process of trial and error, so fruitful in the physical sciences, is appropriate also in the judicial function.

Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 406-410 (1932) (Brandeis, J., dissenting)[1]. On almost 90

[1] The copious footnotes and citations in reference to this passage are omitted. Justice Brandeis identified 28 instances in which the Court had reversed or qualified its own prior reading of the occasions since Burnet, this Court has exercised its liberty to review and reverse its decisions on constitutional law. Maltz, Some Thoughts on the Death of Stare Decisis in Constitutional Law, 1980 Wis. L. Rev. 467, 494-496 (listing 47 constitutional decisions overturned 1960-1979); Blaustein & Field, "Overruling" Opinions in the Supreme Court, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 151, 167, 184-194 (1958) (identifying 60 constitutional law decisions among 90 overrulings of prior Supreme Court decisions). The Library of Congress, relying on these studies, has identified, through 1986, 184 cases in which this Court has reversed its own prior rulings.[2]

The overruling cases of the past 60 years amplify Justice Brandeis's criteria for permitting greater latitude in overruling constitutional decisions. First is the unique difficulty of amending the Constitution to correct an erroneous decision, particularly where a legislative reformation of the error is impossible.[3] This difficulty extends not only to the super-majoritarian requirements of Article V, but to the task of drafting an amendment that Constitution. As noted in the text, that number has at least tripled in the years since Burnet. See Maltz, Some Thoughts on the Death of Stare Decisis in Constitutional Law, 1980 Wis. L. Rev. 467, 467.

---

[2] Congressional Research Service, The Constitution of the United States, Analysis and Interpretation, 2115-2127, & Supp. (1987). The following cases, decided since 1986, qualify to be added to the Library of Congress compilation: Puerto Rico v. Branstad, 107 S.Ct. 2802 (1987), overruling Kentucky v. Dennison, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 66 (1861); Solorio v. United States, 107 S.Ct. 2924 (1987), overruling, O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969); Welch v. Texas Dep't of Highways and Transportation, 107 S.Ct. 2941 (1987), overruling in part, Parden v. Terminal Ry., 377 U.S. 84 (1964); Gulfstream Aerospace Corp. v. Mayacamas Corp., 108 S.Ct. 1133 (1988) overruling, Enelow v. New York Life Ins. Co., 293 U.S. 379 (1935); South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S.Ct. 1355 (1988), overruling, Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, mod. 158 U.S. 601 (1895).

[3] Reed, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Law, 9 Pa. Bar Assoc. Q. 134 (April 1938).

will strike the intended target without unintended effect on other constitutional provisions.[4] Second, and of no less importance, is the view that "precedent that conflicts with [constitutional] text is not precedent."[5] Justice Frankfurter stated, "[t]he ultimate touchstone of constitutionality is the Constitution itself and not what we have said about it." Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe, 306 U.S. 466, 491-92 (1939) (Frankfurter, J., concurring.) And Justice Douglas went so far as to say that the place of stare decisis in constitutional law is "tenuous" where a prior decision conflicts with the Constitution itself.[6]

A third and related reason is that it is wrong to go on being wrong.[7] Justice Black wrote that "[a] constitutional interpretation that is wrong should not stand." Connecticut General Co. v. Johnson, 303 U.S. 77, 85 (1938) (Black, J., dissenting). This is particularly so

---

[4] Only four decisions of this Court have been reversed by amendment to the Constitution. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 419 (1793) (11th Amendment); Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) (13th and 14th Amendments); Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust, 158 U.S. 601 (1895) (16th Amendment); and Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970) (26th Amendment).

[5] Higginbotham, Text and Precedent in Constitutional Adjudication, 73 Cornell L. Rev. 411, 411 (1988).

[6] A judge looking at a constitutional decision may have compulsions to reverse past history and accept what was once written. But he remembers above all else that it is the Constitution which he swore to support and defend, not the gloss which his predecessors may have put upon it.
Douglas, Stare Decisis, 49 Colum. L. Rev. 735, 736 (1949).

[7] See, Monell v. N.Y. City Dep't of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 659, et seq. (1978) (Brennan, J.); Garcia v. San Antonio Metro., 469 U.S. 528, 557 (1985) (Blackmun, J.). Note also that in death penalty cases, Justices Brennan and Marshall have, since 1976, dissented from precedent and voted in memorandum dissenting opinions to reverse death penalty convictions in more than 1000 cases. See, e.g., Denney v. Texas, 437 U.S. 911 (1978); Hardwick v. Florida, 109 S.Ct. 185 (1988).

where the Court's decision touches upon a matter of intense moral and political concern. Erroneous removal of such questions from the democratically-controlled branches of government, and from the states, may "deaden society's sense of moral responsibility," [8] and preclude the innovation of more just and satisfactory legal solutions. This is the salutary effect, noted by Justice Brandeis, of permitting "trial and error."

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), is clearly the type of constitutional decision for which the doctrine of stare decisis holds diminished importance.[9] First, Roe is demonstrably not the type of decision where "correction can be had by [state] legislation." Burnet, supra. Legislative action by the states to simply curtail the impact of Roe has met with increasing judicial hostility. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 764 (1986). Roe is applied not only to restrict legislation which adversely

[8] J. Thayer, John Marshall 107 (1920).

[9] One significant reason for limiting application of stare decisis in the case of Roe v. Wade, is that Roe itself was a reversal of precedent. "Although it did not expressly disapprove any specific case, . . . [Roe] must be viewed as a significant departure from established precedent." Maltz, supra, 1980 Wis. L. Rev. at 492, n.119. Roe did not confirm an ongoing erosion of precedent. Cf. Blaustein & Field, 57 Mich. L. Rev. at 156-159 and cases cited therein. Rather, it uprooted and cast aside virtually all existing law on abortion, striking from the statute books laws more than a century old, as well as laws of much more reecnt vintage. Roe, 410 U.S. at 174-177 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). These laws, moreover, reflected in part a progression from, and in part a codification of, centuries of common law developments regarding abortion. See Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Law and Morality, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979). See also, Brief of Value of Life Committee as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants; and Brief of Certain American State Legislators as Amici Curiae in Support of Appellants. Reversal of Roe, now 16 years old, would restore a body of precedent gradually shaped and developed over the course of centuries.

impacts on a woman's access to abortion, but also, to disapprove legislation because it is "motivated" by an anti-Roe sentiment.[10] And although your amici do not concede the point, it appears that efforts to correct or ameliorate Roe through the Congressional powers of enforcement under the Fourteenth Amendment would likely be held, under current law, to run afoul of Roe.[11]

Second, public opinion polls show consistent majority support for restrictions on abortion far more stringent than allowed by Roe.[12] But, the task of moving such

[10] See, Knicely, The Thornburgh and Bowers Cases: Consequences for Roe v. Wade, 56 Miss. L.J. 267, 281 (1986) ("That the Thornburgh majority's perception of legislative motive weighs heavily in its decision cannot be doubted. It permeates virtually every aspect of the majority opinion.")

[11] Your amici do not concede that Congress is powerless in this regard, but note, for purposes of this Brief, that Congressional efforts to alter the central holdings of Roe have been rendered exceedingly difficult by the widely held legal opinion that Congress lacks the authority to so act. See, The Human Life Bill—S. 158: Report by the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers, Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong. 1st Sess. (1981). Professor Monaghan has aptly described Congress's dilemma:

> Surely, if there is a reasonable chance that the Court would reverse itself on the merits, Congress is not disregarding its duty to obey the law in enacting a new abortion statute. Yet one can anticipate the reaction: many who have never uttered a kind word for stare decisis would rise against the congressional "usurpation" of judicial authority. Apparently, for them stare decisis resides in the judicial power: the Court may act entirely free of any constraint from its precedents, but Congress cannot insist that it do so.

Monaghan, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Adjudication, 88 Colum. L. Rev. 723, 755 (1988).

[12] The National Opinion Research Center reports that 60 percent of those surveyed oppose the expansive abortion right created in Roe. Views on Abortion Remain Divided, N.Y. Times, Jan. 22, 1989, at 17, col. 1. Popular support for elective abortion has remained a minority position, approximately 40 percent, since 1973. See Id.; Blake, The Supreme Court's Abortion Decisions and Public Opinion in the United States, 3 Pop. & Dev. Rev. 45 (1977).

opinion behind a constitutional amendment is complicated by Roe's multiple and confusing holdings.[13] No less than five constitutional holdings may be identified: that the unborn are not "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment;[14] that if the unborn were persons, no right to abortion would exist;[15] that the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause includes a right to decide to terminate pregnancy;[16] that states may not adopt a "theory of life" to override the right to terminate pregnancy;[17] and that no state interest in the unborn is sufficient to prohibit any abortion until the final "trimester" of pregnancy.[18] As many commentators have noted, the range and detail of these holdings is more characteristic of legislation than of constitutional law.[19] And the resulting task of drafting a constitutional amendment that fairly meets the errors of Roe is daunting, if not impossible.

Third, the growing polarization over Roe within this Court, and within society, confirm the assessment of legal scholars that many of these holdings were in error. It is wrong to propogate such a decision unless, under renewed scrutiny, the reasoning of Roe withstands the arguments

---

[13] Rice, Overruling Roe v. Wade: An Analysis of the Proposed Constitutional Amendments, 15 B.C. Ind. & Comm. L. Rev. 307 (1973).

[14] 410 U.S. at 156-159.

[15] 410 U.S. at 156-157.

[16] 410 U.S. at 153.

[17] 410 U.S. at 162.

[18] 410 U.S. at 163-164.

[19] See, e.g., Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government, 113-114 (1973); Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159.

made against it.[20] Unless independent grounds exist for affirming Roe, stare decisis alone stands as no impediment to reversal.[21]

---

[20] "[T]he long tradition of the Court [is] that previous decisions must be subject to re-examination when a case against their reasoning is made." Wechsler, Toward Neutral Principles of Constitutional Law, 73 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 31 (1959). It is no violation of stare decisis, therefore, to consider and act upon a better-reasoned argument that the precedent in question was in error. See also, Cooper, Stare Decisis: Precedent and Principle in Constitutional Adjudication, 73 Cornell L. Rev. 401, 408 (1988), citing, Kerlin's Lessee v. Bull, 1 U.S. (1 Dall.) 175, 178 (1786) ("[I]f a Judge conceives, that a judgment given by a former Court is erroneous, he ought not in conscience to give the like judgment, he being sworn to judge according to the law.")

[21] Roe has been defended by this Court almost exclusively on grounds of stare decisis. See, Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 420 (1983); Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 779-781 (1986). This is in marked contrast to the debate occasioned by the overruling of National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976) by Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985). While the Garcia dissenters invoked stare decisis, they recognized that this doctrine is a servant to principles of greater importance.

> Whatever effect the Court's decision may have in weakening the application of stare decisis, it is likely to be less important than what the Court has done to the Constitution itself. A unique feature of the United States is the federal system of government guaranteed by the Constitution and implicit in the very name of our country. Despite some genuflecting in the Court's opinion to the concept of federalism, today's decision effectively reduces the Tenth Amendment to meaningless rhetoric when Congress acts pursuant to the Commerce Clause.

469 U.S. at 559-560. Thus, the Garcia dissents did not rest on stare decisis, but on the fundamental principle of federalism, and the specific dictates of the Tenth Amendment. See, Id., at 560-589. Roe, however, rests on no such fundamental principle, or textual mandate.

II. AFFIRMATION OF ROE v. WADE SERVES NONE OF THE INTERESTS OF STABILITY, PREDICTABILITY OR CONSISTENCY THAT ARE FURTHERED BY STARE DECISIS.

The protection of stare decisis is qualified. As the full title of the doctrine—stare decisis et non quieta movere (stand by the precedents and do not disturb the calm)[22] —implies, respect for past decisions extends properly only to those doctrines that are "at rest." Roe v. Wade, however, is an unsettled doctrine with an unsettling effect. It is the inevitable result of the majority's failure to heed the counsel authored by one of its own number:

> From age to age the problem of constitutional adjudication is the same. It is to keep the power of government unrestrained by social or economic theories that one set of judges may entertain. . . . It is when a judiciary with life tenure seeks to write its social and economic creed into the Constitution that instability is created.

Douglas, Stare Decisis, 49 Colum.L.Rev. 735, 754 (1949).

1. Roe v. Wade ostensibly intended to settle the issue of abortion in American law. However, Roe has proven to be inherently difficult to apply in any consistent and principled manner. This is highlighted by Roe's progeny, which has produced a growing body of intricate, arbitrary regulations surrounding the abortion decision. A state may require second trimester abortions to be performed in clinics, Simopolous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983), but may not require that they be performed in hospitals, Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 459 (1983). A state may require that certain information be provided to the mother by a doctor or his assistant, Akron, 462 U.S. at 448, but may not require that the doctor himself provide the same information, Id., at 449. The quantum of information a state may require be provided has been scrupulously circumscribed. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. at 759, 765. Far from settling the debate, these subsequent decisions have multiplied confusion and spawned further unanswered questions.

[22] Reed, supra, note 3, 9 Pa. Bar. Assoc. Q. 134.

2. Adherence to Roe promises more unpredictability, and more "justification" for this Court to "sit as a superlegislature to weigh the wisdom of legislation." Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 730-731 (1963). Even supposedly "settled" questions of abortion law, such as the permissibility of requiring notification to parents before an abortion is performed on their minor daughter, H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981); Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983), can result in deadlock over a minor refinement of the issue. Zbaraz v. Hartigan, 763 F.2d 1532 (7th Cir. 1985), aff'd by evenly divided Court, 108 S.Ct. 479 (1987). And this case presents the issues of post-viability regulation and abortion funding to this Court for the fourth and sixth time, respectively. State regulations in these three areas have all been upheld by this Court. But due to the ever-expansive nature of Roe's restrictions on state authority, states regulate in these areas at their peril.

3. One indication of an "unsettled" constitutional doctrine is the controversy it continues to engender on this Court.[23] Roe is almost sui generis in that opposition to it

[23] The following were criticized prior to their eventual overruling: Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1 (1842), criticized by, Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., 215 U.S. 349, 370-372 (1910) (Holmes, J., dissenting); and Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Bough, 149 U.S. 368, 398-404 (1893) (Field, J., dissenting); Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U.S. 525, 567-571 (1923) (Holmes, J., dissenting); see, Morehead v. New York ex. rel. Tipaldo, 298 U.S. 587, 635 (1936) (Stone, J., dissenting). For discussion of opinions criticizing and distinguish-in this tribunal has never diminished, but appears to gain strength with each new case and with each new startling extension of the Roe doctrine. Roe was condemned at the outset as "judicial legislation." 410 U.S. at 174 (White, J., dissenting), and thus, a wrongful displacement of the proper functioning of the political process. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 222 (1973) ("This issue . . . should be left with the people and to the political processes the people have devised to govern their affairs."). See also, Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 787 (White, J., dissenting) ("[D]ecisions that find in the Constitution principles or values that cannot be fairly read into that document usurp the people's authority, for such decisions represent choices that the people have never made and that they cannot disavow through corrective legislation."). More recent abortion decisions have brought even stronger dissent, decrying the "major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence" caused by continued adherence to Roe, Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting), and challenging the arbitrary nature of the trimester framework, and the continuing validity of that scheme in light of advances in medical science. Akron, 462 U.S. at 458 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Thornburgh was further attacked as "symptomatic of the Court's own insecurity over its handiwork in Roe v. Wade. . . . Aware that in Roe it essentially created something out of nothing and that there are many in this country who hold that decision to be basically illegitimate, the Court responds defensively." 476 U.S. at 813-814 (White, J., dissenting).

4. Further indication that a doctrine is not "settled" is its effect on legal principles of more general application. In this regard, Roe has proven the judicial equivalent of a runaway freight train. In its zeal to affirm ing Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896), see, Blaustein and Ferguson, Desegregation and the Law (1957).

---

Roe, the Thornburgh majority was compelled to ignore, abandon, or reverse prior legal and constitutional doctrine on statutory construction, plenary review of preliminary injunctions, informed consent, and state regulation of the professions.[24] "No legal rule or doctrine is safe from ad hoc nullification by this Court when an occasion for its application arises in a case involving state regulation of abortion." 476 U.S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

5. Political activity, scholarly analysis, and public opinion also reject the hypothesis that Roe is settled law. Since Roe, nearly 900 separately numbered resolutions relating to abortion have been introduced into Congress.[25] Over 300 are joint resolutions seeking Constitutional amendments that would overturn Roe.[26] Congress has also acted broadly to remove direct federal financial support for abortion.[27] Moreover, a 1988 Presidential proc-

---

[24] The Court's abortion decisions "have already worked a major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). In Thornburgh, the dissents identify the Court's abandonment of constitutional doctrine in the following areas: plenary review of preliminary injunctions and standards of appellate review, 476 U.S. at 815-825 (O'Connor, J., dissenting); abstention, Id. at 830-831; informed consent, Id. at 798-802 (White, J., dissenting); state regulation of the professions, Id. at 802-804; statutory construction, Id. at 810-812. See generally, Horan, Grant & Cunningham, eds., Abortion and the Constitution, 245, 253-255 (1987).

[25] Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231, 247, citing, Legal Ramifications of the Human Life Amendment: Hearings before the Subcomm. on the Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on S.J. Res. 3, 98th Cong. 1st Sess. 47, 73-74, App. B (1983) (prepared statement of Lynn D. Wardle) (600 resolutions, 1973-1985). Since 1985, over 300 more resolutions have been introduced. See Statistics prepared by Legislative Information Service, United States Senate, as of February 10, 1989.

[26] See, Wardle, supra note 24 at 247-248, n.86 (270, 1973-85).

[27] Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Bowen v. Kendrick, 108 S.Ct. 2562 (1988). See also, 42 U.S.C. Sec. 1396 et seq. (1982

lamation declared the unborn to be protected under the Constitution, and directed the executive branch to carry out actions and programs consistent with that declaration.[28]

The strongest evidence of a popular rejection of the abortion right created in Roe is seen in the vast number of state legislative actions and public referenda designed to limit or regulate the performance of abortions. During the 1988 elections, public referenda in Michigan, Arkansas, and Colorado affirmed restrictions on abortion, and in Arkansas, granted rights to the unborn under the state constitution.[29] During the years since Roe, state legislatures from all regions have enacted hundreds of laws regulating abortion.[30] At least 23 state legislatures have sent memorials requesting Congress to propose an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution, and 19 state legislatures have passed petitions to convene a constitutional convention to propose a human life amendment to the Constitution.[31] The democratic branches of government, therefore, have not accepted or endorsed Roe.

In academic circles, few if any opinions of this Court have attracted the barrage of criticism levied at Roe.

> Rarely does the Supreme Court invite critical outrage as it did in Roe by offering so little explanation for a decision that requires so much. The stark inadequacy of the Court's attempt to justify its conclusions . . . suggests to some scholars that the Court, finding no justification at all in the Constitution, unabashedly usurped the legislative function. . . . Even some who approve of Roe's form of judicial review concede that the opinion itself is inscrutable.[32]

Nor has Roe exhausted its critics, for the stream of published criticism continues to this day.[33] Roe remains vulnerable because it was inherently flawed from the outset,[34] and because as subsequent case law proves, the error has compounded itself.

III. RECONSIDERATION AND REVERSAL OF ROE v. WADE IS CONSISTENT WITH PRIOR REVERSAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL DECISIONS BY THIS COURT.

Roe not only exemplifies the type of constitutional decision for which stare decisis has limited application; it also fits the criteria established by the more than 190 opinions of this Court for a decision whose reversal is justified and necessary.[35] Furthermore, reversal of the specific doctrines of Roe would be completely consonant with this Court's history of overturning constitutional decisions in the following areas: substantive due process, individuals rights, and federalism. While Roe is unique in some respects, the questions posed by its reversal have

---

ed. and Supp. IV) ("Hyde Amendment" restricting Medicaid funding of abortion); 42 U.S.C. § 300-300a-6a (1982 ed. and Supp. IV); 42 U.S.C. § 300z et seq. (Adolescent Family Life Act.)

[28] Proclamation No. 5761, 53 Fed. Reg. 1464 (1988).

[29] Wash. Post, Nov. 13, 1988, at C6, col. 1.

[30] Bush, Fertility-Related State Laws Enacted in 1982, 15 Fam. Plan. Persp. 111, 111 (Table 1) (1983). Wardle, supra, n.25 at 247, n.83.

[31] Wardle, supra, note 24 at 247.

[32] Morgan, Roe v. Wade *and the Lessons of Pre-*Roe Case Law, 77 Mich.L.Rev. 1724, 1724(1979) (footnotes omitted).

[33] See, Wardle, supra note 24; Knicely, supra note 9; Ginsburg, Some Thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N.C.L.Rev. 375 (1985); Note, Technological Advances and Roe v. Wade: The Need to Rethink Abortion Law, 29 U.C.L.A. L.Rev. 1195 (1982). While not all of these articles suggest reversal of Roe as the solution, they illustrate the continued difficulty of adhering to Roe's standards.

[34] Ely, supra, note 19, 82 Yale L.J. at 932, 935-936.

[35] Blaustein & Field, supra at 4, 57 Mich.L.Rev. at 168-177.

been addressed by this Court previously, and have not prevented this Court from abandoning its perceived errors.

1. Roe v. Wade is the modern archetype of substantive due process.[36] Its predecessors, likewise founded on the Fourteenth Amendment's protections of "liberty" and "due process," have generated numerous reversal decisions by this Court. The rationale of these latter decisions applies squarely to Roe.

> [The Constitution] speaks of liberty and prohibits the deprivation of liberty without due process of law. In prohibiting that deprivation the Constitution does not recognize an absolute and uncontrollable liberty. Liberty in each of its phases has its history and connotation. But the liberty safeguarded is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of law against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals and welfare of the people. Liberty under the Constitution is thus necessarily subject to the restraints of due process, and regulation which is reasonable in relation to its subject and is adopted in the interests of the community is due process.

West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379, 391 (1937), overruling, Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U.S. 525 (1923). The determination of those evils which require restraint is, in the absence of a constitutional mandate to the contrary, the province of the legislature. "The courts are incompetent to judge the wisdom of state legislatures and may only preempt such wisdom where an act . . . violates an express provision of the Constitution." Id. at 398.

Echoing this holding, this Court in North Dakota Pharmacy Board v. Snyder's Drug Stores, 414 U.S. 156

---

[36] Rehnquist, Is an Expanded Right of Privacy Consistent with Fair and Effective Law Enforcement? Or: Privacy, You've Come a Long Way, Baby, 23 Kan.L.Rev. 1,4-6 (1974); Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup.Ct.Rev. 159.

(1973), rejected a due process argument against a state law restricting the ownership of drug stores to licensed pharmacists or their corporations. The Fourteenth Amendment "does not make it a condition of preventive legislation that it should work a perfect cure. It is enough that the questioned act has a manifest tendency to cure or at least to make the evil less. [T]wo opposed views of public policy are considerations for the legislative choice." Id. at 147, overruling Liggett Co. v. Baldridge, 278 U.S. 105 (1928). Likewise, in Lincoln Federal Labor Union v. Northwestern Iron & Metal Co., 335 U.S. 525 (1949), this Court wrote: "the due process clause is no longer to be so broadly construed that the Congress and state legislatures are put in a straight jacket when they attempt to suppress business and industrial conditions which they regard as offensive to the public welfare." 335 U.S. at 536-537.

That such cases concerned an improper expansion of Fourteenth Amendment "liberty" in the economic sphere makes them no less applicable to this case.[37] The point of these decisions is that "liberty" and "due process" cannot be employed to graft onto the Constitution a particular view of wise public policy on subjects where the Constitution is otherwise silent.[38] "To do so would be to indulge in the dangerous assumption that the Fourteenth Amendment was intended to give us carte blanche to em-

---

[37] Reversal of precedent as being an overbroad interpretation of Fourteenth Amendment rights is not limited to economic rights. In Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327 (1986), overruling Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527 (1981), this Court reversed itself and held that the Fourteenth Amendment provides no basis for a statutory civil rights action alleging negligence on the part of prison officials. "Whatever other provisions of state law or general jurisprudence he may rightly invoke, the Fourteenth Amendment . . . does not afford [plaintiff] a remedy." Id. at 336.

[38] Your amici do not concede that the Constitution is silent as to the protection of the unborn's right to life by the Fourteenth Amendment. See Section IV, infra.

body our economic or moral beliefs in its prohibitions." State Tax Commission v. Aldrich, 316 U.S. 174, 181 (1942) (emphasis supplied), overruling, First National Bank v. Maine, 284 U.S. 312 (1932). Arguments that Roe's exercise of substantive due process is different because Roe involves a "fundamental" liberty necessarily start from the assumption that freely-available abortion is beneficial to women,[39] or that it is a decision that ought to be left to individuals to make.[40] This type of assumption is virtually indistinguishable from the value-based defenses of "laissez-faire" economics which sustained the ascendancy of Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) for over a generation. And the cloaking of it in constitutional law is even more pernicious where, as in Roe, the countervailing interest is that of life itself.

2. This Court's reversals have limited the scope of protection afforded under prior case law by certain explicit rights under the Constitution. For example, in United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982), the Court held that its decision in Robbins v. California, 453 U.S. 420 (1981), excluding evidence obtained in a warrantless search despite the existence of probable cause that incriminating evidence would be found, was an overbroad interpretation of privacy rights under the Fourth Amendment. "[T]he doctrine of stare decisis does not preclude this action. Of greatest importance, we are convinced that the rule we apply in this case is faithful to the interpretation of the Fourth Amendment that the Court has followed with substantial consistency throughout our history." 456 U.S. at 824. Likewise, in United States v.

---

[39] For a contrary view, see Brief of Feminists for Life of America as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants, and Brief of Focus on the Family and Family Research Council as Amici Curiae in Support of Appellants.

[40] See, Chemerinsky, Rationalizing the Abortion Debate: Legal Rhetoric and the Abortion Controversy, 31 Buff.L.Rev. 107, 126-129 (1982).

Salvucci, 448 U.S. 83 (1980), this Court overruled the doctrine of Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257 (1960), granting automatic standing to defendants to challenge an invasion of privacy rights. "We are convinced that . . . Jones has outlived its usefulness in this Court's Fourth Amendment jurisprudence." 448 U.S. at 95. Also, in Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213 (1983), the exclusionary rule was modified by replacing the rigid "two-pronged" test of Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964) with a more flexible rule based upon the totality of the circumstances under which a warrant is obtained and a search conducted.

In the area of First Amendment rights, Hudgens v. NLRB, 424 U.S. 507 (1976) abandoned the holding in Amalgamated Food Employees Union v. Logan Valley Plaza, 391 U.S. 308 (1968), granting "public forum" status to certain forms of private property. And in a case presently before this Court, Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, No. 87-107, this Court is reconsidering whether it erred in granting a private right of action under a century-old civil rights statute. See Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160 (1976).

3. This Court has also reversed decisions implicating core constitutional values, such as federalism. Over vigorous dissent that its decision "emasculat[es]" the rights of the states under the Tenth Amendment, 469 U.S. at 572 (Powell, J., dissenting), the Garcia opinion reversed the holding of National League of Cities. And in Erie Ry. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938), this Court, also by a 5-4 vote, overruled the doctrine of Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1 (1842) regarding the existence of a federal common law. These two cases demonstrate that a bare majority of this Court will correct a decision it believes to be erroneous, even where the decision implicates fundamental constitutional values. Again, any argument that Roe is more "fundamental" than the interests at stake in Erie and Garcia is unavailing. The federal structure of government is, in reality, the most basic assurance of individual liberty and protection from excessive governmental power. "Federalism is linked with individual liberty and with the health of the body politic," and thus, "[i]t is not less legitimate and proper for the Supreme Court to concern itself with assuring the health of federalism as it is for the Court to uphold individual liberties as such. In neither case is abdication of the Court's proper role consistent with the principles inhering in the Constitution." [41]

Roe's ongoing breach of the principle of federalism should not be allowed to persist. As Erie and Garcia demonstrate, such decisions are often controversial. And controversy is certain to ensue no matter what path is taken regarding Roe v. Wade. However, perpetuating the erroneous and unworkable holdings of Roe cannot be justified for reasons of avoiding political strife. The highest traditions of this Court teach that in such circumstances, the proper resolution is faithfulness to the text and the fundamental values of the Constitution. That text, and those values, determine that Roe's complete curtailment of the states' power to protect the unborn ought to be reversed.

IV. ROE'S HOLDING THAT THE UNBORN ARE NOT PERSONS UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT WAS CLEARLY IN ERROR AND SHOULD NOT BE PROTECTED BY STARE DECISIS.

One holding of Roe directly contradicted the text and legislative history of the Constitution, and thus, should be reversed: that the unborn are not "persons" subject to the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of the right to life. As Professor Ely noted, after employing the most imaginative possible construction of the Fourteenth [41] Howard, Garcia and the Values of Federalism: On the Need for a Recurrence to Fundamental Principles, 19 Ga.L.Rev. 789, 795, 797 (1985).

Amendment to find a right of abortion, the Court resorted to the most literalistic possible form of strict construction to avoid finding the unborn to be persons.[42] This "strict construction" was erroneous at the time,[43] and is increasingly out of step with the course of medical knowledge concerning the unborn.[44]

Roe's holding on this point defies the fundamental jurisprudence of the Amendment. As stated in Levy v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 68, 70 (1968), "persons" are those who "are humans, live, and have their being." Representative Bingham, the author of the Amendment, plainly stated the rights thereunder extended to "every human being." [45] Thus, the jurisprudence of Dred Scott v. Sanford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1856), and The Antelope, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 66 (1825) was a dead letter in American constitutional law. No longer was the law free to treat human beings as "non-persons," "property," "slaves," or, in the words of Roe, less than "persons in the whole sense." 410 U.S. at 162. Recent advances in medical technology have only served to confirm what was already well-known in 1973: that the life of each individual human being begins at the time of conception.[46]

[42] Ely, supra note 19, 82 Yale L.J. at 926.

[43] See Roe v. Wade, Motion and Brief Amicus Curiae of Certain Physicians, Professors, and Fellows of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists in Support of Appellee.

[44] Your amici note that at least one other brief prepared for this case will address the issue of Fourteenth Amendment personhood. See Brief of Knights of Columbus as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants.

[45] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089 (1866) (Remarks of Rep. Bingham).

[46] [T]he evidence no longer allows a discussion as to if and when and in what month of ontogenesis a human being is formed. To be a human being is decided for an organism at the moment of the fertilization of the ovum.

E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life 16-17 (1977). The zygote "results from fertilization of an oocyte, or ovum, by a sperm, Against this plain meaning of the Amendment's text, Roe argued that the word "person" as applied elsewhere in the Constitution applied only postnatally. But, these other provisions also apply, just as clearly, only to adults.[47] One could hardly make the argument that this usage implies that only adults are "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment. Yet, Roe makes the equivalent argument in stating that only the born are "persons." Roe also looks for support in the fact that the unborn have never been counted in the census. This, too, is irrelevant, because Article I, sec. 2 provides for a decennial census "in such manner as [Congress] shall be law direct," and does not mention the word "person."

Roe's remaining arguments are equally unavailing. The fact that even the most restrictive abortion statutes permitted an exception for procedures necessary to save the life of the mother only means that principles of necessity and self-defense, well-established in the law of homi-or spermatozoon, and is the beginning of a human being." K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology 1, 13 (3d ed. 1982) (emphasis in original)). See also, L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy 55 (Rev. 7th ed. 1974); C. Corliss, Patten's Human Embryology: Elements of Clinical Development, 30 (1976); J. Beck, Elements of Medical Jurisprudence, 276 (11th ed. 1860) ("The foetus is certainly . . . as much a living being immediately after conception, as at any other time before delivery.").

---

[47] The constitutional clauses in question all pertain to age qualifications for federal office. Numerous commentators have concluded that using such clauses to exclude the unborn from the protections of the Fourteenth Amendment is oxymoronic. See, e.g., Ely, supra, 82 Yale L.J. at 925-926; Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Ford.L.Rev. 807, 852-857 (1973); Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life Protective Amendment, 63 Calif.L.Rev. 1250, 1283-1286 (1975); Gorby, The "Right" to an Abortion, the Scope of Fourteenth Amendment "Personhood" and the Supreme Court's Birth Requirement, 1979 So.Ill.L.Rev. 1, 11-13.

cide and tort, are applicable to abortion as well.[48] The prevailing statutory immunity from punishment of women who submit to abortion likewise says nothing about the "personhood" of their offspring. Rather, it is a judgment of diminished culpability in the face of immense stress and pressure.[49] Finally, the fact that punishments for abortion were traditionally less severe than those for homicide is likewise irrelevant; the same is true of punishments for many forms of vehicular homicide and manslaughter as compared with murder of a law enforcement official.[50]

Measured against the text of the Fourteenth Amendment, its legislative history, and the Court's own prior interpretations, Roe's holding on the personhood of the unborn is erroneous. Stare decisis notwithstanding, reversal of such error is justified and necessary.[51]

---

[48] See Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name, 1973 Sup.Ct.Rev. 159, 180.

[49] Disparity of punishment is common in the law of homicide, but says nothing about the equality of the victims as persons before the law. See Horan and Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and Constitution, 57, 73 (Horan, Grant, Cunningham ed., 1987).

[50] See 410 U.S. at 158, n.54. This entire line of argument is premised on the fallacious assumption that evidence of the unborn's status as persons under the Fourteenth Amendment can be divined from state criminal statutes, and that if such statutes do not treat the unborn as "persons," then neither does the Constitution. This is a complete reversal of Constitutional priorities. If the unborn are deemed persons under the Fourteenth Amendment, state statutes cannot take away from that holding. Indeed, the only question is whether those statutes are consistent with the constitutional mandate.

[51] See Blaustein & Field, supra, 57 Mich.L.Rev. at 168-177 (comparing "necessary" and "justified" overruling of Supreme Court precedent).

V. THE MOST "PRUDENTIAL" COURSE IN ADDRESSING THE PROBLEMS POSED BY ROE v. WADE IS TO OVERRULE THAT DECISION.

A "wise exercise of the powers confided in this Court" dictates that where prudent, this Court withhold decision on reversing challenged precedent, provided it is possible to resolve the case before it by distinguishing or modifying that precedent. Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 224 (1983) (noting "prudential" concerns for abstaining from reversal). However, the traditions of this Court also dictate that where constitutional error is palpable, where such error has caused legal instability and fomented social strife, correction by "gradual erosion" will not suffice. See, Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954).[52] More direct action to cure the error is called for. Roe v. Wade is such a case.

1. One prudential reason for a gradualist approach is the citation of the challenged precedent in other cases. This argument, which presumes that outright reversal will be disruptive to the affected body of case law, is not applicable to Roe. Although Roe has been cited in almost 100 cases by this Court, and in more than 1000 cases by other federal and state courts, these citations, outside the context of abortion regulation, have been largely superfluous to the issues decided in those cases. Hundreds of the cited cases involve some regulation of abortion; this body of law will understandably be altered by the reversal of Roe. Of the remaining cases, however, very few, if any, could not be resolved by principles other than those pronounced in Roe.[53]

---

[52] See also, South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S.Ct. 1355, 1362-1363 (1988).

[53] WESTLAW indicates that Roe has been cited in 99 opinions or summary dispositions by this Court. Of these, 18 were cases involving state regulation of abortion, or limitations on abortion funding. Eleven more were summary dispositions, issued shortly after Roe reversing and remanding cases to lower courts in light of Roe. In

For example, Roe is frequently cited in state court decisions regarding the right to refuse medical treatment. See, e.g., In re Quinlan, 70 N.J. 10, 355 A.2d 647 (1976) (right to privacy includes right to refuse life-sustaining medical treatment where patient's prognosis is dim). However, these cases are resolvable under common law principles, which include a specific right to refuse medical treatment.[54] In application, there is virtually no distinc-

---

13 cases, Roe was cited for its holding on the issue of mootness. See e.g., United States Parole Comm'n v. Geraughty, 445 U.S. 388, 398 (1980); Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts, 467 U.S. 561, 593 (1984) (Blackmun, J., dissenting); Edgar v. Mite Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 655 (1982) (Marshall, J., dissenting). In 16 cases Roe was cited in the body of an opinion, but as part of a string citation. See e.g., Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 597 (1984) (Blackmun, J., concurring); Cleveland Board of Education v. LeFleur, 414 U.S. 632, 639 (1974). In 23 cases, Roe was cited in memorandum opinions or dissents therefrom. See e.g., Whisenhunt v. Spradlin, 464 U.S. 965 (1983) (Brennan, J., dissenting). The remaining cases, numbering 18, consist of more substantial reliance upon, or distinguishing of, Roe. See e.g., cases cited at p. 26 and Carey v. Population Services Int'l, 431 U.S. 678, 684 (1977); Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 386 (1978); Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 244 (1976). However, in no case has this Court relied on Roe, to the exclusion of other caselaw, in extending individual rights under the Due Process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In fact, this Court began the process of backing away from the broader implications of Roe almost from the day it was written. Several dissenting opinions have made this accusation. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 199-214 (Blackmun, J., dissenting); Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S. 1, 16 (1974) (Marshall, J., dissenting); Paris Adult Theater I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 109 (1973) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

[54] The New Jersey Supreme Court, the author of Quinlan, has subsequently stated that the constitutional right of privacy need not be addressed in cases involving the termination of life-sustaining medical treatment. "While this right of privacy might apply in a case such as this, we need not decide that issue since the right to decline medical treatment is, in any event embraced within the common-law right of self-determination." Matter of Conroy, 98 N.J. 321, 486 A.2d 1209, 1223 (1985). Accord, Conservatorship of Drabick, 200 Cal.App.3d 185, 245 Cal. Rptr. 840 (1987); Matter of Peter by Johanning, 108 N.J. 365, 529 A.2d 419 (1987); In tion in such cases between the common law and the constitutional view of the right. Neither is absolute, and each must be balanced against countervailing state interests.[55] Moreover, some have criticized the expansion of the constitutional right to privacy into this area as a potential predicate for removing legal barriers to euthanasia and mercy-killing.[56]

This Court's own reluctance to follow the extension of Roe's right of autonomy into areas other than abortion illustrates the limited utility of Roe as a source of viable legal doctrine. In the very year Roe was decided, this Court refused to extend Roe's autonomy right to the question of obscenity. Paris Adult Theater I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 66 (1973). This trend has continued throughout the ensuing years. See Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977); Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693 (1976). More recently, in Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 192-194 (1986) a majority of this Court repudiated the notion that a right could be "fundamental" if its exercise had been subject to criminal sanction throughout the history of the common law. Bowers, Paris Adult Theater, Whalen, and Paul teach that the broad principles announced in Roe are not applied, as constitutional principles usually are, to similar cases. Rather, like legislation, Roe's principles are defined and applied solely to resolve controversies on a single subject, abortion.

2. The judgment that reversal be avoided because of "settled expectations" in law and society has little or no application to Roe. Roe has not been integrated into American law. And although the practice of abortion on demand is now legal, it has remained intensely controversial, and tainted. See, J. Imber, Abortion and Private re Storar, 52 N.Y.2d 363, 420 N.E.2d 64 (1981); Cruzan v. Harmon, 760 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. 1988).

---

[55] Quinlan, 70 N.J. at 37-41, 355 A.2d at 663-664.

[56] See P. Ramsey, Ethics at the Edges of Life 292-297 (1979); Koop & Grant, The "Small Beginnings" of Euthanasia, 2 Notre Dame J. of L., Eth. & Pub. Pol'y 585 (1986) and sources cited therein.

Practice (1986). The fact that a majority of abortions are performed in free-standing clinics created primarily for that purpose, and often by physicians who specialize in that practice, suggests that abortion on demand has not been accepted, either by the medical profession or by society, for what it has become: a form of birth control. See, Imber, supra, Henshaw, et al. Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63 (1987); Torres and Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions?, 20 Fam. Plan. Persp. 169 (1988).

3. The reconsideration of Roe, therefore, does not pose the problems which caused this Court to defer reconsideration of the exclusionary rule in Illinois v. Gates. The exclusionary rule enjoyed a long history of acceptance by state courts prior to its application to the Fourth Amendment, and to all the states, in Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961). Moreover, the rule is tied to an explicit provision of the Constitution. And it functions as a rule of evidence—the type of rule peculiarly within the competence of the Courts to pronounce upon. These factors, plus the acceptance of the rule by law enforcement officials and the criminal justice system, provided reason for deferring reconsideration of Mapp. None of these factors, however, apply to Roe, which abruptly preempted a field of law consigned to the common law and state statute from the outset of the nation's history. Moreover, Roe adopted a rule of legal tolerance for abortion far more liberal than any of the abortion "reform" laws of modern vintage. Roe was out of step with the legal system and public opinion when first written, and it remains so today.

4. Finally, if this Court does not speak decisively by rejecting Roe, the controversy over that decision will continue unabated. If Roe has done nothing else, it has created inconsistency and confusion in the law. The nation, therefore, must still look to this Court, as it does now, for a resolution of the problems created by Roe v. Wade, for only this Court can overrule Roe. The history of conflict over Roe has proven that this Court is ill-positioned to resolve the myriad legal, moral, medical, and social issues that are elements of the abortion debate. Yet, this Court alone is in the position to overrule Roe and return the question of abortion to the levels and branches of government more appropriately suited to address this issue. Until this is done, these other organs of government, including Congress, are virtually powerless to act in the protection of unborn life, and to resolve other pressing aspects of this controversy.

CONCLUSION

By its nature, Roe v. Wade is a limited decision, confined in practical application to the abortion issue, and meriting low deference pursuant to stare decisis. And because of its erroneous conclusions, and adverse impact upon constitutional law and society, it deserves to join the 190 decisions overruled by this Court. Your amici conclude with a plea that this Court act decisively in the matter of Roe v. Wade, and by speaking definitely, end the controversy that this decision has engendered.

Respectfully submitted,

ALBERT P. BLAUSTEIN *
Rutgers University School of Law
Camden, N.J. 08102
(609) 757-6373

EDWARD R. GRANT
ANN-LOUISE LOHR
KEVIN J. TODD
AUL LEGAL DEFENSE FUND
343 So. Dearborn St. #1804
Chicago, Illinois 60604
(312) 786-9494
Counsel for Amici Curiae [57]

* Counsel of Record

[57] David Bacon, Lee Ciccotelli, and Savanna Mapelli, students at Rutgers University School of Law-Camden, provided legal research for this Brief.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE ASSOCIATION FOR PUBLIC JUSTICE, AND THE VALUE OF LIFE COMMITTEE, INC. AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT, WILLIAM L. WEBSTER

JOSEPH W. DELLAPENNA
Professor of Law
Villanova University
Villanova, PA 19085
(215) 645-7075
Attorney for Amici Curiae The Association for Public Justice and The Value of Life Committee, Inc.

February 23, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	3
I. Roe v. Wade Was Based Upon Erroneous Notions Of The Historical Status Of Abortion Under The Common Law, And Thus Represents A Sharp Break With Long Established Traditions And Values Embodied In The Common Law And Our Constitution	3
A. Abortion Was Never Approved By A Common Law Court, And Was Consistently Condemned By Respected Authorities On The Common Law From The Earliest Times	6
B. Parliament And Courts In England Took Strong Steps, Gradually Strengthened Through The Centuries, To Prohibit The Killing Of Unwanted Children By Their Parents	12
C. Early In The Colonial Period, These Laws Were Received With Full Rigor In The United States	17
D. Abortion Became More Common Than Infanticide Only With The Development Of The Technical Means Of Aborting A Woman With A Lessened Danger To Her Life; English And American Law Thereafter Emphasized Abortion As The Primary Evil	19
II. Roe v. Wade Should Be Overruled And The Resolution Of The Competing Claims Of Mothers And Their Offspring Should Be Returned To The Legislative Branches Of Government	22

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

	Page
A. Continuing Changes In Medical Technology Are Central To The Proper Resolution Of The Controversies Over Abortion	23
B. State Legislatures Are Best Placed To Explore Appropriate Regulatory Responses To Changing Reproductive Technologies	26
III. Even If Roe v. Wade Survives In Some Form, Application Of Its Criteria Must Be Reexamined In The Light Of New Medical Technology..	28
A. Application Of The Concept Of Viability Adopted In Roe v. Wade Is Technologically Based And Must Be Reevaluated As Medical Technology Advances	29
B. Increasing Technical Means To Preserve Fetal Life Reveal That The Asserted Right Of A Mother To Be Rid Of An Unwanted Pregnancy Must Now Be Distinguished From Any Implicit Right To Kill The Fetus	29
CONCLUSION	30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

American Cases:	Page
Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418 (1979)	28
Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976)	27
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)	3
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	27, 28
City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 57 L.W. 4132 (1989)	26
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)	27
Colony v. Allen, Newport Cnty. Gen. Ct. Trials: 1671-1724A n.p. (Sept. 4, 1683 sess.)	18
Colony v. Powell (Va. 1635), 7 Am. L. Rec. 43 (1954)	18
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	25, 26
Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514 (1872)	22
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	27
In re the Stillbirth of Agnita Hendricks' Bastard Child (Del. 1679), Ct. Rec. of New Castle on Del. 1676-1681 at 274-275 (1904)	18
Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 497 (1977)	3
New State Ice Co. v. Liebman, 285 U.S. 262 (1932)	28
People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N.W. 291 (1886)	22
Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983)	27
Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976)	27, 28
Proprietary v. Brooks, 10 Md. Archives 464-465, 486-488 (1656)	17
Proprietary v. Lambrozo, 53 Md. Achives 387-391 (1663)	17
Proprietary v. Mitchell, 10 Md. Archives 171-186 (1652)	17
Proprietary v. Robins, 41 Md. Archives 20 (1658)..	18
Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609 (1984)	3
Robins v. Robins, 41 Md. Archives 85 (1658)	18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 1, 2, 3, 11, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30
Simopolous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983)..... 26, 27
Smith v. Organization of Foster Families, 431 U.S. 816 (1977) 3
State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 51 P. 1091 (1898).... 22
State v. Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86 (1881) 22
State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380 (1859) 22
State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128 (1868) 22
State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112 (1858) 21
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 26, 27
United States v. Carolene Prod. Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 27

United States Constitution:

Fourteenth Amendment 23

American Statutes and Ordinances:

Charters & Gen'l L. of the Colony & Prov. of Mass. Bay 293 (Dane, Prescott, & Story eds. 1814) 18
Ill. Rev. Code sec. 46 (1827) 24
Me. Rev. Stat., ch. 160, secs. 13, 14 (1840) 24
Ordinance of the City of New York, 3 Min. of the Common Council of N.Y. 122 (1716) 18

English Cases:

Agnes' Appeal (1200), 1 Selden Soc'y 39 (no. 82) (1887) 4
Aubyn's Appeal, The London Eyre of 1244 at 50-51 (no. 124) (London Rec. Soc'y 1970) 6
Avener's Appeal (1244), The London Eyre of 1244 at 36 (no. 84) (London Rec. Soc'y 1970).. 6
Beale v. Beale, 24 Eng. Rep. 373 (K.B. 1713).... 11
Burel's Appeal (1202), 1 Selden Soc'y 11 (no. 26) (1887) 7
Cecily's Appeal (1249), C. Meekings, Studies in 13th Century Justice and Administration 257 (no. 562) (1981) 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Cockaine v. Witnam, Cro. Eliz. 49 (1586) 8
Commonwealth v. Foxall (1651), 3 Warwick Cnty. Rec., Q. Sess. Order Book 50 (S. Ratcliff & H. Johnson eds. 1937) 10
Commonwealth v. Simpson (1659), 6 N. Riding Q. Sess. Rec. 23 (J. Atkinson ed. 1888) 10
Gras's Appeal (1276?), The London Eyre of 1276 at 73-74 (no. 261) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976).... 6
Gundewine's Appeal (1247), Just. 1/274, m.14d.... 6
Maynard's Appeal (1256?), Somerset Pleas (Civ. & Crim.) from the Rolls of the Itinerant Justices 321 (no. 1243) (C. Chadwyck-Healey ed. 1897) 4
Millar v. Turner, 1 Vesey 86 (K.B. 1748) 11
Modi's Appeal (1221), 59 Selden Soc'y 560-561 (no. 1336) (1940) 7
Orscherd's Appeal (1249?), Just. 1/174, m.40d.... 6, 11
Paiards's Appeal (1249?), Just. 1/174, m.40d 6
Philippa's Appeal (1276?), The London Eyre of 1276 at 51 (no. 187) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976).. 7, 11
Phina's Appeal (1246), Just. 1/778, m.57 6
Porte's Appeal (1249), Just. 1/175, m.38 4
R. v. Adkyns (1600), Calendar of Assize Rec., Essex Indictments, Eliz. I 510 (no. 3054) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975) 11
R. v. Anonymous, Fitzherbert, Graunde Abridgement, tit. Corone, f. 268r, pl. 263 (1st ed. 1516) [Y.B. Mich. 22 Edw. 3 (K.B. 1348), a.k.a the Abortionist's Case] 7, 11
R. v. Anonymous, M. Hale, History of Pleas of the Crown 429 (1685) 10
R. v. Anonymous, 3 J. Chitty, Criminal Law 798-801 (1816) 21
R. v. Beare, 2 The Gentlemen's Magazine 931 (Aug. 1732) 4, 21
R. v. Botevylayn (K.B. 1305), Wiltshire Gaol Delivery & Trailbaston Trials 1275-1306 105, 126, 131 (nos. 576, 800, 854) (R. Pugh ed. 1978).... 4

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

R. v. Cokkes (1415), 7 Calendar of Inquisitions Misc. (Ch.) Preserved in the Pub. Rec. Off. 1399-1422 at 296 (no. 523) (1968) 6
R. v. de Bourton, Y.B. Mich. 1 Edw. 3, f. 23, pl. 28 (K.B. 1327) [a.k.a. the Twinslayers' Case] 7, 11
R. v. Hodges (1615), 2 Calendar of Middlesex Cnty. Sess. Rec. 1614-1615 at 345 (1936) 10
R. v. le Petiprestre (1244), The London Eyre of 1244 48 (no. 116) (London Rec. Soc'y 1970) 4
R. v. Lichefeld, K.B. 27/974, Rex m.4 (1505) 8
R. v. Meadow (1590), Calendar of Assize Rec., Sussex Indictments, Eliz. I 233 (no. 1212) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975) 11
R. v. Parker, 73 Eng. Rep. 410 (1580) 17
R. v. Poope (1589), Calendar of Assize Rec., Kent Indictments, Eliz. I 289 (no. 1751) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975) 11
R. v. Portere (K.B. 1400), The Shropshire Peace Role 1400-1414 57-58 (no. 24) (E. Kimball ed. 1959) 4, 11
R. v. Robynson, Q/SR 110/68 (Coroner's Inquest 1589) 8
R. v. Sims, 75 Eng. Rep. 1075 (Q.B. 1601) 5, 9
R. v. Tinckler (1781), 1 E. East, Pleas of the Crown 354 (1806) 21
R. v. Turnour, Assize 35/23/29 (Essex 1581), Calendar of Assize Rec., Essex Indictments, Eliz. I 212 (no. 1225) (J. Cockburn ed. 1978) 8, 9
R. v. Webb (Q.B. 1602), Calendar of Assize Records, Surrey Indictments, Eliz. I 512 (no. 3146) (J.S. Cockburn ed. 1980) 4, 5, 10, 13
R. v. Wodlake, K.B. 9/513/m.23 (1530), K.B. 29/162/m11d (1531) 8
R. v. Wycherley, 173 Eng. Rep. 486 (N.P. 1838) .. 25
R. v. Wynspere, (Coroner's Inquest 1503), Pub. Rec. Off., ref: Ancient Indictments 434, 12..... 8, 13
Sauter's Appeal (1221), Pleas of the Crown for Gloucester Cnty. 1221 16 (no. 69) (F. Maitland ed. 1884) 4

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Serlo's Appeal, The London Eyre of 1276 at 62-64 (nos. 157-158) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976) 6
Sibil's Appeal (1203), 1 Selden Soc'y 32 (no. 73) (1887) 4
Sorel's Appeal (1276?), The London Eyre of 1276 at 61 (no. 222) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976) 6
Swayn's Appeal (1249), Just. 1/359, m.36 6

English Statutes:

5 Eliz. I, c.15 (1573) 9
"An Act to Prevent the Destroying and Murdering of Bastard Children", 21 James 1, ch. 27, sec. 3 (1624) 17
Lord Ellenborough's Act, 43 Geo. III, c. 59 (1803) 5, 17, 21
The Offenses against the Persons Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 85 (1837) 24

Secondary Authorities:

Avicenna, Libri Canonis Medicine (Gerard of Cremona trans. 1595) 15
D. Bakan, The Slaughter of the Innocents (1971) .. 16
J. Bates & E. Zawadski, Criminal Abortion (1964) 12, 13, 14, 21
O. Bartley, A Treatise on Forensic Medicine (1815) 21
Before the Bawdy Court (P. Hair ed. 1972) 6
A. Bickel, The Least Dangerous Branch (1962) 26
A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 23
W. Blackstone, Commentaries (1765-1769) 10
Boke of the Justyces of the Peas (1515), 94 Seldon Soc'y 306 (1979) 9
H. Bracton, On the Laws and Customs of England (S. Thorne ed. 1968) 7, 24
Britton (F. Morgen ed. 1901) 8
B. Brookes, Abortion in England 1900-1967 (1988) 28
R. Burn, The Justice of the Peace and the Parish Officer (3d ed. 1756) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

J. Burns, The Anatomy of the Gravid Uturus (1799) 21
D. Callahan, Abortion: Law, Choice and Morality (1970) 24
A. Castiglioni, A History of Medicine (2d ed. 1947) 16
E. Coke, Third Institute (1644) 10
Compleat Herbal (G. Swindells ed. 1787) 15
A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 27
Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979) 5, 6, 7, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 21, 23
G. Devereux, A Study of Abortion in Primitive Societies (1955) 12, 13, 15
J. Donnison, Midwives and Medical Men (1988).. 17, 28
R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously (1976)..... 27
E. East, A Treatise on the Pleas of the Crown (1803) 10, 21
A. Eccles, Obstetrics and Gynaecology in Tudor and Stuart England (1982) 12
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 27
M. Etmullerus, Description of All Diseases Incident to Men, Women and Children (3d ed. 1712) 15
Fleta (Seldon Soc'y ed. 1955) 7
Forbes, Early Forensic Medicine in England: the Angus Murder Trial, 36 J. Hist. Med. 296 (1981) 10, 14
T. Forbes, The Midwife and the Witch (1966).. 17
M. Gordon, Aesculapius Comes to the Colonies: the Story of the Early Days of Medicine in the Thirteen Original Colonies (1949) 18
F. Grose, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue (1785) 14
J. Guillemeau, The Nursing of Children (1612).... 17
M. Hale, History of the Pleas of the Crown (1685) 6, 10
M. Hale, Pleas of the Crown (1682) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

W. Hawkins, Treatise on the Pleas of the Crown (1716) 10
L. Hellman & J. Pritchard, Williams Obstetrics (14th ed. 1971) 29
Helmholz, Infanticide in the Province of Canterbury in the Fifteenth Century, 2 Hist. Childhood Q. 379 (1975) 6, 16
N. Himes, Medical History of Contraception (1936) 13, 15
A History of Science (R. Taton ed. 1965) 24
P. Hoffer & N. Hull, Murdering Mothers: Infanticide in England and New England 1558-1803 (1984) 16, 18, 19
W. Holdsworth, A History of English Law (1938) 4, 6, 7
R. Houlbrooke, Church and the People during the English Reformation 1520-1570 78 (1979 9
M. Kenny, Abortion: the Whole Story (1986) 16, 19
J. Keown, Abortion, Doctors and the Law (1988).. 4, 6, 8, 11, 17, 21, 22, 28
L. Koehler, A Search for Power: the "Weaker Sex" in Seventeenth-Century New England (1980) 18
Kleiman, When Abortion Becomes Birth, N.Y. Times, Feb. 15, 1984 at B1, col. 1 30
L. Lader, Abortion II (1973) 30
1W. Lambard, Of the Office of the Justice of the Peace (1st ed. 1581) 8, 16
Langer, Infanticide: A Historical Survey, 2 Hist. Childhood Q. 353 (1974) 16
P. Laslett, The World We Have Lost (1966) 13
Leges Henri Primi c. LXX.14 (L.J. Downer ed. 1972) 4
G. Male, An Epitome of Judicial or Forensic Medicine (1816) 21
S. Massengill, A Sketch of Medicine and Pharmacy (2d ed. 1942) 18
A. McLaren, Reproductive Rituals (1984) 12, 14, 15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Foetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality, 14 N.Y.L.F. 411 (1968) (cited as Means I) 5, 19, 20
Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral Right of Ninth-Amendment about to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) (cited as Means II) 5, 11, 19
C. Meekings, Studies in 13th Century Justice and Administration (1981) 6
Mangel, Legal Abortion: the Impending Obsolescence of the Trimester Framework, 14 Am. J.L. & Med. 69 (1988) 29
A. Meyer, The Rise of Embryology (1939) 24
Mirror of Justices (Selden Soc'y 1895) 16
J. Mohr, Abortion in America (1978) 5, 12, 14, 20, 22, 24, 28
B. Nathanson, The Abortion Papers (1983) 25
B. Nathanson, Aborting America (1979) 25
J. Needham, A History of Embryology (1959) 24
J. Noonan, Contraception (1965) 14, 15
M. Piers, Infanticide: Past and Present (1974) 16
J. Pechey, Compleat Herbal of Physical Plant (1707) 15
Philadelphia Inquirer, Sept. 29, 1983 at 14A, col. 2 29
F. Pollock & F. Maitland, The History of English Law before the Time of Edward I (2d ed. 1898) 4, 7, 16
M. Potts, P. Diggory, & J. Peel, Abortion (1977) ... 20, 23
G. Quaife, Wanton Wenches and Wayward Wives (1979) 12, 13
Quay, Justifiable Abortion—Medical and Legal Foundations (Pt. II), 49 Geo. L.J. 395 (1961) ... 5, 19
Reports of Sir John Spelman (J. Baker ed.), 94 Selden Soc'y 306 (1978) 8
Rhazes, Liber ad Almansorem (1497) 15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Rolph, A Backward Glance at the Age of 'Obscenity', 32 Encounter 23 (June 1969) 16
W. Russell, A Treatise on Crimes and Misdemeanors (1819) 10
M. Sanger, Motherhood in Bondage (1928) 23
E. Shorter, A History of Women's Bodies (1982) .. 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 23
W. Staunford, Pleas of the Crown (1557) 8, 16
J. Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England (1883) 9
F. Taussig, Abortion Spontaneous and Induced (1936) 12, 14, 15
A. Taylor, Manual of Medical Jurisprudence (1842) 21
J. Thrupp, The Anglo-Saxon Home (1862) 16
J. Weeks, Sex, Politics and Society (1981) 14
Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudication, 83 Yale L.J. 221 (1973) 27
G. Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law (2d ed. 1983) 29
J. Winthrop, History of New England 1630-1649 Hosmer ed. 1908) 18
Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe; Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes and the Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29 (1985) 5, 19

BRIEF OF THE ASSOCIATION FOR PUBLIC JUSTICE, AND THE VALUE OF LIFE COMMITTEE, INC. AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT, WILLIAM L. WEBSTER

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

This brief is filed under United States Supreme Court Rule 36, with the consent of the parties, on behalf of The Association for Public Justice and The Value of Life Committee, Inc., as amici curiae in support of Appellant, William Webster. Information about the amici is provided in an appendix. The Committee asks the Court to overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), or to reconsider its application in light of current medical technology.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The majority in Roe v. Wade appraised the values implicated in the case on an extended discussion of the history of abortion laws. The majority reached erroneous conclusions about the status of abortion under the common law, sharply breaking with established traditions and values embodied in the common law and our Constitution.

Although convictions for abortion before common law courts were rare before the Eighteenth Century, abortion was condemned by respected authorities on the common law from the earliest times. Parliament and the courts took strong steps through the centuries to prohibit the killing of unwanted children. Before the Nineteenth Century, such killing usually involved infanticide rather than abortion. The laws respecting abortion and infanticide were applied with full rigor in the United States from the opening of the colonial era. The development of new techniques for aborting lessened the danger to the mother from abortion. As abortion became more common than infanticide, legal institutions turned their attention to abortion.

Abortion has always been socially controlled in the interest of both the child and the mother. At all times, continuing changes in medical technology have been central to a proper resolution of controversies over abortion. Changes in abortion technologies altered the interests of mothers in the procedure, and developing reproductive technologies have reinforced increasing certainty that a conceptus is a "person" from the earliest stages of gestation.

The moral and legal implications of such technical developments are not merely medical questions; such implications raise questions of social policy and values which legislatures are better placed to resolve than are courts. State legislatures are better able to explore appropriate regulatory responses to changing reproductive technologies because they are better able to obtain the information necessary to assess the import of the changing data that affect a balancing of the interests created or reinforced by rapidly changing medical technologies of human reproduction. Courts are ill-suited to sit as boards of review for the implications of changing medical technologies. In the present state of flux, the model of states as laboratories for social policies is especially appropriate. For these reasons, Roe v. Wade should be overruled.

If Roe v. Wade survives in some form, application of its criteria must be reexamined in the light of new medical technology. Viability is a function of the technologies available to preserve the life of ever more premature infants, and must be reevaluated continually as medical technology advances. Increasing technical means to preserve fetal life reveal that the asserted right of a mother to be rid of an unwanted pregnancy must now be distinguished from a right to kill the fetus.

ARGUMENT

I. Roe v. Wade Was Based Upon Erroneous Notions Of The Historical Status Of Abortion Under The Common Law, And Thus Represents A Sharp Break With Long Established Traditions And Values Embodied In The Common Law And Our Constitution

More than half of the majority opinion in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 129-152, 156-162 (1973), was given to a history of abortion, using the history of abortion to inform the values at stake in the controversy before the Court. This Court regularly determines whether a claim of right not based on an explicit constitutional text is fundamental by examining the historical treatment of the relevant behavior. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). The point, expressed by Justice Powell in Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 497, 503 (1977), is that fundamental rights are those "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and traditions."[1] The majority's historical errors, and the resulting flawed inferences they drew from those errors, thus seriously undermine the entire edifice built on Roe v. Wade.

The majority in Roe v. Wade concluded that "it now appear[s] doubtful that abortion was ever established as a common law crime", 410 U.S. at 136. The majority also concluded that abortion statutes in the United States were not generally adopted until after the Civil War (i.e., after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted), id. at 139. Both conclusions are wrong.

While extensive research has not uncovered any common law record of actual punishment[2] for an abortion

---

[1] Justice Powell wrote for a three-justice plurality, but his opinion has been frequently cited with approval. This precise language was quoted with approval in: Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 192 (1986); Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 619 (1984); Smith v. Organization of Foster Families, 431 U.S. 816, 845 (1977).

[2] Often the only records extant are terse notes of an indictment which do not indicate what happened at trial. Many of these rec-before 1732 if the abortion was voluntarily undertaken by a woman without serious injury to herself or without a live birth before the death of the child, indictments and appeals of tresspass[3] have been found back at least to 1200 for abortion without either aggravating factor.[4] Later, a woman was indicted for self-abortion; apparently, she was saved from punishment only by a general ords do note a finding of "not guilty" rather than a dismissal of the proceeding. See note 10 infra.

[3] Many of the indictments and appeals in this brief have not previously been brought to the attention of an American court; often they have not been published in the United States. The most important unpublished cases are R. v. Webb (Q.B. 1602), infra, and R. v. Beare (Q.B. 1732), infra. I am grateful to Dr. John Keown, of the University of Leicester, for providing me with the text of these and some other early cases. See generally J. Keown, Abortion, Doctors and the Law (1988). Two American attorneys, Philip Rafferty of Los Angeles, and Richard Schmude of Tomball, Texas, also made their research available.

[4] See, e.g., R. v. Portere (K.B. 1400), The Shropshire Peace Role 1400-1414, 57-58 (no. 24) (E. Kimball ed. 1959); R. v. Botevylayn (K.B. 1305), Wiltshire Gaol Delivery & Trailbaston Trials 1275-1306, 105, 126, 131 (nos. 576, 800, 854) (R. Pugh ed. 1978); Maynard's Appeal (1256?), Somerset Pleas (Civ. & Crim.) from the Rolls of the Itinerant Justices 321 (no. 1243) (C. Chadwyck-Healey ed. 1897); Porte's Appeal (1249), Just. 1/175, m.38; Sauter's Appeal (1221), Pleas of the Crown for Gloucester Cnty. 1221, 16 (no. 69) (F. Maitland ed. 1884); R. v. le Petiprestre (1244), The London Eyre of 1244, 48 (no. 116) (London Rec. Soc'y 1970); Sibil's Appeal (1203), 1 Selden Soc'y 32 (no. 73) (1887); Agnes' Appeal (1200), 1 Selden Soc'y 39 (no. 82) (1887). Abortion was covered by even earlier compilations of the common law, which required payment of a full wergeld (a money payment to relatives of a slain person to settle the claims for homicide) if the child were "living", and a half-wergeld if not "living". Leges Henri Primi c. LXX.14 (L.J. Downer ed. 1972). [This was a 12th Century compilation of sources on Anglo-Saxon law as modified by the early Norman kings.] Several of the cases noted here were settled by money payments, perhaps as wergeld. For the evolution of medieval trespass into both modern crimes and modern torts, see 2 W. Holdsworth, A History of English Law 364-365 (1938); 3 Holdsworth at 317-318, 609-611; 4 Holdsworth at 512-515; 2 F. Pollock & F. Maitland, The History of English Law before the Time of Edward I 510-524 (2d ed. 1898).

pardon. R. v. Webb (Q.B. 1602), Calendar of Assize Rec., Surrey Indictments, Eliz. I 512 (no. 3146) (J. Cockburn ed. 1980).[5] Less than 12 months earlier, a court had held a man for murder when an abortus died after being born alive. R. v. Sims, 75 Eng. Rep. 1075 (Q.B. 1601). Secondary authorities on the common law and judicial dicta also nearly unanimously condemned abortion.

Against that background, beginning with "Lord Ellenborough's Act" in 1803, 43 Geo. III, c. 59, criminal statutes expressly prohibiting abortion spread rapidly throughout the common law world. In the United States, 70% of the states (with 85% of the American population) had such statutes by 1861. By 1895 abortion was clearly a serious crime in every state.[6]

The majority in Roe relied heavily, and uncritically, on the work of Professor Cyril Means.[7] Means' history of abortion was neither objective nor accurate. Nor have these inadequacies been resolved by James Mohr's somewhat different history of abortion.[8]

[5] Whether the pardon came before or after conviction is unclear, although the editor of the records infers that Webb was convicted before the pardon, Keown, supra note 3 at 173 n.23.

[6] See generally Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359, 389-407 (1979); Quay, Justifiable Abortion—Medical and Legal Foundations (Pt. II), 49 Geo. L.J. 395 (1961); Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe: Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes and the Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29 (1985).

[7] Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral Right or Ninth-Amendment Right about to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) (hereafter cited as Means II); Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Foetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality, 14 N.Y.L.F. 411 (1968) (hereafter cited as Means I). The majority cited Means seven times during its depiction of the history of abortion—without noting that he was the general counsel of the National Association for the Reform of Abortion Laws (now the National Abortion Rights Action League).

[8] J. Mohr, Abortion in America (1978).

A. Abortion Was Never Approved By A Common Law Court, And Was Consistently Condemned By Respected Authorities On The Common Law From The Earliest Times

Indictments of abortionists at common law were far more common than was thought in 1973.[9] Common law indictments, and appeals of trespass, for abortion are recorded as early as 1200. While the terse records do not indicate any punishment, the many clear records of judgments of "not guilty" demonstrate that the indictments and appeals were valid under the common law.[10]

---

[9] Abortion was also punished by the ecclesiastical courts of the time, Before the Bawdy Court 81, 152, 172, 204, 238 (nos. 150, 369, 427, 531) (P. Hair ed. 1972); Keown, supra note 3 at 5; Helmholz, Infanticide in the Province of Canterbury in the Fifteenth Century, 2 Hist. Childhood Q. 379, 380-381 (1975). That a crime was punished in ecclesiastical courts does not establish that it was not punishable at the common law, Keown, supra; Helmholz, supra at 386. Nor does ecclesiastical interest indicate that such prosecutions must be seen as religiously based: many modern legal topics that today are unquestionably secular, such as wills, slander, and enforcement of simple contracts, originated in the ecclesiastical courts, 1 Holdsworth, supra note 4 at 65-77, 455-457, 580-632; 3 Holdsworth at 408-428, 441-454, 534-536; 5 Holdsworth at 167-169, 197-218, 291-299; 8 Holdsworth at 301-307, 324-417; 15 Holdsworth at 198-208; Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 382-387. Also, in English legal theory both temporal and ecclesiastical courts derived their authority from the Crown, and thus both together represented the "law of England", 1 M. Hale, History of the Pleas of the Crown, preface (1685).

[10] See R. v. Cokkes (1415), 7 Calendar of Inquisitions Misc. (Ch.) Preserved in the Pub. Rec. Off. 1399-1422, 296 (no. 523) (1968); Gras's Appeal (1276?), The London Eyre of 1276, 73-74 (no. 261) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976); Sorel's Appeal (1276?), Eyre of 1276, 61 (no. 222); Serlo's Appeal, Eyre of 1276, 62-64 (nos. 157-158); Cecily's Appeal (1249), C. Meekings, Studies in 13th Century Justice and Administration 257 (no. 562) (1981); Swayn's Appeal (1249), Just. 1/359, m.36; Paiards's Appeal (1249?), Just. 1/174, m.40d; Orscherd's Appeal (1249?), Just. 1/174, m.40d; Gundewine's Appeal (1247), Just. 1/274, m.14d; Phina's Appeal (1246), Just. 1/778, m. 57, summarised in Meekings, supra at 267; Aubyn's Appeal, The London Eyre of 1244, 50-51 (no. 124) (London Rec. Soc'y 1970); Avener's Appeal (1244), Eyre of 1244, 36 (no. 84); Modi's Appeal (1221), 59 Selden Soc'y 560-561 (no. 1336) (1940); Burel's Appeal (1202), 1 Selden Soc'y 11 (no. 26) (1887). At least once the proceeding was aborted by the ancient benefit of clergy, which precluded trial, Philippa's Appeal (1276?), Eyre of 1276, 51 (no. 187).

Means wrongly asserted that there were only two cases before 1600 dealing with abortion, and that both cases indicated doubt about whether abortion was a crime: R. v. de Bourton, Y.B. Mich. 1 Edw. 3, f. 23, pl. 28 (K.B. 1327) [dubbed by Means as the Twinslayers' Case]; and R. v. Anonymous, Fitzherbert, Graunde Abridgement, tit. Corone, f. 268r, pl. 263 (1st ed. 1516) [Y.B. Mich. 22 Edw. 3 (K.B. 1348), dubbed by Means as the Abortionist's Case]. In both cases, the court declined the prosecution because of uncertainty over whether the case was properly before the court, but for reasons that did not to preclude the criminality of abortion.[11] In R. v. de Bourton, defendant was charged with beating a woman, causing one twin to be born dead and the other to die shortly after birth. Defendant was released on bail to answer for an unspecified different charge. In R. v. Anonymous, defendant was indicted for killing a child in the mother's womb; he escaped conviction because the indictment failed to state a baptismal name for the deceased,[12] and because it was impossible to know if he had killed the child. These are procedural and evidentiary, not substantive, grounds.

Before 1500, the most influential commentators on the common law also declared that abortion after quickening was a criminal homicide. 2 H. Bracton, On the Laws and Customs of England 341 (S. Thorne ed. 1968); 1 Fleta [11] See generally Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 368-370; Keown, supra note 3 at 4.

---

[12] This ignores the fact "murder", at least until 1340, meant a fine imposed on a district when no one could prove a deceased's identity as an Englishman. 1 Holdsworth, supra note 4 at 65-77, 580-632; 1 Pollock & Maitland, supra note 4 at 67-68, 545; 2 Pollock & Maitland at 480-486.

60-61 (Seldon Soc'y ed. 1955).[13] English courts confronted even more abortion cases after 1500.

In the first case of in the Sixteenth Century, a coroner's inquest ruled that death by abortion was "felonious suicide"; the man involved was released because an accessory then could not be tried without the principal. R. v. Lichefeld, K.B. 27/974, Rex m.4 (1505).[14] In another case, a man was indicted for giving a potion to a girl to induce an abortion; he died before trial. R. v. Wodlake, K.B. 9/513/m.23 (1530), K.B. 29/162/m.11d (1531).[15] Later, a woman was convicted of abortion by witchcraft. R. v. Turnour, Assize 35/23/29 (Essex 1581).[16] Accusing a woman of offering abortifacients to another supported an action for slander as such words were sufficient grounds for a court to require a bond for good behavior. Cockaine v. Witnam, Cro. Eliz. 49 (1586). Finally, a woman was "presented" by a coroner's jury for procuring her own abortion, but the outcome remains unclear. R. v. Robynson, Q/SR 110/68 (Coroner's Inquest 1589).

Curiously, two Sixteenth Century authorities on common law criminal pleadings denied that abortion was a felony. 1 W. Staunford, Pleas of the Crown ch. 13 (1557); W. Lambard, Of the Office of the Justice of the [13] Britton, at 95-96 (F. Morgen ed. 1901), disagreed—because of the lack of a baptismal name for the victim.

[14] See also R. v. Wynspere, (Coroner's Inquest 1503), Pub. Rec. Off., ref: Ancient Indictments 434, 12. Both proceedings are quoted in Keown, supra note 3 at 6.

[15] See also 2 Reports of Sir John Spelman 306 (J. Baker ed.), 94 Selden Soc'y 306 (1978).

[16] Some have said that Turnour was executed for abortion, but as she was convicted of several acts of witchcraft, only one of which was abortion, the record is unclear as to why she was executed; even if abortion were why she died, the crime was witchcraft, and not criminal abortion or homicide as such. See Calendar of Assize Rec., Essex Indictments, Eliz. I 212 (no. 1225) (J. Cockburn ed. 1978).

Peace 217-218 (1st ed. 1581). Yet an early formbook, which went through four editions between 1506 and 1544, included a form indictment for abortion by physical assault on the mother, Boke of the Justyces of the Peas c. vi, fol. iii (1515).

Perhaps Staunford and Lambard only reflected the inconclusiveness of the better reported decisions; or perhaps they simply meant that abortion was a crime less than a felony; or perhaps they meant that abortion properly belonged before a court other than the Queen's Branch. Three centuries later Sir John Stephen concluded that they meant that abortion was properly brought only before ecclesiastical courts.[17] If so, they clearly were wrong.

Some part of the Sixteenth Century legal activity regarding abortion did represent a secularization of matters formerly left to the ecclesiastical domain. Activity by ecclesiastical courts directed at abortion declined during the Reformation,[18] and common law courts took full responsibility for abortion in a process[19] culminating in a series of decisions in the Seventeenth Century that clearly establish, if the cases already noted did not, that abortion was a serious crime.

In 1601 two Justices of the Queen's Bench held an abortion that kills a child after its live birth is murder. R. v. Sims, 75 Eng. Rep. 1075 (Q.B. 1601).[20] The Justices stated that the birth and subsequent death of the child permitted proof of the cause of death, eliminating [17] 1 J. Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 54 (1883).

[18] R. Houlbrooke, Church Courts and the People during the English Reformation 1520-1570 78 (1979).

[19] Witchcraft became an indictable crime by the statute of 5 Eliz. I, c.15 (1573); within eight years we find R. v. Turnour, supra.

[20] There were a number of possible precedents for the decision, but R. v. Sims seems finally to have settled the matter.

the difficulty of proving the cause of death for a child delivered dead (which sometimes had been given as a reason for not prosecuting earlier indictments).[21] In 1602, in R. v. Webb, Calendar of Assize Rec., Surrey Indictments, Eliz. I 512 (no. 3146) (J. Cockburn ed. 1980), a woman apparently was convicted[22] and pardoned for self-abortion with rat poison. Finally, in 1670 Sir Matthew Hale held that the death of a mother from an abortion was a felony homicide. R. v. Anonymous, M. Hale, History of Pleas of the Crown 419-430 (1685).[23]

R. v. Sims was argued before the court by Sir Edward Coke as Attorney-General. He took up the case in E .Coke, Third Institute 50-51 (1644), generalizing from it a principle that abortion after quickening was "a great misprision [a serious misdemeanor], and no murder" if the child died in the womb, and a murder if the child were to die after its birth. The position of Coke (the "Father of the Common Law") was accepted virtually without question.[24]

---

[21] For the primitive state of forensic medicine three centuries later, see Forbes, Early Foreensic Medicine in England: the Angus Murder Trial, 36 J. Hist. Med. 296 (1981).

[22] See note 5 supra.

[23] For other Seventeeth Century indictments without record of the outcome, see Commonwealth v. Simpson (1659), 6 N. Riding Q. Sess. Rec. 23 (J. Atkinson ed. 1888); Commonwealth v. Foxall (1651), 3 Warwick Cnty. Rec., Q. Sess. Order Book 50 (S. Ratcliff & H. Johnson eds. 1937); R. v. Hodges (1615), 2 Calendar of Middlesex Cnty. Sess. Rec. 1614-1615, 345 (1936).

[24] 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries 129-130 (1765); 4 Blackstone 198 (1769); R. Burn, The Justice of the Peace and the Parish Officer 380 (3d ed. 1756); 1 E. East, A Treatise on the Pleas of the Crown 227-230 (1803); M. Hale, Pleas of the Crown 53 (1682); 2 W. Hawkins, Treatise on the Pleas of the Crown 80 (1716); 1 W. Russell, A Treatise on Crimes and Misdemeanors 617-618, 796 (1819). Two books are attributed to Hale. The one cited here echoed Coke's views; a later book, Hale, supra note 9 at 433, denied that an abortion-induced death of a child born alive is a homicide. Which view truly represents Hale's opinion is not known. Courts cited Coke with approval in a variety of contexts, and did

Coke cited only the inconclusive precedents of R. v. de Bourton, supra, and R. v. Anonymous, supra, for his conclusions.[25] Hale cited no precedents at all for his holding. [26] Means dismissed Coke's statement on abortion as a "masterpiece of perversion." [27] Yet Means found Hale's decision on the death of the mother to be "an act of Restoration gallantry." [28] Means did not indicate how one is to recognize the difference.

By the early Eighteenth Century, the criminality of abortion under the common law was well established. Courts had given increasingly clear holdings that abortion was a crime; there was no decision indicating that any form of abortion was lawful. Secondary authorities, especially after 1600, equally supported the criminality of abortion. Yet, few cases recorded punishment for any abortion, and none recorded punishment for a voluntary abortion without either death for the mother or death subsequent to live birth for the child.

---

not follow the second Hale dictum. See Miller v. Turner, 1 Vesey 86 (K.B. 1748); Beale v. Beale, 24 Eng. Rep. 373 (K.B. 1713); Keown, supra note 3 at 10-11. See generally Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 379-389.

[25] Cf. R. v. Portere (K.B. 1400), The Shropshire Peace Role 1400-1414 57-58 (no. 24) (E. Kimball ed. 1959).

[26] At least three earlier cases could be cited in support of Hale's ruling, R. v. Adkyns, (1600), Calendar of Assize Rec., Essex Indictments, Eliz. I 510 (no. 3054) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975); R. v. Meadow (1590), Calendar of Assize Rec., Sussex Indictments, Eliz. I 233 (no. 1212) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975); R. v. Poope (1589), Calendar of Assize Rec., Kent Indictments, Eliz. I 289 (no. 1751) (J. Cockburn ed. 1975). See also Philippa's Appeal (1276?), London Eyre of 1276, 51 (no. 187) (London Rec. Soc'y 1976) (defendant excaped trial due to benefit of clergy); Orscherd's Appeal (1249?), Just. 1/174, m.40d (not guilty).

[27] Means II, supra note 7 at 359. His view apparently was accepted by the majority in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 135 n.26.

[28] Means II, supra note 7 at 363.

B. Parliament And Courts In England Took Strong Steps, Gradually Strengthened Through The Centuries, To Prohibit The Killing Of Unwanted Children By Their Parents

The great majority of the cases thus far noted involved crude physical batterings of the mother—often to her serious injury or death (injury techniques).[29] The remaining abortions were induced by "noxious potions"—potions that appear to have been nearly as deadly as the batterings (ingestion techniques).[30] From these facts, one might infer that the law was directed at protecting the mother's life or health—if one assumes, as Means and Mohr[31] do, that abortion was always freely available through relatively safe means.

---

[29] Injury techniques ranged from ineffective simple bodily manoeuvers up to savage assaults, such as cutting her open and removing the infant.

[30] Appeals or indictments for abortion by potion might have been rarer than for abortion by assault because a potion often was part of a magic ritual punishable as witchcraft even if ineffective, but only by an ecclesiastical court before Elizabeth I. Among medically primitive cultures, anthropologists have found injury techniques to be most common, if only because of the likelihood of success, G. Devereux, A Study of Abortion in Primitive Societies 30-35, 171-358 (1985). See also J. Bates & E. Zawadski, Criminal Abortion 87-88 (1964); A. McLaren, Reproductive Rituals 100-108 (1984); F. Taussig, Abortion Spontaneous and Induced 41-45 (1936).

[31] Mohr, supra note 8 at 6-19, lists various methods that he assumed were safe and effective, yet comparing his listed techniques with the research listed in this part of the brief shows that his assumption was unfounded. Even he acknowledged the poisonous nature of some of the his "abortifacients", id. at 71-73. For another historian who also assumed that workable techniques existed, although he recognized that his own catalogue included only the useless or the fatal, see E. Shorter, A History of Women's Bodies 177-191 (1982). Other historians have made the same assumption on even less evidence, A. Eccles, Obstetrics and Gynaecology in Tudor and Stuart England 67 (1982); McLaren, supra note 30 at 5-7, 107, 111-112; G. Quaife, Wanton Wenches and Wayward Wives 118-120 (1979). Compare note 35 infra.

Both the ingestion and injury techniques found in the cases could be effective only with great pain and at the risk of death or permanent injury; undergoing either cannot have been popular.[32] In fact, voluntary abortions are almost absent from reported cases before 1732[33] for a simple reason: techniques of the time were tantamount to suicide.[34] Thus abortion which was not a crime against the mother was rare.[35]

That injury techniques were not popular with women hardly needs demonstration. On the other hand, while we have no way of knowing all potions available in medieval England, surveys of the medical literature there and in similar medically primitive societies demonstrate that the potions ingested for an abortion were either ineffective (except for any suggestive powers to which a woman might be susceptible) or highly dangerous.[36] Savin oil

---

[32] Even Shorter, supra note 31 at 177, concluded that until after 1880 only women who were truly desparate would risk abortion. Quaife, supra note 31 at 26, describes injury techniques in connection with his analysis of violence, and not with abortion, while he concedes that girls were rarely anxious to use ingestion techniques, Quaife at 118.

[33] The only voluntary abortions reported were R. v. Wynspere, supra note 14, and R. v. Webb, supra note 22. In some cases, assertions that a potion was given by trick, etc., might have been dissimulation by the mother; this seems unlikely in the numerous cases of abortion by savage physical attack.

[34] Devereux, supra note 30 at 149-150. See generally Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 372-376, 393-395.

[35] One attempt at a study of the incidence of abortion in the early modern period, based on searching church records (which do not distinguish between spontaneous and induced abortions), P. Laslett, The World We Have Lost 123 (1966), found abortions in Seventeenth Century England to amount to 6-7% of total births. As in the Twentieth Century spontaneous abortions range from 7.5-11% with our more advanced medical technicology, id. at 266, the Seventeenth Century figures reveal few, if any, induced abortions.

[36] Bates & Zawadski, supra note 30 at 14-23, 85-91; Devereux, supra note 30 at 36-43, 249, 279; N. Himes, Medical History of

was the "arbortifacient" most widely reported in medieval English sources. Modern tests have demonstrated that it works by undermining the woman's health generally so she could not sustain the pregnancy, all too often to enfeebling her to the point of death.[37] The dangers of these "abortifacient potions" was so great that in early English slang the term "poisoned" meant pregnant![38]

One cannot entirely rule out the possibility of a safe and effective drug escaping notice in the legal, medical, and popular literature of the day. Yet the fact remains that the Arabic medical texts which, upon translation into Latin, were standard medical references in the later middle ages escribed nothing more safe and effective

---

Contraception 139-151 (1936); J. Noonan, Contraception 222-230 (1965); Shorter, supra note 31 at 179-188; Taussig, supra note 30 at 31-45, 352-357; Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 373-376. Examples of ineffective "abortifacients", available in England, include goat dung, raw eggs, hops, "ungrateful strong smells", and wine. Drugs the ingestion of which in massively dangerous quantities could bring on an abortion included caster oil, ergot of rye, hellebore, pennyroyal, rue, savin oil (juniper), tansy tea, thyme, and yarrow. Finally, a sufficiently desperate woman could ingest (or be made to ingest) a substance that could be lethal even in small quantities, such as aloes, arsenic, "ratsbane" (rat poison), snake venom, and various metallic salts.

[37] One modern study found that savin oil did induce an abortion in 10 of 21 women who consumed it: nine of the 10 "successful" ones died, as did four of the "unsuccessful" ones, Taussig, supra note 30 at 353. In fact, most modern poisons were discovered through vain searches for a safe dosage of "abortifacients", Bates & Zawadski, supra note 30 at 88. For a graphic description of a savin death, see Forbes, supra note 21. See generally Shorter, supra note 31 at 186-188.

[38] F. Grose, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue (1785); McLaren, supra note 30 at 102. Yet another historian, who optimistically presumes that knowledge of safe and effective abortifacients was widespread, also notes that lead-poisoning was "epidemic" because of the use of the abortifacients, J. Weeks, Sex, Politics and Society 72 (1981). Even Mohr, supra note 8 at 71-73, notes that savin poisoning was widespread from abortion.

than the potions listed here.[39] Nor do later works in English add anything significant.[40] Nor, given the general lack of inventiveness of pre-scientific societies, should one wonder about the lack of variation in abortion techniques over six centuries.

Singularly lacking from the literature is any mention of "intrusion techniques"—various techniques using an intrusion through the cervix into the uterus to induce abortion.[41] Given only primitive knowledge of a woman's reproductive anatomy,[42] intrusive intervention can rarely have been successful. The closest one finds to an intrusion technique are occasional mentions of a "pessary"—the insertion of a vaginal suppository, usually laced with "abortifacient drugs," that did not penetrate the cervix. Without such penetration, however, pessaries do not seem to have been effective.[43]

---

[39] Avicenna, Libri Canonis Medicine (Gerard of Cremona trans. 1595); Rhazes, Liber ad Almansorem (1497). See also Himes, supra note 36 at 139-151.

[40] 1 Compleat Herbal 69-71, 94-95 (G. Swindells ed. 1787); M. Etmullerus, Description of All Diseases Incident to Men, Women and Children 563 (3rd ed. 1712); J. Pechey, Compleat Herbal of Physical Plants 13 (1707). These and other texts describe "abortifacient" effects in language markedly different from their descriptions of other pharmacological effects. "Abortifacient" effects are always introduced with phrases such as "it is said", suggesting either uncertainty about the efficacy of the potion or unwillingness to be thought to favor the practice. McLaren, supra note 30 at 102-104, 123; Noonan, supra note 36 at 201-207, 217.

[41] Even Shorter, supra note 31 at 188-191, concedes that instrumental abortions were not a realistic possibility much before the Nineteenth Century. See also Devereux, supra note 30 at 28, 36-37.

[42] Consider contemporary views of how such portions functioned. Not only were potions often given in a belief that a woman had blocked menses rather than pregnancy, but the potions were given to prevent the uterus from rising in a woman's body to her throat to choke her! Shorter, supra note 31 at 180, 286-287.

[43] Devereux, supra note 30 at 37; McLaren, supra note 30 at 101-102; Taussig, supra note 30 at 355-356. The ineffectiveness

Many still persist in believing that medically primitive cultures, including medieval England and colonial America, had mysterious abortion techniques that were safe, effective, and perhaps even painless. If so, why did these presumed simple, safe, and effective folk medicines abruptly disappear in the Nineteenth Century to be replaced by the admittedly highly dangerous intrusion techniques that supposedly then made abortion so dangerous as to justify the widespread adoption of statutes proscribing abortion? The true explanation was expressed by Mary Kenny: before the Nineteenth Century, "[t]he traditional forms of abortion had been infanticide and abandonment." [44]

Infanticide was a crime under the early common law,[45] and Parliament reacted to its frequent occurence [46] by enacting ever stronger statutes prohibiting the practice. The royal courts were also actively engaged in punishing those found guilty of the crime.[47] All this occurred when of pessaries did not prevent doctors from swearing a Hippocratic Oath not to administer them, at least as the oath was before it was amended after Roe v. Wade, A. Castiglioni, A History of Medicine 148 (2d ed. 1947).

---

[44] M. Kenny, Abortion: the Whole Story 181 (1986).

[45] Infanticide was a crime in Anglo-Saxon law, J. Thrupp, The Anglo-Saxon Home 85 (1862). At least one early book (ca. 1300) states that infanticide within one year of birth was cognizable only by ecclesiastical courts, Mirror of Justice 139 (Selden Soc'y 1895). 2 Pollock & Maitland, supra note 4 at 478 n.1, dismissed this book as worthless. Staunford, supra at ch. 13, and Lambarde, supra at 217-218, cited a 1315 conviction as indicating that infanticide was a common law felony (in the same passages where they denied that abortion was a common law felony).

[46] Dead babies were a common sight in London streets well into the Nineteenth Century, Rolph, A Backward Glance at the Age of 'Obscenity', 32 Encounter 23 (June 1969). See also D. Bakan, The Slaughter of the Innocents (1971); M. Piers, Infanticide; Past and Present (1974); Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 395-400; Helmholz, supra note 9; Langer, Infanticide: A Historical Survey 2 Hist. Childhood Q. 353 (1974).

[47] P. Hoffer & N. Hull, Murdering Mothers: Infanticide in England and New England 1558-1803 (1984).

the incidence of true abortion and legal activity regarding it were both still rare.

The stringency of the law of infanticide is shown by R. v. Parker, 73 Eng. Rep. 410 (1580), where even benefit of clergy was denied and a clergyman was executed for the crime. The earliest regulations of midwives (1512) were designed to prevent the killing of infants.[48] The tightening of the law against infanticide culminated in "An Act to Prevent the Destroying and Murdering of Bastard Children", 21 James 1, ch. 27, sec. 3 (1624), which conclusively presumed murder from concealment of the death of a child in order to conceal its birth.

Only the emergence of abortion as a real alternative to infanticide brought a decline in the incidence of infanticide and in the legal attention to it. The intimate relationship between abortion and infanticide was demonstrated by the fact that the next section of Lord Ellenborough's Act after the first English statutory prohibition of abortion reduced the penalty for concealment from death to a term of imprisonment. 43 Geo. 3 c.58, secs. 2-4 (1803).[49]

C. Early In The Colonial Period, These Laws Were Received With Full Rigor In The United States

The colonists from England brought the common law here with their first arrival. In just one colony, no less than three prosecutions for criminal abortion arose before 1660: Proprietary v. Lambrozo, 53 Md. Achieves 387-391 (1663); Proprietary v. Brooks, 10 Md. Archives 464-465, 486-488 (1656); Proprietary v. Mitchell, 10 Md.

---

[48] J. Donnison, Midwives and Medical Men 18-20 (1988). These regulations were repeatedly strengthened. T. Forbes, The Midwife and the Witch 144-147 (1966). Wet-nurses could also have been characterized as a major population control device, J. Guillemeau, The Nursing of Children, preface (1612). See generally Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 396-397.

[49] For the legislative history, see Keown, supra note 3 at 12-21.

Archives 171-186 (1652).[50] While these cases did not result in conviction, in two cases it was because, before trial, the defendant married (and thereby disqualified) the principal witness against him. Mitchell was convicted of attempted murder, apparently because the prosecutor could not prove the cause of the death of the stillborn child.

Other colonial prosecutions for abortion arose at similar early dates. In Rhode Island, a woman was given 15 lashes for fornication and attempted abortion. Colony v. Allen, Newport Cnty, Gen. Ct. Trials: 1671-1724A n.p. (Sept. 4, 1683 sess.).[51] Other charges of abortion through violent physical assaults are recorded without indication of the outcome. In re the Stillbirth of Agnita Hendricks' Bastard Child (Del. 1679), Ct. Rec. of New Castle on Del. 1676-1681, 274-275 (1904); Colony v. Powell (Va. 1635), 7 Am. L. Rec. 43 (1954). Finally, a 1716 municipal ordinance in New York forbade midwives to aid or counsel abortion. 3 Min. of the Common Council of N.Y. 122.[52] Abortion simply was never accepted in American society, contrary to the bald assertions of Means and Mohr; nor is there any reason to believe that abortion was more readily available, or more frequently practiced, in the colonies than in England.

Infanticide in the colonies did have considerable legal activity against it.[53] The close empirical link of the concealment statutes and abortion was again demonstrated by 11 states which enacted a concealment statute contemporaneously with the state's first abortion statute. Ultimately, 20 states codified the two statutes together.[54] Thus, from earliest times, colonial society prohibited the murder of an unwanted child by its parents, whether by abortion or by infanticide.

[50] See also Proprietary v. Robins, 41 Md. Archives 20 (1658); Robins v. Robins, 41 Md. Archives 85 (1658).

[51] Noted in L. Koehler, A Search for Power: the "Weaker Sex" in Seventeenth-Century New England 329, 336 n.132 (1980).

[52] M. Gordon, Aesculapius Comes to the Colonies: the Story of the Early Days of Medicine in the Thirteen Original Colonies 174-175 (1949). For reference to a similar ordinance in Virginia see S. Massengill, A Sketch of Medicine and Pharmacy 294 (2d ed. 1942).

[53] Hoffer & Hull, supra note 47 at 33-113. Statutes were enacted to punish concealment—of either the birth or the death of a child—as murder in eight colonies or states before they adopted an abortion statute, beginning with Massachusetts in 1696, Charters & Gen'l L. of the Colony & Prov. of Mass Bay 293 (Dane, Prescott, & Story eds. 1814). There was at least one prosecution for concealment even before a colonial statute was adopted, 2 J. Winthrop, History of New England 1630-1649 317-318 (Hosmer ed. 1908). Even the Salem Withcraft Trials have been linked to infanticide. Hoffer & Hull, supra at 55-56.

D. Abortion Became More Common Than Infanticide Only With The Development Of The Technical Means Of Aborting A Woman With A Lessened Danger To Her Life; English And American Law Thereafter Emphasized Abortion As The Primary Evil

The dramatic introduction of abortion statutes throughout the English speaking world in the Nineteenth Century has been amply documented.[55] The majority in Roe v. Wade was content to view this development, and the similarly dramatic increase in prosecutions, as a result of Victorian sexual attitudes, fears for maternal health, and concern for the life of the unborn child. 410 U.S. at 147-152. The majority offered no explanation why these reasons became weighty only in the Nineteenth Century.[56]

Means insisted that only the second reason applied.[57] He also did not attempt to explain why fear for maternal [51] Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 399.

[55] See note 6 supra. This process occurred throughout most of the world during the same time, Kenny, supra note 44 at 183.

[56] The Roe majority also seriously understated the speed with which abortion statutes were adopted and the speed with which the quickening distinction was elimiated, 410 U.S. at 138-141.

[57] Means I, supra note 7 at 511-515; Means II, supra note 7 at 382-392.

health should have come to the fore then and not earlier. Mohr, while recognizing distress over falling birthrates among the middle and upper classes and over a "moral prejudice" favoring the life of unborn children,[58] argued that the real reason was to assure the dominance of the newly organized American Medical Association over its less qualified competitors, especially midwives.[59] He did not explain why these concerns should be effective in winning public support, a glaring omission as he insisted that the public supported free availability of abortions. Such views simply beg the question of why abortion suddenly became a subject of significant legal and social concern in the Nineteenth Century, and seriously misconceive the legal, medical, and social import of the abortion statutes.

Voluntary surgery has nearly always been essentially a private matter between a patient and the attending physician. Until Roe v. Wade, voluntary abortion was never treated as a private matter between a patient and her physician. For example, in 1828 the New York legislature considered and rejected a proposal to ban all surgery unless "necessary for the preservation of life", but accepted another part of the same proposal that declared abortion to be a crime.[60] The different response is rooted in technological change.

Intrusion techniques first appeared in England sometime early in the Eighteenth Century.[61] The new technique turned up in a case in 1732: a woman was convicted and sentenced to be pilloried and to serve three [58] Mohr, supra note 8 at 35-36, 85-118, 128, 167-168, 175-176, 182-196.

---

[59] Id. at 32-37, 147-182. Mohr discounted concern for maternal health because he believed that abortion was safe, id. at 25-40.

[60] Means I, supra note 7 at 451.

[61] Shorter, supra note 31 at 188-208, places the invention of effective intrusion techniques as late in the Nineteenth Century. See also M. Potts, P. Diggory, & J. Peel, Abortion 170-188 (1977).

years in prison for aborting two women by inserting an iron rod into their wombs. R. v. Beare, 2 The Gentleman's Magazine 931 (Aug. 1732).[62] A similar case brought a conviction in 1781. R. v. Tinckler (1781), 1 E. East, Pleas of the Crown 354-356 (1806). A third case occurred in 1803. R. v. Anonymous, 3 J. Chitty, Criminal Law 798-801 (1816).

Abortion remained highly dangerous, with the inserted object (the forerunner of the "coathangers" of the Twentieth Century) serving as a highway to infection that could cause loss of the uterus or death, and was sufficiently painful (especially if the uterine wall was pierced) as to induce life-threatening shock.[63] Dangerous and painful as these procedures were, death was not as certain as with the injury and ingestion techniques. The intrusion techniques quickly became the techniques of choice, setting the stage for the various surgical and other intrusion techniques that account most abortions performed today. Lord Ellenborough himself seemed to reflect the resulting sudden upsurge in abortions in the preamble to his famous Act: it concerned "certain . . . heinous offenses . . . of late also frequently committed . . ." 43 Geo. III, c. 58 At this time fears of a threat to the health of the mother from abortion also appear for the first time in the legal and medical literature.[64]

In the early Nineteenth Century all surgery was highly dangerous for the same reasons as intrusive abortions: infection and shock. Only for abortion were social and

---

[62] The case is analyzed in Keown, supra note 3 at 8-9.

[63] Bates & Zawadski, supra note 30 at 85-87. Apparently abortions killed one-third of the women undergoing them early in the Nineteenth Century, Dellapenna, note 6 at 400, 412.

[64] O. Bartley, A Treatise on Forensic Medicine 3, 5 (1815); J. Burns, The Anatomy of the Gravid Uturus 57-58 (1799); 1 East, supra note 25 at 230; G. Male, An Epitome of Judicial or Forensic Medicine 116-117 (1816); A. Taylor, Manual of Medical Jurisprudence 595 (1842). See also State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112, 114-115 (1858). See generally Keown, supra note 3 at 35-38.

other pressures likely to induce one to undergo the procedure without prior risk to life or limb. Thus the abortion statutes were a response to the premature application of a new medical technology.[65] The statutes served to indicate that intrusive abortions were as criminal as abortions by injury or ingestion techniques. The statutes also settled the somewhat uncertain law governing abortion, and solemnly reaffirmed social policy in the face of changing social behavior. Eventually the statutes also made all abortions criminal regardless of the stage of pregnancy.

This last concern brings forth the second major motivation behind the Nineteenth Century abortion statutes: the protection of the life of the foetus. Many courts expressed this as the major purpose of the abortion statutes. Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514 (1872); State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128 (1868); People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N.W. 291 (1886); State v. Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86 (1881); State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 51 P. 1091 (1898); State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380 (1859). Medical and religious leaders also supported this view.[66] Unless one is prepared to impugn the integrity of these social and professional leaders, one must concede that protection of unborn children from the rising numbers of abortions was at least as significant as the protecton of the life of the mother.

II. Roe v. Wade Should Be Overruled And The Authority To Resolve The Competing Claims Of Mothers And Their Offspring Should Be Returned To The Legislative Branches Of Government

That the historical nature of the abortion problem resulted from the intersection of the policies of protecting the mother and the child with changing medical technology argues that the balancing of the resulting claims of mother and child is best left to state legislative development[67] rather than by being dictated by courts. The argument was succinctly summed up by the late Professor Alexander Bickel, in commenting on the detailed trimester scheme of authority adopted by the majority in Roe v. Wade:

[65] See generally Keown, supra note 3 at 12-48.

[66] The majority in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 141-142, quoted representative samplings of such statements. See also Mohr, supra note 8 at 35-36, 175-176, 182-196.

> "One is left to ask why. The Court never said. It refused the discipline to which its function is properly subject. It simply asserted the result it reached. If medical considerations only were involved, a satisfactory rational answer might be arrived at. But, as the Court acknowledged, they are not. Should not the question then have been left to the political process, which in state after state can achieve not one but many accommodations, adjusting them from time to time as attitudes change?"[68]

A. Continuing Changes In Medical Technology Are Central To The Proper Resolution Of The Controversy Over Abortion

From the beginning, the evolving medical technologies of abortion and of recognition of, and care for, an individual unborn child, has shaped the interests that frame the controversy over abortion. Until the Twentieth Century, both resulting sets of interests converged to demand the criminalizing of abortion. Now those interests have diverged, bringing controversy to an area where once all agreed that only evil could be found.[69]

Technical progress did not end with a crude insertion device.[70] Modern techniques of abortion have further [67] We do not argue for preclusion of Congressional legislation under its power granted in section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

[68] A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent 28 (1975). See also Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 219-223 (JJ. Rehnquist & White dissenting).

[69] Even Margaret Sanger, founder of Planned Parenthood, originally found only evil in abortion, M. Sanger, Motherhood in Bondage 394-396 (1928).

[70] See generally Potts, Diggory, & Peal, supra note 61 at 170-188; Shorter, supra note 31 at 191-224; Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 411-414.

reduced the procedure's pain and the danger of injury to a uterus. General surgical advances have made abortion physically safe for the mother. Pain-killing drugs (beginning with morphine in 1806), anesthesia from the 1840's, antiseptics after 1867, and finally sulfa drugs in the 1930's and antibiotics (beginning with penicillin in 1940) have all dramatically reduced the risk of death or injury through shock or infection. Many women thus came to see abortion's prohibition, rather than its possibility, as the threat to their well-being.

Simultaneously, the perceived interests of society in unborn children were changed by new medical information and new medical technologies focused on human reproduction, illustrated by the demise of the antiquated distinction of "quickening". The distinction was found in English law at least as early as Bracton, supra at 341. With the application of cell theory to embryology at the opening of the Nineteenth Century, a revolution in our understanding human reproduction occurred.[71] Opinion leaders in all areas of society quickly, and by the end of the Nineteenth Century most people, had concluded that a new human life began at conception, and not at quickening.[72] Enactment or amendment of abortion statutes to remove any distinction based on quickening, beginning with The Offenses against the Persons Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 85 (1837),[73] underlined that the statutes were

---

[71] See generally 3 A History of Science 456-483 (R. Taton ed. 1965); A. Meyer, The Rise of Embryology 28-120, 138-147, 170-194, 302-341 (1939); J. Needham, A History of Embryology 115-229 (1959).

[72] Roe v. Wade, 410 at 141-142; D. Callahan, Abortion: Law, Choice and Mortality 410-461 (1970); Mohr, supra note 8 at 35-36, 175-176, 182-196.

[73] Illinois had already removed the quickening distinction, but only for abortions by a "noxious substance", Ill. Rev. Code sec. 46 (1827), perhaps suggesting a concern to protect the mother and not the child. Maine adopted the first American statute to remove all distinctions based on quickening, Me. Rev. Stat., ch. 160, secs. 13, 14 (1840).

crafted to protect human life. An English court also interpreted the statutory term "quickening" to mean conception, rather than the felt movement of the child within the womb, reflecting again change in the understanding of when human life begins, and the function of the abortion statutes as protecting that life. R. v. Wycherley, 173 Eng. Rep. 486 (N.P. 1838).

Today an embryologist or fetologist can diagnose and treat an unborn child independently of treating the mother, including removing the child from its mother's womb for surgery, and then returning it to the womb to complete gestation. Facing such developments, one can hardly consider the child a mere extension of its mother. This fact was strikingly demonstrated by the odyssey of Dr. Bernard Nathanson from "Abortion King" of New York to anti-abortion activist, largely through his experiences as a fetologist.[74] For those who are not impressed by the claims of fetal personhood, the continuing prohibition of abortion in the face of the increasing safety of the procedure for mothers can only seem a serious intrusion into the liberty of women because of a "moral prejudice".[75] This ignores the unbroken tradition of the common law of protecting an unwanted child from aggression by its parents.

Reproductive technology remains one of the most rapidly advancing areas of medical research. Clearly, the majority in Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton was deeply concerned about preserving physician's autonomy.[76]

---

[74] B. Nathanson, Aborting America (1979); B. Nathanson, The Abortion Papers (1983). See generally Dellapenna, supra note 6 at 414-416.

[75] Thus, in Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 193-194, 197-198, 199 (1973), the majority repeatedly stressed the lack of "any reason" for treating abortion differently than other minor surgery.

[76] See particularly Doe v. Bolton, where the majority accorded doctors standing as a class, 410 U.S. at 188-189, and the majority repeatedly adverted to the doctors' privacy interest, id. at 192-193, 196-201. Although the majority denied standing to a specific doctor

Without denying the unavoidable impact of professional opinion on these questions, and recognizing the virtue of professional autonomy if advances are to continue, the law still cannot be fashioned solely to protect the autonomy of the technicians.

Just as teachers are not allowed to determine the propriety of school prayer, the issues concerning abortion transcend mere technical competence. The controversy involves balancing the interests and values created or reinforced by changing medical technologies. In all areas of medical practice, except abortion, the state has broad authority to regulate the conduct of physicians. Even for abortion, the state, not the individual physician, should be the final arbiter of the propriety of conduct. Simopolous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983).

B. State Legislatures Are Best Placed To Explore Appropriate Regulatory Responses To Changing Reproductive Technologies

The central problem for this Court to resolve is which government institution is charged by the Constitution to balance the competing interests and values in the abortion controversy.[77] As Justice Stevens argued in his concurring opinion to City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 57 L.W. 4132, 4144 (1989), legislatures are better suited to establishing policies for the future, leaving to the courts the primary responsibility for fashioning remedies for past wrongs. There is no reason why this conclusion should not apply to abortion. Ever since Roe v. Wade was decided, beginning with its companion case of Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), the Court has confronted a series of challenges to specific regulations of abortion that required the Court to resolve difficult ques-in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 125-127, they repeatedly referred to medical opinions, id. at 130-132, 141-146, 149-150, 159, 163, and they finally gave the physician decision-making power equal to the mother, id. at 153, 162-166. See also Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747, 759-765 (1985).

[77] Cf. A. Bickel, The Least Dangerous Branch 142 (1962).

tions of technical fitness and social acceptability.[78] Lacking the tools of inquiry available to a legislature, the Court is simply not suited to serve as a board of review for issues of medical technology. City of Akron, infra at 454-459 (J. O'Connor, dissenting).

The majority in Roe v. Wade itself recognized its inability to deal with the issues at stake when it was unable to decide when an individual human life (a "person") begins, 410 U.S. at 160. Yet such decisions of life and death are simply too important to be left to the technicians, especially when the one who makes the actual decision has an economic stake in deciding against life.

The government is called upon to answer difficult questions questions involves a balancing of interests rather than the application of neutral principles accepted by nearly all in our society.[79] Legislatures are best equipped to acquire, from time to time, the information necessary to assess the import of changing technologies that create or reinforce interests to be balanced in resolving the resulting controversies.

Legislatures are also better equipped to do the balancing because of their representative nature.[80] Women are not an insular minority whose interests are likely to be slighted by a legislature.[81] Nor need physicians fear such [78] Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 476 U.S. 747 (1986); Simopolous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983); Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983); City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Collauti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979); Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976).

[79] Cf. A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 113-114 (1976); Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 949 (1973).

[80] Cf. R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously 22-28 (1976); Wellington, Common Law Rules and Constitutional Double Standards: Some Notes on Adjudication, 83 Yale L.J. 221, 297-310 (1973).

[81] United States v. Carolene Prod. Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152 n.4 (1938).

a legislative process. Legislatures have been consistently sensitive to the interests of the organized medical profession in regulating abortion.[82] There is no reason to expect this to change.

Finally, as Justice Brandeis argued in his dissent to New State Ice Co. v. Liebman, 285 U.S. 262, 309-311 (1932), to define federalism in terms of the states as great laboratories for social experiment is one of the best models for approaching questions of whether to preempt state competence. This Court unanimously affirmed in Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418, 431 (1979), that the right of states to develop a variety of solutions, consistent with constitutionally-mandated minimum standards, was "the essence of federalism". In an area where the facts change faster than judicial procedures can cope with the resulting issues,[83] courts should defer to the state legislatures as better able to explore regulatory responses to the ensuing problems.

III. Even If Roe v. Wade Survives In Some Form, Application Of Its Criteria Must Be Reexamined In The Light Of New Medical Technology

Justice O'Connor pointed out in her dissent to City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 454-459 (1983), that if Roe v. Wade is to continue as the basis of the law of abortion, it is a decision "on a collision course with itself", id. at 456. To avoid contradicting the values announced in Roe v. Wade, the Court must reconsider the rules laid down in, or inferred from, the decision.

---

[82] The sway of the organized physicians over legislatures was the theme of such books as B. Brookes, Abortion in England 1900-1967 (1988); Donnison, supra note 48; Keown, supra note 3; Mohr, supra note 8.

[83] Note the changes in the facts between the trial and its review by this Court in Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 75-79, 95-99 (J. White dissenting, with C.J. Burger & J. Rehnquist), 101-102 (J. Stevens concurring) (1976).

A. Application Of The Concept Of Viability Adopted In Roe v. Wade Is Technologically Based And Must Be Reevaluated As Medical Technology Advances

The majority in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 163-164, found that a "compelling state interest" arose when the foetus became viable, an interest sufficient to justify banning abortions except where the life or health of the mother is at risk. The majority also concluded that viability began at 28 weeks of gestation even while recognizing that viability might begin as early as 24 weeks, id. at 160, 164-165.[84] The statute now before the Court presents an opportunity to reconsider whether the point of viability should correspond to the achievements of medical technology since Roe v. Wade was decided.[85]

B. Increasing Technical Means To Preserve Fetal Life Reveal That The Asserted Right Of A Mother To Be Rid Of An Unwanted Pregnancy Must Now Be Distinguished From Any Implicit Right To Kill The Fetus

Some have argued that the "freedom" protected by Roe v. Wade is not the freedom to be rid of an unwanted pregnancy, but the freedom to kill an unwanted child.[86] With the conviction of at least one physician for killing an aborted child after its birth alive, Philadelphia Inquirer, Sept. 29, 1983 at 14A, col. 2, we have come full circle to the early days when the desire to be rid of unwanted pregnancies was expressed as infanticide rather [84] The source cited in Roe v. Wade on this point already indicated that viability could be as early as 20 weeks, L. Hellman & J. Pritchard, Williams Obstetrics 493 (14th ed. 1971)!

---

[85] Mangel, Legal Abortion: the Impending Obsolescence of the Trimester Framework, 14 Am. J.L. & Med. 69 (1988).

[86] Glanville Williams, often credited with opening the debate on abortion with lectures at Columbia University, defines abortion thusly: "For legal purposes, abortion means feticide: the intentional destruction of the fetus in the womb, or any untimely delivery brought about with intent to cause the death of the fetus.", G. Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 290 (2d ed. 1983) (emphasis in the original).

than abortion. Today, concern to be rid of an unwanted pregnancy already does not always mean killing the unborn child.[87] To translate unnecessarily, in effect if not in form, the asserted right to be rid of a pregnancy into the right to kill a child is indefensible. It makes a mockery of all efforts to deal with child abuse. It strikes at the heart of the values of our form of government.

CONCLUSION

We live in a world in which law and values are increasingly reshaped by science and technology. Nowhere has this process been more dramatic than regarding medical science and technology relating to human reproduction. This case presents a court with the opportunity to return the central questions posed by this developing technology to the political branches of government—branches that can acquire and assess the rapidly changing data to weigh its impact on societal needs and values. For the reasons advanced in this brief, Roe v. Wade should be overruled. Failing that, the application of Roe v. Wade should be reconsidered, and the Missouri statute upheld as consistent with the values and policies expressed in that decision.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH W. DELLAPENNA
Professor of Law
Villanova University
Villanova, PA 19085
(215) 645-7075
Attorney for Amici Curiae The Association for Public Justice and The Value of Life Committee, Inc.

February 23, 1989

---

[87] Kleiman, When Abortion Becomes Birth, N.Y. Times, Feb. 15, 1984 at B1, col. 1. This had actually become a problem before Roe v. Wade was decided, although the leaders of NARAL kept the fact from the Court, L. Lader, Abortion II 164-166 (1973).

APPENDIX

LISTING OF AMICI

The Association for Public Justice is a nationwide, non-profit, voluntary association of Christian citizens headquartered in Washington, D.C. From its earliest stages of development, even before formal organization in 1977, the Association's purpose has been to address questions of justice in the structure of political and legal institutions and in their processes and policy making.

The Association has been an amicus curiae before the Supreme Court, and before other courts, in seeking greater legal clarity and justice in relationships among families, schools, churches, and government. Its concern with what constitutes the structure of a just society reaches to many levels of national and international laws and policies.

The Association's concern with the identity and rights of the unborn and with the responsibility of parents and the medical profession toward the unborn began before 1977, and has continued to the present. Its interest in this case in particular has to do not only with the confusion about whether and when human life should be protected at each stage of its development, but also with the question of how different branches and levels of government ought properly to be related to establishing and enforcing justice in this context.

The Value of Life Committee, Inc., is a non-profit Massachusetts corporation organized in 1970 to affirm in the public domain the value of all human life from conception to natural death. The Committee is actively engaged in educational efforts relating to these issues, including both the collection and the dissemination of research and other information relevant to such issues. Its members include a broad spectrum of citizens from all walks of life, including numerous physicians.

As part of its educational effort, the Committee has sponsored public statements prepared by respected physicians (including past-Presidents of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology). These statements have been referred to by the President and other public figures on such questions as the humanity of the unborn, the ability of a fetus to feel pain, and the propriety of using fetal tissue in research.

This, the first amicus curiae brief by the Committee before the Supreme Court, is an extension of its educational efforts. The Committee seeks by this to affirm the value of unborn humans, and to guide the debate over this question into fora better able to resolve the debate.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE AMERICAN LIFE LEAGUE, INC. SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

*MARION EDWYN HARRISON
JOHN S. BAKER, JR.
LAW OFFICES MARION EDWYN HARRISON
840 The Watergate
2600 Virginia Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
202 965-0800
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Counsel of Record*

February 23, 1989

PRESS OF BYRON S. ADAMS, WASHINGTON, D.C. (202) 347-8203

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF CONTENTS	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	3
THE MISSOURI STATUTE DEFINING THE BEGINNING OF HUMAN LIFE DOES NOT VIOLATE THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT	3
I. Outside the Context of Fourteenth-Amendment Privacy, Roe Does Not Alter General Principles of Criminal Law Which Assume the Unborn to be Human Beings	4
II. Even If the Court Does Not Reverse Roe, It Would Clarify and Simplify Abortion Law to Concede that the Unborn Are Humans as Declared by Missouri and Simply Say that Roe Creates a Constitutional Defense to Criminal Prosecution	9
1. Roe's Statement about the Inability to Determine the Beginning of Human Life Should be Eliminated	10
2. The Esence of Roe Is the Constitutional Defense Against Prosecution	12
III. If in Addition to Recognizing the Humanity of the Unborn this Court Also Reverses Roe, Such Result Would Not Thereby Require States to Punish Abortion as Murder	15
1. If Roe Is Reversed, Can Unborn Human Beings Be Treated Differently?	16
2. If Roe Is Reversed, How Would Women Who Have Abortions Be Treated?	18
CONCLUSION	20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases Page

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 13

Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975) 12

Keeler v. Superior Court of Amador County, 2 Cal. 3d 619, 89 Cal. Rptr. 481, 470 P. 2d 617 (1970) 7-8

Morissette v. U.S., 342 U.S. 246 (1952) 19

People v. Chavez, 77 Cal. App. 2d 621, 176 P. 2d 92 (1947) 7

People v. Greer, 79 Ill. 2d 103, 402 N.E. 2d 203 (1980) 4

People v. Snipe, 25 Cal. App. 3d 742, 102 Cal. Rptr. 6 (1972) 8

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

State v. Brown, 378 So. 2d 916 (La. 1979) 9

State v. Gyles, 313 So. 2d 799 (La. 1975) 8

Winship, In Re, 397 U.S. 358 (1970) 10-11

Constitution and Statutes

U.S. Constitution, Amendment XIV 10,14-18

26 USC §501(c)(3) 1

R.S. Mo. 1.205 (1986) 1,12

Congressional Hearings

Hearings On S.158 Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1982) 6,11,15

Miscellaneous

W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England, Vol. 4, 188 (St. George Tucker Ed. 1803) 13

Table of Authorities Continued

Page

R. Byrn, "An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion", 41 Fordman L. Rev. 807 (1973) 14

J. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law (2d ed. 1960) 4

D. Kader, "The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade", 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639 (1980) 14

W. LaFave and Israel, Criminal Procedure (1985) 18

Note, "Prenatal Wrongful Death—Amadio v. Levin" 59 Temple L. Q. 827 (1986) 14

R. Perkins and R. Boyce, Criminal Law (3d ed., 1982 4,8,13,19-20

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae, American Life League, Inc., is a District of Columbia corporation, with offices in Stafford, Virginia, recognized under 26 USC §501(c)(3) as a tax-exempt organization. The Amicus is a social welfare and educational organization, incorporated in 1981, with more than 180 thousand active donors across the country.

The Amicus researches and publishes a magazine, newsletters, brochures and other material relating to the human rights of persons born and unborn; sponsors, and participates in, symposia and other public and invitational means of discussion and education; monitors, and reports upon, pertinent state and federal administrative, legislative and judicial developments; and otherwise seeks to fulfill the mandate of its Articles of Incorporation and the concerns of its donors. Its professional and volunteer staff includes scientists, theologians, public administrators, lawyers and other persons who are, or who have become, cognizant in areas of factual and interpretive knowledge as to biological, theological, philosophic, legal, political and economic aspects of the rights of persons born and unborn.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

One of the Missouri statutes declared unconstitutional by the lower courts in this case is R.S. Mo. 1.205, which provides in part that:

> (1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

(2) Unborn children have protectable[1] interests in life, health and well-being.

In agreeing to review this provision and also the basic holding of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Court will consider issues more fundamental than the aspects of the Missouri statutes addressed by the lower courts. Given the existence of Roe, the lower court opinions herein do not reconsider the basic questions about abortion. With so many additional issues presented in its Jurisdictional Statement, the State of Missouri is not likely to discuss all major questions raised by a reconsideration of Roe. Missouri will argue for overturning Roe, but probably will not address the matter of state criminal law because the state statute is not criminal. This Court naturally would want to consider the criminal law consequences posed by the possibility of overturning Roe.

The lower courts in this case erroneously take the position that the holding of Roe excludes any possibility of state affirmance of the view that the unborn or preborn are human beings. However, the operation of the criminal law of homicide in cases in which a pregnant woman has been battered demonstrates that the criminal law has since, as well as before, assumed the humanity of the unborn. If nothing else, this Court greatly would clarify the analysis of abortion law by conceding the humanity of the unborn even if Roe otherwise were to be validated. Reduced to its simplest, Roe merely provides a defense against state prosecution for an abortion by a licensed physician performed on a consenting female. Roe does not otherwise prevent prosecutions for the death of the unborn, including abortions by persons other than licensed physicians.

[1] A search of four dictionaries and the Wang computer spelling verifier reveals no word "protectable". This Amicus takes the word to mean "entitled to protection".

If the case is dissected dispassionately, the Roe refusal to allow a state to protect the unborn by prohibiting abortion appears quite arbitrary. Nonetheless, any inclination to reverse Roe would meet objections about the consequences of reversal. The typical argument is that women would be prosecuted as murderers. It is important, therefore, to understand why reversal of Roe and recognition of the unborn as human beings do not imply that the states would or should punish abortion as murder.

ARGUMENT

THE MISSOURI STATUTE DEFINING THE BEGINNING OF HUMAN LIFE DOES NOT VIOLATE THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

By agreeing for the first time the reconsider the basic Roe holding, the Court again will consider the mutually exclusive merits of the unborn's quest for life and the pregnant woman's freedom to abort. For sixteen years, since January 22, 1973, these conflicting basic issues have been much debated intellectually, politically and popularly. Probably no national focus has been so pervasive since slavery in the last century or civil rights in this century, notwithstanding the fact that some 18 million proponents of life cannot speak because they are dead from abortion. These arguments are well known and need not be repeated. This Amicus hopes to assist the Court by discussing some basic criminal law principles, as they bear upon abortion, which have not been considered fully in Roe or generally in post-Roe literature.

I. Outside the Context of Fourteenth Amendment Privacy Roe Does Not Alter General Principles of Criminal Law Which Assume the Unborn to be Human Beings.

Despite Roe, prenatal life continues to have an independent existence in criminal law. One considers the pregnant woman who is beaten or shot and the resulting death of the fetus. According to the common-law view, accepted in Roe, the assailant is chargeable with criminal homicide, depending upon whether the child is stillborn or born alive and then dies. Perkins and Boyce, Criminal Law (3d Ed. 1982), 49-53. If the child is stillborn, the cases have held this is not homicide. If the child is born and breathes but for an instant or establishes independent circulation and then dies, the offense is homicide. Ibid, at 52. Based upon different results, courts conclude that the fetus is not a person or human being until born alive. People v. Greer, 79 Ill. 2d 103, 402 N.E. 2d 203, 209 (1980). The difficulty with the conclusion is that it does not account for finding the defendant guilty of criminal homicide if the child is born alive and then dies.

If the fetus is not a human being at the time it is wounded in the womb, upon what basis is an assailant who causes its live birth, as well as death, to be convicted of criminal homicide? Not only is it absurd to say that the assailant caused the fetus to become a human being by battering the mother, but convicting a defendant on that basis would violate the basic principles of criminal law. Criminal law requires that a defendant's criminal act and criminal intent concur in producing the criminal consequence. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law (2d Ed. 1960), 185-190. If at the time the defendant strikes the pregnant woman the unborn child is not a human being, the defendant should not be guilty of criminal homicide even if the child is born alive and dies. By definition, homicide is the killing of a human being. If the fetus does not become a human being until after the criminal act, the defendant has not harmed a human being insofar as he injured the fetus. (Note that charges of homicide in such cases are in addition to battery of the mother.) At the time of the criminal act, an essential element of the crime—i.e., the death of a human being—is lacking. It is not sufficient to say that the defendant caused the consequence of death which occurred after the fetus became a human being. The situation is similar to that of a defendant who does an act which is not a crime at the time he commits the act. The fact that some of the consequences of the act occur after the law makes an act criminal cannot have retroactive or ex-post-facto application.

This apparent anomaly between the two situations easily is explained if one further distinguishes between existence of a human being and proof of the cause of death. The common-law rules clearly reflect the inadequate medical knowledge concerning the basic facts of human fetal development which were not discovered until the last century.[2] Given the state

---

[2] "Only in the second quarter of the nineteenth century did biological research advance to the extent of understanding the actual mechanism of development. The nineteenth century saw a gradual but profoundly influential revolution in the scientific understanding of the beginning of individual mammalian life. Although sperm had been discovered in 1677, the mammalian egg was not identified until 1827. The cell was first recognized of medical knowledge and a higher probability of the unborn child's being born dead, it would have been inappropriate to convict a defendant of homicide were the state unable to prove what caused the death. The requirement that the child be born alive and breathe for an instant or establish an independent circulation was a way of proving that the defendant, rather than natural causes, brought about the death of the child. The distinction between stillborns and those living for an instant does not represent a denial of the unborn's humanity; it represents a rational requirement consistent with the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Courts have insisted that the states not only prove that the defendant was guilty of some crime (battery on the mother) but that he was also guilty of the particular harm charged (death of a human being).

But for the abortion controversy, the trend of courts to acknowledge advances in medical knowledge, as is the trend in wrongful death actions, infra, likely would have eliminated altogether the common-law distinction between the two situations. In 1947, a California court modified the common-law view in the light of modern as the structural unit of organisms in 1839, and the egg and sperm were recognized as cells in the next two decades. These developments were brought to the attention of the American state legislatures and public by those professionals most familiar with their unfolding import—physicians. It was the new research finding which persuaded doctors that the old 'quickening' distinction embodied in the common and some statutory law was unscientific and indefensible." The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S.158 before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Session, 474 (1982) [statement of Victor G. Rosenblum, Esquire, Professor of Law, Northwestern University].

---

medical knowledge by holding in People v. Chavez, 77 Cal. App. 2d 621, 176 P. 2d 92 (1947):

> A viable child in the process of being born is a human being born within the meaning of the homicide statutes, whether or not the process is fully completed. It should at least be considered a human being where it is a living baby and where in the natural course of events a birth which is already started would naturally be successfully completed. 176 P. 2d at 94.

By 1970, abortion was a political issue in California when Keeler v. Superior Court of Amador County, 2 Cal. 3d 619, 89 Cal. Rptr. 481, 470 P. 2d 617 (1970), was decided. In what became the leading case on the question of a killing where the child was stillborn, the California Supreme Court, over a strong dissent, declined to find the child a "human being". The majority relied on the pro-abortion, revisionist writing of Professor Cyril Means, later prominently cited in Roe v. Wade.

The attitude of Keeler and some other courts toward new medical data affecting the beginning of life contrasts sharply with the approach taken by some courts to the common-law rule involving the end of life. The common-law "year and a day" rule provides that the death of a victim must occur within a year and a day of the infliction of a wound in order to constitute a punishable homicide.

As a practical method of dealing with difficulties inherent in proving the cause of death after a lengthy period of time, this common-law rule has served well. A 1972 opinion by a California court which ignores the rule states that the change "merely modifies an archaic common law impediment", reflecting "that modern medicine not only has made it possible to prolong the life of an intended murder victim but also has made it feasible to establish the cause of death even if the victim dies several years after the injury". People v. Snipe, 25 Cal. App. 3d 742, 747, 102 Cal. Rptr. 6 at 9 (1972). In other states, the trend has been for legislation to bring about the same result. See Perkins and Boyce, op cit, at 47.

As with the "year and a day" rule, some state legislatures have attempted to change the common-law rules regarding the battery-induced death of the unborn.

After Keeler, the California legislature included the killing of a fetus in its murder statute, and "fetus" was interpreted to mean a "viable unborn child". Ibid, at 51.

The Louisiana legislature in 1976 amended its criminal-law definition to provide that "person includes a human being from the moment of fertilization and implantation . . ." The legislature did so in response to State v. Gyles, 313 So. 2d 799 (La. 1975), which had followed Keeler. When the statute was challenged, a federal district judge, who had previously invalidated various Louisiana anti-abortion statutes, upheld the constitutionality of the statute in situations not governed by Roe v. Wade.[3] The American Civil Liberties Union filed an appeal challenging the judgment for sustaining the statute in part, but later dismissed the appeal—apparently preferring not to spotlight the unreported decision. Although a later Louisiana case declined on grounds of statutory interpretation to apply the new definition to homicide, State v. Brown, 378 So. 2d 916 (La. 1979), it was unquestioned that state legislatures constitutionally are permitted to define the killing of a fetus as homicide, i.e., the killing of a human being.

[3] An unreported case, Civil Action 76-2392 "F", USDC, ED, La, Judgment September 29, 1976.

If a state chooses to criminalize as homicide the killing of an unborn child by an unconsented battery on the mother, the mother's privacy rights clearly are not at issue. Such a statute presents no conflict with the holding of Roe. Outside the context of abortion, therefore, Roe does not prevent a state from declaring the unborn to be human beings for purposes of criminal law.

II. Even If the Court Does Not Reverse Roe, It Would Clarify and Simplify Abortion Law to Concede that the Unborn Are Humans as Declared by Missouri and Simply Say that Roe Creates a Constitutional Defense to Criminal Prosecution.

Prevailing criminal jurisprudence determines the humanity of an unborn child without reference to the identification of the individual who causes injury or death to the unborn child. Roe introduces a single criterion of exception to such jurisprudence: if a licensed physician, acting with the mother's consent, injures or kills the unborn, the unborn, by virtue of the fact the act was performed by a licensed physician and consented to by the mother, thereby is relegated to an unprotected status other than that of a human being.

Doubtless the law sometimes treats the same thing differently for materially different purposes. However, this transmogrification is nonsensical.

An unborn child either is or is not a human being. The child's humanity cannot depend upon the identity of the perpetrator and the circumstances under which the child's life is terminated. It needs no argument to perceive the absurdity of saying that the unborn child is a human being if an attacker batters the mother and thereby injures the child, but not a human being if a licensed physician assaults the child with the mother's consent. It would be more candid, and consistent with the structure of criminal law, to admit that what Roe does is to provide a constitutional defense to abortion. In other words, Roe means that even if abortion involves the taking of a human life, the taking of that life is justified when done by a pregnant woman acting through a licensed physician.

It will not do to say that outside of the abortion context the federal courts are simply allowing states to indulge their fantasies by labeling the fetus a human being. As a consequence of this labeling, a defendant may be adjudged guilty of criminal homicide. A jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that this unborn child was a human being. To punish someone for any crime, much less criminal homicide, clearly violates due process under the Fourteenth Amendment unless the state has proven all elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. See In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970).

1. Roe's Statement about the Inability to Determine the Beginning of Human Life Should be Eliminated.

The most quoted Roe statement is the Court's refusal to determine the beginning of human life:

> When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology > are unable to arrive at any consensus [when life begins] the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer. 410 U.S. at 158.

At the minimum, this Court should repudiate the language in Roe about the inability to determine the beginning of human life because it unleashes unnecessary confusion. This language has been variously interpreted to be a statement of ignorance, a confession of judicial impotence or a determination of irrelevancy. This was evident in 1981 during hearings held by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, on S. 158, the "Human Life Bill". The widely publicized hearings revealed confusion over whether this Court meant to say that (1) the issue of when life begins cannot be resolved; (2) this Court is not the proper body to resolve the issue; or (3) resolution of the question is irrelevant to the ultimate constitutional issue. See generally, Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, 97 Cong., 1st Sess. (1982).

Leading constitutional scholars generally took the position that the humanity of the unborn was unimportant because Roe had held the unborn not to be Fourteenth-Amendment persons. If the leading constitutional scholars are correct in interpreting Roe, it does not change Roe to recognize the unborn as human beings.

If recognizing the humanity of the unborn does not necessarily jeopardize Roe, then the district and appellate courts sweep much too broadly in invalidating Missouri's declaration that human life begins at conception.

First, it is an unnecessary and dubious "holding". The finding on the beginning of human life, however offensive to the plaintiffs, had no legal consequences. As the State of Missouri argues in its Jurisdictional Statement, §1.205.1 presents no "case or controversy". Only the regulatory aspects of the statute affected the plaintiffs. More importantly, the lower courts failed to appreciate the limits of Roe. Roe declares only that states cannot adopt a particular theory of life as a way of overriding the woman's right to privacy. Where the right to privacy is not involved, the state not only may adopt a theory of life but, indeed, under Roe a state may prohibit even some first-trimester abortions. In Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975), this Court allowed a state abortion statute to be applied to nonphysician abortions—even with a woman's consent:

> Even during the first trimester of pregnancy, therefore, prosecutions for abortions conducted by nonphysicians infringe upon no realm of personal privacy secured by the Constitution . . . As far as the Court and the Federal Constitution are concerned, Connecticut's statute remains fully effective against performance of abortions by nonphysicians. Ibid, at 11.

2. The Essence of Roe Is the Constitutional Defense Against Prosecution.

Since Roe and Menillo, the implications of the "right to privacy" have not expanded as much as might have been expected, while the claims of the unborn have expanded. It is significant that Roe does not accept as absolute the woman's right to control her body. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), goes further by rejecting the claim that consenting homosexual conduct is covered by the right to privacy. The idea that anyone—male or female—has complete control over his or her own body simply contradicts the basis of our law on crimes against the person. If so, people should be able to consent to aggravated forms of battery, which they cannot. Perkins and Boyce, op cit, at 155. Even though the state may choose not to punish suicide or attempted suicide, that does not mean one has a right to commit suicide. As Blackstone said, the common-law view is that suicide is "among the highest crimes".[4]

Despite Roe, outside the abortion context the private-law status of the unborn is more secure. Roe states:

> [i]n areas other than criminal abortion, the law has been reluctant to endorse any theory that life, as we recognize it, begins before live birth or to accord legal rights to the unborn except in narrowly defined situations and except when the rights are contingent upon live birth. 410 U.S. at 161.

---

[4] ". . . No man hath a power to destroy life, but by commission from God, the author of it: and as the suicide is guilty of double offense; one spiritual . . . the other temporal, against the King, who hath an interest in the preservation of all his subjects, the law has therefore ranked this among the highest crimes, making it a peculiar species of felony." Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England, Vol. 4, at 188 (St. George Tucker Ed. 1803).

Briefly touching on tort and property law, the Court concludes that "the unborn have never been recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense". Ibid, at 162. Although it has been argued that the Court's appreciation of the status of the unborn in private law was incorrect even at the time,[5] it has since developed that courts have increasingly recognized the unborn as persons for recovery of prenatal injuries.[6]

Indeed, as the humanity of the unborn has become self-evident through fiber-optic pictures on the covers of national news magazines, advocates for abortion have changed arguments. They rarely argue that when life begins cannot be proven. Rather, the argument has become one that, even if the unborn are human, they are not Fourteenth-Amendment "persons" because the Supreme Court so holds in Roe. Accordingly, this Court, if nothing else, would clarify constitutional analysis by explaining Roe simply as providing a constitutional defense to the aborting of a nonconstitutional "person" when done by a licensed doctor with the consent of a pregnant woman. The Court thereby would recognize the Roe-created reality that a class of human beings is denied Fourteenth Amendment personhood.

---

[5] R. Byrn, "An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion", 41 Fordham L. Rev. 807, 817-827 (1973).

[6] D. Kader, "The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade", 45 Mo.L.Rev. 639, 652-653 (1980). By 1985, thirty-one states allowed wrongful death recovery for injuries to a child who was stillborn. See Note, "Prenatal Wrongful Death—Amadio v. Levin," 59 Temple L.Q. 827 (1986).

III. If in Addition to Recognizing the Humanity of the Unborn this Court also Reverses Roe, Such Result Will Not Thereby Require States to Punish Abortion as Murder.

As discussed in §II, it is possible both to recognize the humanity of the unborn and also to leave Roe otherwise unchanged. At that point, however, it becomes very difficult to explain why a state is not acting rationally by attempting to prohibit abortion as a means of protecting human life. Furthermore, the rationality of the Missouri statute is well supported by the hearings on S. 158, supra. In deciding whether to reverse Roe and return to a rational basis test on the question of abortion, this Court may have other concerns about the consequences of reversal. Chief among these are likely to be the resulting criminal statutes that might be used to prohibit abortion. Thus, it is important to realize why the reversal of Roe need not, and probably would not, lead to the prosecution of abortion as criminal homicide.

Roe recognizes that if the Court were to hold the unborn persons under the Fourteenth Amendment, then states clearly would have the right, if not the duty, to prohibit abortions. Roe also discusses the question of whether the states would be required to prohibit abortion as murder if the unborn were indeed human. Roe considered the fact that the states had not punished abortion as murder as inconsistent with the view that the unborn were human. If Roe is to be reversed, Members of the Court undoubtedly will be considering the implications of such a decision (1) upon the question whether the unborn are Fourteenth-Amendment persons and (2) upon state statutes to criminalize abortion.

1. If Roe Is Reversed, Can Unborn Human Beings Be Treated Differently?

The issue of whether the unborn are "persons" under the Fourteenth Amendment is not before the Court in this case but looms in the background. Contrary to an indication in Roe v. Wade,[7] a finding that the unborn is a Fourteenth-Amendment person should not require the states to punish abortion as murder. Murder is only one form of homicide, indeed only one form of criminal homicide. "Homicide", which simply means the killing of a human being, includes the accidental, noncriminal killing of a human being as, for instance, in an automobile accident. Among criminal homicides, there are various types, depending upon the state criminal law scheme. Within the category [7] "When Texas urges that a fetus is entitled to Fourteenth Amendment protection as a person, it faces a dilemma. Neither in Texas nor in any other State are all abortions prohibited. Despite broad proscription, an exception always exists. The exception, contained in Art. 1196, for an abortion procured or attempted by medical advice for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, is typical. But if the fetus is a person who is not to be deprived of life without due process of law, and if the mother's condition is the sole determinant, does not the Texas exception appear to be out of line with the Amendment's command?

---

"There are other inconsistencies between the Fourteenth Amendment status and the typical abortion statute. It has already been pointed out, n. 49, supra, that in Texas the woman is not a principal or an accomplice with respect to an abortion upon her. If the fetus is a person, why is the woman not a principal or an accomplice? Further, the penalty for criminal abortion specified by Art. 1195 is significantly less than the maximum penalty for murder prescribed by Art. 1257 of the Texas Penal Code. If the fetus is a person, may the penalties be different?" 410 U.S. at 157 N. 54.

of criminal homicide, the seriousness (e.g., whether murder or manslaughter) and, therefore, the punishment, depend upon the defendant's mens rea, or guilty mind. In order to prove any form of criminal homicide, the state must prove a harm (death of a human being) caused by the defendant while acting with a certain criminal state of mind.

Absolute certainty concerning the precise moment when life begins ought not to be required for a state to protect what reasonably appears to be a human being. Nevertheless, without detracting from that notion, it is consistent to say that anyone charged in killing an unborn child must be shown "beyond a reasonable doubt" to have caused the death of a human being. Given advanced medical knowledge and technology, as previously discussed, some states have modified, and others may modify, the common-law rules to make the killing of the unborn child criminal homicide if done by nonphysicians. The same laws might be made to apply to physicians if Roe v. Wade were reversed. Nevertheless, the prosecution still would have to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused the death of a human being. Such proof in actual criminal cases might be difficult for the early stages of pregnancy when the child is not recognizable as a human being. One should not assume, therefore, that states would seek to punish such acts as homicide. This would not imply a lack of equal treatment for the unborn child. Rather, states rationally might conclude that the uncertainty of proof requires prosecution of such cases under the heading of abortion.

In Roe, this Court questions whether, if a fetus is a Fourteenth-Amendment person, the state could provide a penalty significantly less than the maximum penalty for murder. Such a disparity presents no problem. Under state laws, the punishment provided for murder (death or life imprisonment) is substantially more severe than for other homicides such as manslaughter or negligent homicide. Nevertheless, presumably no one doubts that the victim of a negligent homicide is less a human being because negligently, rather than willfully, killed.

2. If Roe Is Reversed, How Would Women Who Have Abortions Be Treated?

Proponents of abortion have pitted the protection of the unborn against the prosecution of women. What would recognition of the unborn as human beings and possibly persons under the Fourteenth Amendment mean in terms of prosecutions of women who have abortions?

As noted in Roe, Texas law did not make the woman subject to prosecution as a principal or as an accomplice. Although the Court considered this inconsistent with the Fourteenth Amendment, the failure to prosecute a person or to make a person liable to prosecute alone has not been considered a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. See LaFave and Israel, Criminal Procedure, 571-577 (1985). Whether states generally would prosecute physicians who perform abortions or women who consent to abortions largely would be a matter of state policy. Nevertheless, two arguably troublesome instances require particular attention: (1) when the life of the mother is endangered; and (2) the occurrence of a miscarriage.

1. Roe notes that it was inconsistent for Texas to claim that the unborn was a person and then to make an exception in the case of the life of the mother. The Court states that all states provided such an exception. Even in dissent, Justice Rehnquist states "[i]f the Texas statute were to prohibit an abortion even where the mother's life is in jeopardy, I have little doubt that such a statute would lack a rational relation to a valid state objective . . ." 410 U.S. at 173. It is not necessary, however, to be inconsistent regarding the status of the unborn child in order to exempt women from prosecution when the woman's life has been in danger. The exemption can be worded in terms which exempt the woman from prosecution but do not change the human status of the unborn child who dies.

2. Opponents of recognizing the unborn children as human beings also have raised the specter of prosecuting women for miscarriages. Readily available principles in criminal law, however, answer these arguments. Crime requires (1) a criminal act and (2) a criminal intent or criminal negligence. Perkins and Boyce, op cit, at 831. Except for a limited class of "strict liability" offenses, such as food and drug laws, the law "adhere[s] to the central thought that wrongdoing must be conscious to be criminal . . ." Morissette v. U.S., 342 U.S. 246, 252 (1952). For a homicide to be criminal, the killing must fall into one of the following categories: (1) specific-intent-to-kill murder; (2) specific-intent-to-do-bodily-harm murder; (3) depraved-heart murder; (4) felony murder; (5) heat-of-passion voluntary manslaughter; (6) criminal negligence-involuntary manslaughter; (7) unlawful act-involuntary manslaughter. Even the shooting of another person is not criminal unless the assailant possesses one of these guilty states of mind.

A miscarriage, because involuntary, not only lacks anything approaching criminal intent but it also lacks the other requirement of all crime—some act or omission that is the equivalent of an act. Perkins and Boyce, op cit, at 605 and 658. Moreover, as a practical matter, it would be virtually impossible to know of, much less to prove, many deliberately, self-induced early stage abortions.

Thus, reversal of Roe would lead to neither consequence.

CONCLUSION

The judgments of the Court of Appeals herein and of this Court in Roe v. Wade should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

*MARION EDWYN HARRISON
JOHN S. BAKER, JR.
LAW OFFICES MARION EDWYN HARRISON
840 The Watergate
2600 Virginia Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
202 965-0800
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Counsel of Record*

February 23, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF THE RUTHERFORD INSTITUTE AND THE RUTHERFORD INSTITUTES OF ALABAMA, ARKANSAS, CALIFORNIA, COLORADO, CONNECTICUT, FLORIDA, GEORGIA, KENTUCKY, MICHIGAN, MINNESOTA, MONTANA, NEBRASKA, OHIO, PENNSYLVANIA, TENNESSEE, TEXAS, VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA, AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

James J. Knicely
Counsel of Record
John W. Whitehead
Thomas W. Strahan
The Rutherford Institute
9411 Battle Street
Manassas, Virginia 22110
(703) 369-0100

Attorneys for Amici Curiae *

(*Addresses of other Amici Curiae and their respective attorneys are listed on the inside front cover)

Balmar Legal Publishing Division, Washington, D.C. 20005 (202) 659-3610

A. Eric Johnson
The Rutherford Institute of Alabama
2100 Southbridge,Suite 376
Birmingham, Alabama 35209

David E. Morris
The Rutherford Institute of Arkansas
711 W. Emma Springdale, Arkansas 72764

David Llewellyn
The Rutherford Institute of California
2700 North Main Street,
Suite 1100
Santa Ana, California 92701

Lynn M. Watwood, Jr.
The Rutherford Institute of Colorado
14083 W. Alaska Drive
Lakewood, Colorado 80228

Joseph P. Secola
The Rutherford Institute of Connecticut
122 Broad Street
On the Green
Milford,Connecticut 06460

The Rutherford Institute of Florida
6198 A. Laurel Lane
Tamarac, Florida 33319

William B. Hollberg
The Rutherford Institute of Georgia
744 Elkmont Drive, NE
Atlanta, Georgia 30306

Amy Dougherty
The Rutherford Institute of Kentucky
P.O.Box 615
Frankfort, Kentucky 40602

Randall A. Pentiuk
The Rutherford Institute of Michigan
13900 Sibley Road
Riverview, Michigan 48192

Thomas W. Strahan
The Rutherford Institute of Minnesota
1313 Fifth Street,SE,
Suite 324
Minneapolis, Minnesota
55414

The Rutherford Institute of Montana
Chester, Montana 59522

Richard Duncan
The Rutherford Institute of Nebraska
Lincoln, Nebraska 68506

Robert R. Melnick
The Rutherford Institute of Ohio
18 N. Phelps Street
Youngstown,Ohio 44503

William Bonner
The Rutherford Institute of Pennsylvania
P.O. Box 602
Media, Pennsylvania 19063

Larry L. Crain
The Rutherford Institute of Tennessee
Brentwood, Tennessee 37662

W. Charles Bundren
The Rutherford Institute of Texas
901 Main Street
6000 First Republic
Bank Plaza
Dallas,Texas 75202

The Rutherford Institute of Virginia
P.O. Drawer GR
Williamsburg, Virginia 23185

Randall L. Trautwein
The Rutherford Institute of West Virginia
Morris Building, Suite 200
845 Fourth Avenue
Huntington, West Virginia
25701

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Authorities iii

Interest of Amici Curiae 1

Statement of the Case 2

Summary of Argument 2

Argument 3

I. ROE V. WADE SHOULD IN THE INTEREST OF JUSTICE BE EXPRESSLY OVERRULED OR CONFINED TO ITS NARROW HOLDING 3

II. IT WAS ERROR TO CLASSIFY A WOMAN'S DECISION TO TERMINATE HER PREGNANCY AS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT PROTECTED BY THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT'S CONCEPT OF PERSONAL LIBERTY 7

A. Historical Exegesis 9

B. Misplaced Reliance on Precedent 10

C. Constitutionalization of an Essentially Legislative Issue 16

D. Summary 19

III. ASSUMING FOR PURPOSES OF ARGUMENT THAT THE ABORTION DECISION INVOLVES A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT, THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROTECTING POTENTIAL LIFE IS COMPELLING THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY AND SHOULD BE BALANCED AGAINST THAT RIGHT UNDER A TWO-TIERED STRICT SCRUTINY/RATIONAL RELATIONSHIP TEST, DEPENDING UPON THE NATURE OF THE STATE ACTION 20

IV. THE MISSOURI STATUTE DOES NOT POSE ANY ABSOLUTE OBSTACLE OR SEVERE RESTRICTION ON ABORTION AND SHOULD

THEREFORE BE UPHELD AS RATIONALLY RELATED TO THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROTECTING THE UNBORN 24

A. Viability Testing 24

B. Missouri's Declaration of State Policy Concerning the Unborn 25

C. Public Funds, Employees and Facilities . . 26

Conclusion 29

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases	Pages
Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525 (1923) . .	19
American Federation of Labor v. American Sash Co., 335 U. S. 538 (1949)	7
Application of the President and Directors of Georgetown College, Inc., 331 F. 2d 1000 (D. C. Cir. 1964) (Wright, J., In Chambers)	14
Beal v. Doe, 432 U. S. 438 (1977)	23
Belotti v. Baird, 428 U. S. 132 (1976)	23
Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986)	3,7
Brown v. Board of Education 349 U. S. 294 (1955)	5,6,17
Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U. S. 393 (1932)	6
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U. S. 416 (1983)	5,18,20-23,25-26
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U. S. 379 (1979)	24
Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U. S. 471 (1970)	17
Davis v. Commonwealth, 167 U. S. 43 (1897)	28
Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U. S. 438 (1972)	10,15
Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U. S. 528 (1985)	6
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U. S. 479 (1965)	7-8,11,27
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U. S. 398 (1981)	21
Harris v. McRae, 448 U. S. 297 (1980)	23,26-27
Hylton v. United States, 3 Dall. (3 U. S.) 171 (1796)	6
Korematsu v. United States, 323 U. S. 283 (1944) . . .	29
Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45 (1905)	17,19
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U. S. 1 (1967)	10

Maher v. Roe, 432 U. S. 464 (1977) 20,23-27
Margaret S. v. Edwards, 794 F.2d 994 (5th Cir. 1986)(Higginbotham, J.) 6
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U. S. 390 (1923) 10,22
Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U. S. 494 (1977) 7-8
Palko v. State of Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319 (1937) 8
Parham v. J.R., 442 U. S. 584 (1979) 22
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510 (1925) 10,22,27
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 637 (1896) 17
Poelker v. Doe, 432 U. S. 519 (1977) 26
Pollack v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601 (1896) 6
Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U. S. 158 (1944) 10,22
Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 25
Roe v. Wade, 410 U. S. 113 (1973) . . . . . passim
Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 118 U. S. 394 (1886) 12
Scott v. Sandford, 60 U. S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) . . . 3,12,29
Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U. S. 535 (1942) 10
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97 (1934) 7
South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S.Ct. 1355 (1988) 6
Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U. S. 645 (1972) 22
Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741 (Three Judge Court, W. D. Ohio 1970) 14
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U. S. 747 (1986) . . . . . passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 737 F.2d 283, 317 (Adams, J.) and

319 (Weis, J.) (3rd Cir. 1984) (on denial of pet. for rehearing) 6
United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, 25 F. Cas. 695 (C.C.D. Neb. 1879) 29
United States v. Darby, 312 U. S. 100 (1941) 6
West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379 (1937) 6,17
West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U. S. 624 (1943) 6
Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U. S. 483 (1955) 17
Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U. S. 205 (1972) 22

Statutes and Constitutional Provisions

RSMo. 1.205.1(3) (1986) 22
Article 1, Section 2, Missouri Constitution 14
Article 2, Paragraph 2, Sentence 1, Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany 14-15
Declaration of Independence 13
Fifth Amendment 13
Fourteenth Amendment 14

Other Authorities

3 State Referendums Give New Impetus to Anti-Abortion Efforts, The Washington Post, November 10, 1988, at B-1 4
250 Arrested at Jersey Anti-Abortion Protest, The New York Times, September 18, 1988, at 46 3
Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham, ed. 1987) 6,9-10
Abramowitz, 153 Arrested in Abortion Protest at D. C. Clinic, The Washington Post, January 24, 1989, B1 3

Alexander, Medical Science Under Dictatorship, 241 New Eng. J. Med. 39-47 (July 4, 1949) 29

Arbagi, Roe and the Hippocratic Oath, in Abortion and the Constitution at 159-181 9

Blaustein and Field, 'Overruling' Opinions in the Supreme Court, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 152-156 (1958) 7

Brief of the United States As Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants in Akron 5,18-19

Briefs of the United States As Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants in Thornburgh 5

Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Ford. L. Rev. 807, 814-835 (1973) 10

Callahan, How Technology is Reframing the Abortion Debate, 16 Hastings Center Report 33 (1986) 21,26

Callahan, D., Abortion: Law, Choice and Morality 82 (1970) 13

Connery, The Ancients and the Medievals on Abortion: The Consensus the Court Ignored, in Abortion and the Constitution at 123-135 9

Cox, A., The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 103 (1976) 3,10,20

Dellapena, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359, 365-416 (1979) 10

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life- Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250, 1267-1282 (1975) 10

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L. J. 920, 949 (1973) 7,9,18,21

Freund, Storms Over the Supreme Court, 69 A.B.A.J. 1474, 1480 (1983) 7

Furlong & Black, Pregnancy Termination for Genetic Indications: The Impact on Families, 10 Social Work in Health Care 1 (1984) 21

Ginsburg, Some Thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N. C. L. Rev. 375, 381, 385 (1985) 4

Glendon, Mary Ann Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 44 (1987) 5,14-16,18,23

Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63 (1987) 12

Hentoff, Civil Rights and Anti-Abortion Protests, The Washington Post, February 6, 1989, A11 4,16

Hiskey, Thousands Join "Rescue Movement" Around Nation, 32 Christianity Today 52, December 9, 1988 4

Horan & Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution at 57 10

Jonas and Gorby, West German Abortion Decision: A Contrast to Roe v. Wade —- With Commentaries, 9 J. Mar. J. Prac. & Proc. 551 (1976) 3,14-15

Jurisdictional Statement 2,24

Knicely, The Thornburgh and Bowers Cases: Consequences for Roe v. Wade, 56 Miss. L. J. 267, 282 (1986) 5-6

Koop, The Slide to Auschwitz, in R. Reagan, Abortion and the Conscience of the Nation, 41, 45 (1984) 16

Letter to Medical Staff and Roe v. Wade Revisited at North Memorial Medical Center, 20 Medical Staff News, North Memorial Medical Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota, No. 1 at 4 and 5, January 1989 4

Mattinson, The Effects of Abortion on a Marriage in Abortion: Medical Progress and Social Implications, 1985 Ciba Foundation Symposium 165-177 21

McAll & Wilson, Ritual Mourning for Unresolved Grief, 80 Southern Medical Journal 817 (1987) 21

McCarthy, The Real Anguish of Abortions, The Washington Post, February 5, 1989, F2 22

Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth Amendment Right About to Rise from the Nineteenth Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty, 17 N. Y. Law Forum 335 (1971) 11-12

Milling, The Men Who Wait, Woman's Life, 48-49, 69-71, April 1975 21

Milton, John , Paradise Lost I:528-529 6

Mithers, Abortion: Are Men There When Women Need Them Most?, Mademoiselle at 231, April 1981 22

Noonan, The Root and Branch of Roe v. Wade, 63 Neb. L. Rev. 668, 669, 675 (1984) 29

Noonan, J. T., A Private Choice 12 (1979) 11,16

Patterson, Whose Freedom of Choice?, 46 The Progressive 42, April 1982 21-22

Peirce, BRI v. Leonard: The Role of the Courts in Preserving Family Integrity, 23 N. Eng. L. Rev. 185 (1988) 21

Perry, Substantive Due Process Revisited: Reflections On (And Beyond) Recent Cases, 71 Nw. L. Rev. 417 (1976) 9

Pfeifer, Abandoning Error: Self-Correction by the Supreme Court, in Abortion and the Constitution at 3-22 6

Reagan, R., Abortion and the Conscience of the Nation (1984) 16

Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L. J. 639, 697 (1986) 21

Shostak, Abortion As Fatherhood Lost: Problems and Reforms, 28 The Family Coordinator 569 (1979) 21

Special Project: Survey of Abortion Law, 1980 Ariz. St. L. J. 67, 75-76, 79-88 10

Terry, R., Operation Rescue 283 (1988) 3-4

Thompson, Atlanta Police Use Tougher Tactics As Abortion Foes Return to Streets, The Washington Post, October 5, 1988, at A3 3

Torres and Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions, 20 Family Planning Perspectives 169 July - Aug., 1988 16

Blackstone, W., 4 Commentaries on the Laws of England 198 12-13

Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231, 252-254 26,29

Weidner & Griffitt, Abortion as a Stigma: In the Eyes of the Beholder, 18 Journal of Research and Personality 359 (1984) 22

Will, Splitting Differences, Newsweek, February 13, 1989, at 86 4,16

Wood and Durham, Counseling, Consulting and Consent: Abortion and the Doctor-Patient Relationship, 1978 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231,244 28-29

Woodward, The Abortion Papers, The Washington Post, January 22, 1989, at D1 3

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988.

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF THE RUTHERFORD INSTITUTE AND THE RUTHERFORD INSTITUTES OF ALABAMA, ARKANSAS, CALIFORNIA, COLORADO, CONNECTICUT, FLORIDA, GEORGIA, KENTUCKY, MICHIGAN, MINNESOTA, MONTANA, NEBRASKA, OHIO, PENNSYLVANIA, TENNESSEE, TEXAS, VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA, AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE[1]

Amici Curiae —- The Rutherford Institute and its affiliated state chapters —- have as two of their purposes, strengthening the traditional family and fostering respect for the uniqueness and paramount worth of human life. These values are deeply rooted in America's common law and Constitutional tradition and its morality and values. Diminishing the value of family relationships and respect for life, even potential life, diminishes, in one form or another, the lives and the quality of life of all citizens. That is why The Rutherford Institute believes that this case, with issues concerning the power of states to regulate abortion, and ultimately, to sustain and protect the traditional American family, will be important to our Constitutional jurisprudence and the growth and progress of the Nation.

[1] Counsel of record to the parties in this case have consented to the filing of this brief and letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk pursuant to Rule 36.

Amici Curiae are non-profit religious corporations named for Samuel Rutherford, a 17th-century Scottish minister and Rector at St. Andrew's University. The Rutherford Institute and its affiliated state chapters undertake to assist litigants and to participate in significant cases relating to the protection and safeguarding of human life and family values. The Rutherford Institute believes the expertise of its counsel will be of assistance to the Court in this case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The facts of this case have been stated in the Jurisdictional Statement, pages 2-8, and are incorporated herein by this reference.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade[2] stands as an unnecessary source of division and conflict in American life. If left to stand, it threatens to undermine the institutional stature of this Court and the rule of law in American society. The legitimacy of Roe has been disputed not only by doctrinaire pro-life advocates, but by the Executive Branch of the United States Government, by distinguished legal scholars, by the legislative branches of the Federal and several state governments, by the people in referenda in several states and by significant segments of American society. Indeed, in the Court's last decision on the subject, three justices of this Court questioned the legitimacy of Roe, with a fourth calling for its reexamination.[3]

Roe has failed because its premises were not rooted in the tradition of the Nation. Its reading of history was flawed, its reliance on precedent, misplaced, and its Constitutionalization of [2] 410 U.S. 113 (1973) (hereinafter cited alternatively as "Roe" and "Roe v. Wade").

[3] Justices White and O'Connor, both joined by then Justice Rehnquist, disputed the legitmacy of Roe. Thornburgh v. American College of Obsteticians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 791 (White, J., dissenting) and 829 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Then Chief Justice Burger called for re-examination of Roe. Id. at 785 (Burger, C. J., dissenting).

an essentially legislative issue, mistaken. Even more egregious was its transposition of Constitutional values, namely, the arbitrary elevation of "liberty" over "life" —- the latter being the compelling basis of the dignity of man and the prerequisite for all basic constitutional rights.[4] This failure of jurisprudence rivals this Court's decision in the Dred Scott Case.[5]

It is time for the Court to recognize its error in Roe v. Wade, as it has over 100 times in other cases, and to reverse Roe or, at the very least, confine it to its narrow holding. Accordingly, this Court should uphold the Missouri statutory provisions based on a standard of review that requires legislation to bear a rational relationship to a legitimate state objective.

ARGUMENT

I. ROE V. WADE SHOULD IN THE INTEREST OF JUSTICE BE EXPRESSLY OVERRULED OR CONFINED TO ITS NARROW HOLDING.

This Court has recognized that it "is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution." Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2846 (1986). Legitimacy is essential because the judiciary "is uniquely dependent upon the power of legitimacy when engaged in constitutional adjudication."[6] Absent legitimacy, respect for law is greatly diminished,[7] legal institutions are undermined,[8] law

[4] Decision of The Federal Constitutional Court of the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany), translated in Jonas & Gorby, West German Abortion Decision: A Contrast to Roe v. Wade —- With Commentaries, 9 J. Mar. J. Prac. & Proc. 551, 642 (1976).

[5] Scott v. Sandford, 60 U. S. (19 How.) 393 (1857).

[6] A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 103 (1976).

[7] 250 Arrested at Jersey Anti-Abortion Protest, The New York Times, September 18, 1988, at 46; Thompson, Atlanta Police Use Tougher Tactics As Abortion Foes Return to Streets, The Washington Post, October 5, 1988, at A3; Abramowitz, 153 Arrested in Abortion Protest at D. C. Clinic, The Washington Post, January 24, 1989, B1.

[8] Woodward, The Abortion Papers, The Washington Post, January 22, 1989, at D1. See also, R. Terry, Operation Rescue 283 (1988) ("We hereby declare Roe v. Wade and all subsequent court decisions and legislation which permit, support, enforcement is jeopardized,[9] and the gap between the law and the moral order produces increasing conflict and social turmoil.[10] The judiciary is otherwise left to the embarrassing and defensive position of justifying its misadventures under increasingly indiscriminate standards.[11]

Unfortunately, the plight of the Federal courts since the landmark decision of Roe v. Wade has been repeatedly to defend it. After fifteen years, and even more revisits to the subject by this Court,[12] the people through their elected representatives continue to seek guidance in determining what, if any, regulation may be imposed on abortion. But with each new decision, it becomes increasingly obvious that any "limits" Roe purports to impose on or protect wanton child killing to be unjust, illegitimate, non-binding and unlawful").

---

[9] See Hentoff, Civil Rights and Anti-Abortion Protests, The Washington Post, February 6, 1989, A11 ("The only actual violence connected with Operation Rescue has been inflicted by the police, most viciously, in Atlanta where one of the Planned Parenthood's 13 civil rights leaders is mayor"); Hiskey, Thousands Join "Rescue Movement" Around Nation, 32 Christianity Today 52, December 9, 1988 (Some law enforcement officials torn between moral beliefs and duties).

[10] Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a supporter of the abortion right, has suggested that "....Roe ventured too far in the change it ordered....Heavy-handed judicial intervention was difficult to justify and appears to have provoked, not resolved, conflict." Ginsburg, Some Thoughts on Autonomy and Equality in Relation to Roe v. Wade, 63 N. C. L. Rev. 375, 381, 385 (1985). See also, e.g., the articles cited in note 7, supra; 3 State Referendums Give New Impetus to Anti-Abortion Efforts, The Washington Post, November 10, 1988, at B-1; and Letter to Medical Staff and Roe v. Wade Revisited at North Memorial Medical Center, 20 Medical Staff News, North Memorial Medical Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota, No. 1 at 4 and 5, January 1989 (Roe v. Wade is at the center of a dispute among physicians, requiring a vote of hospital staff on whether to do abortions).

[11] See Will, Splitting Differences, Newsweek, February 13, 1989, at 86, and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U. S. 747, 814, 829 (O'Connor, J., dissenting): "[N]o legal rule or doctrine is safe from ad hoc nullification by this Court when an occasion for its application arises in a case involving state regulation of abortion....[T]he Court strains to discover 'the anti-abortion character of the statute'...and invents an unprecedented canon of construction under which 'in cases involving abortion, a permissible reading of the statute is to be avoided at all costs.'" abortion are, in reality, shallow rhetoric for "abortion on demand," Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U. S. 747, 782-784 (1986) (Burger, C. J., dissenting) (hereinafter "Thornburgh"). Even more obvious is the fact that Roe is "clearly on a collision course with itself," City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U. S. 416, 458 (1983) (O'Connor, J. dissenting) (hereinafter "Akron"). "As time passes, not only does the Roe decision appear to be collapsing from within, but the opinions of leading constitutional law writers, many of them not opposed to abortion in principle, have been marshaled against it. Archibald Cox, Alexander Bickel, John Hart Ely, Harry Wellington, Richard Epstein and Paul Freund have all been highly critical." Mary Ann Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 44 (1987) (hereinafter "Glendon"). Finally, the repeated solicitations of the Executive Branch of the United States Government, through its successive Solicitor Generals, imploring this Court to confine Roe v. Wade to its narrow holding or to overrule it, has reflected increased public sentiment questioning the validity of Roe. See Briefs of the United States As Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants in Akron and Thornburgh.

[12] The Court has decided 18 abortion decisions since Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton.

It is imperative that this national undercurrent of doubt and skepticism about the Nation's highest court and abortion be rectified. Unfortunately, the Court's unequivocal affirmances of Roe in the Akron case, where it appealed to stare decisis, and its more forceful affirmance in Thornburgh, where its resolution was intimated to be as strong as in Brown v. Board of Education,[13] have done little to calm the unrest and dissent. Stare decisis is a very slender reed upon which to justify a decision as wanting in precedent as Roe v. Wade. And Brown v. Board of Education, unlike Roe, was secure because it had Constitutional warrant as well as being morally correct: "the fourteenth amendment provided an explicit and settled constitutional mandate to justify that decision, apart from the moral force of the decision's reasoning."[14] The "undesired and uncomfortable straightjacket" that Roe and its more recent progeny have "tailored for the 50 states" has, instead, [13] 349 U. S. 294 (1955).

---

[14] Knicely, The Thornburgh and Bowers Cases: Consequences for Roe v. Wade, 56 Miss. L. J. 267, 282 (1986).

sparked "a significant and important judicial debate,...not only about the legitimacy of Roe and its effect upon the Court as an institution, but also about the nature of the right granted in Roe and the state interest in protecting the fetus as a living entity."[15]

Despite the importance of stare decisis to our legal system, this Court has not in the past hesitated to correct Constitutional error.

> Stare decisis is usually the wise policy, because in most matters it is more important that the applicable rule of law be settled than that it be settled right....But in cases involving the Federal Constitution, where correction through legislative action is practically impossible, this Court has often overruled its earlier decisions.

Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U. S. 393, 406-407 (1932).[16] No matter how valuable a consistent course of constitutional adjudication, blind adherence to stare decisis can transform it—- like any other formal rule—- into so many "high words, that [bear] semblance of worth, [but] not substance."[17] Formal rules and good intentions do not suffice when the underlying decision they [15] Id. at 321-322. See the discourse between Justices White and Stevens in the Thornburgh case, 476 U. S. at 772-782 (Stevens, J., concurring), and 785-814 (White, J., dissenting), and the dissenting opinions of Chief Justice Burger, and Justice O'Connor in the same case, 476 U. S. at 782-785 (Burger, C. J., dissenting) and at 814-833 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). There have also been rumblings in the Circuit Courts of Appeal. See, e.g., Margaret S. v. Edwards, 794 F.2d 994, 995-996, 996,n.3 (5th Cir. 1986)(Higginbotham, J.); and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 737 F.2d 283, 317 (Adams, J.) and 319 (Weis, J.) (3rd Cir. 1984)(on denial of pet. for rehearing).

[16] Prominent examples of reversal in the last fifty years are South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S.Ct. 1355 (1988) [where the Court expressly overruled Pollack v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601 (1896), which itself expressly overruled Hylton v. United States, 3 Dall. (3 U. S.) 171 (1796); these multiple reversals spanned almost our entire Constitutional history]; Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U. S. 528, 557 (1985); Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U. S. 483 (1954); West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U. S. 624, 642 (1943); United States v. Darby, 312 U. S. 100 (1941); West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379 (1937).

For a complete review of the history of the Court's reversals, see, Pfeifer, Abandoning Error: Self-Correction by the Supreme Court, in Abortion and the Constitution 3–22 (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham, ed. 1987).

[17] John Milton, Paradise Lost I: 528-529.

seek to justify fails "to trace its premises to the charter from which it derives its authority"[18] and deprives the people of power to explore and shape a societal response to a controversial subject involving important, but conflicting social values.[19] As Justice Frankfurter has written:

> The Court is not saved from being oligarchic because it professes to act in the service of humane ends. As history amply proves, the judiciary is prone to misconceive the public good by confounding private notions with constitutional requirements and such misconceptions are not subject to legitimate displacement by the will of the people except at too slow a pace.

American Federation of Labor v. American Sash Co., 335 U. S. 538, 557 (1949) (Frankfurter, J. concurring).

The long and short of the matter is that it is past time for this Court to acknowledge and correct error in Roe v. Wade. It has abandoned error over 100 times in its history, [20] and it should now overrule it outright or, at the very least, confine Roe v. Wade to its narrow holding.

II. IT WAS ERROR TO CLASSIFY A WOMAN'S DECISION TO TERMINATE HER PREGNANCY AS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT PROTECTED BY THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT'S CONCEPT OF PERSONAL LIBERTY.

This Court has recognized certain fundamental rights that are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. These rights have been held to be "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental," Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105 (1934),[21] and

[18] Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L. J. 920, 949 (1973).

[19] Freund, Storms Over the Supreme Court, 69 A.B.A.J. 1474, 1480 (1983). See also, Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 786-794, 796-797 (White, J. dissenting), and Bowers, 106 S.Ct. at 2844-46.

[20] Blaustein and Field, 'Overruling' Opinions in the Supreme Court, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 152-156 (1958); and Pfeifer, supra note 16, at 5-10.

[21] See also, Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U. S. 494, 503 (1977) (opinion of Powell, J.) and Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U. S. 479, 501 (1965) (Harlan, J.

so "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" that "neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed." Palko v. State of Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325 (1937).[22] Because of the value placed on such rights, the Court has required a necessary relationship between any state action restricting them and a compelling state interest in order for the action to be upheld. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U. S. 479, 497 (1965).

"Fundamental liberties and interests are most clearly present when the Constitution provides specific textual recognition of their existence and importance." Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 790 (White J., dissenting). Thus, rights expressly granted in the Bill of Rights have been applied by this Court against the states through the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In Roe v. Wade, where a woman's decision to terminate a pregnancy was recognized as a "fundamental" right encompassed in the right to privacy, this Court found no explicit textual mandate to justify the right, but, instead, relied on the "Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions on state action" and "the Ninth Amendment's reservation of rights to the people." Roe at 153.

In support of its decision, the Court relied on an historical, sociological and medical analysis to determine why the decision to terminate pregnancy was fundamental and therefore protected by the right of privacy. In its extensive survey of the socio-medical and legal history of abortion, this Court concluded that restrictive criminal abortion laws were "of relatively recent vintage" (id. at 129), and that ancient and Anglo-American law had generally treated abortion with less severity than the state statutes then in force. The Court summarized: "It is thus apparent that at common law, at the time of the adoption of our Constitution, and throughout the major portion of the 19th Century, abortion was viewed with less disfavor than under most American statutes currently in effect." Id. at 140, 157-158, 165. These findings provided an essential premise for the Court's ultimate legal conclusion.

---

concurring) (Fundamental liberties are those that "are deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.").

[22] See also, Roe v. Wade, 410 U. S. at 152; Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U. S. at 537 (Stewart, J. dissenting).

Even though governing standards may permit the Court to identify "fundamental" liberty interests in historical tradition or concepts of ordered liberty, it cannot be gainsaid that the Court is most vulnerable if such interests are not in fact so rooted. For if "the roots of substantive due process decisions are not already in the nation, the decisions [of this Court] will lack 'power' or 'authority'." Perry, Substantive Due Process Revisited: Reflections On (And Beyond) Recent Cases, 71 Nw. L. Rev. 417 (1976). Unfortunately, the central problem with Roe v. Wade is that it fails to establish the necessary link between bedrock values inherent in our Constitutional tradition and a woman's decision to terminate potential life within her. As Dean Ely has eloquently written, "[a] neutral and durable principle may be a thing of beauty and joy forever. But if it lacks connection with any value the Constitution marks as special, it is not a constitutional principle and the Court has no business imposing it." Ely, supra note 18 at 949.

The failures of Roe lie in three specific areas: the Court's historical analysis of the socio-medical-legal tradition of abortion, the Court's treatment of applicable precedent and the Court's removal of abortion policy from the legislative agenda in our Constitutional system.

a. Historical Exegesis. The historical exegesis undertaken in Roe is distinctly problematical. Justice Rehnquist's dissent in Roe presaged what has now become a more considered and well-documented view that the Court had misread history. At the time his dissent concluded that "the asserted right to an abortion is not 'so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental.'" Id. at 174 (Rehnquist J., dissenting).[23]

The historical difficulties in Roe arise from the Court's cursory and incomplete treatment of the ancient history of abortion,[24] its skewed view of the ancient Greek Hippocratic Oath (which forbade abortion),[25] its blinking at over 1000 years of Judeo-Christian ethics and law (where opposition to abortion was [23] Justice White has since elaborated extensively upon this subject in his dissent in Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 788-794.

---

[24] Connery, The Ancients and the Medievals on Abortion: The Consensus the Court Ignored, in Abortion and the Constitution, supra note 16, at 123-135.

[25] Arbagi, Roe and the Hippocratic Oath, in id. at 159-181.

predominantly constant)[26] and, perhaps most importantly, its distortion of the common law and statutory tradition.[27] These deficiencies have been itemized extensively elsewhere[28] and will not be repeated here. Suffice it to say, in the words of Archibald Cox, that "[n]either historian, layman, nor lawyer will be persuaded that all the details prescribed in Roe v. Wade are part of either natural law or the Constitution."[29] A more deliberate consideration of the record raises substantial doubt about the Court's rendition of the socio-medical-legal tradition of abortion and, therefore, casts a long shadow over its consequent legal conclusion that a woman's decision to terminate pregnancy is traditionally rooted in the right to privacy.

b. Misplaced Reliance on Precedent. The extension of the "guarantee of personal privacy" to abortion was justified in Roe by reliance on precedents "relating to marriage, Loving v. Virginia, 388 U. S. 1 (1967); procreation, Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U. S. 535, 541-542 (1942); contraception, Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U. S. at 453-454; id., at 460, 463-465 (White, J., concurring in result); family relationships, Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U. S. 158, 166 (1944); and child rearing and education, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510, 535 (1925), Meyer v. Nebraska, [262 U. S. 390, 399 (1923)]." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 152-153. The Court recognized at the same time, however, that the privacy of the abortion decision was significantly different from the privacy of its precursors. Unlike them:

> [t]he pregnant woman cannot be isolated in her privacy. She carries an embryo and, later, a fetus, if one accepts the medical definitions of the developing young in the human uterus. The situation therefore is inherently

[26] Special Project: Survey of Abortion Law, 1980 Ariz. St. L. J. 67, 75-76, 79-88.

[27] Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Ford. L. Rev. 807, 814-835 (1973); Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250, 1267-1282 (1975); Dellapena, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359, 365-416 (1979).

[28] See the opinion and articles cited in notes 23-26, supra; see also Horan & Balch, Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law, or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution, supra note 16 at 57.

[29] A. Cox, supra note 6, at 114.

> different from marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education, with which Eisenstadt and Griswold, Stanley, Loving, Skinner and Pierce and Meyer were respectively concerned. [citation omitted].

Roe v. Wade, 410 U. S. at 159. The doctrinal outworking of this distinction is that the woman's privacy right was subjected to the state's compelling interests in preserving maternal health and protecting "potential life" as the pregnancy progressed, trimester by trimester, to term.[30]

The very same distinction between Roe and its predecessors has provided fruitful ground for argument that the privacy right should have never been extended to abortion in the first place. This is because the existence of developing life in the pregnant woman presents a significant social dimension that is missing from other personal or family autonomy cases.

> However one answers the metaphysical or theological question whether the fetus is a "human being" or the legal question whether it is a "person" as that term is used in the Constitution, one must at least recognize, first, that the fetus is an entity that bears in its cells all the genetic information that characterizes a member of the species homo sapiens and distinguishes an individual member of that species from all others, and second, that there is no nonarbitrary line separating a fetus from a child or, indeed, an adult human being. Given that the continued existence and development —- that is to say, the life[31] —- of such an entity are so directly at stake in [30] As a practical matter, "[t]he restriction on the [abortion] liberty appeared to be illusory. For the nine months of life within the womb the child was at the gravida's disposal —- with two restrictions: she must find a licensed clinic after month three; and after her child was viable, she must find an abortionist who believed she needed an abortion." J. T. Noonan, A Private Choice 12 (1979).

[31] Even Cyril Means, the legal counsel for the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws, upon whose historical work the Court relied extensively in Roe, has recognized that abortion involves a "human being":

> It is "human," since it was produced by human parents, and it is a "being" since it exists. And it is "autonomous," if nothing else is meant by that adjective than that it possesses a unique genetic organization. The question is whether, prior to birth, the offspring of human > the woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy, that decision must be recognized as sui generis, different in kind from the others that the Court has protected under the rubric of personal or family privacy and autonomy.

Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 792 (White, J., dissenting). Because the privacy freedom removes societal restraints on the destruction of the developing life, the abortion decision is literally a matter of life and death for the unborn, with the state being essentially powerless to protect it.[32] The stakes are far less in the cases involving marriage, contraception, procreation, education and family relationships, which are either victimless or encourage normative conduct that has been historically and traditionally recognized as contributing to the social and moral order.

"Specifying what individual freedom is for makes it possible to begin to work out distinctions between liberty and license, by referring to the purpose for which the freedom is claimed." Glendon at 37. Abortion is, and always has been, a destructive and aggressive action, i.e. the killing of "unwanted" natural life. As Blackstone said, "[t]o kill a child in it's mother's womb, is now no murder, but a great misprison...."[33] Abortion is thus more in the > parents is a human person. Only persons are the subjects of legal rights, whether constitutional or other.

---

Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth Amendment Right About to Rise from the Nineteenth Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty, 17 N. Y. Law Forum 335 (1971).

What or who is a "person" in the positivistic legal sense is, of course, dependent upon recognition of that status by this Court. It failed to recognize blacks as "citizens" in Scott v. Sandford, 60 U. S. (19 How.) 393 (1857), although it conferred "personhood" status on corporations in Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 118 U. S. 394 (1886) without the apparent difficulty it had in Roe deciding whether the unborn would have the same status within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.

[32] The number of abortions in the United States in recent years has averaged 1.5 million per year. The total number of abortions from the month Roe was decided through 1985 is 17,526,600 million. Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63 (1987).

[33] W. Blackstone, 4 Commentaries on the Laws of England 198 (emphasis added). In Blackstone's time, murder was a capital offense, whereas a misprison nature of assault, conduct which has normally been subject to state regulation and control.

Marriage, contraception, procreation, child rearing and family relationships, on the other hand, involve non-destructive acts that foster longstanding and well accepted societal traditions. Deserving of greater individual freedom, they nevertheless strengthen generally desirable social bonds. In fact, procreation —- the perpetuation of life —- is antithetical to abortion. The decision not to conceive is different in kind from the destruction of life that has commenced. And marriage, child rearing and family life, which promote interdependence and commitment, are primary relationships, the foundation of community in society, whereas abortion represents isolation —- a pushing away that is frequently the product of relationships lacking permanent commitment.

Weighed against precedent, therefore, the decision in Roe to extend the zone of personal privacy to include termination of pregnancy represented a transposition of values. In the name of liberty, an essentially destructive, anti-social act was elevated above the power of the state to protect life. This, despite a strong common law tradition permitting the state to proscribe abortion, and an equally, if not more, important Constitutional tradition that accorded as great a value to "life" as to "liberty,"[34] be it in the text of our Founding documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, as well as later, in the

---

was a high public offense deserving of public disapprobation and punishment. Id. at 119.

[34] Even taking into account the mother's "liberty" interest as a countervailing factor, abortion cannot be viewed as necessary to the "concept of ordered liberty." Ordered liberty is presumably liberty exercised within a societal context, taking into account important societal interests. Whatever "liberty" interest the mother may have, the American Constitutional tradition and experience bespeak an equally important and compelling societal interest in protecting "life." Never before Roe has this "life" interest been, nor should it hereafter be, subordinate to any license that, in the name of "liberty," permits the destruction of inchoate citizens without requiring some justification to society. "It is one thing to emancipate women from discrimination and tyranny; it is quite another to emancipate them from all human claims and obligations toward the rights of others." D. Callahan, Abortion: Law, Choice and Morality 82 (1970)

Fourteenth Amendment and in Article 1, Section 2 of the Missouri Constitution.[35]

The value judgments implicit in Roe have been studied comparatively with the abortion experience in 20 Western countries by Harvard Law Professor Mary Ann Glendon in her recent book Abortion and Divorce in Western Law. The comparison of Roe with a similar case decided differently by the Constitutional Court of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1975 on different value premises illustrates what is generally viewed to be the "singular status" of American abortion law.[36] In Professor Glendon's words, "both [the Roe and Western German] courts substituted a set of values for those promoted by the respective legislatures [but] the content of those values differs markedly." [37] The West German court was called upon to interpret the application of a provision of their Basic Law which provided that "Everyone has the right to life." Article 2, Paragraph 2, Sentence 1, Basic Law.[38] Interpreting this provision in the context of legislation permitting abortion, the court ruled:

> [T]he protection...of [the Basic Law] cannot be limited either to the 'completed' human being after birth or to the child about to be born which is independently capable of living. The right to life is guaranteed to everyone who 'lives', and no distinction can be made here between various stages of life developing itself before

[35] Art. 1, Sec. 2 of the Missouri Constitution states, in part, that "all persons have a natural right to life" and that "all persons are created equal." Before Roe, it was recognized by more than one Federal court that "[o]nce human life has commenced, the constitutional protections found in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments impose upon the state the duty of safeguarding it." Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp. 741 (Three Judge Court, W. D. Ohio 1970). And there remains the simple, but eloquent conclusion of another great judge in another difficult case: "I determined to act on the side of life." Application of the President and Directors of Georgetown College, Inc., 331 F. 2d 1000, 1010 (D. C. Cir. 1964) (Wright, J., In Chambers).

[36] Glendon at 24-25.

[37] Id. at 35.

[38] The provision was included in the Basic Law "as a reaction to the 'destruction of life unworthy of life,' to the 'final solution' and 'liquidations,' which were carried out by the National Socialist Regime as measures of state." Jonas & Gorby, supra note 4, at 637.

> birth, or between unborn or born life. Everyone in the sense of [the law] is everyone living; expressed in another way: every life possessing human individuality; 'everyone' also includes the yet unborn human being. (emphasis added).

Jonas and Gorby, supra note 4 at 638.

Professor Glendon comments on the values reflected in the two opinions:

> Roe v. Wade, like its predecessor, Eisenstadt v. Baird, embodies a view of society as a condition of separate autonomous individuals. The West German decision emphasizes the connections among the woman, developing life, and the larger community. Donald Kommers has therefore characterized the difference between the two decisions as one between individualistic and communitarian values. He points to Roe's emphasis on the individual woman, her privacy and autonomy (not to mention Justice Douglas's equating privacy with "preferred life style"), and contrasts it with the West German court's emphasis on the interest that society as a whole has, not only in the abortion decision itself, but in the long-range formation of beliefs and attitudes about human life. (emphasis added).

Glendon at 35. The consequences of these value choices for the respective societies are dramatic: "Today, in order to find a country where the legal approach to abortion is as indifferent to unborn life as it is in the United States, we have to look to countries which are much less comparable to us politically, socially, culturally and economically, and where concern about population expansion overrides both women's liberty and fetal life [viz. China[39]]....From the comparative point of view abortion policy in the United States appears singular, not only because it requires no protection of unborn life at any stage of pregnancy, in contrast to all the other countries with which we customarily compare ourselves, but also because our abortion policy was not worked out in the give-and-take of the legislative process....Nowhere have the courts gone so far as has the United States Supreme Court in precluding further statutory development." Id. at 24-25.

[39] In the People's Republic of China, abortion is encouraged as part of a population control policy which authorizes only one child per family. Glendon at 24.

The reality of Roe and its progeny, despite pronouncements to the contrary, is that the American woman is completely isolated in her privacy. As a matter of practice, she may terminate the unborn life at any time[40] for virtually any reason.[41] Not only does this not even comport with Roe, it is also a departure from precedent and from the values explicitly reflected in the Due Process Clause, as well as our history and tradition. It is time for this Court to reexamine Roe afresh in light of the standards this Court has long established for recognizing what rights are "fundamental" in the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.

c. Constitutionalization of an Essentially Legislative Issue. A third problem with Roe is its Constitutionalization of an essentially legislative issue. The Constitution and Bill of Rights apportion powers and responsibilities to the coordinate branches of government. They also reserve powers to the states and grant rights to the people. Frequently explicit, these powers, reservations and grants often reflect values, some explicit, some implicit. However, much of the Constitutional language is nevertheless broadly worded. The Framers thus left to this Court, and also to the coordinate branches, the states and the people, through the practice and life of the Nation, the task of determining much of its meaning and reach.

The Federal courts have been particularly active in providing guidance concerning the interstices of the Due Process Clause of [40] Koop, The Slide to Auschwitz, in R. Reagan, Abortion and the Conscience of the Nation, 41, 45 (1984); Noonan, supra note 30 at 12; Hentoff, supra note 9; Will, supra note 11; Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 783-784 (Burger, C. J., dissenting).

[41] According to a recent survey commissioned by the Alan Guttmacher Institute of 1900 women who obtained an abortion, the reasons for abortion were variously financial (21%); relationship problems (12%); not ready for responsibility (32%); already enough children (8%); would involve change in life style (16%); fetus has health problem (3%); mother has health problem (3%); rape or incest (1%); threat to life of the mother (none listed); other (3%). Torres and Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions, 20 Family Planning Perspectives 169 July - Aug. 1988 .

the Fourteenth Amendment. Principled standards of adjudication, however, have not prevented this Court from ranging far afield, even in our recent past. See Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 637 (1896), and Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U. S. 483 (1954), or Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45 (1905), and West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379 (1937). These cases make clear that the recognition of immutable and neutral principles does not immunize the judiciary from changing perceptions over time. The resulting changes in Constitutional doctrine reflect, no doubt, broad social and political currents. Notwithstanding the forces of change, the basic social contract between the people and their government —-reflected in the Constitutional arrangement —- is essentially democratic, with the judiciary exercising limited powers of interpretation of broad Constitutional mandates.

In recognition of Constitutional restraints on its decision-making function, this Court has imposed its own self-constraints on its power to "constitutionalize" issues. As previously mentioned, it has adopted a rule of lenity in Due Process litigation, approving most governmental action that is rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest.[42] State action affecting "fundamental" rights is subjected to strict scrutiny, but only in certain limited classes of cases involving "fundamental" rights that are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" or "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition." See discussion at pages 7-8, supra.

> [The] utility [of these standards] lies in their effort to identify some source of constitutional value that reflects not the philosophical predictions of individual judges, but basic choices made by the people themselves in constituting their system of government —- the balance struck by this country —- and they seek to achieve this end through locating fundamental rights either in the traditions and consensus of our society as a whole or in the logical implications of a system that recognizes both liberty and democratic order.

Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 791-792 (White, J., dissenting).

[42] Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U. S. 483, 491 (1955); Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U. S. 471 (1970).

The problem with Roe is that the balance struck by the Court on abortion departs from the balance struck by the country. As Dean Ely has written, "[w]hat is frightening about Roe is that this super-protected right is not inferable from the language of the Constitution, the framers' thinking respecting the specific problem at issue, any general value derivable from the provisions they included, or the nation's governmental structure."[43] And it is clear that "[t]he problem of abortion regulation in the United States is immeasurably aggravated...by the fact that the extreme position of the Supreme Court in abortion cases represents the views of only a minority of Americans." Glendon at 47.

Roe displayed an extraordinary insensitivity to commonly understood institutional and decisional constraints. Its departure from these constraints was brought out in the Akron case where the United States argued that institutional factors required a standard of greater deference to the legislative judgment in matters of abortion. Brief of the United States As Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants. The argument was that legislatures possess "superior fact-finding capability" and freedom of inquiry, factors important for complex, controversial issues. Id. at 12. Moreover, legislatures "must periodically account to the people," thereby rendering government more accountable on such issues. Id. Finally, "the quality of the lawmaking product is enhanced by leaving the issued exposed for a time to the legislative process and the public pressures that are brought to bear on the process." Id. at 13.[44] Thus, it was argued, "in those cases where the issue might be fairly characterized as involving either a choice among competing policy alternatives, or a pronouncement of constitutional principle, the presumption should favor treating the issue as one of policy choice." Id. at 15.

---

[43] Ely, supra note 18, at 936.

[44] Solicitor General Rex E. Lee went on to point out the dangers and problems that arise when the legislative process is short-circuited:

> To whatever extent the issues are constitutionalized, they are thereby removed from this refining process —- the process by which lawmakers learn through experimentation and correction. Constitutionalization eliminates all but one of the competing points of view as acceptable alternatives; the issue is removed from the realm of public debate and decisionmaking.

Id. at 14-15.

In addition to the problem posed by the Court's removing abortion from the legislative agenda, the balance of the national debate on abortion is characterized largely by legislative, rather than constitutional considerations, i.e., the Who, What, When, Where, and Why of abortion. The debate centers on these issues because abortion has never been intertwined with Constitutional values and principles. To quote General Lee, abortion regulation "is an unfair burden to impose upon any Constitution. It is especially unfair to impose it on a Constitution that contains no mention of the words 'privacy' or 'abortion' and that can be extended to those matters only by piecing together a combination of shadows from a variety of explicit guarantees contained in the document." Brief, at 19.

d. Summary. To summarize, the Court's extension of the privacy right to abortion was extreme. It declared a right not clearly rooted in any constitutional text, history or tradition. It subordinated the value of unborn life to "preferred life styles" and other short-range values characteristic of the consumption society [convenience, family planning, economics, dislike of children, embarrassment of illegitimacy, etc.[45]] and provided little or no societal protection to unborn life. And, it removed the authority of the people to govern, preventing society through its elected representatives from determining what mix of interdependent and individualistic value preferences should be brought to bear on the subject. Roe v. Wade was, therefore, an imprudent departure from the mainstream of our Constitutional tradition and an unwarranted usurpation of power in the Constitutional system on the issue of abortion. Like Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 40 (1905), Roe v. Wade was a judicial misadventure that should now be "allowed a deserved repose." Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525, 570 (1923) (Holmes, J., dissenting).

---

[45] Roe, 410 U. S. at 221 (White, J., dissenting).

III. ASSUMING FOR PURPOSES OF ARGUMENT THAT THE ABORTION DECISION INVOLVES A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT, THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROTECTING POTENTIAL LIFE IS COMPELLING THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY AND SHOULD BE BALANCED AGAINST THAT RIGHT UNDER A TWO-TIERED STRICT SCRUTINY/RATIONAL RELATIONSHIP TEST, DEPENDING UPON THE NATURE OF THE STATE ACTION.

Even if the decision of a woman to terminate pregnancy were to remain recognized as a fundamental right, the right is nevertheless clearly a limited one and not absolute. Roe, 410 U. S. at 159. "[T]he right in Roe v. Wade can be understood only by considering both the woman's interest and the nature of the State's interference with it." Maher v. Roe, 432 U. S. 464, 473 (1977) (emphasis added). Roe attempted to structure a sort of balance of these interests by segmenting the state's regulatory power into trimesters, coincidental with the then prevailing medical technology. The state's interests in "maternal health" and "potential life," thus, became more compelling as the unborn child reached viability.

In the most recent abortion cases, Akron and Thornburgh, the Court has adhered to the Roe trimester/viability approach. It has also continued to show extraordinary sensitivity to protecting the sanctity of the doctor-patient relationship in abortion and has routinely invalidated regulatory statutes that purportedly depart from "accepted medical practice." The combined effect of these factors has made it very difficult for states to exercise any regulation of abortion or abortion procedures.

The Court's strict and highly structured approach has been criticized on two grounds. First, it subjects legal standards to everchanging medical technology and statistics "whose validity is good enough this week but will be destroyed with new statistics upon the medical risks of childbirth and abortion or new advances in providing for the separate existence of a foetus."[46] Second, logic

[46] A. Cox, supra note 6, at 113-114. The problems of basing Constitutional doctrine on rapidly changing medical technology may be seen in the shifting medical standards discussed in Justice Powell's majority opinion, and in Justice O'Connor's penetrating dissent, in the Akron case. 462 U. S. 416, 434-439, and reason dictate that "potential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward." Akron, 462 U. S. at 461 (O'Connor, J. dissenting). The state has a compelling governmental interest in "protecting those who will be citizens if their lives are not ended in the womb. The substantiality of this interest is in no way dependent upon the probability that the fetus may be capable of surviving outside the womb at any given point of its development.... Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 795 (White, J. dissenting). Thus, to condition the weight of the state interest on trimesters and viability "mistakes a definition for a syllogism."[47] And though trimesters and viability may provide the appearance of rationality, why this particular regime and set of rules, as opposed to some other, is mandated by the Constitution is not readily discernable. Nor is it clear why it could not be supplanted by different findings of state or national legislatures.

The problems endemic with Roe suggest that the process of balancing the limited "fundamental" right to abortion with the compelling state interest in potential life is in need of reassessment and adjustment. This should include consideration of other state interests that have received little attention from this Court, but which are implicit in the state's "strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth,"[48] — namely, family integrity[49]

454-461. See also, Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L. J. 639, 697 (1986); Callahan, How Technology is Reframing the Abortion Debate, 16 Hastings Center Report 33 (1986).

[47] Ely, supra note 18, at 924, cited in Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 795 (White, J. dissenting).

[48] Maher v. Doe, 432, U. S. 464, 478 (1977).

[49] H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U. S. 398, 411 (1981) (familial integrity); see also Peirce, BRI v. Leonard: The Role of the Courts in Preserving Family Integrity, 23 N. Eng. L. Rev. 185 (1988); Mattinson, The Effects of Abortion on a Marriage in Abortion: Medical Progress and Social Implications, 1985 Ciba Foundation Symposium 165-177; McAll & Wilson, Ritual Mourning for Unresolved Grief, 80 Southern Medical Journal 817 (1987); Furlong & Black, Pregnancy Termination for Genetic Indications: The Impact on Families, 10 Social Work in Health Care 1 (1984).

Several studies show that abortion may destroy or stigmatize male-female relationships. Shostak, Abortion As Fatherhood Lost: Problems and Reforms, 28 The Family Coordinator 569 (1979); Milling, The Men Who Wait, Woman's Life, 48-49, 69-71, April 1975 (70% failure); Patterson, Whose Freedom of Choice?, and parental rights.[50] There is also much speculation, but apparently no definitive research, about "post abortion syndrome" and other psychological problems associated with abortion.[51] These problems appear to have credence and may, after due investigation, provide yet another perspective on "maternal health" requiring restriction of the abortion right.

Justice O'Connor's suggested alternative to the Roe standard, first expressed in the Akron case and further elaborated upon in her dissent in the Thornburgh case, would hold that in cases where particular state action poses an "absolute obstacle" or a "severe limitation" on the abortion right, the Court must determine whether the state's compelling interest "unduly burdens" the 46 The Progressive 42, April 1982; Mithers, Abortion: Are Men There When Women Need Them Most?, Mademoiselle at 231, April 1981; Weidner & Griffitt, Abortion as a Stigma: In the Eyes of the Beholder, 18 Journal of Research and Personality 359 (1984).

---

[50] RSMo. 1.205.1(3) (1986), which was not challenged by appellees below, provides that "[t]he natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health and well-being of their unborn children." See also, Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U. S. 390 (1923); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510, 535 (1926); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U. S. 158, 166 (1944); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U. S. 205, 232 (1972); Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U. S. 645, 651 (1972); Parham v. J.R., 442 U. S. 584 (1979).

[51] Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has recently indicated that scientific research is not definitive as to the existence of clinically proven psychological harm to women having abortions.

Notwithstanding the Surgeon General's failure to discern empirically based harm, it appears likely that clinical studies will demonstrate psychological after-affects. In a Februarty 5, 1989, article in The Washington Post, Colman McCarthy writes that scientific studies abroad indicate that "[t]he incidence of serious, permanent psychiatric aftermath [from abortion] is variously reported as between 9 and 59 percent." He also quotes one Washington, D. C., abortionist, Dr. Julius Fogel, a psychiatrist who has performed and observed the effects of 20,000 abortions, as saying:

> There is no question about the emotional grief and mourning following an abortion....[A] psychological price is paid. I can't say exactly what. It may be alienation, it may be a pushing away from human warmth, perhaps a hardening of the maternal instinct. Something happens on the deeper levels of a woman's consciousness when she destroys a pregnancy. I know that as a psychiatrist.

McCarthy, The Real Anguish of Abortions, The Washington Post, February 5, 1989, F2.

abortion right. Harris v. McRae, 448 U. S. 297, 314 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U. S. 464, 473 (1977); Beal v. Doe, 432 U. S. 438, 446 (1977); and Belotti v. Baird, 428 U. S. 132, 147 (1976); see also, Akron, 462 U. S. at 461-466 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) and Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 828-830 (O'Connor, J. dissenting). In other cases, where less restrictive state regulation of abortion does not impose an absolute obstacle to abortion, the particular state action must only manifest a rational relationship to a legitimate state objective. This more traditional two-tiered analysis limits strict judicial scrutiny of legislative action affecting abortion only to those cases which, in effect, put an absolute ban on a woman's ability to exercise her limited right. It is a more balanced approach than the Court's current standards and recognizes a significant and appropriate role for the legislative branch in the promulgation of societal standards on this issue.

This slight shift of analytical method is not only grounded in precedent and sound as a matter of logic, it also reinforces important values. As Professor Glendon urges in her study of the abortion laws of 20 Western countries, > [p]erhaps it is fitting that abortion law at present should mirror our wonder as well as our ignorance about the mystery of life, our compassion for women who may be frightened and lonely in the face of a major crisis, and our instinctive uneasiness at terminating a form of innocent human life, whether we call it a fetus, an embryo, a baby or an unborn child.

Glendon at 46. Removing a significant amount of abortion regulation from strict constitutional scrutiny comports far more with American history and tradition and acknowledges far better than the present jurisprudence the proper role that the courts, the legislatures, the people and the affected parties all have to contribute in resolving this issue.

IV. THE MISSOURI STATUTE DOES NOT POSE ANY ABSOLUTE OBSTACLE OR SEVERE RESTRICTION ON ABORTION AND SHOULD THEREFORE BE UPHELD AS RATIONALLY RELATED TO THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROTECTING THE UNBORN.

In the context of the present case, it is respectfully submitted that none of the statutes promulgated by the State of Missouri poses an "absolute obstacle" or "severe limitation" on the abortion right. There are no criminal or coercive sanctions.[52] There is no "absolute veto" of any woman's abortion decision. And the state regulation does not "frustrate" or "heavily burden" the exercise of any constitutional rights. Absent such intrusive or proscriptive measures, the State of Missouri's statutory requirements need not be subjected to strict scrutiny, but must nevertheless demonstrate a rational relationship to legitimate state objectives.

a. Viability Testing. The State of Missouri requires a viability assessment for 20+ week pregnancies. Physicians are required to assess viability of the unborn child "using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions." This viability assessment was upheld by the Court of Appeals below; however, the Court invalidated a related testing requirement requiring the physician to perform, in connection with the viability assessment, "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child."

This testing requirement does not pose an "absolute obstacle" to abortion. The burden of testing is on the physician, not the woman. Any burden of cost, of course, rests with the woman, but neither the burden of testing or cost can be said to pose an absolute obstacle to abortion. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 474 (1977).

Missouri is also not proclaiming any single factor as a measure of viability, or forcing any particular test, or requiring any particular findings. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U. S. 379, 389 (1979).

[52] See Jurisdictional Statement at 25.

Nor is it infringing upon the medical discretion of the physician. Id. The physician is charged, instead, with using his normal standard of professional care and skill to assess viability and is required to undertake only such tests as are necessary concerning gestational age, weight and lung maturity. Given the medical uncertainty of determining how long toward term a pregnancy is, and given rapidly changing technological capabilities whereby viability has moved from 28 weeks to 24 weeks, and in some reported instances, 22 weeks,[53] it is not unreasonable for a state to require physicians, in connection with an assessment of viability, to undertake necessary tests to provide findings as to gestational age, weight and lung maturity.

b. Missouri's Declaration of State Policy Concerning the Unborn. This may be the first time in history for this Court to invalidate legislative findings which have virtually no direct substantive impact on the facts or law of the case. It is difficult to see why the Court of Appeals found the declaration constitutionally damning. The findings merely declare the State of Missouri's interest in encouraging normal childbirth, protecting potential life and protecting the common law interests of natural parents of the unborn. These findings, as well as the laws of Missouri, are made expressly subject to the United States Constitution and the decisional interpretations of this Court.

Legislation has been previously upheld by this Court if it furthers a state's interest in making childbirth "a more attractive alternative, thereby influencing the woman's decision," provided it "places no obstacles —- absolute or otherwise —- in the pregnant woman's path to an abortion." Maher v. Roe, 432 U. S. 464, 474 (1977). Instead of applying this analysis, the Court of Appeals read the Missouri findings to violate Roe's admonition, repeated in Akron, that "a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions."[54] The Akron statement, however, was in the context of a mandatory requirement that information be furnished to a woman prior to her abortion. That is not the case here. The State's theory of life is not being foisted upon anyone. Here, the less restrictive Maher rule should govern since the legislative findings are not linked to any affirmative action by the State that poses an obstacle to abortion. For that reason, even under the stringent Akron and Thornburgh precedents, the Missouri findings should not have been struck down, if only because of the obviously valid arguments that they are intended to and do affect substantively the common and statutory law of Missouri in the areas of tort, criminal and property law.[55]

[53] See Akron, 462 U. S. at 457, n.5 and related text. (O'Connor, J. dissenting).
[54] Akron, 462 U. S. at 444, cited by the Court of Appeals, 851 F.2d at 1075.

c. Public Funds, Employees and Facilities. The State of Missouri has also decided that it will not permit funds to be expended to encourage or counsel persons desiring to have abortions, except those where the life of the mother is at risk. It also does not permit public employees to perform abortions, or permit abortions to be performed in public facilities.

In Maher v. Doe, 432 U. S. 464, 474 (1977), this Court held that the freedom of a woman to terminate her pregnancy "implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds." Accordingly, the State of Connecticut was not required to pay for "nontherapeutic" abortions even though it subsidized pregnancy and childbirth benefits under its state welfare program. The Court explained that there is "a basic difference between direct state interference with a protected activity and state encouragement of an alternative activity consonant with legislative policy." Id. at 475. Likewise, in Harris v. McRae, 448 U. S. 297 (1980), the Federal government was permitted to engage in "unequal subsidization of abortion and other medical services in order to encourage alternate activity deemed in the public interest." Id. at 315. Finally, in Poelker v. Doe, 432 U. S. 519, 521 (1977), this Court ruled that the prohibition of abortions in the city-owned hospitals of St. Louis was "identical in principle" to the refusal to provide subsidies for abortion, while providing subsidies for childbirth.

---

[55] Unborn life is commonly afforded protection by the States in other areas of the law, including inheritance, insurance, welfare, civil rights, public health and child abuse. See Callahan, How Technology is Reframing the Abortion Debate, 16 Hastings Center Report 33, 40 (1986); Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231, 252-254.

It is difficult to see how and why state subsidization of abortions would be Constitutionally different from state prohibitions on funding encouragement or counseling of abortions or on the performance of abortions by state employees in state facilities. When a state withdraws a subsidy, it is denying the means for abortions by refusing to pay for them. When it prohibits state performed abortions in state facilities, it is simply denying abortion services in kind by refusing to provide doctors or facilities to do them. How can it be that a state can refuse to fund abortions, but cannot prohibit state employees (whom it funds) from performing abortions on state property (which it funds)?

The Court of Appeals attempted to describe the difference as one between refusing to pay for abortions, as opposed to denying access to abortion. However, if the state employee/facility abortion ban were effective, there would be only slightly fewer places to obtain abortions, but that does not significantly burden a woman's choice to have the abortion or cause her any more harm than failing to provide her a subsidy to obtain her abortion. As the Court said in the Maher case, "The indigency that may make it difficult —- and in some cases, perhaps, impossible —- for some women to have abortions is neither created nor in any way affected by the... regulation." Maher v. Roe, 432 U. S. at 474. And to require the state to use its facilities for abortions, or its employees to perform them or fund activities that encourage or counsel with respect to them, is nothing short of an abuse of judicial power. This is just the type of reasoning that Harris rejected:

> It cannot be that because government may not prohibit the use of contraceptives, Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U. S. 479, or prevent parents from sending their child to a private school, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510, government, therefore, has an affirmative constitutional obligation to ensure that all persons have the financial resources to obtain contraceptives or send their children to private schools....Nothing in the Due Process Clause supports such an extraordinary result. (emphasis added).

Harris, 448 U. S. at 318. It is likewise preposterous to declare, in effect, an affirmative Constitutional mandate requiring states to fund activities that encourage or counsel abortion or to require state employees to perform abortions in state facilities.

In the present case, women who, but for the Missouri statute, would have otherwise received counseling or abortions from state employees in state facilities, are not precluded from obtaining an abortion or otherwise "unduly burdened" in exercising choice in the matter. Abortions and counseling may readily be obtained in the private sector or from other governmental agencies with the assistance of persons other than employees of the State of Missouri. As for the so-called "state-imposed blackout" on abortion information, this rhetorical flourish of the Court of Appeals mistakenly assumes that the State of Missouri is the fount of all information and wisdom on abortion, when in reality, a woman can just as easily, or perhaps more easily, obtain information in the private sector on how and where to abort.

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote that the sovereign's "right to absolutely exclude all right to use [public property] necessarily includes the authority to determine under what circumstances such use may be availed of, as the greater power contains the lesser." Davis v. Commonwealth, 167 U. S. 43, 48 (1897), affirming Commonwealth v. Davis, 162 Mass. 510 (1895). Hopefully, this maxim, as with so many other conventions which have been reinterpreted and given new meaning in an abortion context, will not now also be given a modern interpretation, in effect, to prevent heretofore sovereign governments from directing their employees and controlling the use of their properties and funds. There is no constitutional requirement, nor should there be, for states to pay state-employed physicians in state-owned facilities to counsel, encourage or perform abortions. To suggest otherwise is nothing short of "nonsensical"[56] and yet another

---

[56] The word is Justice White's employed in a similar a context criticizing the stereotypical, but untenable, premise of Roe and its progeny, of the physician as fatherly counselor. Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 802 (White, J. dissenting). The reality is that "[a]t least six out of ten abortions performed in the United States are performed in freestanding clinics. Doctors in such clinics typically have a direct financial interest in seeing that abortions are performed as rapidly and efficiently as possible. Frequently, the only time a doctor sees the patient is when she is on the operating table awaiting the procedure." Wood and Durham, Counseling, Consulting and Consent: Abortion and the Doctor-Patient Relationship, 1978 indication of the inherent distortion that Roe, if left to its logical outcome, would otherwise work in American jurisprudence.

CONCLUSION

On more than one occasion in the recent past, law has been the medium, and lawyers the agents, responsible for masking one class of humanity and preventing it from being visible.[57] Not only has Roe made its own contribution in this area, it has brought an unprecedented "distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence"[58] and has had "an institutionally debilitating effect,"[59] on the business of the Court. It has also been a source of much social instability and conflict.

Even now, in homes, churches, police stations, schools, universities, law schools, legislatures, newspapers, magazines, on radio and television, and on the streets in front of abortion clinics, the legitimacy of Roe v. Wade is widely questioned and challenged. Sadly, with all due respect to this great Court, it is now starting to be heard across the land in disrespect for the law generally. It is important that the questioning stop. That can best be accomplished by admitting this Court's error in Roe, and taking action to overrule it or, at the very least, to confine Roe v. Wade to its narrow holding.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals should be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to vacate the judgment

---

B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231,244. Abortion practice is "fast-track, quick-fix [and] volume-for-profit." Wardle, supra note 55, at 244.

[57] This is a paraphrase of then Professor, now Circuit Judge John T. Noonan. See Noonan, The Root and Branch of Roe v. Wade, 63 Neb. L. Rev. 668, 669, 675 (1984). See also, Scott v. Sanford, 60 U. S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) (blacks are not citizens); United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, 25 F. Cas. 695 (C.C.D. Neb. 1879) (Indians are not persons); Cf. Korematsu v. United States, 323 U. S. 283 (1944) (loss of citizenship and exclusion of Japanese citizens from West Coast war area); and Alexander, Medical Science Under Dictatorship, 241 New Eng. J. Med. 39-47 (July 4, 1949) (Describing how the Nazi Holocaust began with physicians and their concept of "life not worthy to be lived" and expanded to reach the chronically sick, the socially unproductive, the ideologically unwanted, the racially unwanted, and finally all non-Germans.)

[58] Thornburgh, 476 U. S. at 814 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

[59] Id.

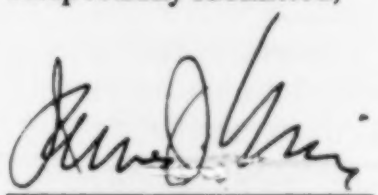
and injunction as to those portions of the statute that were the subject of the appeal.
February 23, 1989.

Respectfully submitted,



James J. Knicely
Counsel of Record
John W. Whitehead
Thomas W. Strahan
The Rutherford Institute
9411 Battle Street
Manassas, Virginia 22110
(703) 369-0100

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH-MISSOURI SYNOD, THE CHRISTIAN LIFE COMMISSION OF THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION, AND THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF EVANGELICALS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

LEONARD J. PRANSCHKE
ANN T. STILLMAN
SIBYL C. BOGARDUS
PHILIP E. DRAHEIM *
DRAHEIM & PRANSCHKE
1633 Des Peres Road
Suite 302
St. Louis, Missouri 63131
(314) 965-6455

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

* Counsel of Record

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether, under the United States Constitution, the Missouri State Legislature may determine the point at which human life begins and enact legislation protecting human life from that point.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE	1
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	2
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	3
ARGUMENT	4
THE STATE LEGISLATIVELY MAY DETERMINE THAT ITS PROTECTABLE INTEREST IN HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION AND FROM THAT POINT MAY PROHIBIT ABORTION	4
A. A State Legislature, and Not This Court, Is the Proper Body to Determine Whether the State Has a Protectable Interest in the Life of an Unborn Human Being and to Create Legislation Protecting That Interest	5
B. Roe v. Wade Is in Error in Holding That a State's Interest in Protecting Human Life Does Not Become Compelling Until a Fetus Attains Viability	11
C. The State's Interest in Protecting Human Life From Its Earliest Stages Does Not Unconstitutionally Infringe Upon the Mother's Right of Privacy	16
D. State Laws Prohibiting Abortions Are Not Unconstitutional Establishments of Religion Under the First Amendment to the Constitution	19
CONCLUSION	22

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

APPENDIX — Page

1979 The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod Resolution 3-02A "To State Position on Abortion" 1a

1984 Southern Baptist Convention, Resolution No. 8, "On Abortion" 3a

1982 Southern Baptist Convention, Resolution No. 11, "On Abortion and Infanticide" 4a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES: — Page

American Federation of Labor v. American Sash and Door Co., 335 U.S. 538 (1949) 8
Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27 (1884) 6
Barsky v. Board of Regents, 347 U.S. 442 (1954) .. 5, 6
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 10
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 7
Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471 (1970) 8, 10
Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968) 7
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 8, 9
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 21
House v. Mayes, 219 U.S. 270 (1911) 5
Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1904) 5
Lawton v. Steele, 152 U.S. 133 (1894) 6
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 6
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267 (1904) 9
Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113 (1877) 9
Noble State Bank v. Haskel, 219 U.S. 104 (1911) .. 7
Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973) 6, 7
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987) 4
Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 4
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 8
United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166 (1974) .. 9

STATUTES:

Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 1.205; 188.010-.020 (1986) 4

OTHER AUTHORITIES:

ALTERNATIVES TO ABORTION INTERNATIONAL, 1988/89 WORLD-WIDE DIRECTORY OF PRO-LIFE EMERGENCY PREGNANCY SERVICES (1988) 18
Brief of The American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists in Support of Appellants, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, No. 88-605 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae in Support of Petitioners, City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	7
D. Danforth & J. Scott, OBSTETRICS & GYNECOLOGY (5th ed. 1986)	14
1979 The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod Resolution 3-02A "To State Position on Abortion"	20
1984 Southern Baptist Convention, Resolution No. 8, "On Abortion"	20
1982 Southern Baptist Convention, Resolution No. 11, "On Abortion and Infanticide"	20

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH-MISSOURI SYNOD, THE CHRISTIAN LIFE COMMISSION OF THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION, AND THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF EVANGELICALS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod is the second largest Lutheran denomination in North America and the eighth largest Protestant body in the United States. It is composed of approximately 6,200 member congregations which, in turn, have approximately 2,600,000 individual members. The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod holds as a profound belief that human life begins at conception and opposes willful abortion, except as tragically necessitated to prevent the death of the mother. The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod believes that compassionate alternatives to abortion should be offered to all persons confronted with unwanted pregnancies.

The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod initiated this brief and is its principal proponent. It is joined by The Christian Life Commission of The Southern Baptist Convention and The National Association of Evangelicals.

The Christian Life Commission of The Southern Baptist Convention is the agency of the Convention charged by the Convention with assisting Southern Baptists in understanding the moral demands of the Christian faith and helping Southern Baptists apply Christian principles to moral and social problems. The Southern Baptist Convention, the nation's largest Protestant denomination, with 37,000 member churches and 14.8 million church members, has assigned the Christian Life Commission of The Southern Baptist Convention the specific task of addressing issues such as abortion.

The National Association of Evangelicals, located in Wheaton, Illinois, is a non-profit association of evangelical Christian organizations, including 50,000 churches and forty-seven member denominations. It serves a constituency of 10 to 15 million people. The National Association of Evangelicals' profound interest in this case stems from its position that, based upon Scripture, human life begins at conception and deserves protection against destruction from its earliest stage.

The letters from the parties consenting to the filing of this brief are submitted herewith to the Clerk pursuant to Rule 36.2.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Amici adopt the statement of the case in the Brief for the Appellants.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This case presents to the Court a state statute regulating abortion, expressly predicated upon a legislative intent of protecting the state's interest in life from the moment of conception. The statute includes a provision stating when life begins. Accordingly, it is a significant opportunity for the Court to review Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), as it affects a state legislature's right to determine when life begins and to enact statutes prohibiting or limiting abortions. In this manner it distinguishes itself from state statutes motivated principally by the protection of maternal health.

This case, by focusing on a state statute that is predicated upon the state's interest in protecting unborn life, should allow reconsideration of the holding in Roe v. Wade that a state does not have a compelling interest in protecting prenatal life until the fetus attains the point of viability. The approximately 30 million Americans represented by the amici believe it is time for that holding to be reconsidered.

Section A. of this brief discusses the past decisions of this Court establishing principles that certain matters of law involving deeply divided views of the people, and matters of fact that are not easily proven, should be deferred to the legislatures. The critical question of when life begins, such that it should be protected by state law, should be decided by the legislatures.

Section B. argues that Roe v. Wade, in holding that the state's interest in protecting unborn life does not become compelling until the fetus attains viability, should be reexamined. Pregnancies that reach viability show only a slightly greater likelihood of reaching full term and live childbirth than pregnancies at any other stage. The state's compelling interest in protecting prenatal human life arises if it is reasonably likely that the prenatal life will come to full term and reach childbirth.

Section C. discusses the various alternatives to abortion available to women with unwanted pregnancies. Weighed against the reasonableness and availability of such alternatives, the termination of human life, even at its earliest stages, is unjustified.

Section D. of the brief states that deeply held religious beliefs in the sanctity of human life from the moment of conception may coincide with state laws prohibiting abortion. Such laws do not violate the First Amendment prohibition upon the establishment of religion.

ARGUMENT

THE STATE LEGISLATIVELY MAY DETERMINE THAT ITS PROTECTABLE INTEREST IN HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION AND FROM THAT POINT MAY PROHIBIT ABORTION.

This case squarely presents this Court with the question of whether, under the United States Constitution, a state legislatively may determine when its protectable interest in human life begins, and, predicated upon that interest in human life, thereafter regulate abortion. Missouri, in prefacing its abortion law with a statement of the will of its people that human life begins at conception, reveals its intent to enact a statute, Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 1.205; 188.010-.220 (1986), to protect the interest of the state in human life before birth, as distinguished from a statute predicated principally upon protection of the health and welfare of the mother.

The U.S. District Court decision in this case, Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), and Court of Appeals decision, Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988), have held that the expressions of legislative intent in the Missouri statute that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have a protectable interest in life, health and well-being" are unconstitutional. These holdings should be reversed. The holdings of the U.S. District Court and Court of Appeals are, of course, ultimately based upon Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). Much of this brief, therefore, addresses that case and the need for this Court to re-address certain of its holdings.

A. A State Legislature, and Not This Court, Is the Proper Body to Determine Whether the State Has a Protectable Interest in the Life of an Unborn Human Being and to Create Legislation Protecting That Interest.

The legislature of each state, rather than the United States Supreme Court, is the proper body to determine whether each state has a protectable interest in the life of an unborn human being and to weigh that interest against the rights of the mother. The police power is broad enough to encompass the abortion issue and is reserved to the states and vested in the state legislatures. The state legislature is a superior body to weigh the competing interests of the mother and unborn child, find facts relative to when life begins, and promulgate legislation that protects the rights of all persons. While the acts of the legislature are subject to judicial review, this Court should recognize the ultimate constitutional authority of the legislature in factually determining when life begins and when it should be protected against abortion. If a legislature reasonably determines that human life exists, no judicial or constitutional prohibition of that determination is appropriate, unless the lives of other persons are placed in jeopardy.

The police power gives the states broad powers to regulate the relative rights and duties of their citizens, to protect the public health, morals, and safety of their citizens, and to promote the common good. Barsky v. Board of Regents, 347 U.S. 442, 449 (1954); House v. Mayes, 219 U.S. 270, 282 (1911); Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 (1904). The scope of police powers is broad, allowing state legislatures to do everything essential for the public safety, health, and morals. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U.S. 133, 136 (1894). The legislature may exercise its police power whenever the public interests demand it. Id.

The state legislature is vested with the discretion to determine what the interests of the public require and what measures are necessary for the protection of those interests. Id. (citing Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27 (1884)). Therefore, not only does the Constitution reserve the police power to the states, but the Supreme Court concedes that only the state legislatures are vested with the authority to regulate in the police power area.

Supreme Court precedent establishes that permissible state interests include public morals, health, and life. Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 69 (1973) (Upholding a Georgia statute that enjoined the showing of two obscene films, based on the state's right to maintain a decent society); Barsky v. Board of Regents, 347 U.S. 442, 449 (1954) (Upholding a New York statute that denied licenses to doctors convicted of a crime, based on the plenary power of states to establish standards for the practice of health); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 478 (1977) (Upholding a Connecticut statute that denied abortion funding to indigent women based on the state's unquestionably "strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal child birth," which exists throughout the pregnancy). Any one of these three permissible state interests may be the basis for an anti-abortion statute, so the state has the power to legislate in this area.

The Missouri legislature acted within the scope of its police power in enacting a statute stating that life begins at conception. Nothing in the Constitution prohibits the state from reaching the factual conclusion that life begins at conception and codifying it. The Supreme Court generally does not require legislatures to prove their assumptions or that the means which the legislature chooses will achieve only the ends which the legislature hopes to obtain. Reviewing courts "do not demand of legislatures 'scientifically certain criteria of legislation.'" Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 642-43 (1968) (citing Noble State Bank v. Haskel, 219 U.S. 104, 110 (1911)). Legislatures properly may rely on scientifically unprovable assumptions when protecting the broad social interest in order and morality. Paris Adult Treatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. at 60.

The difficult determination of when human life begins depends upon the adequate collection and analysis of facts. Legislatures are better suited than courts to investigate factual matters because they "ha[ve] superior fact-finding capabilit[ies]." Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae in Support of Petitioners at 12, City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983). A legislator "is not limited either by the case or controversy requirement or by the decision of legal counsel in a particular case to construct the record in a particular way. The legislator is not only free to inquire into any relevant facts, but can carry that inquiry wherever the general public interest, rather than the interest of private litigants, might indicate." Id. Overall, "legislatures are better suited to make the necessary factual judgments in this area." City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. at 458 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

When the Supreme Court declared the Texas statute unconstitutional in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Supreme Court violated its own precedent defining its role relative to the sovereignty of the state legislature when reviewing an exercise of police power. The cardinal rule of the Supreme Court when reviewing state statutes is that the judges on the Court "do not sit as a super-legislature to determine the wisdom, need, and pro-

